This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at http://books.google.com/

NORFOLK & NORWICH LIBRARY
Guildhall Hill Norwich
Subscription 30/ per Annum
LECTOREM DELECTANDO PARITERQUE MONENDO
Rooms Open 10 a.m. till 9 p.m.
In order to promote the general convenience of Subscribers the Committee requests the early return of books to the Library

Mus 13.11 F *

THIS BOOK IS FOR USE
WITHIN THE LIBRARY ONLY

NORFOLK & NORWICH
LIBRARY
Guildhall Hill, Norwich

Regulations for Circulation
SEVEN DAYS ALLOWED
Besides the days of issuing and becoming due,
and the intervening Sunday.

FINES
Members are liable to pay the full price of any book, or the work of which it is a part, which shall be lost, defaced, or in any way injured, while in their possession.

Terms of Subscription
30/- per annum

Hours of Attendance
10 a.m. to 9 p.m.

LECTOREM DELECTANDO
Norwich Public Library 1784
Norfolk & Norwich Literary Institution 1822
United 1886
PARITERQUE MONENDO

Harvard College Library

FROM THE ELKAN NAUMBURG
FELLOWSHIP FUND

By the terms of the gift the income of this Fund in any year when the Fellowship is not assigned is to be used for the Library of the University for the purchase of works, preferably pertaining to Music.

MUSIC LIBRARY

THE

MUSICAL WORLD.

VOL. LXVIII.

LONDON:
PUBLISHED BY THE PROPRIETOR AT 138A, STRAND.
1888.

Mus 13.11F *

Harvard College Library
Mar. 15, 1921
Naumburg Fellowship fund

INDEX—1888.

Abbey's Losses, 86.
Abramoff at Piacenza, 107.
Accident Insurance, 44.
Action about a Silly Song, a Silly, 568.
American Songs, Four Famous, 975.
Analytical Programmes, 454.
Art in Church, 508.
Artistic Creation, 613.
Association, The Musical, 884, 942.

Bayreuth, Lecture on, 215.
Bayreuth Festival, 634, 645, 665, 685.
Beethoveniana, 406, 607.
Beethoven's C minor Symphony, 846, 866; Sir G. Grove's Analyses of, 849; Letters of, 126; Remains, 507; Violin. 427; Marches. 974.
Bells (Parsifal), 25.
Benvenuto Cellini, The Operas on, 801, 813.
Berlioz and Jules Janin, 488, 506, 527, 545.
Berlioz's "Les Troyens," 67, 86, 108, 127, 147.
Bologna Exhibition, 52, 513.
Book Trade, 106.
Brahms's Gipsy Songs 893.
Bridge's, Dr., "Callierhöe," 914.
Browning Society, 941.
Bubble, Another, 926.
"By desire," 533.
Byron's Centenary, 64.

Canon by Mendelssohn, 910, 946.
Chappell. Mr. William, 665, 713.
Charity Concert, The, 726, 745, 765, 783, 797.
Children's Orchestra, 508.
Church Choirs: St. Paul's Cathedral, 153.
Church Music in America, 13.
Clavi-Harp, 154,
Cock-crowing, 84.
Colwell-Hatchney Musical Festival (From "Punch"), 692,

CONCERTS.

Austin, Ambrose, 475.

Bach Choir, 194, 395.
Barnett, Miss Esther, 114.
Bending. Mr. E., 474.
Beringer, Mr. Oscar. 395.
Bradford's, Dr., "Judith," 175.
Brönnum. Mdlle, Otta. 535.
Bülow, H. Von., 475, 495, 515.

Criterion Smoking Concert Society, 899.
Covent Garden Promenade, 656, 672, 697, 717, 736, 757, 773.
Crystal Palace, 134, 154, 174. 194, 214, 234, 274, 295, 315, 335, 672, 820, 835, 846, 867, 881. 915. 930, 943, 963.

Davies. Miss Fanny, 94.
D'Anka, Mdlle, 616.
De Jong, Mr., 5, 25.
Dykes, Mr., 175.

Essipoff, Madame, 930, 948.

Folkestone, Lady, 555.
Folville, Mdlle, 375.
Frickenhaus, Madame, 354.

Ganz, Mr. Wilhelm, 555.
Gordon League, 45,
Gresham Hall, 75.
Grieg, Edvard, 414.
Guildhall School of Music, 899.

Hackney Choral Society, 897.
Hallé, Sir Charles, 395, 534.
Heckmann Quartet, 931, 963.
Henschel, Mr. Vocal Recitals, 94. 155.
,, London Symphony Concerts, 15, 34, 54, 94, 115, 134, 155, 174, 195, 898, 915, 931, 942, 959.

Kenney, Miss Rosa, 899.

Llana, Madame de, 376, 805,
Leonard, Mr., 5.

Manjon, Senor, 34, 576.
Meyer, Agnes, 376.
Meyer, Herr Waldemar, 916, 942.
Musin, M. Ovide, 495.

Nicholl. Mr. William, 235, 869.
Nilsson, Christine, 447, 494.
Novello, Oratorio Concerts, 175, 275, 943.

Olympia, 55.

Pachmann, M. de, 54, 114, 474.
Patten, Miss Alice. 836.
Patti, Madame, 894, 943.
Philharmonic, 231, 335, 374, 415, 455, 495.
Popular, Monday and Saturday, 34, 54, 74, 94, 113, 134, 155, 174, 195, 214, 23 , 274, 883, 899, 915, 942, 943, 959.
Popular Musical Union, 354, 882.
Pradeau, M., 54, 74.
Prentice, Mr. Ridley, 395.

Richard, M., 95.
Richter, 375, 395, 434, 455, 475, 495, 534, 555.
Royal Albert Hall, 67, 74, 115, 174, 375, 847.
,, ,, ,, Saturday Concerts, 275.
,, Artillley, 295.
,, Society of Musicians, 930.

Sarasate, Señor, 375, 415, 434, 455, 476.
Shinner, Miss Emily, 255.
St. Paul's Cathedral, 67.
Stuart, Mr. Ralph, 916.

Thomas, Mr. 534.

Van Lennep, Mr , 65.

Werner. M. Theodore, 348, 815.
Westminster Orchestral Society, 194.

CONCERTS, MISCELLANEOUS.

Messrs. Yates and Summer, 75; Society for the Encouragement of the Fine Arts, London Organ School, Lyric Club, Miss Helen Killik, 95; Mr, Algernon Lindo, Trinity College, London, Stratford, St. Mary's, Whitechapel, Artist's Rifle Volunteers, Albert Hall, 115; Herr Grevillius, Mr. Malcolm Lawson, 135; Herr Ragnar Grevillius, Mdlles. Eissler, Lyric, East End Society, 155; Mr, Algernon Lindo, Sacred Harmonic Society, Herr Bonawitz, New Court Choral Society, Strolling Players, 175; Mr. Malcolm Lawson, Mile End, Highbury Philharmonic Society, Mr. J. Gladney Wolff, 195; Mr. J. E. Smith, Mdlle. Dratz, Mr. Mackenzie, Herr Max Schrattenholz, Portman Academy, Miss G. C. Brown, 215; Royal Academy Students, Mr. Malcolm Lawson, Miss Falconar, Mr. William Nicholl, St. Patrick's night, Mr. Charles Wade, 235: Wimbledon Musical Society City Special Constables, London Sunday School Choir 255, Kensington Amateur Choral and Orchestral Society, 275; Trinity College Students, Anerley Musical Society, Mr. Sinclair Dunn, Miss Millington Lynge, 295; Forest Hill Baths, Maidenhead Philharmonic, Mr. J. H. F. Ashworth, Magdalen Vagabonds, Master Harold Bauer, Mr. Arthur Walenn, Mr. George Leake, St. John's Waterloo Road, 315; St. John-at-Hackney Grammar School, Erith Choral Society, Hurstpierpoint Choral Society, Woodside Park Musical Society, Mr. Guillaume Frank, Mr. Aguilar. Madame Corneli a Dalnok Mr. Zaverthal, Otto Hegner, City School of Music, Tulse Hill Musical Society, Parochial Missions, Society of Cymmrodorion, Handel Society, Musical Artists Society, 355; Madlle. Ida Henry, Miss Cowen, Misses Flinn and Larkcom, Mr. Edwin Bending, Wandsworth Common Choral Society, Miss Margaret Hoare, Mrs M. A. Carlisle, Miss Holland, Miss Lilian Greville, 396; Mrs. and Miss Welman, Penzance Choral Society, North-East London Choral Society, 415; Morley Seaside Home, Mr. Lawrence Kellie, Mr. Arthur Friedheim, 416; Signor Denza, Mr. Van Noorden, Herr Constantin Schwarz, Birkbeck Institution, Mr. Aptommas, Mr. Henry Lebreton. Messrs. Ludwig and Whitehouse, Miss Elsa, St. Pancras Choral Society, Mr. Harvey Löhr, Mr. Robert Goldbeck, Mrs. Welman, Miss Emilie Lewis, People's Palace, Hampstead Constitutional Club, Miss Kate Cheyne, Madame Sophie Menter, Lothian Concert, 435; Mr. Ralph Livings, Miss Louise Phillips and Miss Margaret Hall, Society of Musical Artists, Mr. Henry Phillips, Signorina Elvira Gambogi, Mr. Oberthür, 456; Mr. Gabriel Thorpe, Mrs. L'Estrange, Mr. Horace Cadogan, Miss Hope Temple, Miss Liza Lehmann and Miss Lena Little, Miss Dangars and Miss Lee, Madlle. Marie di Lido, Mr. W. G. Cusind Señor Sarasate, Sir Charles Hallé. Mr. Richard Blagrove, Mr. Lawrence Kellie, Herr Ludwig and Mr. Whitehouse, Miss Isabell Stuart Smyth and Miss Edith Robiolo, Mdme. Sophie Lowe and Miss Mathilde Wurm, 475, Miss Emma Barnett, Mr. Wilhelm Ganz, Miss H. Sasse, Mr. Hume Webster, Miss Ganz, Kilburn Town Hall, Mr. J. H. Bennett, Mr. Harry Easum, Madame Madeline Hardy. 495; Mr. E. H. Thorne, M. Vladimir de Pachmann, Mr. Harold Savery, Mr. George Power, Royal Academy Students, Miss Carlotta Levy, Miss Clara Leighton and Miss Jeanne Ross. Miss Florence Emerson, Mr. James A. Bovet, Alexandra Palace, 515; Madame Della Valle, Miss Constance Lardelli, Mr. G. Cox, Miss Thekla Friedlander, Mr. and Mrs. Henschel, Madlle Jeanne Douste, Mdlles. Eissler, Madame Thea Sanderini, Herr von Czeke, Miss Emma Barker, Mr. John Radcliffe and Madame Pauline Rita, Miss Katherine Talbot, Madame Laura Zagury, Mrs. Bartholomew, Miss Josephine Agabeg, Mr. W. H. Cummings, 35; M. Alfred Napoleon, Mr. Ralph Stuart, Madlle. Bartkowska, The Chevalier Palmieri, Mr. Charles Wade, Signor Carlo Ducci, Madlle. Juliette Folville, Mr. Harry Williams, Mr. Bernhardt, Signor Villa, Mr. Edwin Holland, Italian Exhibition, Miss Edwards, 555; Signor Ellin Aramis, Mr. Raphael Gordon, Madlle. Thénard, Madlle. Jane de Vigne, 576; Herr Constantin Schwarz, Mr. Emanuel Nelsen, Mr. and Mrs. F. Bodda, Signor Bottesini, Hastings Pier, National Society of Professional Musicians, Miss Frances Allitsen, Miss Marie de Grey, Mr. Templer Saxe, 596; Florence Menk-Meyer, Signor Carlo Albanesi, 616; London Academy of Music, Open Air Concerts, 636; Alexandra Palace, 697: Mr. Edgar Davies, Hampstead Constitutional Club, 821; Mr. C. S. Macpherson, The Athenæum, Camden Road, Messrs. F. Lewis Thomas and William C. Hann, Messrs. Hann, 847; Grosvenor Club, Bohemian Musical Society, Mr. Winter, Mr. J. Hamilton Bennard, Mr. Charles W. Wilkes, Portman Rooms, Mr. William Nicholl, 869; Marlborough Rooms, Lyric Hall, Ealing, West London Male Voice Union, Harrow on the Hill, Miss Mathilde Wurm, 883; Mr. W. M. Quirke, Miss Amy Florence. Herr Emil Bach, Miss Lena Law, Brixton Hall, Messrs. Hann, Mr. Tobias Matthay, 899; Miss Winifred Parker, Portman Rooms, Eyre Arm's Assembly Rooms, Bohemian Musical Society, Highbury Philharmonic Society, Mr. Alfred Greenwood, Harestone Valley, 917; Heckmann Qnartet, St. Andrew's Day, Regent's Park Chapel. Hampstead Popular Concerts, Chelsea Town Hall. Gresham Hall, Brixton, Grosvenor Club, Mr. Penna, Miss Jessie Bridge, Madame Sophie Tueski, Miss Henden-Warde, Mr. Samuel de Sola, Miss Eugénie Caverhill-Shiel, Kingston-on-Thames, Putney, Wandsworth Town Hall, Mr. and Mrs. A. Haden, 931; Barnsley St. Cecilia Society, Misses Bateman and Mowbray, Mr. John A. St. O. Dykes, Herr von Czeke, People's Palace, Miss Dora Barnard, Mr. George Cox. The Fraser Quintet, Eyre Arms Assembly Rooms, Mr. Claude Trevor, Kingston on-Thames. Steinway Hall, Madame Essipoff, Mr. Harold Savery, 948; Kensington Orchestral and Choral Society, 960; Trinity College, London, Woodside Park Musical Society, Eyre Arms, Mr. Falcke. Messrs. Hanns, Miss Florence May, 964.

Coincidence, A, 247.
Concluding Hymn, 105.
Conference of Musicians, 15, 34.
Copyright Actions, 64.
Copyright Bill, Musical, 289, 327, 366, 434, 813.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Analytical Programme, 394, 454; Book Nuisance, 434; Letter from our Sporting Prophet, 474; Musical Chauvinism in Germany, 487; Correction, a, 334; Anglo Italians, 508; Emperor of Germany's favourite Hymn, 565; Wagner and the Philharmonic Society, 585; Musical Copyright, 588; "Faust" at Covent Garden, 588; Disclaimer a, 606; Etiam in Arcadia Ego, 627; the Charles Mackay Fund, 627; Et in Arcadia Ego, 648; Arcades Ambo, Mus. Bac. (Oxford), 648; Emil Naumann, 736, Students as Teachers, 750, 771, 815, 837; New Editions of Classical Works, 771; Students as performers, 787, 851; Emil Naumann, 787; Our Great Music Schools—The Royal Academy, 73; Royal College of Music, 133; Nationality in Music, 168, 187; Dr. Solidus and his pupil, 207, 227, 246; Counterpoint, 254, 294; Herr Ehrenfechter's Lecture, 254; St. Andrew's University and Musical Degrees, 294, 308, 334, 354, 368, 394, 627, 648, 751, 787, 851, 867; The Voice and the Weather, 303, New Wine in Old Bottles, 333, Press Notices, 354; Thin Edge of the Wedge, 368; Day Theory of Harmony, 883, 913, 946, 957; Metronome Question, 884; a Canon, by Mendelssohn, 946, Opera in London in 1888; 957.

Cowen, Mr., "Song of Thanksgiving," 328.
Cowen, Mr., in Australia, 634, 926.
Critics, Musical, 895.
Crœsus of the Right Sort, A, 93.
Crosmond, Death of Madame, 348.
Culture, Music and, 669.

David, A latter-day, 706.
Day, Macfarren, Theory of Harmony, 861, 883, 913, 946, 957.
Début in Italy, How I made my, 547.
Deppe's Method, Herr Ehrenfechter on, 216, 254.
Desire, By, 533.
Dibdin's Grave, 106.
Don Giovanni, of Gazzaniga, and of Mozart, 767.

Editorial, 613.

Election, Truth about the Academy, 73.
Electric Piano, An 115.
"Elijah" at Bologna, 594.
Elizabethan Songs, 45.
"End, Here is my,' 909.

FACTS AND COMMENTS.

144, 164, 184, 204, 224, 244, 264, 284, 304, 324, 344, 364, 384, 404, 424, 445, 465, 484, 505, 524, 544, 564, 583, 603, 623, 643, 663, 683, 703, 723, 743, 764, 780, 796, 811, 827, 843, 859, 875, 892, 908, 924, 940, 956, 972.

Failure, A, and its Lessons, 353.

FESTIVALS.

Birmingham, 628, 670, 689, 714.
Bristol, 727, 818, 833.
Chester, 614.
Handel, 514, 527.
Hereford, 717, 749.
Hovingham, 836.
London Gregorian Choral Association, 467.
North Staffordshfre, 818.
Reid, 166.
Wagner, 594, 634, 645, 665, 685.

Fine Arts, Music and its relations to the other, 625, 646, 666, 686.

Finsbury Choral Association, 486.
Fires, 5, 85, 107, 117, 125.

FOREIGN NOTES.

Baden-Baden, 66; Berlin, 35, 66, 76, 106, 116, 126, 176, 256, 337; Bologna, 125, 594; Boston, 76, 137, 196; Brussels, 17, 97, 167; Copenhagen, 107; Demerara, 316: Hamburg, 116; Italy 8, 156, 256, 307, 865; Leipsic, 25, 77, 116, 126, 137, 256; Madrid, 106, 125; Marseilles, 26; Melbourne, 125; Milan, 56 256, 307; Monte Carlo, 66; Munich, 126:8, New York' 58, 76, 107, 137, 217, 317, 377; Padua, 125; Paris, 5, 16, 46, 66, 75, 116, 117, 128, 157, 197, 235, 248, 925; Ratisbon, 97; Rome, 26, 46; Rouen, 26; St. Petersburg, 66, 78, 116, 126, 256; Turin, 77, 865; Vienna, 37, 66, 78, 107, 126, 137.

Form, 705.
Franz's Songs, 288.
Future of Bayreuth, The, 977.
German Opera in America, 107, 126.
Gipsy Songs, Brahms's new, 193.
Glasgow Choral Union, 136.
"Go to Bayreuth," 565,
Godard, Benjamin, 7, 27.
Gounod, Two New Works by, 347.
Grain, Corney, 566, 821.
Grossmith, George, 668.
Grosvenor Gallery, 104.
Guild of Organists, 878.
Guildhall School of Music, 44.

Hauptmann's "Nature of Harmony and Metre," 787.
Hearing on Paper, 553.
Heine's Monument, 106.
"Here is my end," 909.
Herkomer's "The Sorceress," 333.
High Aims, 573.
Hofmann, Joseph, 6, 107.
Hall, Frank, 607.
Houses in which Mozart lived, 266.

Janin, Jules, and Hector Berlioz, 488, 506, 527, 545.
Jewel Robbery, 125.
"Judith," Dr. Bradford's, 215.

"Kilmeny, Bonny," by Hamish MacCunn, 766.
"Lay of the Last Minstrel," by Hamish MacCunn, 941.

Letter and Spirit, 593.
License, 413.
Littleton, Mr. Henry, 393.
Lind-Goldschmidt's Will, Madame,
Liszt's "Danse Macabre," 47.
"London's Musical Taste," 927.
"Lucifer," Benoit's Oratorio, 878.

Macfarren, Sir G., His Life and Work, 769, 785, 798, 814, 830.
Mackenzie's, Mr. A. C, Inaugural Address, 366, 386.
Mackenzie, Mr. A. C., at Bristol, 850.
Mapleson's, Mr., Bankruptcy, 336, 414.
Marguerites, Stage, 894.
Melbourne Exhibition, 125. See also Cowen.
Mendelssohn and Moscheles, 105.
Mendelssohn, Canons by, 910, 946,
Monthlies, The, 616.
Mozart, "Don Giovanni" of Gazzaniga and, 767
Mozart, Houses in which he lived, 266.
Musical Association, 884, 942.
Music, a development of Speech, 958, 978.
Music in America, 614, 655.
Music in Arcadia, 594 605.
Music in England, Sir A Sullivan on, 834.
Music and Culture, 669.
Musical Circles, 895.
Music, A Painter's, 313.
Music of the Synagogue, 546.
Music and its relation to the other Fine Arts, 625, 646, 666, 686.
Music and Men of Letters, 193.
Music in 1887, 14.
Musical Terms, 725.
Musical Drama in Paris, 46.
Musical Taste, London's, 927.
Music Publishers' Weekly List, 16, 35, 55, 7[illegible] 116, 136.
My Drummer, 567, 585.
Nationality in Music, 165. 187.
New Year, The, 13.
Nikita in Germany, 85.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

J. D. Adlard, 106; Alkan, C. V. (Morhanfe), 316; J. G. Bratsch, 196; L. Barrielle (Bonvoux), 256; P. Bombardi, 256; Bérand, 256; Bitchourine, 256; Böhme, 256; Braunecker-Schäfer, 256: C. Costa, 196; Conte, J., 316; Chappell, William, 665, 713; Cole, Madame Blanche, 717; Delprat, C., 256; Fancelli, 66: L. Fioravante, 196; Flintzerhaupt, 256; Galzerani, 256; Grosjean, 256; Heller, 54; Halven, 256: Held, 256; Hochstetter, J., 316: Herpin, V., 316; Herz, 25; Hoon, 196; Holl, Frank, 607; H. Klassen, 256; Marxsen, 5; Meja, 256: J. Michel, 752; Parry, 84, Petschke, 196; E. Puerari, 196; E. Pastorelli; 256: Pede, J. F., 875: Picasso, A, 316: Privitera, G., 316; Rossellini, 5; H. Ruff, 196; C. Röder, 196: H. Richter. 256: Richard, 256: Schoenmehl, 85: Stepan, 5: Sohlmann, 256: Sutter, 256: Szemelenyi, E., 316; Schlosser, J., 316; A. Thoms, 196.

Opera Company, The Russian, 804, 836.
Opera, the Principles of, 634, 654, 670, 697, 715, 736, 751, 771, 788, 820, 932, 949, 978.
Opera, Royal Italian, Covent Garden, 394, 414 428, 454, 474, 494, 515, 534, 554, 575, 595.
Operas on "Benvenuto Cellini," 801, 813.
Opera Season, the Forthcoming, 347.
Orchestra, The Children's, 508.
Organ for Whitechapel, a New, 617
Organists, Guild of, 878.
Ortrud, the Character of, 493.

Paganini and Liszt, 407, 426, 466
Paganini's Violin, 327.
Patti, Benson, and Abbey, 466
Peculiar People, 65.
People's Concerts Society, 113
Princess of Wales among the Musicians, [illegible]

POETRY.

A Cres[illegible], [illegible]; There are Times, 20[illegible] [illegible] Plaint of the Grand Piano, [illegible]

Professional Musicians' Society of, 15, [illegible]

PROVINCIAL.

Ba[illegible] 882 [illegible] Bath, 57, [illegible], 56, [illegible]; [illegible] 8[illegible]; [illegible], [illegible], [illegible], 117, 1[illegible], 157, 216, 236, 2[illegible], [illegible]6, [illegible], [illegible], 3[illegible], 3[illegible], [illegible] [illegible] 598, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] 734 [illegible] 72, [illegible] 816, [illegible], [illegible], [illegible], [illegible] [illegible]; [illegible] [illegible] Birkenhead, [illegible] [illegible] 136, [illegible] [illegible], Bristol [illegible] [illegible] 4 [illegible] [illegible] 833, 850, [illegible] [illegible] Cirencester [illegible] Cheltenham, 316, Chester, 614; Cork, 104; Crewe, 930; Dublin; 45; Edinburgh, 56, 276, 356, 946, 962; Enniskillen, 58, 256, 911; Glasgow, 36, 55, 57, 76, 117, 136, 138. 236, 276, 316, 356, 417, 598, 772, 805, 819, 831, 852, 885, 900, 911, 946; Halifax, 899: Hereford. 717, 733, 749; High Wycombe, 157, 883; Ilford, 276; Leeds, 57, 116. 236, 276, 617, 862, 910; Leamington, 911; Limerick, 883; Liverpool, 57, 65, 76, 196; Jersey, 598; Isle of Man, 648; Manchester, 36, 77, 97, 137, 157, 196, 236, 256, 276, 296, 316, 356, 377, 416, 752, 831, 852, 863, 885, 900, 910, 930, 946, 962; Maidenhead, 157, 315; Norwich 275; Nottingham, 138, 376; Pinxton, 125; Paisley, 819; Peterborough, 467; Scarborough, 37; Sheffield, 737; Southampton, 276; St. Leonard's-on-Sea, 869; Staines, 883; Stafford, 156; Tunbridge Wells, 617.

PORTRAITS.

Madame Marie Roze. 213; Nikita, 233; Angelo Tessaro, 293; Cave-Zavertal, 373; Madlle. Sigrid Arnoldson, 433; Mr. Joseph Barnby, 453; Dr. Hubert Parry, 689; Dr. Bridge, 689; Herr Hans Richter, 689; Mr. W. Stockley, 689; Mr. Perkins, 689; Dr. Langdon Colborne, 733; Miss Hope Glenn, 749; Madame Oscar Pollack, 769; Mr. Iver McKay, 785; Mr. August Manns, 801; Sir Charles Hallé and Lady Hallé, 833; Herr Waldemar Meyer, 849; Mr. William Nicholl, 865; Madame Wilson-Osman, 881; Mr. Ebenezer Prout, 897; Miss Amy Florence, 913; Herr Pollitzer, 929; Madame Belle Cole, 945; Mr. Donnell Balfe, 961.

Queen at the Albert Hall, 375.

Ramann's "Liszt," Vol. II., 26.
Reeves, Sims, 799.
Reisemauer, 106.
Requiem. Verdi's, 214.
Rival Musicians. 115.
"Roméo et Juliette" at Paris, 925.
Roze, Marie, in Opera, 448. See also 708, 737.
Rose of Sharon, 215.
Rowbotham v. Wagner. 844
Russian Opera Company, 804, 836.

REVIEWS.

47, 48, 88, 128, 145. 166. 188, 228, 267, 287, 348, 368, 387, 408, 448, 467. 487. 516, 525, 547, 607, 656, 672, 688, 717, 735, 746, 766, 787, 789, 816, 847, 877, 943.

Royal Academy Competitions, 65.
,, ,, Elections, 104, 173.
,, ,, Operatic Class, 595.
,, ,, College Prizeholders, 45.
,, ,, Concerts, &c., 554, 586, 596, 836, 899, 963.
Royal Normal College for the Blind, 194, 528.
Rubinstein's Honours, 85.

St. Paul's and Dr. Stainer, 4, 107.
Schubert's Remains, 770.
Schumann's Early Letters, 6.
Schumann, Clara. 879.
Silvador's Musical Pigs, 68.
"Song of Thanksgiving," Mr. Cowen's, 328.
"Sorceress, The," 333
Speaker, The, on the Future of Music, 606.
Spontini and Wagner, 186.
Stage Favourites, 286.
Stage Marguerites, 894.
Sullivan, Sir Arthur, on Music in England, 834.

Summaries of the Season, 633, 653.
Symphony, the C minor, 846, 866.
Synagogue, the Music of the, 546.

THEATRES.

Adelphi, 615; Gaiety, 636; Haymarket, 274; Opera Comique, 135; Prince of Wales's, 95, 96, 106, 126; Princess's, 176, 434, 914; Royalty, 68; Savoy, 155, 235, 789, 804; St. George's Hall, 914; Terry's, 255; Toole's, 636; Vaudeville, 68.

Trinity College, London, 55, 75, 85, 136, 72 575.
Troyens, Les, 67, 86, 108, 127, 147.
Treasures of an Old Chest, The, 326.
Tschaikowsky, 226, 253.

University of London Examinations, 5, 24.
Urvasi at Munich, 25.

Victoria Concert Hall, 84.
Virtuosity and Temperament, 473.
Virtuosity The Visual Aspects of, 308.

WAGNER.

Wagneriana, 6, 26, 106; Character of Ortrud, 493; Festival at Bayreuth, 594; 634, 645, 665, 685; Go to Bayreuth, 565; Wagner in England, 574, 587; Wagner's Aims and Sacred Music, 727; Is Wagnerism a Failure, 781, 797, 845, 926; Wagner and the "Nineteeth Century," 829; Wagner-Liszt Correspondence, 125, 707, 747; Wagner Society, 894.

Widor, Charles, 306.
Wohl's "François Liszt," 26.

A. S. MALLETT, ALLEN & CO., PRINTERS, 68—70, WARDOUR STREET, LONDON.

The Musical World.

REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED; IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 17/6 PER ANNUM (Payable in advance).

VOL. 66.—No. 1. SATURDAY, JANUARY 7, 1888. PRICE {3D. Unstamped. 4D. By Post.}

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

THE OFFICES OF

'THE MUSICAL WORLD'

ARE NOW AT

12, CATHERINE STREET,

STRAND,

Where ALL communications to the EDITOR and MANAGER should be addressed.

DRURY LANE.—Augustus Harris, Lessee and Manager.—TWICE DAILY, at 1.30 and 7.30. Augustus Harris's Ninth Annual Pantomime.

PUSS IN BOOTS, at DRURY LANE.

DRURY LANE.—PUSS IN BOOTS.—Mesdames Wadman, Lettie Lind, Marie Williams, Jenny Dawson, Leslie Bell, Lily Miska, Violet Newham, Minnie Inch, Helen Capet, Florrence Graham, Mabel Coates, Marguerite Etoile, Millie Vere, Charlotte Elworthy, Alice Hammack, Bettina de Sortis (Premiere Danseuse); Messrs. Harry Nichols, Herbert Campbell Lionel Rignold, Charles Danby, Charles Lauri, jun., Reuben Inch, J. B. Gordon, Griffiths Brothers, Harry Payne (clown).—Box office open daily from ten to six.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE & RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & Co.,

Manufacturers and Importers of all kinds of Strings

FOR

VIOLIN, VIOLA, CELLO, DOUBLE BASS, HARP,

ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO,

Have always in STOCK the Largest ASSORTMENT of any House in the World.

6, GOLDEN SQUARE, W.

THE FRASER QUINTET. Misses Violet (Vocalist), Ida, and Ethel (Pianist, Violoncello, and Viola), Mabel and Stella (Violinists), play Quartets, Solos, Duets, two Pianofortes, &c. For Engagements, for Concerts, "At Homes," Dinner and Garden Parties.—Address: 121, Adelaide Road, N.W.

WESTMINSTER ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY. High-Class Public Concerts. Examination for Orchestral Membership 1st and 3rd Wednesdays. Address, The Hon. Secretaries, THE TOWN HALL, WESTMINSTER.

NOW READY.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

HISTORIC, RARE, and UNIQUE.

The Selection, Introduction, and Descriptive Notes

BY

A. J. HIPKINS, F.S.A., Lond.

ILLUSTRATED BY

A SERIES OF FIFTY PLATES IN COLOURS

Drawn by WILLIAM GIBB.

The Work forms one folio volume, handsomely bound in Half-Morocco, price £7 7s.

IMPRESSION LIMITED.

EDINBURGH: ADAM & CHARLES BLACK.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, Kensington Gore, London, S.W.

Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.

President—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director—SIR GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L., LL.D.

An ORCHESTRAL CONCERT will be given at Princes' Hall, Piccadilly, by the Pupils of the College, on Saturday, December 10, at 8.30, under the special patronage of H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES, President of the College, and H.R.H. the PRINCESS of WALES.

Conductor, PROFESSOR HENRY HOLMES.

Stalls, 10s. 6d.; reserved seats, 5s.; balcony, 2s. 6d. and 1s.

Tickets to be obtained at the College; of the usual agents; and at Princes' Hall.

OPEN SCHOLARSHIPS.

Eight Open Free Scholarships will be competed for in March. Last day for receiving applications December 31, 1887.

Forms and particulars may be obtained from the Registrar, Mr. George Watson, at the College.

CHARLES MORLEY, Honorary Secretary.

LONDON ACADEMY OF MUSIC. Established 1861. ST. GEORGE'S HALL; 1A, Harrington Gardens, South Kensington; and 1, Old Steine, Brighton.

Principal—Professor WYLDE, Mus.D., Cantab.

Fee, three to five guineas at St. George's Hall, four to six guineas at branches, is for the course of instruction in four studies.

Piano—Dr. Wylde, Barnett, Henseler, Laistner, Logé, Kohler, Loman, Gear, Trew, Roche, Mattei, Ehrenfechter, Lehmeyer.

Singing—M. Garcia, Lablache, Visetti, Scuderi, Dinelli, Raimo, G. Garcia, Denza, Badia, Bonetti, Rocca, Romili, Danielli, Barnett.

Violin—Pollitzer, Ludwig, Erba. Harp—Oberthur. 'Cello—Pezze.

C. TREW, Honorary Secretary.

TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

President—The EARL of ABERDEEN.

LENT TERM COMMENCES JANUARY 16, 1888.

Students (professional and amateur) are received for a complete course of musical training, or for a Single Study. The following is a list of the Subjects taught:—Harmony and Counterpoint, Form and Orchestration, Compostion, Musical Acoustics, Pianoforte, Organ, Figured Bass Playing, Transposition, &c.; Solo Singing, the Art of Pianoforte Accompaniment, Violin, Violoncello, Double Bass, Flute, Oboe, Clarinet, Harp, Horn, Orchestral Class, Musical History, Sight-Singing, Choral Class, Vocal and Aural Physiology (Lectures), and Voice Production Class (Lectures).

There are also Classes on General Subjects for the benefit of those Students of the College who are desirous of improving their general culture, or are preparing for the matriculation and other Examinations preliminary to University Degree and other diplomos in music.

Both male and female students are received, and there is no limit as to age. There are evening as well as day classes, and Harmony and Counterpoint are also taught by correspondence.

Students of the College are allowed to enter for any of the College Examinations at reduced fees.

The full prospectus, and all particulars, can be obtained by addressing the Secretary.

By Order of the Academical Board.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, W.

ACADEMY for the HIGHER DEVELOPMENT of PIANOFORTE PLAYING. 12, Hinde Street, Manchester Square, W. (Established 1873.)

President - - - - - FRANKLIN TAYLOR.
Director - - - - - OSCAR BERINGER.

Christmas Term commenced October 3. Entrance Day, October 1, from ten to five. Fee: Six Guineas. The Academy is for Amateur and Professional Students. Two Pianoforte and One Harmony Lessons weekly. For prospectus and all particulars apply to the Director.

UNIVERSITY OF TRINITY COLLEGE, TORONTO. (The Church of England University of Upper Canada.)

FACULTY OF MUSIC.

The next Examinations for the degree of Bachelor of Music will be held simultaneously in Toronto and London in Easter week, 1888. Women are admissible to these examinations. For particulars apply to Rev. E. K. Kendall, D.C.L., Registrar for England, Southsea.

Inscribed to Dr. BUNNETT.

MAGNIFICAT and NUNC DIMITTIS, in the key of C.—Easy setting for Parish Choirs, by Loraine Holloway, A.C.O. (Organist and Choirmaster of the Parish Church, Fakenham). Price Threepence. London: Novello, Ewer, & Co.

MR. SAML. K. WHITE, Manager and Secretary, Derby Castle, Douglas, Isle of Man, requests that all communications from Vocalists be addressed as above.

Hotel List.

The charge for a space in this column is 40s. per year—payable in advance—including postal copy of the paper every week. The proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any advertisement.

BLACKPOOL.—Bailey's Hotel, North Shore. Near the Pier and Winter Gardens.

LONDON. — Hotel Metropole, Northumberland Avenue, Charing Cross.

MANCHESTER.—Queen's Hotel, Piccadilly.

SOUTHPORT.—Victoria Hotel, on the Promenade, facing the Pier; five minutes from the Winter Gardens.

Under the Sanction and Approval of the Rev. Sir FREDERICK A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., M.A., Mus. Doc., and of Sir G. A. MACFARREN, Mus. Doc.

THE MUSICIAN:

GUIDE FOR PIANOFORTE STUDENTS,

By RIDLEY PRENTICE.

CONTAINS ANALYSES OF WELL-KNOWN PIECES PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED, ENABLING THE PUPIL TO UNITE A STUDY OF MUSICAL FORM WITH THE ORDINARY PIANOFORTE PRACTICE.

Saturday Review.—"We are far from suggesting that there is any royal road for acquiring technical knowledge, but we are quite certain Mr. Ridley Prentice's road is in every way the pleasantest that has yet been laid before any pianoforte student."

Academy.—"A knowledge of form is imparted in simple and pleasant language. We heartily commend it to all who desire to understand, satisfactorily interpret, and enjoy beautiful music."

Graphic.—"Written with the laudable purpose of helping the pianoforte student to understand and enjoy beautiful music."

School Board Chronicle.—"A useful book for earnest teachers."

Musical Review.—"Mr. Ridley Prentice has newly developed an important though much neglected branch of the teacher's duties."

Monthly Musical Record.—"No more valuable work of the kind is in existence."

W. SWAN SONNENSCHEIN & CO., PATERNOSTER SQUARE:

And all Book and Music Sellers.

Dr. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For sore throat, hoarseness, and relaxed throat, also for improving the voice

FOR SINGING AND SPEAKING

without fatiguing the voice. Celebrated in every town in Europe, India, America, and the Colonies. Testimonials from Patti, Trebelli, Patey, Santley, and the most eminent medical men.

Sold in boxes; 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d.; also in bottles for abroad.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER'S

LINEN COLLARS, CUFFS, AND SHIRTS.

Samples and Price Lists Post Free.

COLLARS—LADIES' 3-fold, from 3s. 6d. per doz. GENTS' 4-fold, 4s. 11d. to 5s. 11d. per doz.

CUFFS—For Ladies or Gentlemen, 5s. 11d. to 10s. 6d. per doz.

SHIRTS—Best quality Long Cloth, with 4-fold Linen Fronts 35s. 6d. per half-doz. (To measure, 2s. extra.)

N.B.—OLD SHIRTS made as good as new with best materials in Neckbands, Cuffs, and Fronts, for 14s. the half-doz.

ROBINSON AND CLEAVER, BELFAST.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised & Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR

THE VOICE,

By T. A. Wallworth.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Madame Alwina Valleria, Mr. Iver M'Kay, and other successful Vocalists:

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & CO. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

Professional Cards.

The charge for a space in this column is 10s. 6d. per quarter (13 weeks), or 31s. 6d. for a whole year—payable in advance. Applications should be made at the office of The Musical World, 12, Catherine Street, Strand, London, W.C.

Conductors and Composers.

Mr. FREDERIC H. COWEN,
73, Hamilton Terrace,
St. John's Wood, N.W.

Mr. WILHELM GANZ
(Professor of the Pianoforte, Composer, and Conductor),
126, Harley Street, W.

Mr. F. KILVINGTON HATTERSLEY,
A.R.A.M.
(Professor of the Pianoforte, Composer, and Conductor),
17, Finsbury Park Villas,
Green Lanes, N.

Mr. ALBERT VISETTI
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Conductor),
12, Westbourne Park Terrace, W.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN
(Guitar, Concertina, and Gigelira. Wood and Straw Instrument),
22a, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W.

Mr. F. St. JOHN LACY
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Vocalist) (baritone),
Fitzroy Mansion, Charlotte Street,
Fitzroy Square, W.

Vocalists—Sopranos.

Madame VALLERIA
(Opera and Concerts),
Bosworth House, Husband's Bosworth,
Rugby.

Miss EDITH DESMOND
(Opera and Concerts),
c/o Nolan & Jackson.

Miss KATE FLINN
(Concerts and Oratorios),
41, Welbeck Street,
Cavendish Square, W.

Mdlle. VELMI
(Opera and Concerts),
7, Chesilton Road, Munster Park,
Fulham, S.W.

Mrs. WELMAN
(Concerts),
3, Bedford Gardens,
Kensington, W.

Miss AGNES LARKCOM
Has removed to
158, Portsdown Road, W.

Madame ISABEL GEORGE, L.R.A.M.
(Concert and Oratorio),
29, Albany Street, Regent's Park, N.W.

Contraltos.

Miss JOSEPHINE CRAVINO
(Concerts and Oratorio),
2, Sedgmoor Villas,
Private Lessons given. Camberwell, S.E.

Miss MARY E. DAKIN, R.A.M.
(Mez. Sop.),
(Ballads, Oratorio, &c.),
31, Monmouth Road,
Bayswater, London, W.

Miss LENA LITTLE
(Concerts),
42, Norfolk Square, Hyde Park, W.

Miss PATTIE MICHIE,
68, Park Walk, Fulham Road,
London, S.W.

Contraltos.—Continued.

Madame OSCAR POLLACK
(Concerts).
56, Duchess Road,
Edgbaston, Birmingham.

Tenors.

Mr. BARTON McGUCKIN
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. Alfred Moul,
26, Old Bond Street, W.,
Or, 270, Elgin Avenue, Maida Vale, W.

Mr. ARNOLD BREEDEN
(Concerts, Oratorio, and Opera),
Address—N. Vert, Esq.,
6, Cork Street, W.

Mr. SEYMOUR JACKSON
(Concerts and Oratorio),
Old Trafford, Manchester.

Mr. PAYNE CLARKE
(Concerts and Oratorio),
28, Devonshire Street, Islington, N.

Mr. J. DALGETY HENDERSON,
Gothic Lodge,
Lordship Lane, S.E.

Mr. REDFERN HOLLINS,
30, St. Stephen's Avenue,
Shepherd's Bush, W.

Mr. BERNARD LANE,
60, Westbourne Park Villas, W.

Mr. WILLIAM NICHOLL,
28, Belsize Road, N.W.,
Or, Sole Agent, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Chevalier EDWARD SCOVEL
(Opera, Concerts, and Oratorio),
Hotel de L'Europe,
Milan, Italy.

Mr. W. ESMOND,
24, Upper Mount Street, Dublin.

Baritones.

Mr. WALTER CLIFFORD
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concerts),
c/o N. Vert, Esq.,
6, Cork Street, W.

Mr. FREDERIC KING
(Concerts and Oratorio),
19, Canfield Gardens, S. Hampstead.

Mr. NORRIS CROKER,
Egremont, Croxted Road,
West Dulwich, S.E.

Mr. FISCHER,
c/o Mr. Hermann Franke,
2, Vere Street, W.

Mr. JOSEPH LYNDE
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concerts),
63, Stafford Place,
Buckingham Gate, S.W.

Mr. ALBERT REAKES
(Bass-Baritone, of the "London Ballad Singers," Oratorios, Concerts, &c.),
30, Lancaster Road,
Notting Hill, W.

Herr RAGNAR GREVILLIUS
(Concerts, Oratorio, and Opera),
70, Portsdown Road, Maida Vale, W.

Bass.

Mr. WATKIN MILLS requests that in future all communications respecting Concerts, &c., be addressed to his residence, Huntcliffe, Bexley, Kent.

Mr. FRANK CELLI
(Concerts and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. N. Vert, 6, Cork St.,
Burlington Gardens, W.

Trumpet and Cornet.

Mr. THOMAS HARPER,
185, King's Road, N.W.

Pianoforte.

Mr. G. PRADEAU
(Lessons and Recitals),
1, Stowe Road,
Shepherd's Bush, W.

Guitar.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN, Guitariste, Instructress to H.R.H. the Princess Louise, has returned to town, 22a, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W., where may be had her celebrated book, "Learning the Guitar Simplified," 10s. 6d.

Violin.

Mr. ALLAN CAMPBELL
(Formerly Pupil of Mr. Henry Holmes and Dr. S. S. Wesley),
23, Thicket Road,
Pupils visited and received. Anerley, S.E.

Mr. JULES KOOPMAN
(Late Professor at Conservatoire Groningen. Lessons, Concerts, and Private Soirées),
109, Sutherland Gardens, W.,
Or, Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co.,
84, New Bond Street, W

Mr. LESLIE CROTTY and
Madame GEORGINA BURNS,
c/o Mr. Alfred Moul (sole agent),
26, Old Bond Street, W.

Miss AGNES JANSON requests that all communications respecting engagements may be sent to her new address, 34a, Gloucester Place, Portman Square, W.; or to Mr. N. Vert, 6, Cork Street, W.

MR. HEALEY'S SPECIAL LIST.

Madame LILIAN NORDICA (Soprano)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert),
Address to
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mdlle. LOUISE LABLACHE (Mez. Sop.)
(Opera and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W

Mdlle. HELENE HASTREITER (Contr.)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert)
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Madame BELLE COLE (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. JOHN PROBERT (Tenor)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. VAUGHAN EDWARDES (Baritone)
(Concerts and Oratorio),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. MULES BROWN (Baritone)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. HENRY POPE (Bass)
(Opera, Concerts, and Oratorio),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. T. L. CAMPION (Bass)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

THE LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.—Mr. HENSCHEL, Conductor. Eighth CONCERT, TUESDAY EVENING Next, ST. JAMES'S HALL, at 8.30.—Programme:—Overture to "King Lear" (Berlioz), Todtentanz (Danse Macabre), Phantastic Variations on the old chant, "Dies iræ," for pianoforte and orchestra (Liszt), Mr. Frits Hartvigson. Symphony in D (No. 2. Op. 36) (Beethoven); Air, with flute obligato (from the opera, "Hippolyte et Aricie"); Rossignol's "Amoureux" (Rameau), Mrs. Henschel; Flute, Mr. Svendsen. "Chaconne et Rigaudon," from "Aline" (Monsigny); Hungarian Fantasia for Pianoforte and Orchestra (Liszt), Mr. Frits Hartvigson. Reserved Seats, 10s. 6d., 7s. 6d., and 4s. Admission, 1s. At Austin's Office, St. James's Hall, and usual Agents. N. Vert, 6, Cork Street, W.

MADAME WILSON-OSMAN A.R.A.M., in response to numerous inquiries, is prepared to give LESSONS in SINGING, and also in the Art of Accompanying at Messrs. Ascherberg and Co.'s, Regent Street, W.—Communications should be addressed to 15, Granville Terrace, Child's Hill, N.W.

A BLESSING IN EVERY FAMILY.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.

These Remedies have stood the test of FIFTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE, and are pronounced the best medicines for family use. Tens of thousands of written testimonials bear witness to their marvellous curative properties. They are acknowledged by the whole civilised world to be the greatest efficacy in every form of disease. Sold by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors.

Manufactured only at THOMAS HOLLOWAY'S ESTABLISHMENT,
78, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

N.B.—Advice gratis at the above address, daily, between the hours of 11 and 4, or by letter

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES.

Public Speakers and Singers

Can use "Brown's Bronchial Troches" as freely as requisite, containing nothing that can injure the system. They are invaluable in allaying the hoarseness and irritation incident to vocal exertion, effectually Clearing and Strengthening the Voice.

"They seem to act specially on the organs of the voice, and produce a clear enunciation."—MARIE ROZE-MAPLESON.

Ask for and obtain only "Brown's Bronchial Troches." Sold everywhere at 1s. 1½d. a box.

THE MUSICAL WORLD is on sale at MERRYDEW'S Library Boulogne-sur-Mur.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS.—Advertisements should be sent not later than 5 o'clock on Wednesdays, to the Office, 12, Catherine St., Strand.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.—The Subscription to THE MUSICAL WORLD is now reduced to 17s. 6d. per annum (payable in advance).

All business communications to be addressed to the MANAGER of THE MUSICAL WORLD.

All communications in reference to the literary part of the paper to be addressed to the EDITOR, who cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless accompanied by a stamped directed envelope.

Facts and Comments.

The centenary of the "Times" has revealed, amongst other interesting things, the regard, or rather no regard, in which our art was held in this country a hundred years ago. The issue of the great newspaper published on January 1, 1788, promises accurate and full accounts on almost every conceivable subject; politics, commerce, Parliamentary debates, the stage, and the world of fashion are prominently mentioned. But as to music, there is complete silence. Things have changed since then, and it is but just to the "Times" to state that, leading the way in this, as in most other matters, it was the first, many years afterwards, to appoint a special musical critic, and thus to receive the divine art amongst the topics worthy of being introduced to the general reader.

Mr. Henschel will produce, inter alia, Liszt's "Danse Macabre" (solo pianoforte Mr. Frits Hartvigson), Brahms's early and lovely Serenade in D, opus 11, and a concert overture, "Morte d'Arthur," by Dr. Bridge. He will, no doubt, again provide a palatable feast, but what is the good, if those invited do not attend to partake of the good things set before them?

We understand that the hour for the commencement of the Monday Popular Concerts is to be changed from eight o'clock to half-past. Upon the whole, this seems a step in the right direction, and we hope that the example will be followed. At present, the fashionable hour of dining, or at least of digesting dinner, clashes with that of attending musical performances, to the mutual disadvantage of both.

The preparations for the Handel Festival, in June, at the Crystal Palace, are proceeding rapidly. Madame Albani, Madame Valleria, and Madame Nordica, Madame Patey and Madame Trebelli, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Santley have already been engaged. Mr. Manns will, of course, conduct, and it is hoped that it may be possible to secure even greater choral and orchestral effects than at preceding Festivals.

To judge from the tone of general comment which has accompanied the announcement of Dr. Stainer's threatened loss of sight, one could be led to believe that either his misfortune was new, or that his contemplated retirement from his post of organist of St. Paul's Cathedral was immediately to be looked for. Neither view of the case, however, is the correct one. Dr. Stainer, unfortunately, has for long been a sufferer from his eyes, and before now has undergone an operation, which has been only partially successful. His retirement from the organ-loft at the Metropolitan Cathedral is not likely to come into force for some months; and should it become inevitable, there is reason to hope that it will give to one of the best composers of modern Church music more time to devote himself to this particular branch of his varied accomplishments. As in the case of the late President of the Royal Academy of Music, the partial loss of his eye-sight does not necessarily prevent Dr. Stainer from future activity in the world of music.

The record of Dr. Stainer's work at St. Paul's is written in letters of gold on the memories of all those who contrast the Cathedral services as they now are with what they were twenty years ago. The progress is almost phenomenal. There is one point, however, on which we may be pardoned our expression of discontent. It is somewhat remarkable, in view of the great activity displayed over all the rest of the country in organising and carrying out choral festivals and services on a large scale, that hitherto there should have been so little attempt to do the same thing in London, where the material is so abundant, and many of the conditions of the problem comparatively so easy. As the Metroplis of England, London is almost of necessity the head-quarters of English Church music, as of everything else; but its claim to this distinction is based upon the excellence and enterprise of particular Church choirs, not upon any centralised operation, or any decided lead taken by the chief Church of the diocese. In saying this we do not discount the importance of the special services which are held in the Abbey and St. Paul's, and which have approached or exceeded the dimensions of many gatherings called musical festivals in the country; but it is the want of centralisation and organisation that is felt.

Of course, any such proposition naturally brings to the mind the Cathedral or the Abbey as the only places in connection with which it would be worth while or appropriate to carry it out. And of the two edifices, St. Paul's comes first in consideration, as being the actual cathedral church of the diocese. The ice of capitular conservatism has already been freely broken up, and there seems no reason to suppose that any well considered plan for making St. Paul's a centre of great choral gatherings, at a particular period of each year, would meet with any gratuitous opposition. What is done at present is worthy of all praise, but we could go much further and not fare worse. Perhaps Dr. Stainer, in his leisure, will have time to consider this.

Mademoiselle Leonard's musical At Home, last Monday, was highly successful, the singing being particularly good, especially that of Madame Dalnoki, a lady well-known in art circles at Vienna, of whom we have before made favourable mention; and Mr. Van Lennep pleased all by his rendering of "Love's Prisoner." M. Ortzman's violin performance was also worthy of note, and gained great applause.

For the University of London Intermediate Examination in Music, 1887, the examiners were R. T. Glazebrook, Esq., M.A., F.R.S., Dr. Pole, F.R.S., Prof. Reinold, M.A., F.R.S., Dr. Stainer, M.A. There passed in the First Division—Bate (Henry Vipond), Cunningham (Ada Louise), Davis (Thomas Henry), Eckersall (John Williams); in the Second Division—Coulson (Peter James), Smith (Thomas), and Thatcher (Edwin). For the B. Mus. Examination, the examiners were William Pole, Esq., Mus. Doc., F.R.S., and John Stainer, Esq., Mus. Doc., M.A. The Pass List has the name of Bertenshaw (Thomas Handel, B.A.), in the First Division, and in the Second Division, Beuzemaker (James Jeremiah, B.A.), Herzberg (Samuel Alexander), and Miller (Harry Colin). Williamson (John Richardson) passed in the First Division of the Intermediate D. Mus. Examination. These are the encouraging results of private study, and, in some cases, private tuition.

There is no end to theatrical fires. After Paris, Exeter; after Exeter, Islington; after Islington, Antwerp, where a violent fire occurred on the first night of the year, at the Alhambra Theatre. Fortunately, no one was in the building except the concierge and her family, who were saved. There was another panic caused by an alarm of fire in the Josefstädter Theatre, at Vienna, recently. A lady fainted, and the cry for water started an absurd panic, audience, actors, and actresses flying from the house in terror. Happily the assistants kept their heads and opened the emergency exits, so that the house was cleared within two minutes. The audience and players soon returned to the house, and the piece was played to the end without accident.

We had scarcely done penning the above lines, when the news arrived of the breaking out of a fire in the flies of the Belfast Theatre, where, happily, the mischief ended, owing to the prompt measures taken by two watchmen; and of the destruction of the Bolton Theatre Royal. At this theatre, curiously enough, two of the artists from the Islington Pantomime had been newly engaged.

The outbreak of a fire at Messrs. Erard's pianoforte rooms, in Paris has happily proved to be a very slight disaster.

Miss Sarah Berry, a new prima donna, makes her first appearance at Mr. de Jong's concert in Manchester, on Saturday next. Miss Berry's career is a remarkable one. From her eighth until her seventeenth year she was a weaver in a mill in Lancashire. Having gained the Courtney Scholarship, Miss Berry went to London, where she had the advantage of the tuition of the late Madame Jenny Lind, whose favourite pupil she soon became. Miss Berry also had lessons in declamation from Mrs. Kendal.

Verdi's "Otello" has been given at St. Petersburg, Buda-Pest, and is in preparation at Warsaw, Munich, and many other Continental cities. Are we still to lay in the rear of everybody else? Augustus Druriolanus to the rescue! We may add that the scheme for an Italian season at Drury-lane is progressing as favourably as can be expected, but we must not disclose details for the present.

M. Paravey has been appointed manager of the Paris Opéra Comique, out of a number of candidates. His qualifications for so important a post appear, it must be owned, somewhat slender, to an outsider. His antecedents are those of a not very successful baritone, and of an energetic provincial manager, who has produced Bizet's "Les Pêcheurs de Perles," Boito's "Mefistofele," and, quite recently, M. Adolphe David's "Diane de Spaar," at Nantes. All this is well enough in its way, but everyone knows that the ways of provinces are different from those of a capital, and that a manager who has pleased the one has to unlearn many things to please the other. In the way of money, M. Paravey is said to be the happy possessor of 400,000 francs, or about £16,000. Let us say in parenthesis, that if fortune had favoured us with so handsome a sum, we should humbly thank Providence, and lead a peaceful and quiet life, as what the French call a rentier. But M. Paravey soars higher than this; more than half his modest fortune will go as caution money, and the purchase of scenery and dresses, and with the remainder he is prepared to battle with the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune. Let us hope that fortune, which is said to favour the brave, will for once prove constant. It is true that he has a large Government subvention to fall back upon.

The death is announced of Carl Stepan, who has lately been suffering from ill-health, ascribed to blood poisoning, and who succumbed on December 29th from the effects of the amputation of his leg. Carl Stepan will be remembered in Germany as a baritone singer attached to the Courts of Mannheim and Baden; and in England as one of the principal baritones in Mapleson's Italian opera, and as an oratorio singer at the concerts arranged by Messrs. Barnby and Novello some years ago at St. James's Hall. Herr Stepan also sang as principal baritone at the Pro-Cathedral, Kensington, for many years. He was born at Storakovitz, in Bohemia, in 1822, and was, therefore, 65 years of age at his death. We join in the sympathy felt by the musical world with the talented son of the deceased artist, Mr. Max Eugene, now attached to Mr. Carl Rosa's Opera Company.

From Paris comes the announcement of the death of Zenobia, the last surviving daughter of Cherubini, who, after her marriage with Signor Rossellini, took up her residence at Pisa, and there died at the advanced age of 80.

The late Professor Marxsen bequeathed to the Vienna Conservatoire £500 for providing, yearly, three needy students with 50 florins apiece; for assuring that on every All Souls' Day a wreath shall be laid on Beethoven's grave; and lastly, for the institution of an annual social meeting of the professors of the Conservatoire. Marxsen was a pupil of Scyfried, and, as it is seen, held Vienna and the Conservatoire in the highest regard.

Herr von Strantz, the sub-manager of the Berlin Court Opera, who, as will be remembered, lately fell out with that high-handed aristocrat, Count Hochberg, is going to start an opposition theatre on his own responsibility. Apropos of opposition enterprises, let us mention the rumour that the Victoria Hall, in Regent-street, originally intended for a large concert hall, will most likely be turned into a picture gallery, where the artists who have seceded from the Grosvenor will exhibit their works, under the auspices of Messrs. Hallé and Comyns Carr.

The end of the Old Year has brought forth many interesting Wagneriana. Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel have published the remaining sketches for a sacred drama, "Jesus of Nazareth," which Wagner contemplated thirty years ago, and subsequently abandoned, for obvious reasons. The same firm has issued the first instalment of the correspondence of Wagner and Liszt, a most important and valuable work, which throws a beautiful light on the friendship of two great men, and from which we propose to give extracts at an early date. The originals of the letters written by Wagner were in the possession of the Princess Wittgenstein, and have, by her daughter, been placed at the disposal of Wagner's heirs, who, in their turn, have added the letters written by Liszt, and carefully preserved by their recipient.

Some interesting Wagner autographs were recently sold at Berlin, from one of which it appears that the song known as "Der Tannenbaum" was written as early as 1839, that is, before the completion of "Rienzi." This song, a somewhat feeble composition, has hitherto been a puzzle to critics, who, not knowing its date, attributed it to one of those fits of nodding, from which, according to Horace, even the excellent Homer suffered sometimes. Why will not the publishers of music, like the publishers of books, put a year on the title-page? The opus number alone is not conclusive, and, besides, in many cases misleading.

The stories regarding little Hofmann set going in the American Press are, if possible, more stupid than those which kept the interest in the infant phenomenon alive in this country. Here is one of them :—"One lady, who has met the boy, and who has heard him play, both in public and private, says that nothing that has been said of him adequately expresses his marvellous genius. At the first rehearsal which he had with the musicians, at the Metropolitan Opera House, prior to his first public appearance in New York, the members of the orchestra were perfectly astonished at his playing. They were still more so when he stopped them in the middle of a Beethoven sonata (sic), and directed Mr. Neuendorf to tell the clarionet to play more piano. He also told the well-known conductor how the time should be beaten, as the orchestra was not playing properly. It must have been a revelation to the musicians, who were all soloists, to be reprimanded for their work by a child, however talented, ten years of age." One would like to know the opus number of that sonata.

English musical critics have still much to learn from their confrères over the water. The following blossoms of flowery language are culled from the "Boston Evening Traveller," not, it should be understood as the utterances of that intelligent and well-written journal, but as a quotation from a Southern newspaper. This is how the opening of the opera season at New Orleans is described :— "A gorgeous tableau of blazing lights, brilliant colours, scintillating diamonds, brave men and fair women, whose faces bore a look of eager and enthusiastic anticipation, met the view of a looker-on at the French opera on Tuesday night. The velvety blackness of beautiful creole eyes grew lustrous with delight as they watched for the uprising of the curtain, and perfumed fans, in whitest hands, waved back and forth with a rapid grace of motion which indicated the restrained impatience of the owners.'"

No wonder that the same poet critic speaks of Donizetti's "Favorita," as "that exquisite story of Spanish chivalry, when belted knights, wearing fair ladies' colours on their hearts, drew their visors over the bearded faces on which the balmy kisses of dewy lips were pressed in passionate farewell, and went forth to battle for love and honor."

The arrangements for an historical series of opera performances at Bologna, says "Le Ménestrel," have undergone some important alterations since we first announced the intention of the directors. Instead of mounting certain operatic works of the 17th century, some belonging to the 18th century, by Peroglesi, Paisiello, Cimarosa, Gluck, Sacchini, for instance "La Serva Padrona," "Nina Pazza per Amore," "Il Matrimonia Segreto," "Alceste," and "Oedipus in Colonus" will be given. Fragments also from Rameau's "Castor and Pollux," Mozart's "Idomeneo," and Cherubini's "Blanche de Provence," will be presented on the concert platform.

It is said that a son of Paganini has discovered, and is about to edit, some posthumous works of the great virtuoso.

Reviews.

ROBERT SCHUMANN'S EARLY LETTERS.*

The music of Schumann, perhaps more than any other, abounds in whimsical hints calculated to whet our appetite for information concerning not only the external life of the composer, but also as to the particular notions and circumstances which, in his case, so frequently supplied the impulse to composition, and of which Wasilewski and other biographers furnish but scanty information. The very titles given to many of his pieces, the little tone-pictures contained in his "Children's Album," the "Forest Scenes," the "Carnival," Eusebius and Florestan, and scores of similar examples, too familiar to pianists nowadays to require enumeration, would be sufficient to prove the fact, even if we did not know it from other sources, that, side by side with his high musical endowments, and ever working in conjunction with them, existed literary faculty, intense humour, sympathy, a keen eye for the picturesque, and a lively perception of the poetical aspects of life. For these, and for other reasons, lovers of Schumann's music will eagerly turn over the pages of an excellent translation, recently contributed by May Herbert, of the early letters, originally published by the composer's wife, dealing with events between the years 1827 and 1840, and covering, therefore, the period of his boyish loves, of his legal studies at Leipsic and Heidelberg, of the struggle between law and art, and the final inevitable victory of the latter, down to within four months of his marriage to Clara Wieck. Readers of the MUSICAL WORLD have already had a foretaste of the pleasure to be derived from the original letters in Mrs. Oscar Beringer's interesting "Gleanings from Schumann's Youth and Early Manhood," published in these columns last year. The sidelight thrown upon Schumann's mental characteristics in the present collection, the abundant evidence therein afforded of his affectionate nature, of his glowing imagination, of his love of home and devotion to friends, and of that combination of musical and literary gifts before adverted to, and which found its culmination in 1834 ("the most remarkable year of his life," as he himself called it), in the establishment of the Neue Zeitschrift für Musik will prove of inestimable value for the musical student. The earlier letters, addressed from Zwickau, in 1827, to his school-fellow, Flechsig, are full of the high-flown phrases, and tinged with the romantic spirit, of youth ; when, however, he writes of his early loves, we read in the light of subsequent events ; we know that Liddy and Nanni were not for him ; that the years to come held in store for him another helpmate—the crowning blessing of his life—to cheer and uphold him in times of despondence and Titanic struggle, and after his death to be mainly instrumental in the tardy fulfilment of his own prophesy, uttered in the flush of youthful hope : "Don't be afraid, my dear Clara, you shall live to see my compositions come into notice, and be much talked about. I have no fear, and it will all get better by degrees, and within itself." A large proportion of these letters are addressed to his mother, his tender affection for whom neither distance nor the pre-occupations of his beloved art could ever diminish. Not the least interesting of them, but too long to reproduce here, is the temperate, sensible, manly appeal in which he battled with her long-sustained prejudice against the one career he had set his heart upon. "Now comes the question, 'to be or not to be,' for you can only do one thing well in this life, and I am always saying to myself 'make up your mind to do one thing thoroughly well, and, with patience and perseverance, you are bound to accomplish something.'" Though, fortunately for him, he was not altogether without means, allusions to perplexities on the subject of money matters, from which the lives of young artists are so seldom exempt, are almost comically frequent in these letters. In nearly two out of three, written during the early part of his career, are urgent appeals for remittances, written sometimes in a sprightly, at others in a despairing, vein, of which the following may serve as a sample: "I should like to have my hair cut, as it is a yard long, but haven't a copper to do it with. * * * * I ought to send several letters to Heidelberg, but have no money for the postage. What will the world think of me? My piano is horribly out of tune, but I cannot send for the tuner, etc, etc. I have not even enough to buy a pistol to shoot myself." Chatty accounts of his travels and excursions, graphic descriptions of natural scenery, a homely picture of the Wieck family, his enthusiasms for Schubert, Chopin, Liszt, and others, and the generous admiration he entertained for Mendelssohn, in spite of some doubts of the latter's sincerity, which troubled him in the earlier stage of their acquaintance, all help us to an understanding of this affectionate, ardent, and singularly attractive nature. Some letters to Clara Wieck have a place by themselves at the end of the volume. The temptation to make any lengthy extracts from these must be resisted. They are ideal love-letters, the happy outpourings of one musical soul to another whom he knows full well to be in sympathy with all his struggles, his predilections, and highest aspirations. The following short specimen might easily be replaced by many another of equal interest from the same source:—"How full of music I am now, and always such lovely melodies! Only fancy, since my last letter I have finished another whole book of new things. You and your ideas are the principal subject, and I shall call them Kreisleriana, and dedicate them to you; yes, to you, and to nobody else; and you will smile so sweetly when you see yourself in them. Even to myself my music now seems wonderfully intricate in spite of its simplicity; its eloquence comes straight from the heart, and every one is affected when I play before people, as I often do now, and like to do; and when you are standing by me, as I sit at the piano, we shall both cry like children—I know I shall be quite overcome." For the benefit of those in this country who are unable to consult the original, it may be hoped that an equally good translation of a later batch of letters (1828-1854), which has been edited by F. G. Jansen, will in due time be forthcoming.

---

* Robert Schumann's Early Letters, originally published by his wife : translated by May Herbert. Geo. Bell and Sons.

BENJAMIN GODARD.

It is announced that during the winter season "Jocelyn," an opera in four acts, by Benjamin Godard, is to be brought out for the first time at the Théâtre de la Monnaie, of Brussels. This fact, reported by all the French newspapers, has created quite a sensation in the general public, and, for the time being, the name and the personality of Monsieur Godard are themes for conversation in all circles where there is a heart and an ear for music. Had it been announced that a new symphony, or a new oratorio, by Benjamin Godard was to be performed at the Gewandhaus of Leipsic, or at the Albert Hall of London, or, for the matter of that, even at the Châtelet, or at the Cirque d'Hiver, I venture to say that the newspapers would not have thought it worth while to comment upon the coming event; and, had they done so, the majority of French readers would have passed over the paragraph, and not taken the least notice of it. "You see," one of the most distinguished musical critics in Paris said to me, the other day, "in France the opera is everything," and by the heartiness and artlessness of his delivery, and by the expression of his face, I understood that, though in words somewhat deploring this theatrical tendency of his countrymen, in his soul the critic was as French as the poorest Parisian, who will pawn his overcoat, but go shivering and hear the new opera of Gounod or Massenet.

Since the appearance of Beethoven's ninth symphony, and the works of Schumann, Liszt, Wagner, and Brahms, the purely intellectual part of music has soared, and with inconceivable speed, too high even for Frenchmen to follow it. Even for Frenchmen, because there is, perhaps, no nation in which a taste for Art is, so to say, congenital in each and all as in France. It may be very often a wrong taste, but there is always a taste for what they think beautiful, and an invariable and clamorous horror of dulness, which is the product of artifice when it apes Art. Italians have not much consideration for the Pope, because he lives amongst them; and for the same reason, perhaps, Frenchmen cannot be brought to worship at the Altar of Art, because the awful goddess, when in her lighter moods, is too often amongst them.

Thackeray wrote that Frenchmen must have their revolution; and it may be added that Frenchmen must have their stage, and on the stage something that appeals immediately to them, that makes them either laugh or cry, not something that obliges them to think too much. Philosophers they have, and plenty of them, to rack their brains when they feel so inclined; but when they are inclined to seek the comfort of Art, they will see, and hear, and be amused. I go as far as to believe that those patriots who object to Wagner because he is a German, are not bonâ fide; the art and the musical drama of Wagner are, in their essence, so exceedingly German, that even a political brotherhood of the two nations could not make the author of "Lohengrin" a whit more popular with the Parisian opera-goers.

It is needless to remark that these observations apply only to the general public, but the fact that the programmes of excellent music that are given at the Sunday concerts attract numerous and intelligent hearers—a fact that might be brought against my preceding assertions—is not enough to show in the nation a love for the new and higher class of music. Paris is not a village, as perhaps a cockney may believe in his heart; and if the want for music apart from the stage were really felt, a couple of concerts weekly, and at the same hour and the same day, could not supply even moderately the needs of over two million persons.

M. Godard, amongst French composers, has the undeniable right of being one of the chosen few by whose works we, and perhaps posterity, must judge of the present worth of the French school. Of these great composers he is the youngest, but to him might well apply the so often quoted line in "King Lear," and, next to Cordelia, to nobody better than him.

Benjamin Godard was born on August 18th, 1849, in Paris. It appears that his talent for music began to show itself in his infancy, because, at the age of only nine years, we find the little Benjamin playing a solo on the violin at a public concert. Happily, however, the good sense of his parents refrained them from holding up the little Benjamin as an enfant prodige; he followed a regular course of study, and had lessons from Reber in composition, and from Vieuxtemps in violin playing. At fifteen years of age he made, with Vieuxtemps, a concert tour in Germany, and the German newspapers are full of flattering reports of the gifted young violinist's successes. In this very same year he came out as a composer, and wrote a "Stabat Mater," which obtained a prize at a competition at Bordeaux. Since then he always kept himself before the public, by publishing compositions of various kinds: songs, studies, sonatas, suites, &c., but it was only in 1878 that his reputation as a composer was almost officially established, when his Symphonie Dramatique "Le Tasse," was awarded, ex æquo with Dubois' "Le Paradis Perdu," the prize of ten thousand francs, which the City of Paris offered, in 1878, to the author of the best instrumental and vocal composition. It was a jury composed of such competent judges as Charles Gounod, Ambroise Thomas, Saint-Saëns, Delibes, and others, that had the difficult task of awarding the couronne and the purse of £400 to the best work sent in for competition; and it was after many sittings that they came to the conclusion that "Le Tasse" and the "Paradis Perdu" were both equally worthy of the prize. "Le Tasse" was performed that same year at the concerts of Colonne, at the Châtelet, where it scored something like a popular success, but, not being an opera, its career ended somewhat abruptly. Fragments of this work, particularly a charming pastorale, are very often performed, but I know not whether "Le Tasse," after the first time, was ever presented in its integrity to an audience. Having thus established his reputation, Godard has held his ground victoriously to this day, with works of ever-increasing importance, and, as in duty bound, he tried also the stage; but, so far, his way in that direction has not been very easy. The first opera he wrote, "Les Guelfes," remains still unpublished and unheard, except by fragments in concert rooms, in the maestro's portfolio. The second one, "Pedro de Zalamea," was performed at Antwerp, in February, 1884, but, though a clever and inspired composition, the unsatisfactory libretto proved a positive drawback to its successful career.

(To be continued.)

MUSIC IN ITALY.

MILAN, January 1st, 1888.

Ida Bosisio, a pianist; Gemma Luziani, another pianist; Tivadar Nachèz, the violin player; "Queen of Sheba" (Regina di Saba) Goldmark's beautiful, though rather lengthy work; "Annibale," a new grand ballet; voilà the news and novelties of our theatrical and artistic season at its beginning.

The night of Santo Stefano (26th December), all over Italy means the opening for the winter, or, more properly speaking, carnival season (Stagione di Carnevale), and the theatres, big and small, more or less important, have done their best to enter the field of entertainments. I will not say they have been all successful. Milan, for its part in the pleasant struggle, went on well, both financially and artistically. Scala, Dal Verme, Carcano, Manzoni, Filodrammatico, had full houses, full cash-boxes, and, somehow, full success. Of other Italian theatres I may mention Bergamo with "Don Sebastiano," Como with "Carmen," Genoa with "Don Carlo," Verona with "Carmen" too, Parma with "Re di Lahore" (an awful fiasco), Ravenna with "Carmen" again, Pesaro with "Fra Diavolo," and, above all, Turin with "Otello" (Verdi's of course).

In this last city the first performance took place on the very night of Christmas (what a disagreeable custom, by the way) and gained a new triumph. Of course, although grand in itself, being played on the stage of the Teatro Regio, the performance had nothing in common with that of the Scala; still, it was an event of interest, all the people being very anxious and a little fretful, too. I may say the music gave rise to almost the same phenomena noticed here, in Milan, and afterwards at Brescia, Venice, Rome, Budapest, St. Petersburg: a growing success on subsequent nights, all the beauties in the score being more and more appreciated as the mind grasped larger comprehension of the whole masterly work. A wonderful, unexpected success was for the tenor, Signor De Negri, who, I am told, did marvels; nobody thought of such a bravura both as an actor and a singer—intelligence and splendid voice. "Otello" is now making furore in the majestic Taurinorum, and I shall say no more. Naples opened its season with "Don Carlo," with a big success for Kaschmann (Marquis of Posa); Rome, with "Il Profeta" and a glorious night for Tamagno, who was made the object of ovations, as he plays the rôle with power and cleverness of extraordinary effect.

Turning again to Milan, Signorina Ida Bosisio—a charming young lady—won approval as a pianist, but made no special impression; she has not yet shaken off the dust of the schoolroom. Gemma Luziani—the prodigy of some years ago, when a child—conquered, as usually she does, her public in two concerts. She is a wonderful artist at that too much abused instrument, and what makes of her an exception among many pianists, is conscientiousness as an interpreter. As a player she is simply marvellous; one might think the piano speaks under her tiny fingers. Gemma Luziani is on the way of fame, and deservedly, I will add, for she is improving year by year.

And Tivadar Nachez? I shall say nothing except that he made a great furore at our Filodrammatico in three concerts, though not to be compared in some things to that of his predecessor the Belgian Thomson. Yet Nachez is an exceptional violinist, a genuine son of that classical country, Hungary, which has given us many a splendid performer on the most difficult of all musical instruments. He met with a rather too apathetic public, and had to conquer their applause through daring wonders.

"Regina di Saba" and its author have been cordially welcomed at La Scala. Goldmark has been recalled a dozen times, amidst ovations; several numbers of the too long and not too well treated plot—historically speaking—were specially applauded, and two encored; the stretta—very beautiful—of the prelude of the second act, and the romanza of the tenor (Signor Nouvelli) in the same act. The critical Press of Milan have been, one and all, unanimous in praise, and even admiration, for the big brain of that musician, and, altogether, of his mighty work; but I think the best judgment of it has been given in the Gazzetta Musicale, by Giulio Ricordi, condemning what was rightful to condemn in this—for us—new opera, with an artistic and Italian view of the would-be new school in which, I should say, no author has yet reached so high and perfect a point and measure as Verdi with his "Otello." The dramatis personæ did all their utmost to please the master and the audience, and well they did. Signora Kupfer-Berger (Sulamid), Signora Voenna (Regina), Signora Sara Palma (Astarot, her slave), and Signor Nouvelli (Assad), Dufriche (Salomone), Navarini (Baal-Hanan)—each of them sang and played with all their heart. Besides the exquisite singing of the tenor, Nouvelli, I have to mention a real and marked success for Signora Sara Palma (an American), who, appearing at La Scala for the first time, had the rare luck to recall the famous words, veni, vidi, vici, astonishing the audience with her unexpectedly good rendering of the beautiful Nenia Araba, in the scene of fascination (allettamento). When she (Astarot) sang a voce sostenuta that very curious passage without orchestral accompaniment—the audience burst into frantic applause, and Signora Palma (a nom de bataille, by the way) was called out to the proscenium. Her voice is strong, full, melodious, and her appearance distinguished.

Yesterday, Signora Giovannina Lucca (the publisher of the score) gave a grand lunch in honour of Goldmark, in that same hall of the Hotel Milano where Giulio Ricordi welcomed the numerous and distinguished guests who had come to hear Otello. At the table sat, besides Signora Lucca and Goldmark, all the editors and critics (musical) of our Press, and Folchetto as a representative of the Roman Fanfulla; Negri the Syndic of Milan; Giulio Ricordi, the maestri Faccio and Coronaro; the poet Zanardini, translator of the libretto; Lamperti, the impresario of La Scala. Goldmark was much moved, and had to make several speeches in answer to those from the lips of Signora Lucca first, and Signori Torelli-Viollier (editor of the Corriere della Sera), Negri (who spoke as he always does—beautifully), Giulio Ricordi, and others. Signora Lucca embraced and kissed Goldmark amidst thunders of applause. The lunch went off capitally, and the adieu to Goldmark will not be effaced from his heart for a long time to come. Milan has done him all the honours he deserves.

At the Dal Verme, besides the opera, "Cicio e Cola" (comic opera), of Maestro Buonomo, a half-and-half success, the grand new ballet was given: "Annibale" (libretto by Ferdinando Fontana, music by Marenco, and choreography by Pogna). One curious feature of the new ballet is that its subject has been narrated in verse by the poet Fontana. The action has all the grandeur worthy of the subject, scenery very good, much splendour of arms and armour, bright music, fine corps de ballet—in fact, a most profitable entertainment for the public and the exchequer of the impresa.

GIULIO A. MANZONI.

The Organ World.

ON REGISTERING.

I.

Perhaps there may be nothing unseemly in beginning a grave organ-playing subject—especially as it is still a time within the joyful halo of Christmastide—with a playful conversation regarding the modern term "registering." "What do organists mean by registering?" was surely a natural inquiry on the part of, say, an inquisitive lady. "Do they, speaking as other men, refer to the act of securing their votes in time for the next election?" "No, madam," replied a musical critic; "they mean stop-changing." "But," observes the inquirer, returning to the charge, "why should they not choose a stop and stick to it?" "Because, madam, if organists, at least in England, do not practise stop-changing, they may as well stop playing altogether." Certainly it would be well to have a more euphonious and definite term than either "registering" or stop-changing, whereby to indicate the really important and picturesque tone-colour branch of the art of organ-playing. The subject to be talked over brings to mind the various and active mechanical duties of the organist. A German ecclesiastic, who knew something of his subject, once observed that he envied the skilful organist as a person endowed with rare and well-trained mental and physical powers. The saying is worth thinking over. The organ-player must indeed, in order to do his work effectively, possess a mind not only stored with considerable theoretical and practical knowledge, but also employ an amount of alertness, tact, and forethought, which we speak of in ordinary parlance as "good generalship." Then, physically, the organist must exercise no small amount of strength and activity; and it may be added, no portion of his work calls for more judgment and readiness both of mind and hand than does the art we now speak of as "registering." A few years ago, a Rubinstein devotée made a laborious calculation as to how much weight the pianist practically displaced by touch during a recital. An organ-lover made the equally needless calculation that an organ recitalist actually exceeded the physical endurance of the pianist, counting the number of notes played by hands and feet, and adding thereto the additional weight of touch of the organ as compared with the pianoforte, and duly considering the movements of the hands and arms in stop-changing, and the labour imposed upon the feet by the movement of composition pedals. In both calculations, the stated results were surprising. However, organ gymnastics are not under consideration; stop-changing, draw-stop manipulation, or "registering," for want of better terms, will afford graver thought, it is hoped, for both writer and reader. Viewed generally, the art of stop manipulation begins with that form of organic economy organists often call "preparation"; that is, the various manuals and pedal are placed in a primary condition of readiness for use by the preliminary drawing of certain stops. This work means, acoustically, the setting out in each of the organs forming collectively the instrument we speak of as the organ, of a sufficient and effective amount of foundation tone, and which to the organist means a substantial preparation of pipes, speaking tones identical in pitch with the keys to be pressed down; pitch meaning the sounds used generally in music and as represented by the keys of a keyboard instrument. Pictorially, or from the tone-quality aspect, "preparation" of stops means securing a musical atmosphere or neutral tint, so to speak, upon which other and more definite effects are laid, as it were. The first act of preparation, therefore, is that of drawing a sufficient and proportionate amount of "flue work" of eight feet pitch. This act will be regulated by the general character of the music to be played; and the characteristic idioms of the music to be rendered will further decide what additional mutation, reed or solo stops, may be required to put the organ in a condition of readiness for the performance of a given piece of music. The economy of preparation also includes the question of future convenience, in the way of selecting, if possible, stops likely to be required more or less throughout the piece to be performed. The reduction of labour, as far as such reduction may be permitted with due regard for effects to be produced, is a branch of the organ-playing art of no mean importance, and has a distinct relationship with consistency of purpose, a matter of still higher importance. This economy of labour characterises the performances of the first-rate player to a very large extent, for the movements of his hands, arms, and feet are all nicely calculated; he does nothing needlessly, and is swift, sure, and silent in all his movements and in his masterly control of the numerous mechanisms he is called upon to manipulate.

E. H. TURPIN.

THE COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS' EXAMINATIONS.

Some general observations, specially regarding the modus operandi and new arrangements affecting these examinations, were recently made; a few more words on certain peculiar features of these important tests may not be without interest. The examiners are divided into two sections, one undertaking the paper work and the other the organ playing and Church music tests. The final decisions are arrived at by consultation between the two bodies of examiners, who are, as is well-known, leading men of their profession, and include gentlemen representing not only Oxford and Cambridge, etc., but are, further, cathedral and church organists and recital players, who bring their practical knowledge and matured judgment upon the work of examination. The candidates go through both departments under the disguise of numbers, and the examiners, as well as the outer world, have no means of recognising the various candidates during the work of examination; and, again, the names of the unsuccessful are not revealed, even to the examiners; only the successful are announced. In the theory departments, candidates of all schools are assessed upon the simple and only true basis of "good work done," and the examiners neither suggest given text books nor sit in judgment with the danger of "tipping the balance" by feelings of favour in this direction or prejudiced thoughts in that direction. The promptitude with which the results of the examination are made known has long been a feature of the College of Organists' examinations, and this promptitude is only secured by considerable labour and by a carefully thought-out clerical machinery. The results of the examinations commencing on January 10th for "Fellowship," and on January 17th for "Associateship," will be duly announced in these columns.

THE SALARIES AT WESTMINSTER ABBEY IN THE OLDEN TIME.

Through the obliging kindness of an esteemed correspondent, the following interesting statement of the stipends of the various officers of one of our great ecclesiastical establishments is laid before the reader. It will be unnecessary to remind the reader of the much higher value of money in 1541, as compared with the present time.

The establishment of the Church of Westminster, 32 Henry VIII., comprised the following members receiving quarterly and daily payments:—

The deane, lviij*li.* ijs. vj*d.*
12 prebendaryes, vij*li.* xv*d.*
11 petticanons, 13 at 6*d.* the day.
A pysteller and gospeller, 1*s.*
Scole master cs, and usher 1*s.* of the grammer scole.
A scole master of the songe scole, 1*s.*
11 vicars, xl*s.* at 5*d.* the day.
5 queresters xvi*s.* viij*d.*

2 sextens, 2 porters, 2 butlers, 2 coks, a caterer, almsfolk (including a priest), 4 lay brothern, 3 belryngers and wayters, and 35 grammer children at xvj*s.* viij*d.*

The original of the above is in the Land Revenue Record Office.

The above list offers curious evidence of the high estimation in which the educational officers, including the master of the choristers' music school, were held, viewing the matter through the practical light of payment for services rendered. A careful comparison of the stipends here given with those at present paid at the Abbey will not be found flattering as regards our boasted patronage of music, or complimentary as regards the honesty and good-will of those who have governed the Church chiefly in the interests of the clerical profession. There is talk in these days of distributing some of the wealth of our cathedral establishments amongst the least well-to-do, and certainly very deserving clergy; but justice surely demands first, a proper re-adjustment of the incomes of our cathedral officers; and specially imperative is the cry of justice in the interests of minor canons, vicars-choral, &c. It would be impossible to overrate the value of the self-denying services of these officers and our esteemed and well-known cathedral organists; and it is certain that the national sense of honour and justice will ere long call for decisive action in this direction. Those who love and wish well to the Church are anxious that she shall set her house in order in these days, when disestablishment is glibly talked about; and in no direction could a reformation in the distribution of the Church's wealth be more acceptable to the national mind just now than in connection with those treasure-houses of sacred art, our cathedrals. The recent reduction of the salaries of cathedral officers at Gloucester, St. Asaph, and Peterborough might well be regarded as furnishing the key-note of an impartial inquiry into the state of our cathedral funds, with the ultimate view of doing justice to all our deserving cathedral officers.

REV. E. HUSBAND ON GOUNOD'S CHURCH MUSIC.

During "An Evening with Gounod" at St. Michael's, Folkestone, the Rev. E. Husband, the incumbent, made the following observations:—

The part I am to take in to-night's Service of Praise is to me a labour of love. I have to speak of one who is the greatest of living Church composers, Charles Francois Gounod, who was born in Paris, June 17th, 1818, so that now the great composer is approaching 70 years of age.

Gounod is a deeply religious man, and at one time in his life it was thought that he would become a Priest of the Roman portion of the Catholic Church. In fact he attended for two years in Rome a course of Theology, and became an out-pupil at the Sèminaire in 1846. He is said to be well versed in the writings of the old fathers; for instance, his preface to "Mors et Vita" is a short theological essay on death and life. However, the idea of taking holy orders was abandoned, and Gounod was destined to preach the Gospel to his fellow-men not from a church pulpit, but through the ministry of music, much of which can never die. But Gounod's religious spirit helps to inspire his music. His whole soul is in what he writes. There is such a thing as mechanical music in the world, such as the organist, be he professional or amateur, produces when he turns the handle of a barrel organ.

There is imitative music in the world, that is always reminding you of the greater music of a supremely greater somebody else. But Gounod is no copyist, no imitator, no mechanical musician. He is invested with an individuality and originality which always accompany true genius. You can't mistake Gounod's music. And who amongst living composers is such a master of melody and of harmony as he, with such startling progressions and modulations, and harmonious discourse? If the orator has the smiles and tears of his audience at his will, so has Gounod, standing on the higher platform of music, a still greater power to move the heart to rejoicing or to tears. So greatly has Gounod's music the power to do this, that sometimes we have heard people say, "the music is too luscious to be used in church," or "too operatic," whatever they may mean. I am not blind to the occasional defects of Gounod's music, nor to an excessive exaggeration at times of style, such as you meet with, for example, in the second part of "Mors et Vita;" but, notwithstanding all defects, Gounod stands out before me as the great living composer of the present day, who has, and is still bequeathing, rich legacies of music to the world, that will take their place for all time amongst the classics of musical compositions.

Let me now proceed to a few illustrations of my subject this evening—a matter which is attended with some difficulty and regret, because I feel how many, how very many sacred compositions of this great composer I am bound to pass over for want of time, quite as beautiful as those which I am now going to ask my faithful choir to sing to-night, which I have arranged not in any attempt of order of merit, but simply in the way which I think will be most convenient to the choir.

And the first composition I shall notice is Gounod's paraphrase of the 137th Psalm, entitled "By Babylon's Wave." It opens with the soft, sad music, telling how by Babylon's wave, bound in heathen lands, the people of Israel sat mourning far off from their dear fatherland. And then for a moment the music lifts its voice into a brighter strain as the words are sung, "Sion! thy memory still in our heart we are keeping." Then once more the sad, soft music comes again, full of grief and sorrow, "And still we turn to thee, our eyes all sad with weeping, Through our harps that we hung on the trees goes the low wind wearily moaning;" and then follows a bar bouche fermée, i.e., sung with shut mouth to illustrate the moaning of the wind, a musical trick, I may call it, often to be found in German part songs, and referred to by Beethoven. And then the anthem continues with a heavy cry of how, maddened with wine, the foe was rejoicing, thronging around their altars; and the cry becomes more and more intense, as they shout their bitter taunts, "Loud for mirth they call," bursting forth in a passage marked fortissimo, "A song, a song of Sion sing, lift up your voices!" And then, wedded to descriptive music, comes the prayer of the captives, culminating in a loud, eloquent cry at the word "Jerusalem," followed by this solemn pledge, "If we forget thee let our hands remember not their power and our tongue be silent from that hour!" And then the anthem concludes with a passionate denunciation upon the enemies of Israel, so frequent in the Psalms, and so common in the days in which the Psalms were written, "Woe unto thee! Babylon, mighty city, for the day of thy fall is nigh! for thee no hope, for thee no pity, though loud thy wail riseth on high. Then shalt thou, desolate, forsaken, be torn from thy fanes and thy thrones; in that day shall thy babes be taken and dashed against the stones. Then unto thee, O Babylon the mighty, be woe!"

And now from this impassioned cry of captive Israel, let me turn to one of Gounod's masterpieces, the "Messe Solenelle." If I were asked the question what setting of the Communion Service touched my heart the most, I think I should reply Gounod's "Messe Solenelle." When I say this I am making no comparisons between this and other beautiful settings, such as those of Haydn and Mozart. No such comparisons are necessary where all have a distinct beauty of their own. But I know of no Communion Service that seems to have more soul in it than the "Messe Solenelle." As a member of the Church of England, I am best acquainted with this most beautiful composition in its English dress, as adapted by Mr. Barnby to the Communion Service of our own portion of the Church. And first I would speak of the exquisite Kyrie which commences the composition. A short adaptation of the Kyrie has been provided in accordance with our custom of singing short responses to the Ten Commandments; but the long Kyrie, as I may term it, found in the great Masses, is generally so specially beautiful, that it is a pity to miss it in our musical services. But I would venture to suggest to organists and choirmasters, that it is, to a musician, an easy task to adapt the "Long Kyrie" to the tenth response in our Communion Service. It makes the service two or three minutes longer, but what is that to the heart of him who loves music and the habitation of God's House? And while I am upon the subject of omissions, which we frequently have to bewail in our Communion Services, may I express my astonishment (speaking only now from a musical point of view) that so many Church people, and musical people, are so far behind the times that they only stay in church while the Kyrie and the Creed are being sung? They seldom, if ever, hear the Sanctus, or the Benedictus, the Agnus Dei, or the Gloria, which often contains the most beautiful portions of the musical setting. But time and space alike forbid me to go through the beauties of Gounod's "Messe Solennelle," the music of which is so well known to the congregation of this church. I will, therefore, ask the choir to give only just a few bars of this truly inspired composition, and let us select the movement from the Gloria commencing with the words, "O Lord, the only begotten Son," and ending with the words, "Have mercy upon us." It is but a fragment of a work which is crowded with beauty, with refined melody, and rich harmony, from beginning to end.

And now let me give you just a fragment from Gounod's splendid sacred trilogy—"Mors et Vita." I shall never forget the impression it made upon me, when I heard it produced at the Birmingham Festival two years ago. At the previous Birmingham Festival, I had heard "The Redemption" produced, conducted in person by its illustrious composer, but it had not touched me in the way "Mors et Vita" had done. I doubt if ever musical composition produced a more exquisite, heart-stirring melody than that which Gounod in his preface to "Mors et Vita" describes as his "second melodic form, that of consolation and joy, expressing the happiness of the blessed."

Two more compositions remain for our notice this evening. And the first of these is from "The Redemption." Many musicians consider "The Redemption" a greater work than "Mors et Vita."

And now we come to the last piece I have selected for our consideration to-night. Perhaps I have saved the best for the last. I don't say I have done so, but at all events Gounod's Motet "Gallia" is a work worthy to stand on the same platform with the works of Mendelssohn, and Handel, and Beethoven. Strange to say, this "Lamentation," for such it is, was composed for the opening of the International Exhibition in 1871. But it has a plaintive history of its own. It was written during the misfortunes that had at that time overtaken France, when its illustrious composer was an honoured exile in our own land. It was with the sorrows of France in his patriotic heart that he turned to the Book of the Lamentations, and, to his mind, found in depressed Jerusalem a picture of his own beautiful France, overshadowed as she then was by the dark tempest cloud; but yet not without hope that a brighter future lay before her, as the last few years have shown. No one, who has a spark of music in his soul, can listen unmoved to a rendering of "Gallia." The lament of the first chorus, how the city was lying desolate; the exquisite tenderness of the treble solo—"Zion's ways do languish;" the almost magical descriptiveness of the solo and chorus—"Is it nothing all ye that pass by?" the startling effect of the prayer, "Now behold, O Lord, look Thou on my affliction," lead up to a climax which is one of the most inspired that have ever been reached even in music. I can never hear the conclusion of "Gallia"—that Christian cry of hope—that burst of song telling of the Light that was coming, of the exhortation to turn once more to the Lord our God, without feeling that religion is dearer to me, and that I have had a fresh glimpse of divine things.

SPECIFICATION.

ALL SAINTS' CHURCH, NORTHALLERTON.

Programme of a recent organ recital given on the new organ recently erected in the above church by Mr. W. Musgrove, organist: Toccato and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Largo Cantabile from 2nd Symphony, Haydn; Offertoire in G, Wely; Barcarolle, Bennett; Cantilene Pastorale, Guilmant; March from "Naamai," Costa.

The following is the specification of the organ, built by Messrs. Wordsworth and Maskell, of Leeds.

3 Manuals C C to A. Pedals C C C to F.

GREAT ORGAN.

1 Bourdon	16 ft.	6 Principal..	4 ft.
2 Large Open Diapason ...	8 ,,	7 Fifteenth...	2 ,,
3 Small Open Diapason ..	8 ,,	8 Twelfth	2⅔,
4 Hohl. Flute	8 ,,	9 Grave Mixture	3rks
5 Harmonic Flute	4 ,,	10 Trumpet	8 ,,

SWELL ORGAN.

1 Lieblich Bourdon ..	16 ft,	6 Lieblich Flute	4 ft.
2 Geigen Principal ..	8 ,,	7 Geigen Principal ..	4 ,,
3 Lieblich Gedact	8 ,,	8 Mixture	3rks
4 Viol de Amour	8 ,,	9 Cornopean	8 ,,
5 Vox Celeste	8 ,,	10 Oboe	8 ,,
11 Clarion	4 ranks

CHOIR ORGAN.

1 Flaute Traverso	8 ft.	4 Wald Flute	4 ft.
2 Lublich Gedact	8 ,,	5 Salicet	4 ,,
3 Dulciana	8 ,,	6 Clarionet	8 ,,

PEDAL ORGAN.

1 Open Diapason	16 ft.	2 Bourdon..	16 ft.
3 Violincello	8 ft.

COUPLERS.

1 Great to Pedal.
2 Swell to Pedal.
3 Choir to Pedal.
4 Composition Pedals to Great.
4 Great to Swell Unison.
5 Great to Swell Sub-Octave.
6 Choir to Swell.
3 Composition Pedals to Swell.

RECITAL NEWS.

South Bethlehem, U.S.—An American journal notes that Mr. James E. Dale, organist of the Church of the Nativity of South Bethlehem, Penn, gave an organ recital on the grand organ recently, assisted by Mrs. A. B. Halliday, as vocalist. Taking place in church, introduced with commendatory and explanatory remarks by the rector, and characterised by a distinctly religious quality, Mr. Dale's educational undertaking merits the warmest approval. Besides, the selections touch a high plane of artistic excellence, and imply proficiency and technical skill on the part of the executant. The numbers are: 1. Andante Con Moto, by Archer; 2. Hymn (493 Tucker's Hymnal).—a. Introduction; b. Hymn; c. Variations; d. Fugue; and e. Finale.—an Organ Sonata, by Ewing; 3. Solo, "With Verdure Clad"; 4. "Music on the Waters;" 5. March of the Israelites (from "Eli"). by Costa; 6. Overture to Sampson, Handel; 7. Offertoire, E. B. Wely; 8. Solo, "Turn Thee unto Me" ("Eli"), Costa; 9. Allegretto, Dr. Rodgers; and 10. Marchè Triumphale, Lemmens. A crowded congregation was in attendance. Any church and community where such opportunities for musical refreshment abound is to be congratulated.

People's Palace.—An organ recital was given on Dec. 30th, by Mr. C. F. Abdy Williams. 1. Sonata in A, Op. 65, No. 3, Mendelssohn; 2. Andante in G, Luard-Selby; 3. Sketch in C, Op. 58, No. 2, Schumann; 4. Allegretto Cantilene, Guilmant; 5. Prelude and Fugue in A minor, J. S. Bach; 6. Interludium in D, Op. 11, Algernon Ashton; 7. Adagio in E, from Op. 198, Merkel; 8. Chorus from "Samson," "Fixed in His everlasting Seat," Handel.

Tamworth.—The fourth of a series of organ recitals being given in St. Editha's Church, for the extinction of the debt incurred in the restoration of the organ, took place on Monday evening, the organist being Mr. H. A. Wheeldon, of Christ Church, Hendon. Mr. Wheeldon performed in finished style and with great executive ability a programme of some of the best known productions of what are known as the modern school of composers, and the choir contributed in really good style the anthems, "God is a Spirit," and "Cast thy Bread." The programme was as follows:—Christmas Fantasy, Best; Romance, H. Hoffmann; Rhapsodie, No. 3, Saint-Saëns; Offertoire on a Noël, Grison; Fantasia and Fugue, Best; Marche des Rois Mages, Dubois; Canzonetta, Nicodé; March in A, H. Hoffmann.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—Mr. Alfred J. Eyre's programmes on Christmas Eve included the following:—Military March, Schubert; Offertoire in D minor, Guilmant; Christmas Pastorale, Moriconi; Bourrée in D, Alma Saunders; Selection of Carols; Chorus, "For unto us" ("Messiah") Handel; Overture, "Henry VIII.," J. L. Hatton; Song, "Nazareth," Gounod; Selection, "Les Huguenots," Meyerbeer; Pastorale, "Bethlehem," Sullivan; March from the "Serenade," Mendelssohn; Song, "Christmas comes but once a year," Betterton; Variations on "Hark, the Herald Angels," Dr. C. J. Frost.

PEOPLE'S PALACE.—On Dec. 24th an organ recital was given in the Queen's Hall, by Mr. J. G. Wrigley, F.C.O., Mus.Bac., Oxon., organist of the parish church, High Wycombe. The programme was as follows:—Marche Triomphale, Guiraud; Berceuse, Gounod; Offortorium sur les Noels, Guilmant; Choral Song and Fugue, S. S. Wesley; Romanza, Gounod; "The "Lost Chord," Sullivan; Adoremus, Ravina; Heroic March, Schubert.

Notes.

ST. NICHOLAS, COLE ABBEY, E.C.—Mr. H. W. Weston, F.C.O., gave a special recital of Christmas music at the above church on Dec. 27th. There was, however, only a small attendance, owing to the Christmas holidays and consequent stoppage of business in the City. The programme comprised the following:—Grand Concerto, No. 8, Corelli (composed for the Festival of the Nativity, circa A.D. 1680; Marche de Rois Mages, Theo. Dubois; Offertoire upon the Christmas themes, Alex Gailmant; Pastorale (T major) (posthumous works), Lemmens; Introduction and Fugue upon a Church theme, Rheinberger; Christmas Pastorale (A major), Aug. Moriconi; Festival Overture, "Gutenbury," Carl Loewe.

APPLEDORE, DEVON.—A strong desire has existed for some time amongst the members of the choir of St. Mary's Church, to show the appreciation they entertain for the good qualities of their organist, Mr. T. Kelly, A.C.O. This laudable wish was brought to a practical issue on Wednesday evening of last week, when the Vicar (Rev. E. Reynolds) had the pleasant duty of presenting his organist with a handsome "combination" pen and pencil case. The rev. gentleman spoke in terms of high commendation of the recipient, and warmly eulogised his musical ability. The token of esteem and regard selected by the choir, was the more gratifying because it was unknown to the interested person until the object of the assembly was explained. The written address, having the names of the choir appended, which also formed part of the presentation, was as follow:—"We, the undersigned, members of St. Mary's Church choir, beg most respectfully to present this silver pencil case to Mr. T. Kelly as a small token of our admiration of his skill as an organist, of our esteem of him personally, and of the marked ability and courtesy with which he has always conducted the training of the choir."

A provincial paper has the following curious advertisement:—"To be a good Organist use the Mercury Boot and Shoe Company's Flexible Boots and Shoes for Pedalling." Organists do not all agree about the best kind of pedalling boots; some, indeed, say shoes. The late George Cooper favoured high heels, and another prominent organ-player prefers low-heeled boots.

DUBLIN.—The dedication of the fine organ just erected in St. Bartholomew's Church, by Messrs. Gray and Davison, took place on Dec. 22nd, when, after a short service, a recital was given by Mr. Wm. H. Vipond Barry, the organist and director of the choir. The programme included:—

Prelude and Fugue in A minor..............	Bach.
Fantaisie..	Guiraud.
Organ Sonata, No 4, in B flat	Mendelssohn.
Offertoire in G	Batiste.
Toccata for Organ	Dubois.
Andante in A flat	Hoyte.
Grand Choeur..	Salomé.
Cantilene Pastorale	Guilmant
Overture in E minor and major	Morandi.

The new organ is admitted to be an excellent one, and is now, undoubtedly, one of the finest and most modern instruments in the country and is, perhaps, the finest organ in Ireland to which tubular pneumatic action has been applied. The diapason work possesses remarkable power and sonority. The 8-ft. pedal reed has been constructed on an entirely new scale expressly for this organ. The organ was designed by Sir R. P. Stewart, Mus.Doc., and Mr. Wm. H. Vipond Barry, and by its excellence reflects the highest credit on the builders, Messrs. Gray and Davison.

LEAMINGTON.—The Leamington College Choral Society gave two performances of Farmer's Oratorio, "Christ and His Soldiers," on the evenings of Sundays, the 11th and 18th ult. These performances, the first of the Society, passed off successfully. Mr. O. O. Brooksbank, F.C.O., the College Organist, presided at the organ. The orchestra was recruited from the College students. On Sunday, the 18th, Dr. Wood, the Principal, preached an eloquent sermon on the oratorio.

Mr. D. A. J. Hipkins' splendid work on "Musical Instruments" has among its many illustrations a portable and positive organ—the former a processional instrument, with narrow keys, which the player touched with one hand, while the other manipulated the bellows; the latter a chapel or chamber organ, intended to be stationary, but also with narrower keys than the large church organ, admitting of the grasp of an octave. The keyboard shown in the Van Eyck St. Cecilia panel of the famous altar piece at Ghent—the Adoration of the Lamb—has already the complete arrangement of chromatic keys exactly as in our modern keyboard instruments. The date of this instrument could not have been later than A.D. 1426. Another early instance in the painting by Hans Memling, preserved in the hospital of St. John at Bruges, is subsequent in date to the Ghent altar piece, but is still within the 15th century. From these early masters, down to Rossetti and Burne Jones, the portable organ has been a favourite instrument with painters of sacred subjects, and from the 15th to the 17th centuries no musical instrument was more in favour in religious establishments. Notwithstanding this fact, there are, as far as Mr. Hipkins knows, only two now in existence—the one here drawn, belonging to the museum of the Brussels Conservatoire, the other to the Duke of Athole, at Blair Athole, in Scotland. The Positive was, in fact, the chancel organ; hence the name given to the choir manual as the modern expression of the original quiet, small, accompanying organ, by the Germans and French. The chancel organ, a most useful institution, still holds its own as a separate instrument in France, and seems to be regaining in this country something of its former position and usefulness.

Sir George Grove, LL.D., has kindly undertaken the distribution of F.C.A. diplomas which may be gained at the College of Organists' examination of next week, on Friday, January 13th, at 11 o'clock, at the Bloomsbury Hall, Hart-street. All candidates, members, and friends are invited to attend.

Mons. A. Vernet, assistant organist at Toulouse Cathedral, has lately been playing at some concerts given in the Palais de l'Exposition of that town, his artistic style being much admired, according to the French Press.

Mr. Joseph Kerfoot has recently completed his fiftieth year as organist of the parish church, Winwick. Living eight miles from his church, it is computed that he travelled during the period in question, to attend to his duty, 43,000 miles. In his youth he frequently walked to Manchester and back—24 miles—for his music lessons. He was appointed after a severe contest to the position he now holds in 1837, at the age of 18. Hard work seems to agree with him, and, in his own words, he pleads to be fit to go on for another 50 years.

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS CALENDAR.

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS' CALENDAR.—Saturday, January 7th, Council Meeting. Tuesday next, January 10th, at 10 a.m., Examination for Fellowship (paper work); Wednesday and Thursday, January 11th and 12th, Examination for Fellowship (organ playing); Friday, January 13th, at 11, Diploma Distribution by Sir George Grove, LL.D., Vice-President of the College of Organists; Tuesday, January 17, at 10, Examination for Associateship (paper work); Wednesday and Thursday, January 18th and 19th, at 10, Examination for Associateship (organ playing); Friday, January 20th, at 11, Diploma Distribution; Tuesday, January 24th, at 8, a paper will be read by A. Trickett, Esq., F.C.O., on "The Church Cantata."—E. H. TURPIN, Hon. Sec. 95, Great Russell-street, W.C.

NOTES.

The English correspondent of an American paper, in speaking of the effects of our agricultural depression, observes:—"Salaries of clergy, and even the musical staff, from the organist to the 'organ-blower,' have been reduced in many instances from 10 to 15 per cent. There is an easy and plain explanation to all this. For instance, I will refer to Gloucester Cathedral. Some years ago, when the Ecclesiastical Commissioners offered to take over the capitular estates, and give in return a fixed annual subsidy, the authorities, less far-seeing than Worcester, Norwich, and other sees, preferred to keep the land. Gloucester, I believe, has regretted such a decision ever since, and has suffered for it by a very serious diminution of income. But there is no doubt that the whole question of the Church's finances will be overhauled at the next meeting of Parliament. Unless something is done, the pastoral work will be terribly weakened. This is the cry—funds."

Twenty Preludes, Postludes, &c., intended for studies and Church use, in two books, by George E. Whiting, organist of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, &c., Boston, U.S., have been recently issued. An American critic notes that:—"The author is recognised as one of the most scholarly of recent organists, and a brilliant and masterly executant. His compositions are admirable in form and spirit, often profound in contrapuntal learning, but never pedantic or merely pretensive. The proper registration is carefully indicated. Pedal passages of considerable difficulty will be encountered, together with leading characteristics of the great organ school from Bach to our own day."

CHURCH MUSIC IN AMERICA.

The Churchman thus speaks of sundry Church services in the States:—"Grace Church, Newark, New Jersey, has been celebrated for the high character and supremely religious quality of its music from the rectorship of Dr. Hodges to the present. The disposition of the services gives ample opportunity for a devout and reverent musical service at the second Celebration, and there are few churches were it is more edifying and impressive.

Stirring accounts reach us of the fine choral work in Trinity Church, Princetown, N. J., under the direction of Mr. Alfred S. Baker, organist and choir master, by correspondence and by clippings from the local press. Within less than a year an ordinary parish choir, vested, has, under this intelligent worker, been changed into an exceptionally excellent one. The beautiful church with its effective organ and proper chancel arrangements is especially adapted to such a choir and service, and among the choir masters who have served the parish are Dr. Cutler, the Messrs. LeJeune, Stubbs, and Dod, and the boys are thoroughly trained in the "head-tone" method of vocal delivery. The music kalendars are from the most celebrated modern composers.

The vested choir of St. John's Church (Woodside), Newark, N. J., has been in existence about three years under the direction of Mr. D. E. Hervey, organist and choirmaster. The choir is entirely voluntary, neither the boys nor men receiving any compensation for their services, consequently there has been considerable irregularity in attendance, and the material available has not always been of the first-class. Nevertheless, some very creditable work has been done.

We mark with the liveliest interest every indication of a return to Palestrina and the polyphonic school. On the service kalendar of Trinity Church Mr. Messiter, director and organist, an exquisite motet or anthem, by the great master, "Like as the hart desireth the water brooks," &c., is set down for the offertory on the second, third, and fourth Sundays in Advent. This music was composed for men's and boys' voices, and the school of which it is an example, is above all others the most precious treasury in liturgic music. Mr. Messiter is in a position to promote a long hoped-for revival in this direction."

More evidence from the States might be quoted to show the growth of ecclesiastical music. The characteristic institution, the Quartet Choir, seems to be losing favour in many directions. As very elaborate oratorio music is being used in church, perhaps it would have been well to have encouraged a development of the soloists and choral choirs in combination, especially in view of the future employment of the orchestra in church.

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, JANUARY 7, 1888.

THE NEW YEAR.

The Jubilee Year, as far as music is concerned, has gone out like a very meek lamb, and the New Year does not at present portend much of the lion quality, unless young Hofmann should return to our shores, and once more rouse the enthusiasm of the British matron and her charges. A complete account of the musical events of the past twelve months appears in another column, and it must be owned that the retrospect there presented is not a very cheerful one; neither is the outlook into the immediate future of a much brighter kind. There will, no doubt, be the usual number of musical performances, but will they be more—and can they be more, in the circumstances—than the means of whiling away a weary hour, or of supplying one of the channels in which fashion runs during the season? That is the question. Mr. Rosa, it is said, will not come to London, and if he did, would have nothing particularly interesting to produce in the way of novelty; and supposing we were to have once more three operatic managers, willing to spend their own or other people's money on the galvanising of a corpse, what would be the permanent artistic result, beyond making us, perhaps, acquainted with Verdi's "Otello"—the last emanation of the last of the giants now alive? The root of the evil lies in the fact that in this democratic age of ours, men of genius, in the proper sense of the word, do not seem to thrive. How delightful it would be if amongst the many clever people who nowadays write music, one were to arise who, in Schumann's phrase, struck out a new path! How THE MUSICAL WORLD, amongst others, would, in familiar phrase, "go in" for him; how eager we should be to act as interpreter between his high aspirations and the public, to encourage him on his thorny road, and, if necessary, gently to guide and correct him. But where is there such a man, either in England or abroad? Will any of our readers kindly send us his name and address?

Let it not be thought that we by any means underrate the high gifts of such men as Brahms and Gounod, and much less of our native composers. We have been foremost in acknowledging the merits of such works as Mr. Cowen's "Ruth" and Mr. Stanford's "Œdipus Tyrannus" music, and of the beautiful symphonies by these two composers, with which Hans Richter has made us acquainted. Neither do we fail to appreciate the sparkle and grace with which Sir Arthur Sullivan knows how to endow the most unpromising subjects. It is, indeed, one of the bright points in the general gloom, that our English school continues to display a variety and a brilliancy of talent which continental countries would find it difficult to match. But can it be conscientiously said that even our native composers have so far displayed that primal creative force which pertains to genius in the proper sense of that much-abused word? We fear not, and we fear, moreover, that if such a display had been made, the seed would have fallen upon comparatively barren soil. We are not going to re-open the old question whether or not England is a musical country, or London a musical city. The facts adduced in the summary of the year throw a melancholy side light on that question. Four music-halls in the immediate vicinity of Leicester-square, crammed to suffocation every night, and St. James's Hall empty at the performance of Wagner's Juvenile Symphony—these are facts adapted to give pause to the most eupeptic of optimists. To watch the audience at one of these wretched entertainments or at a fashionable ballad concert when the musical fare is fit for the intelligence of Yahoos, to see how they enjoy the jokes, how the most wretched sentimental common-places go home to their very hearts, is, indeed, what Carlyle would have called a tragic sight. There is, of course, the widening and broadening of musical taste and education to be quoted on the credit side of the account; but is that education as yet more than skin deep, and has it so far produced intelligent amateurs in sufficient numbers to support even a single opera, or to secure the existence of the best orchestral concerts? This is another nut which we present to our readers to crack by way of New Year's gift, or étrennes, as the French say.

In the meantime, the task of THE MUSICAL WORLD will remain the same as before. We shall continue to hold out a helping hand to genuine talent and earnest endeavour, whereever we find them, and we shall combat, or pass over with contemptuous silence, the arrogant display of vulgar mediocrity. We need not assure our readers that the standard of serious and impartial criticism which we have adopted from the first will not be lowered by the fraction of a semitone. Much rather than consent to such an arrangement, the present Editor would lay down his pen, and subside into silence. Such a contingency, however, is not, by any means, to be apprehended just yet. THE MUSICAL WORLD, we are glad to say, has during the past year made headway to a degree scarcely hoped for by its promoters, and its position as the leading, not to say sole, independent organ of the profession is established beyond cavil. Its circulation, also, we may safely affirm, vastly exceeds that of any other weekly class paper, both in this country and abroad. The lines on which this journal is conducted will, in all essential points, remain unaltered. We propose, however, to furnish a still more exhaustive summary of news than has hitherto been given. In addition to the letters from all the musical centres at home and abroad, we shall give prominence to a complete survey of passing events, with brief, and it is hoped not uninteresting, comments attached. We shall, in short, so far consult the current taste of the time as to become a little more paragraphic. It is also intended to extend the paper by four pages, if the increasing pressure on our columns of advertisements—an evil, but, we fear, a necessary one—should necessitate such a step.

MUSIC IN 1887.

There is a certain fitness in the fact that two of the more important musical events of the jubilee year were of the nature of commemorative celebrations. One of these, the centenary of the first performance of Mozart's Don Giovanni, which took place Oct. 29, threw a curious sidelight on the practice of the art in various countries. At Prague, where the opera was originally produced, and at Vienna and many German towns, revivals of the work took place, which tended to show, in most cases, that although the spirit of Mozart was still alive, the art of singing his music as it should be sung was a thing of the past. In France the same occasion displayed a still less satisfactory condition of matters, and the centenary performance arranged by Messrs. Ritt and Gailhard, the managers of the Grand Opéra was, according to the unanimous verdict of the French critics, so bad as to make us in England take comfort in the thought that it was preferable to have no opera at all, to having one which, in spite of a large Government subvention, could do no better than this. In London a stage performance of Don Giovanni was not even attempted, but Mr. Manns gave extensive excerpts at one of the Crystal Palace concerts. The centenary (November 15) of the death of Gluck, the greatest dramatic composer before Wagner, passed over without any notice in this country; and the Grand Opéra, for which many of Gluck's, masterpieces had been written, or at least rewritten, was incapable of mounting one of them, leaving that duty to the German theatres, which again did their best without apparently doing anything very good. In Italy, where neither Mozart nor Gluck ever took permanent root, the modern, as distinguished from the classical, opera scored a genuine success in the first performance of Verdi's Otello, by far the most important event of the past year. This took place at the Scala Theatre, Milan, on February 5, and a full account appeared in the Times of the next day, it was then pointed out that the work, albeit evidently written under the influence of Wagner, evinced original genius of a high order, all the more remarkable and all the more worthy of praise because Verdi at an advanced age had been able to throw off the formulas of his youth and to enter the stream of modern progress. Of possessing such a man Italy might well be proud, although at the same time the manner in which Otello was produced was a sad testimonium paupertatis for executive music in that country, The orchestra of La Scala, once one of the finest in the world, did scarcely come up to its reputation, and the management had been obliged to engage M. Maurel, a Frenchman and an artist of the first order, for the part of Iago. Signora Pantaleoni. the Desdemona, and a native Italian, would scarcely have been tolerated at Covent Garden; and although Signor Tamagno, the Othello, was considerably better, he also by no means represented the perfection of the earlier Italian school of singing, which seems as dead in "the land of song" as it is in the international stage.

Italian opera in London, which has been pronounced a dead thing more than once, gave curious and fitful signs of life, proving, however, no real vitality, in the spring and summer months of the year. There were at one time no less than three managers in the field, all of them carrying on their enterprises at considerable pecuniary loss, if rumour may be believed, and none of them having to show any compensating artistic achievement for the loss, unless we except the gorgeous mounting of some familiar operas by Mr. Harris, who had, moreover, secured in Signor Mancinelli a conductor of the first order. At Drury Lane also, Mdlle. Sigrid Arnoldson, a debutante of great promise, made her first appearance in England. The splendid and, in the best sense, classical rendering of Beethoven's Fidelio by Mdlle. Lilli Lehmann should be recorded in favour of Mr. Mapleson, who also produced an Italian version of Bizet's early and not very interesting opera, Les Pêcheurs de Perles at Covent Garden in the spring. Madame Nordica, another debutante of considerable merit, appeared for the first time under the same manager's auspices. Signor Lago's novelty was the Italian version of Glinka's La Vie pour le Tsar, an opera which is immensely popular in Russia on account of its national character, but for the same reason failed to impress English amateurs. Madame Albani sustained the principal female part.

The prospects of English Opera have during the year scarcely been brighter than those of its foreign rival. Mr. Rosa, had. as usual, his short season at Drury Lane, but the financial result seems to have been so unsatisfactory that, as far as is known at present, he does not intend to repeat the experiment during the current year; and the distressing fact, therefore, must be acknowledged that the largest city in the world does not number sufficient lovers of high-class dramatic music to support a single opera sung in the language of the country. Perhaps one reason for this deplorable state of things is the growing acceptance which the wretched vulgarities of the music-hall on the one hand, and the insipid prettiness of the operetta on the other, meet with from the mass of the people. In the immediate neighbourhood of Leicester-square there are at this moment no less than four gorgeous establishments devoted to the so-called "variety entertainments," and all in highly flourishing condition; and the run of Mr. Cellier's Dorothy, admirably performed and staged at the Prince of Wales's Theatre, bids fair to rival that of Our Boys. At the Savoy Theatre, the home par excellence of the English operetta, the number of Gilbert and Sullivan's joint productions was increased in January by Ruddigore, a work received on the first night with divided opinions, and in most respects inferior to some of its charming predecessors. It kept the stage for several months, but ultimately had to give way to a revival of the Pinafore, which continues to draw large audiences at the Savoy. Much as one may regret that one of our most gifted musicians mainly devotes his talent to so small a genre, one cannot help admiring the innate grace, the sparkle, the marvellous ingenuity in pointing witticisms apparently quite unadaptable to musical treatment which Sir Arthur Sullivan brings to his task, and that admiration is increased when one compares his work with that of his imitators. To return to Mr. Rosa's season, its artistic aspects were scarcely more cheerful than its material issue. The all-round excellence of the performances was, it is true, fully maintained, but the only novelty of the season, Mr. Corder's Nordisa, proved anything but a success. The work had been received with enthusiasm at Liverpool and in other provincial towns, and in the provinces it should have remained. To bring it to London was a serious error of judgment. The verdict of most competent judges was all but unanimously to the effect that the libretto was extremely silly, and that the music, cast in the mould of Balfe, did not even show the redeeming feature of flowing, though somewhat common, melody which delighted, and continues to delight, the admirers of The Bohemian Girl. Mr. Corder had evidently committed the mistake of looking upon popularity as a merely negative quality, attainable to any composer by deliberately writing down to a certain level; and his failure was all the more disappointing because in his critical writings and in his orchestral compositions he had given proofs of a serious aim and of considerable gift. Miss Moody, a young English singer, made a very successful début in the course of the season.

It has frequently been said that the dramatic instinct of the English people finds its musical expression not in the opera, but in the oratorio, and we observe that at least one important and valuable addition has been made to the store of sacred music in the course of the year. It is true that Mr. Cowen's Ruth, produced at the Worcester Festival in September, has very little of the characteristics generally associated with sacred music. It is described as a "dramatic oratorio," and "operatic oratorio" would have been a still more appropriate title. Most of its effects belong distinctly to the operatic stage, and it contains even a lovely ballet movement, which, although considerably out of place in Worcester Cathedral, was much appreciated at St. James's Hall, when Ruth was submitted to the London Public. At the triennial Norwich Festival, held in October, and conducted by Signor Randegger, Italian music reigned supreme, the two novelties being supplied by Signor Bottesini and Signor Mancinelli. The Garden of Olivet by the great virtuoso on the double-bass was found to be a harmless and pleasing but old-fashioned composition, based essentially upon Rossini's style, but Mancinelli's Isaias evinced qualities of a very high order, the composer being in touch with the dramatic spirit of modern art, and wielding the devices of orchestration with the hand of a master. The two antipodes of the Italian school being thus placed side by side, the Norwich Festival would have been a real feast to intelligent amateurs, had not their enjoyment been marred by the very indifferent performances of the chorus, which placed the raison d'être of Norwich as a festival city in jeopardy. It is a significant fact that The Garden of Olivet, which involves no strain whatever on the receptive faculties of an audience, has already made its way to London, while Signor Mancinelli's work, difficult to sing and not easy to understand, remains as yet unheard there, although its performance is announced at the Crystal Palace. Among other important works produced outside London we should mention the incidental music written by Mr. C. V. Stanford for the performances of Œdipus Tyrannus at Cambridge. No higher praise can be awarded to this music than that it is fully worthy of the subject, reflecting as it does tragic pathos and Greek dignity, although not the external aspects of Greek music, from beginning to end. We may add that Mr. Stanford has been appointed to the Professorship of Music in Cambridge University vacated by the death of Sir George Macfarren.

The number of concerts in London has, as usual, been very large, as many as 20 or 30 being frequently given in one week, and this in the season of the Jubilee, which reduced the chances of material success to a minimum. It is, indeed, credibly affirmed that the only foreign virtuoso who reaped the harvest of English guineas, which is, or at least was, the cynosure of continental artists, was Josef Hofmann, the youthful phenomenon, who was admired by most of his hearers less because he played good music or played it well than because he was a boy in a sailor suit over whom the British matron went into unmeasured raptures. Without wishing to deny that young Hofmann showed very remarkable talent, which it must be hoped will not be ruined by premature display, we cannot think that the sensation he created was an altogether healthy sign of musical taste.

Of new English works produced during the year, three symphonies by native composers deserve prominent mention. Mr. Stanford's Irish Symphony, Mr. Cowen's No. 5 in F, and Mr. Hubert Parry's work of the same class, all gave signs of earnestness of purpose, and considerable power of execution, the first being notable by its rich national colour, the second by its beautiful melodious flow and a greater depth of feeling than had previously been shown by Mr. Cowen, the third by sound scholarship and clever manipulation. All these were given in London, under the auspices of Herr Richter, to whose encouragement English symphonic music owes so much. A clever "Roumanian suite" by Mr. Corder, played at the Philharmonic Society, may also be mentioned in this connection. To Mr. Manns, at the Crystal Palace, special thanks are due for an excellent rendering of a symphony by Widor, one of the most interesting, because most original composers of the French school, which is too generally treated with contempt in this country. To Mr. Henschel's initiative, the few English amateurs interested in such matters owe their acquaintance with Wagner's juvenile symphony in C, a highly important work, played twice at the London Symphony Concerts. It should, on each occasion, have attracted a large audience, but was played before all but empty benches, so limited is the desire of the English public to become acquainted with new phases of the art. The scanty encouragement which Mr. Henschel's endeavour to provide high-class orchestral music during the winter months has so far met with, is one of the most dispiriting signs of the time. How can a city be called musical which is unable to support a single opera, and in which Beethoven's, and Schubert's, and Wagner's orchestral masterpieces spell ruin, while the neighbouring music-halls are crammed to suffocation? A symphony by Bruckner, the Vienese composer, heard at the Richter concerts, concludes the list of novelties of this class.

Brief reference is finally due to the numerous musical compositions which the Jubilee has called forth. Few, it any, of these are likely to survive the year which has given them birth, if we except the dignified and in every sense appropriate work which Mr. Cusins, the Master of the Queen's Music, has written in celebration of the event.

It is pleasant to record that the taste for chamber music at least seems as keen as ever, the Popular Concerts continuing to flourish. The 1,000th of these excellent performances was given in the spring, when the services of Mr. Arthur Chappell, their founder and director, received appropriate acknowledgment.

The death-roll of the year is comparatively small, the only world-wide celebrity whom we have lost being Madame Jenny Lind, who died at Malvern on November 2nd, only a few days after Sir George Macfarren had succumbed to a short illness. Among musical publications we may mention Mr. Hipkin's interesting "Musical Instruments," and the concluding part of that monumental and invaluable storehouse of musical knowledge, "Grove's Dictionary."—The Times.

LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The programme of the London Symphony Concert of Wednesday afternoon presented nothing which could be called a decided novelty, but succeeded in attracting a larger audience than has yet been seen at one of this series of concerts. The introduction of the Act III. of Die Meistersinger was followed by Beethoven's Concerto in E flat, the solo pianoforte part played by Mr. Charles Hallé in the conscientious and classical style to which we are accustomed in this artist. Mendelssohn's A minor symphony, better known as the "Scotch," received a worthy rendering from the band under Mr. Henschel. The other orchestral pieces were the Entr'acte from Reinecke's King Manfred, and Dvorak's Overture to der Bauer ein Schelm. The introduction of two of Schubert's songs, Memnon and Geheimes, with orchestral accompaniment by Brahms, and sung on ne peut mieux, by Miss Marguerite Hall, was of special interest. The modern master has proceeded with self-control and tact in orchestrating the graceful Geheimes for little else but strings; the Memnon allowed of broad effects, and was treated accordingly; and both songs made a very favourable impression.

CONFERENCE OF MUSICIANS.

On Wednesday last week, in the Drapers' Hall, the Lord Mayor opened the third annual conference of the National Society of Professional Musicians, whose deliberations extended over Thursday and yesterday. His Lordship said he was interested in music, not only for what it contributed to the essentially English "Sweet Home," but also because to his mind it greatly helped the culture of the intellect. It was in the development of refined sentiments that they were able to appreciate the beautiful in nature. He was pleased to give his support to an institution which he believed had a very brilliant future before it. The primary object which he saw in the institution was to discuss plans for the advancement and improvement of the musical art in all its branches. The council would probably say that there was no intention whatever to interfere with existing educational institutions (hear, hear), but, on the contrary, that it was their intention to support them in their work, and to labour on the most friendly terms with them (cheers). The next important point was that which affected the public as well as the art. When they were strong enough, and had been able to prove to the country that they desired what was right for the advancement of the art, he trusted they would be able by some diploma given as the result of examination, to discern between those who were really qualified to be teachers and those who were not (cheers). His firm belief was that in this country we had lost a great many naturally splendid gifts by having spoiled in their youth through improper training, and in other instances discouraged those who possessed such gifts. It was quite evident that upon a teacher depended the future of the pupil. He trusted he was not saying anything unkind when he mentioned that after having travelled in different parts of the country and heard music given in different schools and institutions, he had come to the conclusion that in a great many instances the training had been undertaken by men and women who had not the first notions of musical art. He had distributed prizes at a good many institutions, and, of course, they had always had "a little bit of music," which immediately proved that those who taught music at those places were not qualified to do so. He also was of opinion that there was no country in the world where in so many houses so much absurd music could be heard as in England. In conclusion, the Lord Mayor again wished the institution every success, and invited those present to meet the Lady Mayoress and himself at the Mansion House on Friday, where he would say a few more words in welcoming the council to London.

Mr. Cummings, the chairman, opened the afternoon proceedings at 2.30 p.m., with a thoughtful and closely reasoned paper, in which he drew attention to various anomalies in the grammar of music that must have been noticed by all students. Tracing the history of musical notation from the time of the Greeks, with their 1,620 musical signs, through Gregorian and Ambrosian times, in which no one can say what was done, since St. Isidore, at even a later date, summarised the state of the art in the pregnant words, "Unless sounds are retained in memory they perish, because they cannot be written;" and noticing the single line and pneumata of the St. Gall MS., with extra lines used merely to guide the writer, Mr. Cummings came down to the present staff notation, which he characterised as the survival of the fittest. But he pronounced present usages as capable of much improvement, bearing in mind that the object in view should be to render reading as easy as possible. He considered the misuse of the C clef for the alto as unimportant, but that the G clef for the tenor was absurd; instance the score of Rossini's "Mose in Egitto," with nine separate parts written in the G clef, which publishers have 17 different ways of expressing. He advocated the C clef for all. Passing on to key signature, he objected to all proposals that necessitated a mixture of sharps and flats as inviting complication, but considered that a wide field for improvement existed in remedying the present extensive misuse of accidentals, respecting which there is no uniformity of practice. Thus some treat them as affecting only the bar in which they occur, while others extend them throughout the next bar if the note they govern is tied. Bach's rule was instanced as the simplest—every chromatic sign having value throughout its own bar, but no further. Instances were given of great confusion caused by double sharps, naturals, and sharps, &c.; in the "Golden Legend" and in "Lorelei," which the present small type often caused to be taken at haphazard. Dealing with the subject of time, he suggested the exclusion of C, a mere corruption of the half-circle, to denote the semibreve (the circle signifying perfection, or the breve), and the adoption of figures only—$\frac{4}{4}$, $\frac{8}{8}$, $\frac{2}{2}$, &c. tabooing the use of a long bar when a short one will do, and changing one bar of $\frac{12}{8}$ into two bars of $\frac{6}{8}$ in "He shall feed His flock." Grace notes next came in for condemnation, especially the appoggiatura, which he deemed needless, and habitually used by composers with great carelessness; as also binds or ties, used by ladies as lines of beauty, a most laughable instance occurring in "When Sparrows Build," which Mr. Cummings read as phrased, with highly comic effect. Pauses, innovations of directing words, Italian being replaced by German, and the uncertainty of metronomic values, were all touched upon, every possible inconsistency in this respect occurring in Gounod's "Mors et Vita." Dr. Gilbert followed, expressing dissent from most of Mr. Cummings' propositions, and succeeded in eliciting from the audience marked expressions of dissent from his own arguments. He was succeeded by Dr. Crowe, who, in few words, advanced several practical suggestions, which were warmly applauded, especially the dropping of the lower figure in time signature, so as to avoid including lessons in fractions in musical teaching. Dr. Hiles, and other gentlemen addressed the meeting from the body of the hall, after which Mr. C. E. Stephens, dissenting from Dr. Hiles's assertion that slur and tie are identical, objected to English signs instead of Italian, the most generally understood in orchestras comprising men of all nations. He drew attention to the varied meanings expressed by the same sign, in which Mozart and Beethoven were very careless; and pointed out the inconsistency of the pause sign including the dot, the sign for staccato or shortening a note. He strongly urged composers to attend to the vertical position of notes, instead of uniting a semibreve in the centre of the bar, and sprinkling the quavers about anywhere. After some further remarks by Dr. Crowe, Mr. Cummings, in closing the proceedings, referred to his recollection of the unbarred music books in Westminster Abbey, and elicited much laughter by admitting that he was personally so fond of the German names, half-notes, quarter-notes, &c., that he always used them "except when talking to musicians." The meeting terminated with a vote of sympathy to Lady Macfarren.

In the evening a concert was given at Princes'-hall, under the direction of Mr. Gilbert, when the programme consisted exclusively of unpublished works by members of the society. The value of these was necessarily very unequal, and the proceedings therefore assumed a somewhat miscellaneous character, although a fair standard of efficiency was sustained throughout. More prominence might have been given to compositions by provincial musicians, who supplied only about half the programme, the remainder being taken up by artists resident in London. The concert opened with a string quartet in A minor by Dr. Creser, of Leeds, which was found to be a work of considerable merit and still greater promise. In a string quartet everything depends upon design, and the gift of spontaneous invention is therefore put to a severe test. All the more creditable is it to this young composer that his music never flagged from beginning to end, and that, although not in the highest sense original, it showed marked signs of individual feeling. Of the four movements, the lento was by far the best. Setting out somewhat after the manner of Schumann's Abendlied, the melody is broadly developed, and each of the four instruments has an important part in its progress, the movement rising to a fine impassioned climax. The opening allegro is full of fire, and the allegro vivace which stands in place of the scherzo, although somewhat sketchy, serves as a fit transition from the sombre mood of the lento to the brilliancy of the final vivace, which, as far as we could judge, lost by being taken too quickly. Altogether, Dr. Creser's music impressed us very favourably, and it gains rather than loses by a certain ruggedness which gives a character of its own to it. The first part of the concert concluded with a pianoforte trio in C minor by Mr. John Francis Barnett, who himself played the pianoforte part with masterly skill and delicacy, the violin and violoncello being respectively in the hands of Mr. Buziau and Mr. Albert, who, in conjunction with Mr. Hann and Mr. Gibson, had also cooperated in Dr. Creser's quartet. Mr. Barnett's work betrays the accomplished musician in every bar. The first movement suffers from the shortwindedness of its principal theme, which is practically confined to two bars, but the slow movement is melodious, and the last allegro contains some very impressive passages giving, especially to the pianist, splendid opportunities for technical display. The trio was very warmly applauded. In the second part it must suffice to mention a string quartette, in D minor, by Mr. E. Aguilar, which also was favourably received. Among the vocalists Madame Oscar Pollack deserves a word of special praise. This lady has a sympathetic contralto voice, and the intelligence of her phrasing would have been even more appreciated had the song selected by her allowed of more genuine expression.

Music Publishers' Weekly List.

SONGS.

Better Born Lucky than Rich	Herman	J. Williams.
Special Constable	,, ...	,,
Two Locks of Hair	A. Furse	Healey.
Wild Flowers	Pierne	J. Williams.
Willow Music	Alan Gray	,,
My Gentle Swallow	Erskine Allon ...	L. Music Pub. Co.

PIANOFORTE.

Les Cloches de Corneville	Sydney Smith ...	J. Williams.
Pavane Romantique	H. Roubier ...	,,
Powder and Patch Schottische... ...	C. Verona ...	,,
Princess of Thule	J. M. Smieton ...	Paterson.
Twilight Dream, A, ...	M. S. Barron ...	Swan.

VIOLIN AND PIANO.

Lohengrin	E. D. Palmer ...	J. Williams.

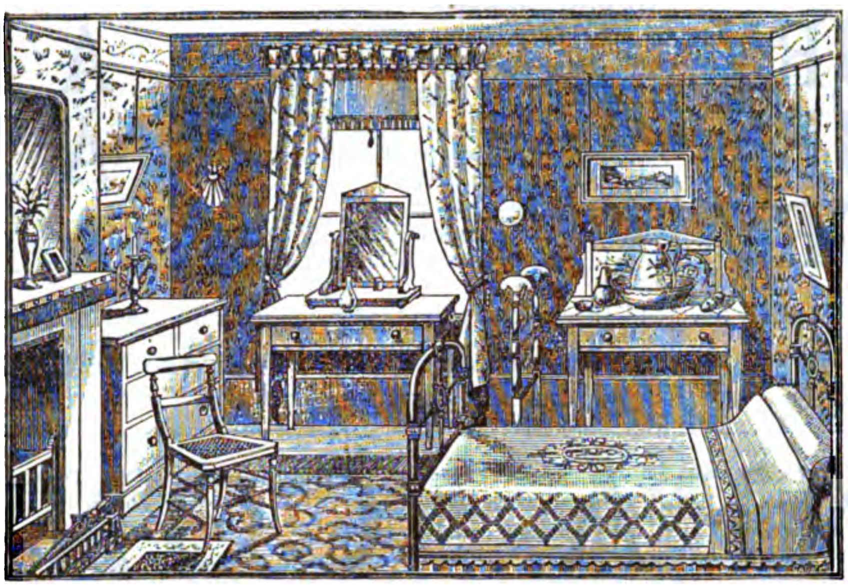
Next Week's Music.

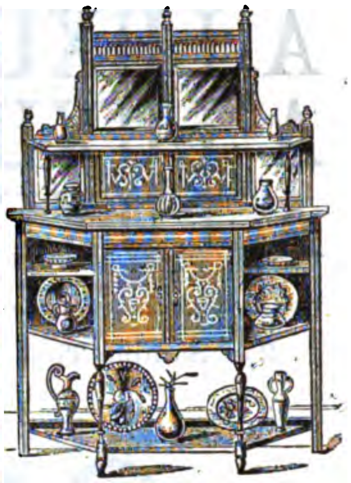
This Day (Saturday).		P.M.
Popular Concert..	St. James's Hall	3.0
Monday, 9.
Popular Concert..	St. James's Hall	8.30
Tuesday, 10.
London Symphony Concert.............	St. James's Hall	8.30

FOERIGN.

PARIS.—The successor to M. Carvalho has at length been found; the fortunes of the Opéra Comique, for seven years at least, are entrusted to M. Paravev, of the Nantes theatre, a young man of 28, who has shown himself in the provincial town as enterprising as youth is always expected to be. We shall expect from him great tenderness for the new works of native and foreign composers. His duties bring with them many difficulties and burdens, and his head will probably lie as uneasily as though a crown adorned it. Other men have shown themselves equally desirous of the responsibility of this post, and M. Jules Barbier retired from the canditature with a very sore feeling—he writes more in

FURNISH THROUGHOUT (REGD.)
OETZMANN & CO.,
67, 69, 71, 73, 75, 77, and 79, HAMPSTEAD ROAD (Near Tottenham Court Road.)
CARPETS, FURNITURE, BEDDING, DRAPERY, FURNISHING, IRONMONGERY, CHINA, GLASS, &c.
Orders per Post receive prompt and faithful attention.

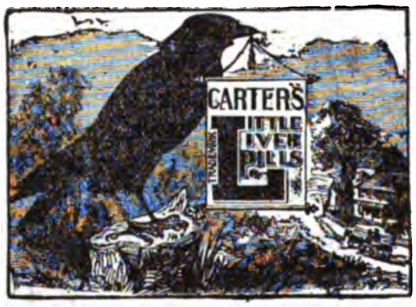




INEXPENSIVE ART TAPESTRY CURTAINS.
THE BURMESE. 7s. 6d. per pair, in all colours. THE IMPERIAL. 38s. 6d. per pair, in all shades.
BEDROOM FURNISHED COMPLETE FOR FIVE GUINEAS.
EBONIZED CABINET. Four bevelled silvered plates at back, 4 feet wide. 75s.
Consisting of Chest of Drawers, Toilet Table, Washstand with marble top and tiled back, Toilet Glass, Towel Airer, in plain art colours or in imitation of various woods, Strong Iron French Bedstead, Palliasse, Top Mattress, Bolster, Pillow, Toilet Set, Water Bottle and Tumbler, Fender, Fire Irons, Carpet (9 ft. by 6 ft.), and Rug. Five Guineas Complete.
ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE, THE BEST FURNISHING GUIDE EXTANT, POST FREE.

sorrow than in anger—against his colleagues of the Société des Auteurs et Compositeurs, at whose instance he was forced to give up the idea of presiding at the opera beloved of Parisians. The Société assured that successful author of their affectionate consideration at the same moment that they knocked his pet ambition on the head, but M. Barbier refuses to be resigned to his cruel fate. At the Lamoureux concert a new overture, "Hernani," by Adolphe Duvernoy, proved effective; and Chabrier's rhapsody, "España," Berlioz's overture "Carneval Romain," Wagner's "Siegfried Idyll," and the Pastoral Symphony, made up an interesting programme. At the Château d'Eau we heard two fragments of M. Colomer's Scènes antiques, of which the first, called "Athens," appeared the most important. An even greater success was won by César Franck's violin and piano sonata, produced at the concert of the Société Nationale, which displays most striking qualities of originality and skilful treatment. At the soirée of the Spanish Quartet, works by Bosch, J. B. Pujol, and Sarasate, were played by MM. Miquel (piano), Fernandez (violin), and their colleagues. From Lyons we have an account of a new Mass composed for three female voices, by M. Holtzem, and sung in one of the churches by a choir of 250 voices. The work is said to be truly religious in character, and was much admired. The libretto of "Montezuma," for Massenet's new opera is about to be written by M. Victorien Sardou.

BRUSSELS.—After the triumphs of "Die Walküre," and the fiasco of Auber's "Maçon," the habitués of the Théâtre de la Monnaie were treated to Ponchielli's "Gioconda," which was neither triumph nor fiasco, but a respectable success. The public seemed a little puzzled by the Italian intensity and fervour which, combined with Italian musical effects, bordered sometimes on the ludicrous. The mise-en-scène is superb, and the performance by Mmes. Litvinne, Martini, Van Besten, MM. Engel, Séguin, and Vinche, satisfactory. It is possible that the work, which is not without merit, may grow upon our public, and I will write further concerning the impression it makes on other occasions. At his third popular concert, M. Franz Servais produced for the first time at Brussels, the "March of the Wise Men," out of Liszt's "Christus." César Franck's symphonic poem "Les Eolides," was also performed for the first time, appearing somewhat dull, although musicianly. Wagner's "Kaisermarsch" ended the concert. Miss Nikita's concert did not attract a large audience, who had, perhaps, been warned away by the injudicious puffing. No really musical people—and our Brussels people are genuinely musical—would expect anything worth having from a "Niagara Fairy." Those, however, who attended the concert, had reason to be pleased with the young artist's singing, though her selection of songs offered little of interest. A Herr Dreyschock, pianist, made a very good impression.



TORPID LIVER
CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS. TRADE MARK.
Positively cured by these Little Pills.
They also relieve Distress from Dyspepsia, Indigestion, and Too Hearty Eating. A perfect remedy for Dizziness, Nausea, Drowsiness, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Coated Tongue, Pain in the Side, etc. They regulate the Bowels and prevent Constipation and Piles. The smallest and easiest to take. Only one pill a dose. 40 in a phial. Purely Vegetable, and do not gripe or purge, but by their gentle action please all who use them. Established 1856. Standard Pill of the United States. In phials at 1s. 1½d. Sold by all Chemists, or sent by post.
Illustrated pamphlet free. British Depot, 46, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

A LUXURY

A LUXURY
A LUXURY
A LUXURY
A LUXURY

NO LONGER UNKNOWN IN ENGLAND.
BARBER & COMPANY'S
FRENCH COFFEE,
As used in Paris.
In its Highest Perfection.
TENPENCE PER POUND.
("See that you have none other.")
2lb. (sample) in tins sent free per
Parcels Post for 2s. 4d.,
Or 5 lb. for 5s. 6d.
Postal Orders from 1s. 6d. to 10s. 6d.
May now be had from all Post Offices.

A LUXURY
A LUXURY
A LUXURY
A LUXURY

This is the choicest and most carefully selected Coffee, "Roasted on the French Principle," and mixed with the Finest Bruges Chicory.

2 lb. Sample Tins sent per Parcels Post to any Post Town in the United Kingdom for 2s. 4d.;
5 lb. in Tins for 5s. 6d.

ONFA CONGO

ONFA
ONFA
ONFA
ONFA

NEVER Sold in England before at the price.
The Pick of the Season's Growth.
BARBER & CO.'S
RICH SIRUPY
Onfa Congo.

ONFA
ONFA
ONFA
ONFA

ONE SHILLING & SIXPENCE PER POUND.

A TEA abounding in Strength and High Quality. Never Sold before in England at the Price.

COMPARE

It with that sold by others at Two Shillings.

6½ lb. sent by Parcels Post for 10s. 9d. to any Post Town in the United Kingdom and Channel Islands.
4½ lb. for 7s. 6d.; 2½ lb. Samples for 4s. 3d.

BARBER AND COMPANY,

274, Regent Circus, Oxford Street, W.
61, Bishopsgate Street, City.
11, Boro' High Street, S.E.
ALSO
102, Westbourne Grove, W.
42, Great Titchfield Street, W.
King's Cross, N.

BRIGHTON, HASTINGS, MANCHESTER, BRISTOL, LIVERPOOL, PRESTON, AND BIRMINGHAM.

Postal Orders, from 1s. 6d. to 10s. 6d., may now be had for One Penny from all Post Offices.
Cheques to be crossed "London and Westminster."

ASCHERBERG PIANOS.

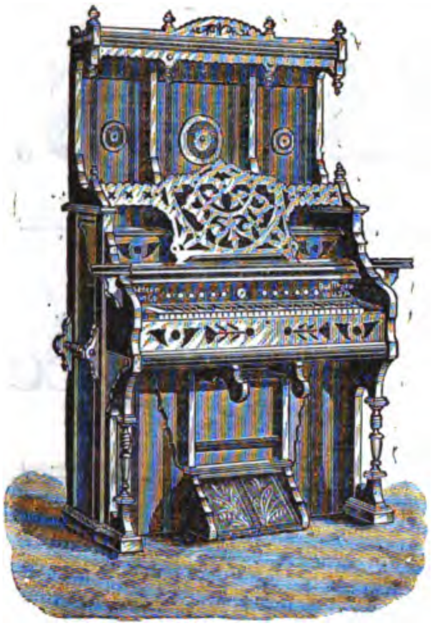
"I only perform an act of justice when I ascribe my successes to a great extent to the excellent Instruments from your factory, on which I was favoured to play before the public. Remain convinced that I shall at all times and everywhere give preference to your Pianos over all others, and accept the assurance of my unbounded esteem.

Respectfully,

VLADIMIR VON PACHMANN."

ASCHERBERG PIANO DEPOT,

211, REGENT STREET, W.



CARPENTER'S

ANGELUS ORGANS

CANNOT BE EQUALLED FOR

QUALITY OF TONE AND TOUCH. BEAUTY OF DESIGN. MODERATION IN PRICE.

Special styles for Church, Chapel, and School Pedal Organs with one or two manuals

HIGHLY RECOMMENDED BY THE PROFESSION.

Prices from £5 5s. to £262 10s.

HIRE PURCHASE OR LIBERAL DISCOUNT FOR CASH.

Illustrated Catalogues of Organs, Pinaos, and Harmoniums free by post.

SOLE EUROPEAN AGENTS:

JOHN C. MURDOCH and Co., Limited,

91 & 93, FARRINGDON ROAD, E.C., 247, UPPER STREET, HIGHBURY, N.

And GLASGOW, EDINBURGH, NEWCASTLE, SHIELDS, BIRMINGHAM, REDHILL, &c.

The Successful Treatment of Rupture

GRATIS AND POST FREE

ALL SUFFERERS FROM RUPTURE should read Mr. C. B. HARNESS' illustrated book on the Nature, Cause, and Successful Treatment of every form of HERNIA. It contains a full description of Harness' washable Xylonite Truss, which is the most perfect and comfortable appliance ever invented. This little book should be carefully read by every sufferer in the Kingdom. Don't delay!

WRITE TO-DAY.

Note Address—

MEDICAL BATTERY CO. Limited,

52, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.

Corner of Rathbone Place

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL RECEIPTS EXCEED FIVE MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate possession and Rent to pay. Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY, 39, Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate possession, either for Building or Gardening purposes. Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY, as above.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER'S

ROYAL IRISH CAMBRIC POCKET-HANDKERCHIEFS.

Samples and Price Lists Post Free.

Per doz.—Children's, 1s. 2d.; Ladies', 2s. 4½d.; Gents', 3s. 6d.

Hemstitched—Ladies', 2s. 11½d.; Gents', 4s. 11d.

—:0:—

BY APPOINTMENTS TO THE QUEEN AND TH CROWN PRINCESS OF GERMANY.

ROBINSON AND CLEAVER, BELFAST.

CASSON'S

PATENT

Organ - Building System

SEPARATE Pedal Organs for each Manual. Expressive and Controllable Pedal Basses. Perfect control of al Couplers. Reduction of number of Claviers without loss of efficiency, &c., &c. See testimonials from

Mr. W. T. BEST.
Rev. Sir F. A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart.
Dr. SPARK.
Dr. J. C. BRIDGE, M.A.
Dr. E. W. TAYLOR, F.C.O.
The late Mr. J. STIMPSON.
Mr. R. BARTHOLOMEW.
Mr. J. HEYWOOD, Birmingham.
Mr. G. A. AUDSLEY, F.R.I.B.A.
M. A. J. HIPKINS, F.S.A.
&c., &c.

Apply to the Secretary—

CASSON'S PATENT ORGAN CO., LIMITED,
DENBIGH.

Printed and Published by MACRAE, CURTICE & Co. (LIMITED), 12, Catherine Street, Strand, W.C.

WEEKLY.]

The Musical World.

ESTABLISHED 1822.
REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED; IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST WEEKLY, 17/6 PER ANNUM (Payable in advance).

VOL. 66.—No. 3. SATURDAY, JANUARY 21, 1888. PRICE {3D. Unstamped, 4D. By Post.

NOW READY FOR 1888.

The Musical Directory Annual and

Almanack. Contents: The names and addresses of Professors & Traders in London & Great Britain, arranged in Alphabetical order, the latter under each town. List of new copyright music published during the past year. The principal Concerts given by Musical Societies and others in London and the provinces, &c., &c.

Price—In paper cover, by Post, 3s. 3d.,
Crimson Cloth, 4s. 3d.

Rudall Carte & Co., 23, Berners Street, London.

The Professional Pocket Book and

Daily and Hourly Engagement Diary, published according to the plan of the late Sir Julius Benedict, containing spaces for appointments, lessons, &c., being invaluable to those who give lessons, or have many engagements. Principal concerts, meetings, and general information.

Price—In Roan Case, by Post, 3s. 2d.,
In Russian Leather, 6s. 2d.

Rudall Carte & Co., 23, Berners Street, London.

TUITION BY CORRESPONDENCE.

Important to Students, Teachers, Assistant-Masters, and others preparing for Royal Irish and London University Matriculation, Certificate of Royal College of Preceptors, Civil Service and Army Examinations.

The System of Education adopted is based upon the most approved Modern methods employed in the United Kingdom and Abroad, and, combined with earnest efforts, must secure progress in every subject undertaken.

It has the following special Features:—(1). It is purely individual, the Papers being carefully selected, and the work set and arranged to meet the special wants of each particular pupil. (2). The Questions and Exercises are carefully selected (mostly from Examination papers), and are graduated so as to increase in difficulty from the lowest standard to that of the Examination. Along with these Papers, Time-Tables, and Text-Book Exercises are set. (3). All the work is carefully examined and corrected, with full clear notes. Papers are not merely marked, but full solutions of all difficulties are sent whenever necessary.

Exceptionally low Terms, References to Pupils. Full particulars, with list of Successes, on application to Principal:

Mr. J. P. O'Byrne, (Lond.) M.C.P.,

GRENVILLE STREET, MOUNTJOY SQUARE, DUBLIN.

Special Notices.

THE LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.—Mr. HENSCHEL, Conductor.—Programme of the Tenth CONCERT, TUESDAY EVENING Next, Jan. 24, ST. JAMES'S HALL, at 8.30.—Overture, "Morte d'Arthur" (MS.) (J. F. Bridge) (first time in London), conducted by the composer: Serenade in D (Haffner Serenade) (Mozart), the violin solo played by Madame Norman-Neruda; Aria (the words from Goethe's "Claudine von Villa Bella") (Beethoven) (first performance in England), Mr. Henschel; Adagio and Finale from the Concerto in E (Vieuxtemps); Madame Norman-Neruda; Suite No. 3 "Roma" (Bizet) (first time in London). Reserved Seats, 10s. 6d., 7s. 6d., and 4s. Admission, 1s. At Austin's Office, St. James's Hall, and usual agents. N. Vert, 6, Cork Street, W.

M. PRADEAU'S SECOND SCHUMANN RECITAL, at Prince's Hall. Tuesday afternoon next, Jan. 24, at 3 o'clock. Programme:—Sonata in G minor, op. 22; faschingschwank, op. 26; three fantasiestfjcke, op. 111; arabesque, op. 18; novellettes, op. 21, Nos. 2 and 3; three romances, op. 28; Pas Redoublé from op. 99. Stalls (reserved), 10s. 6d.; balcony, 5s.; admission, 2s. 6d., at Austin's office, St. James's Hall, and usual agents.—N. Vert, 6, Cork Street, W.

MR. and Mrs. HENSCHEL beg to announce three VOCAL RECITALS at PRINCE'S HALL, to take place on the following WEDNESDAY AFTERNOONS, Jan. 25, Feb. 8 and 22, at three p.m.—Subscription to the three concerts: Numbered stalls, £1, single tickets, numbered stalls, 7s. 6d.; unreserved, 3s. and 1s. Tickets at the Hall and usual agents.—N. Vert, 6, Cork Street, W.

TO ORGANISTS.—For Professional Practice, Teaching, or Concert purpose, and Home use, the "Bach Model" Pedal Instrument is only reliable substitute for a pipe organ. For design, improved action, connections, and tone, it embraces the merits of the highest class instruments; and without paying an exorbitant price you may have an instrument with organ measurements that removes the deficiencies hitherto experienced in pedal instruments.—Apply for illustrated lists, terms, and prices, to J. L. Scholefield, Musical Instrument Manufacturer, Huddersfield.

FOR SALE, three-manual ORGAN, 21 stops. A fine-toned instrument, handsome case, richly decorated pipes, &c. Apply to the London Music Publishing Company (Limited), 54, Great Marlborough Street, W.

TO VIOLIN COLLECTORS.—Splendid specimen of Peter Guarnerius, for Sale. Guaranteed.—Apply, first by letter, to "C. H.," 59, Charlotte Street, Portland Place, London, W.

WANTED, a CHOIRMASTER for a Church in a central position in London. The Music is Anglican, and there is a large volunteer Choir of men and boys. A small stipend would be given to defray travelling expenses, &c. Address Rector, care of Horatio Owen, Newsagent, 35, Little Britain, E.C.

THE FRASER QUINTET. Misses Violet (Vocalist), Ida, and Ethel (Pianist, Violoncello, and Viola), Mabel and Stella Violinists), play Quartets, Solos, Duets, two Pianofortes, &c. For Engagements, for Concerts, "At Homes," Dinner and Garden Parties.—Address: 121, Adelaide Road, N.W.

WESTMINSTER ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY. High-Class Public Concerts. Examination for Orchestral Membership 1st and 3rd Wednesdays. Address, The Hon. Secretaries, THE TOWN HALL, WESTMINSTER.

Inscribed to Dr. BUNNETT.

MAGNIFICAT and NUNC DIMITTIS, in the key of C.—Easy setting for Parish Choirs, by Loraine Holloway, A.C.O. (Organist and Choirmaster of the Parish Church, Fakenham). Price Threepence. London: Novello, Ewer, & Co.

MR. SAML. K. WHITE, Manager and Secretary, Derby Castle, Douglas, Isle of Man, requests that all communications from Vocalists be addressed as above.

Institutes and Colleges.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, KENSINGTON GORE, LONDON, S.W.

Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.

President - - H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES, K.G.
Director - - Sir GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L., LL. D.

Next College Concert, January 26th, at 7.30 p.m.

The Half-Term will commence on February 13th.

Associate Examination—

The Examination for 1888 is fixed for April 16th. Last day for receiving applications, March 6th.

Forms and particulars may be obtained from the Registrar, Mr. GEORGE WATSON, at the College.

CHARLES MORLEY, Honorary Secretary.

LONDON ACADEMY OF MUSIC. Established 1861. ST. GEORGE'S HALL; 1A, Harrington Gardens, South Kensington; and 1, Old Steine, Brighton.

Principal—Professor WYLDE, Mus.D., Cantab.

Fee, three to five guineas at St. George's Hall, four to six guineas at branches, is for the course of instruction in four studies.

Piano—Dr. Wylde, Barnett, Henseler, Laistner, Logé, Kohler, Loman, Gear, Trew, Roche, Mattei, Ehrenfechter, Lehmeyer.

Singing—M. Garcia, Lablache, Visetti, Scuderi, Dinelli, Raimo, G. Garcia, Denza, Badia, Bonetti, Rocca, Romili, Danielli, Barnett.

Violin—Pollitzer, Ludwig, Erba. Harp—Oberthur. 'Cello—Pezze.

C. TREW, Honorary Secretary.

TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

President—The EARL of ABERDEEN.

LENT TERM COMMENCED JANUARY 16, 1888.

Students (professional and amateur) are received for a complete course of musical training, or for Single Studies. The following is a list of Subjects taught and Professors.

Subjects: Harmony & Counterpoint, Form & Orchestration, Compostion, Musical Acoustics, Pianoforte, Organ, Figured Bass Playing, Transposition, &c.; Solo Singing, the Art of Pianoforte Accompaniment, Violin, Violoncello, Double Bass, Flute, Oboe, Clarinet, Harp, Horn, Orchestral Class, Musical History, Sight-Singing, Choral Class, Vocal and Aural Physiology (Lectures), and Voice Production Class (Lectures).

Professors: Higgs, Saunders, Turpin, and Turner. MM.: Bambridge, Barrett, Beuthin, Bolton, Carrodus, Cole, Corder, Dubrucq, Fry, Gibson, Goodworth, Lazarus, Lockwood. Malsch, Mann, Mount, Nappi, Ogbourne, Pinney, Radcliff, Reynolds, Semple, Stone, Szczepanowski, Visetti, Wells, Willing, Woolhouse, and Miss Kate Steel.

Both male and female students are received, and there is no limit as to age. There are evening as well as day classes, and Harmony and Counterpoint are also taught by correspondence.

The full prospectus, and all particulars, can be obtained by addressing the Secretary.

By Order of the Academical Board.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, W.

ACADEMY for the HIGHER DEVELOPMENT of PIANOFORTE PLAYING. 12, Hinde Street, Manchester Square, W. (Established 1873.)

President - - - - - FRANKLIN TAYLOR.
Director - - - - - OSCAR BERINGER.

Christmas Term commenced October 3. Entrance Day, October 1, from ten to five. Fee: Six Guineas. The Academy is for Amateur and Professional Students. Two Pianoforte and One Harmony Lessons weekly. For prospectus and all particulars apply to the Director.

GUILD OF ORGANISTS, 35, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C.

Patron—The Right Rev. THE LORD BISHOP OF LONDON.

PRESIDENTS.

The REV. CANON SIR F. H. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., Mus. Doc.
Sir HERBERT OAKELEY, Bart., Mus. Doc.
Sir ROBERT STEWART, Mus. Doc.
Vice-President—WILLIAM PINNEY, Mus. Bac., Oxon.
Warden—CHARLES VINCENT, Mus. Doc., Oxon.

Established to advance the cause of Church music and the truest interests of its Professors, etc,

Members of the Church of England and Ireland, and the Episcopal Church of Scotland, are eligible for election. Subscription: Professional Organists (Associates) 10s. 6d. per annum; Amateurs (Members) 15s. per annum; Life subscription, 5 guineas.

~~Next Fellowship examination in Easter Week.~~

Prospectus and further particulars may be obtained from the Hon. Sec., Dr. J. H. Lewis, Staines, Middlesex.

London Organ School and International College of Music.

Established 1865, by the Rev. SCOTSON CLARK, Mus.B.

Patron—His Grace The ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY.

Principal—HENRY CLARK.

THE NEXT STUDENTS' MATINEE MUSICALE will take place on SATURDAY, January 28th.

Piano, Singing, Violin, 'Cello, Flute, Harp, Organ Lessons, with Practice, and Harmony. Private Lessons and Classes.

Candidates for Musical Degrees at any of the English Universities are expressly prepared for the Matriculation Examinations by Oxford and Cambridge graduates (in honours). Branches at Kensington and St. John's Wood.

Apply to the Director of Classes, T. H. Y. TROTTER, M.A., Mus.Bac., Oxon., 3, Princes Street, Cavendish Square, W. (close to Oxford Circus).

Publishers' Announcements.

Under the Sanction and Approval of the Rev. Sir FREDERICK A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., M.A., Mus. Doc., and of Sir G. A. MACFARREN, Mus. Doc.

THE MUSICIAN:

GUIDE FOR PIANOFORTE STUDENTS,

By RIDLEY PRENTICE.

CONTAINS ANALYSES OF WELL-KNOWN PIECES PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED, ENABLING THE PUPIL TO UNITE A STUDY OF MUSICAL FORM WITH THE ORDINARY PIANOFORTE PRACTICE.

Saturday Review.—"We are far from suggesting that there is any royal road for acquiring technical knowledge, but we are quite certain Mr. Ridley Prentice's road is in every way the pleasantest that has yet been laid before any pianoforte student."

Academy.—"A knowledge of form is imparted in simple and pleasant language. We heartily commend it to all who desire to understand, satisfactorily interpret, and enjoy beautiful music."

Graphic.—"Written with the laudable purpose of helping the pianoforte student to understand and enjoy beautiful music."

School Board Chronicle.—"A useful book for earnest teachers."

Musical Review.—"Mr. Ridley Prentice has newly developed an important though much neglected branch of the teacher's duties."

Monthly Musical Record.—"No more valuable work of the kind is in existence."

W. SWAN SONNENSCHEIN & CO., PATERNOSTER SQUARE:

And all Book and Music Sellers.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised & Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR

THE VOICE,

By T. A. Wallworth.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Madame Alwina Valleria, Mr. Iver M'Kay, and other successful Vocalists:

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & CO. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

Hotel List.

Our charge for a two line space in this column is 42s. per year—payable in advance—including postal copy of the paper every week. The manager reserves to himself the right of refusing any advertisement.

BLACKPOOL.—Bailey's Hotel, North Shore. Near the Pier and Winter Gardens.

LONDON. — Hotel Metropole, Northumberland Avenue, Charing Cross.

MANCHESTER.—Queen's Hotel, Piccadilly.

SOUTHPORT.—Victoria Hotel, on the Promenade, facing the Pier; five minutes from the Winter Gardens.

Professional Cards.

The subscription for a "card" space in these columns is £1 10s. for six months, and £1 per quarter—payable in advance, including copy of the paper each week. Subscriptions should be sent to the office of THE MUSICAL WORLD, 12, Catherine Street, Strand, London, W.C.

Conductors and Composers.

Mr. FREDERIC H. COWEN,
73, HAMILTON TERRACE,
ST. JOHN'S WOOD, N.W.

Mr. WILHELM GANZ
(Professor of the Pianoforte, Composer, and Conductor),
126, HARLEY STREET, W.

Mr. F. KILVINGTON HATTERSLEY,
A.R.A.M.
(Professor of the Pianoforte, Composer, and Conductor),
17, FINSBURY PARK VILLAS,
GREEN LANES, N.

Mr. ALBERT VISETTI
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Conductor),
12, WESTBOURNE PARK TERRACE, W.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN
(Guitar, Concertina, and Gigelira. Wood and Straw Instrument),
22A, DORSET STREET, PORTMAN SQUARE, W.

Mr. F. ST. JOHN LACY
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Vocalist) (baritone),
FITZROY MANSION, CHARLOTTE STREET,
FITZROY SQUARE, W.

Mr. H. MARTYN VAN LENNEP
(Teacher of Singing, Composer, and Conductor),
Address—7, WIMPOLE STREET,
CAVENDISH SQUARE, W.

Vocalists—Sopranos.

Madame VALLERIA
(Opera and Concerts),
BOSWORTH HOUSE, HUSBAND'S BOSWORTH,
RUGBY.

Miss EDITH DESMOND
(Opera and Concerts),
c/o NOLAN & JACKSON.

Miss KATE FLINN
(Concerts and Oratorios),
41, WELBECK STREET,
CAVENDISH SQUARE, W.

Mdlle. VELMI
(Opera and Concerts),
7, CHESILTON ROAD, MUNSTER PARK,
FULHAM, S.W.

Mrs. WELMAN
(Concerts),
3, BEDFORD GARDENS,
KENSINGTON, W.

Miss AGNES LARKCOM
Has removed to
158, PORTSDOWN ROAD, W.

Madame ISABEL GEORGE, L.R.A.M.
(Concert and Oratorio),
29, ALBANY STREET, REGENT'S PARK, N.W.

Contraltos.

Miss JOSEPHINE CRAVINO
(Concerts and Oratorio),
2, SEDGMOOR VILLAS,
Private Lessons given. CAMBERWELL, S.E.

Miss MARY E. DAKIN, R.A.M.
(Mez. Sop.),
(Ballads, Oratorio, &c.),
31, MONMOUTH ROAD,
BAYSWATER, LONDON, W.

Miss LENA LITTLE
(Concerts),
42, NORFOLK SQUARE, HYDE PARK, W.

Contraltos.—Continued.

Miss PATTIE MICHIE,
68, PARK WALK, FULHAM ROAD,
LONDON, S.W.

Madame OSCAR POLLACK
(Concerts),
56, DUCHESS ROAD,
EDGBASTON, BIRMINGHAM.

Tenors.

Mr. BARTON McGUCKIN
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
c/o MR. ALFRED MOUL,
26, OLD BOND STREET, W.,
Or, 270, ELGIN AVENUE, MAIDA VALE, W.

Mr. ARNOLD BREEDEN
(Concerts, Oratorio, and Opera),
Address—N. VERT, Esq.,
6, CORK STREET, W.

Mr. SEYMOUR JACKSON
(Concerts and Oratorio),
OLD TRAFFORD, MANCHESTER.

Mr. PAYNE CLARKE
(Concerts and Oratorio),
28, DEVONSHIRE STREET, ISLINGTON, N.

Mr. J. DALGETY HENDERSON,
GOTHIC LODGE,
LORDSHIP LANE, S.E.

Mr. REDFERN HOLLINS,
30, ST. STEPHEN'S AVENUE,
SHEPHERD'S BUSH, W.

Mr. BERNARD LANE,
60, WESTBOURNE PARK VILLAS, W.

Chevalier EDWARD SCOVEL
(Opera, Concerts, and Oratorio),
HOTEL DE L'EUROPE,
MILAN, ITALY.

Mr. W. ESMOND,
24, UPPER MOUNT STREET, DUBLIN.

Baritones.

Mr. WALTER CLIFFORD
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concerts),
c/o N. VERT, Esq.,
6, CORK STREET, W.

Mr. FREDERIC KING
(Concerts and Oratorio),
19, CANFIELD GARDENS, S. HAMPSTEAD.

Mr. NORRIS CROKER,
EGREMONT, CROXTED ROAD,
WEST DULWICH, S.E.

Mr. JOSEPH LYNDE
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concerts),
63, STAFFORD PLACE,
BUCKINGHAM GATE, S.W.

Mr. ALBERT REAKES
(Bass-Baritone, of the "London Ballad Singers," Oratorios, Concerts, &c.),
30, LANCASTER ROAD,
NOTTING HILL, W.

Herr RAGNAR GREVILLIUS
(Concerts, Oratorio, and Opera),
70, PORTSDOWN ROAD, MAIDA VALE, W.

Bass.

Mr. WATKIN MILLS requests that in future all communications respecting Concerts, &c., be addressed to his residence, Huntcliffe, Bexley, Kent.

Mr. FRANK CELLI
(Concerts and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. N. VERT, 6, CORK ST.,
BURLINGTON GARDENS, W.

Trumpet and Cornet.

Mr. THOMAS HARPER,
185, KING'S ROAD, N.W.

Pianoforte.

Mr. G. PRADEAU
(Lessons and Recitals),
1, STOWE ROAD,
SHEPHERD'S BUSH, W.

Guitar.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN, Guitariste, Instructress to H.R.H. the Princess Louise, has returned to town, 22A, DORSET STREET, PORTMAN SQUARE, W., where may be had her celebrated book, "Learning the Guitar Simplified," 10s. 6d.

Violin.

Mr. ALLAN CAMPBELL
(Formerly Pupil of Mr. Henry Holmes and Dr. S. S. Wesley),
23, THICKET ROAD,
Pupils visited and received. ANERLEY, S.E.

Mr. JULES KOOPMAN
(Late Professor at Conservatoire Groningen. Lessons, Concerts, and Private Soirées),
109, SUTHERLAND GARDENS, W.,
Or, STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER & Co.,
84, NEW BOND STREET, W.

Mr. LESLIE CROTTY and
Madame GEORGINA BURNS,
c/o Mr. ALFRED MOUL (sole agent),
26, OLD BOND STREET, W.

Miss AGNES JANSON requests that all communications respecting engagements may be sent to her new address, 34A, Gloucester Place, Portman Square, W.; or to Mr. N. VERT, 6, Cork Street, W.

MR. HEALEY'S SPECIAL LIST.

Madame LILIAN NORDICA (Soprano)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert),
Address to
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mdlle. LOUISE LABLACHE (Mez. Sop.)
(Opera and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mdlle. HELENE HASTREITER (Contr.)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Madame BELLE COLE (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. JOHN PROBERT (Tenor)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. VAUGHAN EDWARDES (Baritone)
(Concerts and Oratorio),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. MULES BROWN (Baritone)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. HENRY POPE (Bass)
(Opera, Concerts, and Oratorio),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. T. L. CAMPION (Bass)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. WILLIAM NICHOLL,
28, BELSIZE ROAD, N.W.,
Or, Sole Agent, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES.

Public Speakers and Singers

Can use "Brown's Bronchial Troches" as freely as requisite, containing nothing that can injure the system. They are invaluable in allaying the hoarseness and irritation incident to vocal exertion, effectually Clearing and Strengthening the Voice.

"They seem to act specially on the organs of the voice, and produce a clear enunciation."—Marie Roze-Mapleson.

Ask for and obtain only "Brown's Bronchial Troches." Sold everywhere at 1s. 1½d. a box.

DRURY LANE.—Augustus Harris, Lessee and Manager.—TWICE DAILY, at 1.30 and 7.30. Augustus Harris's Ninth Annual Pantomime.

PUSS IN BOOTS, at DRURY LANE.

DRURY LANE.—PUSS IN BOOTS.—Mesdames Wadman, Lettie Lind, Marie Williams, Jenny Dawson, Leslie Bell, Lily Miska, Violet Newham, Minnie Inch, Helen Capet, Florrence Graham, Mabel Coates, Marguerite Etoile, Millie Vere, Charlotte Elworthy, Alice Hammack, Bettina de Sortis (Premiere Danseuse); Messrs. Harry Nichols, Herbert Campbell Lionel Rignold, Charles Danby, Charles Lauri, jun., Reuben Inch, J. B. Gordon, Griffiths Brothers, Harry Payne (clown).—Box office open daily from ten to six.

MACFARREN SCHOLARSHIP FUND.

A Fund is being raised to found a Scholarship at the Royal Academy of Music in Memory of the late Sir G. A. Macfarren, and a Committee has been formed comprising most of the well-known musicians of the country. A sum of more than £1,000 has already been promised; but it is desired to raise sufficient to provide towards the maintenance of the Holder of the Scholarship, and to effect this at least £1,500 more will be required. Further subscriptions are therefore earnestly invited, and will be received by the Hon. Secretaries of the Local Sub-Committees or by the undersigned, and all contributions will be separately acknowledged. The First List of Subscribers, Committee, and Local Secretaries may now be had upon application to Mr. Baker, Acting Hon. Secretary.

Alfred H. Littleton, Hon. Treasurer, 1, Berners Street, W.
Charles E. Stephens, 37, Howley Place, W., } Hon. Secs.
J. Percy Baker, Willersley House, Wellington Road, Old Charlton, S.E. }

THE MUSICAL WORLD is on sale at Merrydew's Library Boulogne-sur-Mur.

Notice to Advertisers.—Advertisements should be sent not later than 5 o'clock on Wednesdays, to the Office, 12, Catherine St., Strand.

Notice to Subscribers.—The Subscription to The Musical World is now reduced to 17s. 6d. per annum (payable in advance).

All business communications to be addressed to the Manager of The Musical World.

All communications in reference to the literary part of the paper to be addressed to the Editor, who cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless accompanied by a stamped directed envelope.

Facts and Comments.

We understand that Mr. Harris's Italian season at Covent Garden is finally settled.

We are glad to hear that Mr. Frits Hartvigson is going to repeat his magnificent performance of Liszt's "Danse Macabre" at the London Symphony Concert of Wednesday afternoon, February 29. Such a work so rendered comes like a breath of fresh air in the atmosphere of dull Philistinism in which our ordinary concerts move.

Miss Jessie Bond, the original Mad Margaret of "Ruddigore," and one of the mainstays of the Gilbert and Sullivan extravaganza, has, as we announced last week, been seriously ill, but is now so far recovered as to be able to leave town for a short visit to our southern shores. All who have watched the gradual progress of this charming young lady from the ranks of the chorus to the important position she holds at present, will join with us in a "bon voyage" and cordial wishes for her recovery.

Mr. Sims Reeves seems to have borrowed a new lease of concert life. He made a successful appearance at the first of a series of Ballad Concerts given at the Japanese Hall on Saturday, and also sang at the Evening Ballad Concert at St. James's Hall on Wednesday. He, furthermore, will perform at the opening concert of the forthcoming season of Saturday Concerts at the Crystal Palace.

From the prospectus of the second half of the thirty-second season of these concerts (we are given to understand that the first series, which ended just before Christmas, was one of the most successful ever held at the Crystal Palace) which will commence on February 11th, it would appear that Mr. Manns has put together a most interesting programme. It includes, amongst other things, three new works by British musicians. On February 18th will be performed for the first time "The Day Dream," a cantata for soprano and tenor soloists, chorus, and orchestra, set to Lord Tennyson's poem by Mr. C. Templeman Speer, of the Royal Academy of Music, and a new setting for chorus and orchestra of Campbell's famous and dramatic "Lord Ullin's Daughter," by the young Scotchman, Mr. Hamish McCunn, of the Royal College of Music. On March 3rd a serenade by Mr. August Manns will be performed, and a week later Uhland's "Minstrel's Curse" will be declaimed by Mr. Charles Fry to a new orchestral accompaniment by Mr. Frederic Corder. Mr. Manns, while by no means neglecting the classical repertory or the music of distinguished foreigners, is to be heartily congratulated on the prominence which he has given in his programme to the compositions of the young and important school of native composers. And it is a matter of sincere congratulation that a policy so beneficial to art can be pursued with commercial success.

The Macfarren Scholarship Fund has reached the respectable sum of £985 15s. 6d.

Guildhall School of Music.—At a recent examination for the certificate of merit, the following students were passed with honours, viz., Alice Rust, Edith J. Ibbs, May Elliott, Florence Pettit, Annie Bairetti, and Enid Stuart Jones (pianoforte); Helen Ornarey and James Hailes (singing). The examiners were Messrs. H. Weist Hill (Principal), Ernst Pauer, W. G. Cusins, Charles Gardner, W. H. Cummings, and Edwin Holland.

Mr. Carl Armbruster, who lectured last year at the Royal Institution, on "Modern Composers of Classical Song," commenced a series of lectures on the same subject, last Wednesday, at King's College, for an audience of ladies only.

The "Trinity College Academic Gazette" says:—"Musicians who employ their fingers in musical pursuits ought to know that the General Accident and Employers' Liability Assurance Association (Limited), 17, Abchurch-lane, London, E.C., has recently made them the objects of special solicitude. The directors say: 'The loss of a little finger is of small moment to one who follows the art as an amusement; as to the other, whose very soul must be bound up in its theory and practice, it needs no words of ours to define his misfortune.' Acting upon this idea, they have framed a special table for those performers concerned."

At some theatre, as yet unnamed, on a date not yet divulged, a young débutante, whose identity is to be carefully concealed under an extemporised professional name, will make an appearance under conditions of no small interest for the chosen few who, though sitting in front, will be metaphorically "behind the scenes." For the artist thus challenging for the first time the opinion of a public audience, will be Miss Sibyl Sanderson, an American lady, of whose musical gifts rumour speaks in high and hopeful terms; and among the most attentive of the listeners will be no other than M. Massenet, the composer, ready, should the impression prove as favourable as is anticipated, to entrust her with a part in "Manon," next season, at the Opéra Comique.

Madame Norman Neruda did a kindly action last Sunday night. She played at the Bloomsbury Hall for the Gordon League, which has lately been established to improve the moral condition of the destitute millions, and, above all, brighten the sunless tedium of their dreary Sabbaths. Never did she draw sweeter music from her violin, or more heartfelt and sincere applause from any audience, than from the room full of men and women of quite the lower grade, on whose appreciative attention, however, not one note was lost. Mr. "Vincent," Mr. Beveridge, and several ladies also helped the zealous hon. sec., Mrs. Strowd-Jackson, and Lady Romilly to make the evening bright and successful.

Readers who remember Mr. Bullen's articles on Elizabethan Songs in THE MUSICAL WORLD, 1886, will be interested in his recently published "More Lyrics from Elizabethan Song-books," which shows, if nothing else, that in that sweet-singing age the songs were often, if not generally, beautiful, tunable pieces, far and away superior to the jargon which is given a musical setting in the present day. "Song-writing," says Mr. Bullen, "is now almost as completely a lost art as play-writing." He is very right, for our song-makers are no longer poets, and our poets leave the writing of songs to meaner hands. Here is an example from a Ch. Ch. MS., which it would be hard to match:

"Art thou that She than whom none fairer is, Art thou that She Desire so strives to kiss?"
"Say I am: how then?
Maids may not kiss
Such wanton-humoured men."

And there are examples of Donne, of Robert Greene, and many another unrecorded poetaster, which clearly show us how these rich, full-throated songs compare with the wretched stuff one hears in drawing-rooms to-day.

The annual Reid Festival in Edinburgh is announced for Saturday, 11th February, and is this year to extend over the following Monday and Tuesday. Mr. Charles Hallé's band has, as usual, been retained, and will appear, together with Madame Neruda as solo violinist, and Madame Nordica and Mr. Watkin Mills as vocalists, in three performances. The last of these will be devoted to Chamber music, and Beethoven's "Septuor" is promised as one of the items. The introduction of a concert of music of this character into the Festival is a new and very sensible departure.

Mr. Samuel Schofield has lately passed his examination before the Council of the Royal College of Music, and gained the Council Exhibition prize of £10, given to the best of the candidates from time to time offering themselves for examination. He was a pupil of Mr. Clafton, of Oldham, and for the last few years has been studying under a professor at Bristol (Mr. Rootham), where he held a situation in business until he vacated it to go up to London for the examination in which he proved so successful, 18 candidates participating in the competition. The Bristol journals speak in terms of great praise of Mr. Schofield as a very promising young tenor, well-known at local concerts, and anticipate for him a brilliant future.

With reference to our remarks on Miss Sarah Berry's appearance at Manchester, in the MUSICAL WORLD of the 7th and 14th inst., our attention is called to the facts (omitted by our correspondent) that the Courtenay Scholarship gained by Miss Berry is a scholarship in the Royal College of Music; that since Madame Lind-Goldschmidt's retirement from the College, Miss Berry has been the pupil of Signor Visetti; and that her scholarship has been extended by the Council, so that she will continue to enjoy the benefits of the College till Easter, 1889.

The Dublin High School for Girls has been placed under new management. Miss Anderson, B.A., R.U.I., is the head mistress, and the musical portion of her staff seems very satisfactory. The piano is taken by Signor Esponto, Herr Bluthner, and Miss Edith Oldham, formerly Scholar of the Royal College of Music, and Associate thereof. Mrs. Scott Ffenell is the singing mistress.

The Carl Rosa Company gave an admirable performance of Balfe's opera, "The Bohemian Girl," on Friday evening, the 6th inst., at Leicester, to a full house. The young American prima donna, Mdlle. Anita Alameda, who made a highly successful début in the part of Arline, the heroine, was enthusiastically recalled after the second and third acts, and received quite an ovation after the favourite ballad, "I dreamt that I dwelt in marble halls," which she was obliged to repeat. She displayed a most perfect shake. Although the part is unsuited to her voice, which is a high, flexible soprano, nevertheless her sympathetic voice and perfect method won for her high honours. Mdlle. Alameda is a pupil of the Maestra Silvia Della Valle, of Milan, who has lately come to establish herself in London. Mr. Childs (the tenor) and Miss Dickerson (contralto), as also Mr. Celli (baritone), all sustained their parts very creditably, winning their fair share of applause.

If anyone wants to see how doctors differ, let him read the opinions expressed by our Edinburgh and by our Glasgow correspondents as to the merits of Mr. Hamish McCunn's concert overture. Both, we have reason to know, are perfectly competent to judge, and both come to diametrically different conclusions. Such a thing sometimes happened with Florestan and Eusebius in the early days of the "Neue Zeitschrift für Musik," and the two then used to refer to Master Raro for a final judgment. Let us blushingly assume the character of umpire, and ask the reader to look up our own guardedly-expressed opinion of the same work in connection with its performance at the Crystal Palace Concerts.

The year has been an unusually fertile one as regards dramatic music in Germany, and the number of new pieces produced, operas, operettas, ballets, etc., amount to half a hundred or more, most of them, it must be feared, destined for the rubbish heap of things forgotten. The wretched Millöcker, Brüll, the author of the miserable "Golden Cross," produced by Mr. Carl Rosa some years ago, and others of that class, are, as usual, to the fore. And this is the country of Wagner, who, however, it should be added as a redeeming feature, beats all other composers by the number of works performed, and by the number of performances.

In connection with festival performances, the correspondent of a Berlin paper points out that at that great capital and centre of musical culture, "Martha" was performed on the anniversary of Gluck's death; "Der Trompeter von Säkkingen" on Beethoven's birthday; and "Il Trovatore" on the date of the Lortzing Jubilee! Has the Royal Opera at Berlin been in the hands of Mrs. Malaprop, while manager, sub-manager, chief inspector of machinery, prima donnas, and the rest of the personel were occupied in quarrelling? Our Berlin correspondent attempted last week to throw some light on these affairs.

Our Paris correspondent writes: "The first of the eight séances announced by the Société des Compositeurs de Musique, has been an exceptionally interesting one, though the president of the society, M. Saint-Saëns, who was to take an important part in the proceedings, had been obliged to leave Paris for the South of France the very morning of the concert. The Séance was entirely devoted to the clavecinists, from John Bull to Mozart, the finest, though the last of the clavecinists, as M. Weckerlin, the principal librarian of the Conservatoire, styled him in a short but straight-to-the-point paper he read at the opening of the séance. No less than eighteen pieces were played on a clavecin, constructed in Paris, by Taskin, in 1785, by M. Diemer and Madame Roger-Mirlos, while Madame Durand-Ulbach contributed two airs, by Martin and Albanese, accompanied at the clavecin by M. Weckerlin. In this age of pianistic acrobatism, when the simplest compositions of the old masters are forced into pieces of bravura, it was a positive relief to have a whole evening devoted entirely to these simple imaginings. The "Chaconne," with variations by Handel; a gavotte, by Rameau; and "La Favourite," by Couperin, as rendered by M. Dremer, will long be remembered and reckoned amongst the purest and truest artistic enjoyments, by all that were fortunate enough to be present at the Séance.

"The typical patriot who thinks himself in his heart equal to three Frenchmen, is for once to be disappointed. While in London the cultivation of the soil in the neighbourhood of Covent Garden and Charing Cross has chiefly produced an abundant crop of Music Halls, but has failed entirely as regards the growth of a single permanent Opera House, in Paris a Society has been formed for the purpose of building a new theatre exclusively devoted to the "Musical Drama." This Society, which is presided over by M. Lamoureux, bears the somewhat lengthy name of "Association Française pour le développement du drame musical en France et dans les pays de langue Française." A concise and cleverly written circular explains the aim of the association, and asks for contributions. The members of this society are divided into three classes: "membres adhérents," paying 16s. a year, and having a right to one stall at each first performance; "membres fondateurs," paying £4 a year for five years, with a right to two stalls; and "membres d'honneur," buying more than one share of £20, with a right to four stalls. The fund of the society is to be increased by the receipts of concerts, lectures, and theatrical performances which it is proposed to give for this purpose, and all the receipts of the future theatre are to be used only for the encouragement and development of the Musical Drama. This society, happily, is said to be highly patronised in financial circles, so that there is much hope of seeing its object very soon carried out."

The Budget Committee's report on the theatres of Paris contains some curious facts. As regards the Opera it points out that the subsidy of 800,000f. is slightly below the cost of lighting, heating, repairing, police, insurance, and percentage on the receipts for the poor, which last item is 300,000f. The first half of the year always shows a surplus, and the second half a deficit. In 1886 there was a loss of 109,000f., and the first half-year's receipts of 1887—namely, 1,522,000f.—were 39,000f. below those of the corresponding period of 1886. The 39 singers cost 824,000f., the heaviest item being for the four baritones—178,000f.; and the 50 dancers cost 244,000f., the largest item being for two ballet-masters, 26,000f. The 100 choristers cost 211,000f., and the 98 musicians 256,000f. The mounting of a new piece, which between 1876 and 1879 sometimes cost 275,000f. (e.g., "Le Roi de Lahore"), and between 1879 and 1884 sometimes cost 234,000f. (e.g., "Aïda"), has not under the present management exceeded 146,000f. (e.g., "Patrie"), the reduction having been effected by utilizing old scenes and costumes, cheaper purchases, and making up on the premises. The previous lessees lost 400,000f. in five years. Their successors claim credit for having economised without any falling off in the number of new pieces or in style of performance.

Mademoiselle Sigrid Arnoldson is a clever young lady in many ways; not only has she won the golden opinions of the Parisians in "Mignon," but she has also used her spare time in Paris in studying "Lakmé" with M. Délibes, and "Mireille" with Gounod; thus going in each instance to the fountain head. In addition to other accomplishments Mdlle. Arnoldson evidently possesses that of finding out the soft side of "our own correspondents," to judge, at least, from the manner in which those gentlemen trumpet forth her praises in the daily papers. Unfortunately, the stern professional musical critic is little influenced by this puff preliminary.

Madame Boucicaut, the Queen of milliners, included in her wondrous array of charitable bequests no less a sum than £6,000 to the Association of Musical Artists of Paris. As a recognition, however slight, of this honourable munificence, on Monday last the Association celebrated a grand musical mass at St. Eustache's church for the repose of her soul.

We take the following from the "St. James's Gazette":—"There has been an amusing discussion lately in Paris on the subject of hissing at theatres. It is interesting to note that an attempt made in the last century to put a stop to the practice proved a disastrous failure. The edict had hardly gone forth under the auspices of the Chief of the Police, when a first performance came off. A gentleman who was addicted notoriously to hostile demonstrations was "sandwiched," by way of precaution between two agents of the law, and soon the curtain rose. Every eye was directed towards the inveterate delinquent; but, to the general surprise he sat still without making a sign. Ere long, however, he began to yawn, and soon the two policemen took to yawning in sympathy. Their neighbours unconsciously followed suit, the contagion spread, and in a short time pit, boxes, and galleries were yawning as they had never yawned before. Even the actors, with their gaze fixed on the public, could not resist the example set them, and the unlucky author had the misfortune of hearing his most telling "hits" launched forth amid a perfect chorus of yawns. The embargo against hissing was promptly removed, it having been found by experience that a return to the old system was infinitely preferable to the new one inaugurated by the irrepressible Chevalier de la Morlière, who made a perfect speciality of his demonstrations against new plays at the Comédie Française, and had particularly distinguished himself by the uproar he created at the first performance of Voltaire's "Tancrède."

We quote the opinion of the Roman correspondent of the "Tablet," on Capocci's and Gounod's pièces d'occasion:—

Next came a hymn to Leo XIII. in Italian, for choir and orchestra, composed by Capooci; the words, of which copies were handed round, were nothing remarkable. The music was in the modern Italian style, florid, smooth, and rather insipid, with here and there an oratorio-like effect for the voices. The orchestration was interesting, varied, and effective. On the whole, it was a successful occasional piece, but it is not likely to find its way out of Rome. . . . As the Pope passed down the hall, the band and chorus executed what the papers call an "Urrah" by Gounod. I was anxious to hear this, thinking it might, perhaps, be profitably transported to England for use as a sort of "God save the Pope." My disappointment was great when I heard three times repeated, to the commonest of musical phrases, and with the most elementary harmony, simply the words "Viva Leone XIII." It sounded like the beginning of a great chorus, but nothing followed, and the choristers shut up their music and prepared to go home.

The Ameer of Afghanistan has a soul above the "tom toms" of his native land, and yearns for the stirring strains of the bagpipes. An order has been received in England for two hundred bagpipes for His Imperial Highness, and they will shortly be on their way to Cabul. No news has yet come to hand as to what the Ameer proposes to do with the "Tibia utricularis;" but surely there should be an excellent opening for impecunious disciples of Ulleam Ross with well-developed lungs.

In the report which has recently been issued concerning our trade with Japan, it would seem that in the four million pounds worth of exports which left this country for the land of the Mikado during the past year, no less than £36,000 was included under the head of musical instruments. There is some speculation rife as to the nature of these instruments, for it is well-known that European imports are in many branches of manufacture driving the native products out of the market, and the intelligent Jap will, no doubt, prefer a Broadwood "grand" to a "biwa" or a "samisen," if fashionable Japanese society will set the example.

LISZT'S "DANSE MACABRE."

The following analysis of Liszt's "Danse Macabre" will be read with some interest at the present moment, when that remarkable work has again been brought into prominence by Mr. Henschel's enterprise and Mr. Fritz Hartvigson's nimble fingers and subtle brain. It attempts to establish a parallel between the treatment of the same gruesome subject by mediæval painters and by the modern musician, and in that respect differs somewhat from the ordinary grooves of musical criticism.

To convey an adequate idea of the peculiar character of Liszt's "Danse Macabre," it will be necessary to say a few words of the subject selected by the composer for musical illustration. The idea of a pictorial representation of the "Todtentanz" or "Danse Macabre" was common in the middle ages. It gave naïve expression to the truth that rich and poor, young and old, gay and sad, are all alike subject to the sway of death. Death sits behind the emperor on his throne, it sits at the table of the rich, and at the humble board of the poor. It slays the boldest hero and it aids the storm at sea to break down the mast and sink the ship. The reader need hardly be told that our remarks are suggested by the celebrated series of woodcuts by Hans Holbein first published at Lyons in 1538, under the title of "Les Simulacres et Historiées Faces de la Mort," &c. As regards the popular name of the work, both in French and German, it seems singularly ill adapted to the representations. The original series consists of 41 woodcuts, 40 of which, the engraver's proofs, are at the British Museum. Any careful student of these will have observed that only in very few of the designs the figure representing Death is actually dancing, although the jaunty air assumed by the skeleton in more than one adds to the grim humour of the conception. The same remark applies to the celebrated "Todtentanz" at Basle, unfortunately destroyed in 1805, and erroneously ascribed to Holbein, although painted half a century before his birth, and to many other English, German, and French representations of the same subject. This fact has evidently been overlooked by M. Saint-Saëns, whose "Danse Macabre" takes the form of a valse; while, on the other hand, it may have induced Liszt to choose for the groundwork of his tone-picture a melody which is the very antipodes of a dance—namely, the old cantus firmus to the hymn "Dies Iræ." The various divisions of this grand theme, together with a melody of the nature of a chorale which for a time gains ascendency, are the melodic materials strictly and exclusively adhered to by Liszt. But the treatment which these simple elements have received at the composer's hands may well startle the unwary listener. At first a certain symmetry of form is at least observed by a sequence of variations duly numbered. But in the further course of the piece even this trifling help is withdrawn from the student of the score, who is left alone face to face with the most startling effects of orchestration, surpassed only by the pianoforte part, in which one glissando passage and wild cadenza follows another in rapid succession. It is true that the original theme may always be discerned in one part or other of the score, and its skilful contrapuntal treatment leads to the few quieter moments which are the points of relief in the general uproar. Among these the fourth variation in canon form[*], preceding the equally interesting fugato deserves special mention. To attempt a detailed analysis of the piece within the limits of our space would be obviously impossible. Neither are we prepared to deliver a final verdict as to the merits of the work or of the class to which its belongs. That the limits to which legitimate art can go are frequently reached, and perhaps transgressed, no calm judge can deny. Liszt would probably plead the nature of the subject as his justification. But even on this ground serious objections might be raised. Death even in mediæval woodcuts does not always appear grotesquely terrible, and Holbein was fully aware of the ideas of peace and well-earned rest equally connected with the universal fate of mankind. That these ideas have not found sufficient utterance in his scheme is, perhaps, the most serious charge that can be raised against Liszt's conception. That from a purely musical point of view that conception is highly interesting it is hardly necessary to add.

Let us add that a second hearing, after nine years, settled some of the doubts expressed in the preceding notice, and that Liszt's work appeared in the light of a masterpiece as beautiful as it is noble in conception, and uncompromising in its striving after truth.

Reviews.

BOOKS.

It is difficult to understand what inducement has been found for the reproduction of so antiquated a book as the "Traité de l'accompagnement de la Partition" of F. J. Fétis, which, under the title of "How to play from score,"[†] has recently been translated by Alfred Whittingham. The work was originally published in 1829. A large part is devoted to the companion subject of orchestration, and the climax of that art is here supposed to have been reached in the music of Rossini. There is much lengthy discussion, for the most part unimpeachable in its way, as to the special qualifications necessary for the making of a facile score-reader; but the chapter on the "Mechanism of Accompaniment" intended to help students in the attainment of those qualifications, and the examples appended, all belong to another day, and have long since been superseded by more modern developments. It is very certain that musicians sufficiently advanced to tackle with the difficulties of playing from score, will not be content nowadays with the information here afforded, but will have to seek help in other quarters where the subject is brought down to date.

---

[*] This variation, as it turns out, was not written by Liszt at all, but by Weitzmann, a composer of some merit, and a fervent disciple of the master.

[†] "How to Play from Score:" Treatise on Accompaniment from Score by F. J. Fétis, translated by Alfred Whittingham. William Reeves, London.

No vocalist, whatever may be his special predilections for one or the other of the several conflicting methods of voice production, can consider himself equipped for argument, or, indeed, qualified to form an independent opinion, until he has become acquainted with the leading features of the school of singing to which we owe Farinelli and Faustina Hasse in the last, and Patti and Mario in the present century. With a natural anxiety to avoid again raising the storm winds which raged some little time ago in our correspondence columns, we are restricted to saying that students will find ample and lucid explanation as to the nature of the "Voce di Petto," the "Voce di Gola," and the "Voce di Testa," and germane matters, in Frederick Helmore's little brochure entitled "The Italian Registers."* Mr. Helmore has opinions of his own, and does not hesitate to express them, these being, as will be inferred, in favour of the traditions of the Italian school; but while controversial he is in the main conciliatory in tone. The table he gives of the vowel sounds, with a graduated scale representing the proper tension of the vocal organs in each case, will be found especially suggestive. A "Systematic and Comprehensive Singing Manual,"† by Frederic Fearnside, contains a number of well-devised passages for voice practice, and, in addition, some short prefatory letterpress explanatory of his method. Of course, in this, as in all similar cases, it is indispensable that the written be supplemented with oral instruction; and, certainly, beginners who fancy it possible to learn to sing by the aid of books alone, are to be commiserated on the contradictory counsels they will meet with in various manuals. Here, for instance, care is recommended "not to inhale through the nostrils, but to have the mouth well open to prevent it," while no less urgently in another little treatise noticed not long ago in these columns, the learner is enjoined to "inhale as much as possible through the nose, and not through the mouth." But singing, as we know, is especially a subject on which doctors are apt to disagree.

A succinct little manual of "Copyright;"‡ by Alfred Howard, is likely to prove, especially as regards the international aspects of the question, useful rather than cheerful reading to the authors and publishers for whose benefit it has been compiled. It is now many years since a memorable petition by "A Writer of Books" was addressed to Parliament, with a side glance at the world of letters in general; but active steps for remedying the principal grievances and anomalies therein pointed out, have not yet got farther than the "conference stage," nor will they, it is to be feared, until interests are more equally balanced, and common honesty in dealing with the form of property represented by brainwork is recognised to be the best policy, not only for one country, but for all. Also received, "The Trinity College London Calendar for 1887-88,"§ containing full particulars of examinations, and the general scheme of work carried on at that institution, and in addition, a list of Doctors and Bachelors of Music in the United Kingdom, and other useful information.

VOCAL.

Mr. Erskin Allon, those of whose songs which have come under our notice have invariably been marked by earnest feeling and considerable command of resources, and who, moreover, is in the habit of choosing good words, has written a song worthy of him in "My Gentle Swallow" (London Music Publishing Company), and the poem itself, by "E. C. B.," is of more than average merit. In "Two Locks of Hair," by Albert D. Furse (W. B. Healy), the composer's treatment of Longfellow's verses is decidedly interesting; intelligent use being made of the opportunities they afford for the alternation of purely melodic passages with others of a more declamatory character. Though the opening to them is not very striking, nor, indeed, altogether unfamiliar, the song, without losing its bid for popularity by excessive elaboration, shows some superiority to the majority of such compositions. An attractively bound little volume, appropriately called "Dainty Ditties," contains a collection of old nursery rhymes wedded to new tunes composed by Frank J. Allen (Novello, Ewer and Co.) Seeing with what industry artists of acknowledged gift have contributed to the nursery picture-gallery, it is not surprising that musicians should from time to time turn their attention to the nursery concert-room. The rhymes chosen by Mr. Allen are all of the most familiar kind, and such as have long since obtained in infant circles a popularity likely to outvie in permanency that of many more pretentious effusions for which claims to immortality have been elsewhere put forward. The tunes themselves are simple, pretty, and easy to sing and to remember, the composer having judiciously steered clear of a mistake noticeable in some productions of the kind where the music, nominally addressed to audiences of tender years, has manifestly been written with an eye also to the tastes of their elders.

The attention of baritones may be drawn to five short settings by Walter Frere of verses by Constable, Nash, Lovelace, Sir W. Raleigh, and others (London Music Publishing Company). That each of these songs, in spite of their brevity, should convey in itself a sense of completeness, sufficiently testifies to the composer's knowledge of, and feeling for, form. There is also an agreeable freshness of melody, especially in "Diaphenia" and "Spring," and a general observance of the spirit of the words, which will recommend them to vocalists of culture. "I once had a sweet little doll, dears," a song with violoncello accompaniment, by Mary Shillington, words by the Rev. Charles Kingsley (London Music Publishing Company), is a trifling production, but not without pleasing qualities, and the accompaniment is well written.

We have received the vocal score of a "Te Deum" for solo voices, chorus, orchestra, and organ, by Thomas Wingham (Novello, Ewer, and Co.), originally composed for the opening in 1884 of the new church of the London Oratory. It is a well-sustained and effective contribution to Church music, without pretence to contrapuntal elaboration; but nevertheless musicianly in tone, and quite worthy to be heard on other occasions besides that for which it was originally written. "My Country" is a pleasing, unpretentious part-song, by Geo. Staker, words by Tom Moore (London Music Publishing Company), suitable for choral societies.

INSTRUMENTAL.

A whole pianoforte Sonata for the left hand alone has lately reached us. It has been composed by Zézi Graf Zichy, (D. Rahter, Hamburg; and A. Büttner, St. Petersburg), with a distinct musical intention, as well as with the more obvious object of giving strength and independence to the weaker of a pair which generally move along so unequally when harnessed together. In the case of ordinary players, effective performance is more likely to be arrived at by disregarding the title-page, and dividing the work between the two hands. Used, however, in the way intended by the composer, this piece, with its difficult but not impossible, skips and stretches, will be found to fulfil all the conditions of a superior study for the left-hand. Perfect independence of the latter is a technical matter strangely neglected by the average pianist, who cannot be too often reminded not to "let the left hand know what the right hand doeth." Another important educational feature of this and similar works ought not to be lost sight of. We refer to the opportunities they afford for practising the proper management of the pedal, for here, as also in so much of Schumann's music, it has to be used not merely as an ornament, but as actually necessary for sustaining notes which cannot be held down.

"A Twilight Dream," by M. S. Barron (Swan, & Co.), is a flowing and tuneful morceau de salon, well within the scope of moderately advanced players. There is character and local colouring in a little sketch for the pianoforte by John More Smieton (Methven, Simpson, & Co., Dundee). Also received, a very spirited "Festival March," by Mary Travers (Stanley Lucas). The following, among recently published dances, are pleasing and good for their purpose. "The Primrose Wreath" waltz, by W. G. Cowans (Alfred Hays); "Cinderella" waltz, by Pierre Perrot (Cramer); "Rosalie" suite de valses, by Leonard Gautier (E. Ascherberg & Co.); and "The Jolly Brick Polka," M. S. Barron (Swan & Co.)

---

* "The Italian Registers," by Fred. Helmore. J. Masters and Co., London.

† "The Systematic and Comprehensive Singing Manual," by Frederic Fearnside. Hutchings and Romer, London.

‡ "Copyright": A manual for authors and publishers, by Alfred Howard. Griffith, Farren, Okeden, and Co., London.

§ "The Trinity College London Calendar," for the Academical year 1887-1888. A. Hammond and Co.

The Organ World.

ON REGISTERING.

II.

As already stated, economy plays a large part in the business of registering or stop-changing. This is seen in two directions—the skill with which the smallest number of changes can be made effectively to produce required tone results, and the manual dexterity which enables the performer to handle the stops with the least possible expenditure of movement and exertion. In the first-named direction is represented years of experienced thought, by which the treatment of a given type of musical idea may receive the exact shade of tone quality, or the precise mixture of contrasted or combined tone qualities necessary to express the idea to the best advantage. There are two ways of approaching this larger side of the registration question. In the first place, it may be suggested that the stops should be classified into such well recognised divisions as these: foundation, mutation, reed, and solo, in order that one may promptly realise in preliminary thought the particular source or division from which the organ timbre is to be modified. Then, in the second place, the orchestral impulses of the organ must be compared with the tone-colour resources of the orchestra itself. These may be summarised as finding organic equivalents for such typical instrumentation as the strings in various shades of piano and forte, the general wind effects, as the soft vocal harmonies for clarionets and bassoons, the massive chords for the above-named instruments, with horns and trombones in the medium compass, etc., and the various solo effects, with, for the most part, string accompaniments. Then there is the art of selecting the stops necessary for the pronunciation of various degrees of musical activity, especially as regards the judicious use of four-feet stops in cases of contrapuntal movement of the florid type. Granting a duly-prepared and sufficiently solid or characteristic ground-work of eight-feet tone, the skilled player will be able, by the infusion of a proper proportion of reed or four feet tone—secured by the mere act of drawing one or two stops—to express to a nice shade, and without any feeling of violent transition, the character of most musical thoughts he may be called upon to deal with. Then in handling the solo effects of the organ, nice judgment is required in a strictly organic direction, even when the solo passages are, as is the rule, directly initative of orchestral patterns. This kind of judgment is based upon really simple conditions, such as these: contrasting a reedy quality, such as that of the oboe stop, with accompanying tone of a smooth, close-grained texture, such as that of a dulciana stop; and setting against the hard, bright, if not loud notes of the flute, used solo fashion, the generous, warm, background accompanying tone of some soft reed or gamba stop. It is by such art as this that the organist learns how to make distinct forms of musical objectivity stand apart in clearly defined and distinct outlines. Then some knowledge must be acquired, which is again of a purely organic type, as regards the relative slowness or quickness of speech of the different registers, so that the particular idiomatic manner employed, whether legato, staccato, etc., may be happily enunciated. The orchestral rule, which assigns melodies according to the respective temperaments of the bold, commanding, tender, or persuasive instrumental mediums, also guides the organist with regard to his choice of solo stop, and its accompaniment, and the accompanying harmonies themselves—including such marked effects as sustained chords, moving counterpoints, detached bass notes, arpeggiod harmonies, etc.,—demand attention, not only in view of the character of the solo to be accompanied, but to some extent in an independent direction by reason of distinct tone-colour claims, based upon the distinct character of the accompanying figure being employed. Then each type of stop, and, indeed, many individual stops, will each call for a certain characteristic touch; and the capable organist well knows the importance of nicely considered and judiciously applied methods of attacking and leaving notes, as a sister art of a trained judgment in connection with the business of organ registration. E. H. TURPIN.

MUSICAL ELOCUTION.

Read before the College of Organists by MR. G. E. LAKE.

When I was first honoured by an invitation to address you, I felt overwhelmed with a sense of the impossibility of my offering remarks upon any subject in connection with musical art which would not be trite and common-place in the ears of such an audience. I had no delightful "reminiscences" to detail, such as those we have recently perused or listened to with delight, and which almost formed a musical education in themselves; I felt, moreover, that the subjects (dear to my heart) of "professional organisation" and the "compulsory universal registration of instructors" contained elements too inflammable to be safely handled by gaslight!

The subjects of Consecutive fifths, The Tritone, and Musical Pitch presented themselves, without delay, as being (if not altogether absolute novelties) yet possessed of a "fearful fascination, which few can resist," and as including charms in many points such as resemble those of the "daughter-in-law elect" of the Mikado of Japan, notably in respect of being "an acquired taste," and taking "some years to appreciate," but I resisted manfully, remembering that on one of these topics you are shortly to be addressed by abler lips than mine, and reflecting also upon the fearful fate awaiting those who rashly adventure upon the hard-fought rhetorical field carrying the standard of Harmonic Genera. Seriously speaking, I was somewhat despairing, until it flashed upon me that elocution in music might give scope for some profitable consideration. Having decided, to my own thinking, that I was correct, my first thought was that the subject might not stand the strain of expansion to the usual limits of a paper, but I decided to try, and, though I may be wrong, it very soon seemed to me that a field was opened for consideration, such as many papers might not adequately set forth. With your kind permission, I will, however, endeavour to formulate some of the principal thoughts which have occurred to me as bearing directly upon a very important subject.

Firstly, what is the immediate connection of elocution with music in the abstract? To answer this rightly, we must primarily ask ourselves, What is elocution? What is music? Let me not be misunderstood. I do not use the term music in the sense as that it abounds (thank God) in Nature, everywhere, always omnipresent, the voice of the great world singing with the spirit and praising its Creator in one eternal Benedicite, but I use it in the nobler sense of its subordination to the cultivation of intelligence in man, who has been permitted to give the language of Form to the voice of Nature, that he may "sing with the understanding also." Again, I would define elocution as the perfected utterance of what is noble in speech, even as music includes the perfected utterance of what is noble in elocution. The argument is therefore as follows:—We are told that the language of the hereafter is to be praise, that it is to be expressed in music, that it is to be both instrumental and vocal—and these not necessarily combined—and, finally, that we are to improve and fructify our talents here, that we may afterwards repay them "with usury" hereafter. If this be true, what would be the plight of the dumb musician? He could but have prepared an instrumental form of worship; but who would deny that even if he does not obtain verbal speech in the world to come, he will be able to "speak praises" as effectually as the vocalist? Surely no one, because music, whether vocal or instrumental, is the perfected form of speech.

I have said thus much in order to justify the application of the term elocution to manipulated music, and have instanced, so far, religious authority for the position, because music was formulated by religion, and from being the pupil has been by turns the handmaid, the vehicle, the tool, and the restorer of the Visible Church, and if it be now thoroughly weaned from its great Mother, it is only that it may the more effectually assist her here, and express her hereafter. But I would ask permission to endeavour to connect instrumental music with elocution on secular grounds also, and in this way show once more that vocal music is the perfected form of Speech. Is not the other the perfected expression of Idea? and is it not the higher type after all, at least in this life? I venture to think so, for this reason: Its influence is indubitably a plural one, so that it can be extended to any number of minds ~~at the same time~~, with varied effect to each. Reflection is the Divine attribute of man, whereby he stands alone among created beings, therefore, when he takes part, actively or passively, in the performance of instrumental music, he supplies, and is supplied with, a mental picture to fill in for himself; the expression is given to him, but the subject matter is high or low, according to the bias of his mind; and against this bias the music itself is sometimes powerless. Let me cite a case in point. I have been assured of two persons who sat together listening to Wagner's marvellous overture to "Tannhauser." They loved each other, but while the Pilgrim's Chant inspired the one hearer with reverent joy, the other was moved by it to an impulse of passion, akin to sensuality. I trust I may have said enough to justify the consideration of our subject under two headings, "Vocal Elocution" and "Instrumental Elocution."

VOCAL ELOCUTION.

In speaking of vocal elocution, let me at once disclaim any intention of touching more than lightly upon various ideas which present themselves in connection with the subject. Those who desire technical instruction can obtain much useful information from Novello's Primer, "Speech in Song," by Mr. Ellis, or can seek private professional assistance (I shall be happy to submit my "terms!") Meanwhile I could ask leave to draw attention to the urgent necessity for earnest study of this art on the part of every young musician and cleric; indeed, I have known one or two elderly members of both vocations who had themselves some need of further efforts in this direction! Gentlemen, I do not hesitate to affirm that the study of elocution—although becoming daily more general—is still disgracefully neglected. Why is this? It cannot be for want of recognition of its power. Which of us, if he cares to reflect, does not know what good oratory, whether inflected or monotoned can effect? By its aid the influence of a simple, earnest curate can transcend that of the most erudite, if incoherent or maundering, ecclesiastical dignitary. Very few of us can carry away all the thoughts of a great mind delivered at one sitting, especially if we have to strain our attention to the realisation of the meaning, in addition to laying an embargo upon the memory. Moreover, if we ourselves are educated, the imperfect expression even of perfect principle irritates us, and our minds are rendered unfit for the reception, much less the retention, even of obvious truisms. I feel certain that I am not overstepping the boundaries of our subject in saying that the Church in its each and every branch, aye, even the individuals of our Legislature themselves, will never acquire full influence over the minds of the people until the Universities and other educational institutions recognise the absolute necessity of technical training in speaking, and the better enunciation of their educated thoughts.

Let me only cite three well-known speakers as a proof of this aphorism. I refer to Canon Liddon, Mr. Gladstone, and Joseph Arch. Their influence (for good or for evil) is well known. From considerable personal experience of it, I attribute much of the effect either to the cultivation or the gift of elocution.

But to us as lay clerics and vocalists belong the consideration more especially of vocal elocution. Can we honestly say that this art is cultivated amongst ourselves as it should be? I think not. It may be said that musicians cannot, like Demosthenes or Savonorola, like Dickens or Bellew move vast audiences to excess of spiritual emotion, but is this true? And if so, how about Braham and Henry Phillips; how about Clara Novello and Tietiens, Sims Reeves, Santley, Edward Lloyd? How about these and all other honoured vocalists? Have they not moved great audiences to spiritual exaltation, whether sacred or secular, shewing us the divinity and the beauty of Christianity by the medium of their educated utterance of its musical exemplification, as well as by that of their personal anatomical gifts? Without the aid of these and such as these, the world would to this day be ignorant of half the beauty, and much of the significance, of some of the finest thoughts and utterances of the greatest instructors of humanity.

The influence of the orator is great, but it is not unbounded, like that of the vocalist, who can combine with an unlimited number of other vocalist-orators in the chorus, enforcing with special effect the greatest thought of Divine writers. All speakers are not and can not be great orators, but vocalists have certain advantages—because vocalization, if only it be founded upon correct method of production, endues them with very special opportunities which, however, can only be realised to the full by means of careful study of enunciation and pronunciation. Before speaking further of vocal elocution, it is necessary to consider the elements of vocal production, because the two are inseparable. The great and primary secret of good elocution, as of good vocal production, is good breathing. Nothing short of perfect command of his respiratory organs will suffice for the vocalist or orator. The voice, like all other vental musical instruments, depends for the purity of its utterance upon the steady pressure of its wind supply. The human lung—before it will inflate quickly, must be taught to do so slowly; and it is much to be desired that little children, who are instructed in every other important function of humanity, should also be instructed in the art of speech, and not left merely to imitate the more or less imperfect utterance of their mentors. We all know that vocalisation is often hereditary as well as imitative, pace the Italians, our own North country vocalists, and most of the children of great singers or speakers. If we all studied speaking as well as singing, and transmitted our perfection to our offspring, we might become as vocal a nation as the Italians—allowing for an inferior vocal language, the difference of climate and the lack of per-oxide of hydrogen!

I remember being consulted some time back by an eminent physician and university lecturer, who was suffering from minor laryngitis—what we all know as "clergyman's sore throat." Upon informing him that he did not employ more that half of his lung capacity he good humouredly suggested an old aphorism relative to our revered grandmothers, and the process of extracting the contents of ova by means of a practical application of the science of pneumatics! I ventured to point out that I—who have from birth suffered from asthma—could, nevertheless, sustain a vocal sound longer than he was capable of—advising him to test his power of respiration standing before a mirror to watch the action of diapraghm and abdomen, and giving him some exercises for the improvement of tone and for bringing it to resonate in the front of the mouth. The result was, that in a few weeks he confessed that he, a physician, had never before realised fully the capacities and influence of his lungs, and that he was now able to lecture two or three times daily with ease, effect, and a perfect absence of all fatigue.

And now, assuming the student to have acquired this all-important method of inspiration, retention, and steady expiration, he has next to acquire the faculty of resonance or travelling quality. So far, his voice is like a harmonium—he has now to transform it into a pipe-organ, applying, as it were, a qualifying tube to the reed of vocal utterance; and the longer he can make this tube, the more perfect and resonant will be his vocal tone, because none can deny that the tube placed over an organ reed increases its volume and travelling quality. Nature has given him above his larynx head cavities, hard and soft palates, nasal orifices, teeth and lips; it is for him to acquire the full use of these.

(To be continued.)

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS' EXAMINATION.

The division of the work of examination into two weeks has been found to work with advantage. During the Fellowship of some sixty candidates section was undertaken, and the associateship half, numbering about ninety candidates, has been accomplished during the past week. The distribution of fellowship diplomas took place on Jan. 13, at the hands of Sir George Grove. Mr. E. H. Turpin, the College hon. secretary, in introducing Sir George Grove, called attention to the distinguished labours of the eminent Director of the Royal College of Music as a musical educationalist, and pointed out that music in England had gained strength, both artistically and socially, from Sir George Grove's work in the world of art.

Sir George Grove, who was received with much applause, expressed his pleasure at taking part in the interesting proceedings of the day. He said that our organists and musicians had greatly advanced during the past fifty years, not only as artists, but as men who, well-informed, could now play a more useful part in the scheme of our social life. Our Church authorities, he maintained, must naturally be much better satisfied to have as their organists men not only skilled in their art, but in other directions better able to hold a high position with becoming self-respect and dignity. Sir George Grove made a special point of calling the attention of organists to their responsibilities in the higher development of music in our midst; especially would he impress upon the importance of aiding in the great work of forwarding the interests of orchestral music, a duty organists were, by their general knowledge of the art, their skill as organ-players, and their social position specially called upon to undertake. In the course of the distribution, Sir George Grove again alluded to this subject in calling attention to the case of one successful candidate—Mr. Jeffries, of Walsall—who reported the formation of a local orchestra, able to study the beauties of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony. Sir George Grove called attention to the important and increasing work of the College of Organists as an examining body, and spoke with satisfaction with regard to the present occasion, the standard of work done showed an advance in the character of the musicianship of the candidates. Sir George Grove, who, it will be remembered, is a vice-president of the college, then proceeded to distribute the diplomas, with a kind word and a shake of the hand for each recipient. Out of the sixty candidates for Fellowship, the following sixteen gentlemen gained the diploma, the highest given by the college:—J. Humfrey Anger, Frenchay; William G. Bayley, Romford; Herbert W. Botting, Brighton; Frank E. Fletcher, Folkestone; Herbert A. Fricker, Canterbury; William W. Harvey, St. Neots; Arthur Hey, Swansea; George F. Huntley, Mus. Bac., Notting Hill; John E. Jeffries, Walsall; Benjamin Nock, Smethwick; Samuel Round, Perth; Thomas Russe, Tiverton; John E. R. Senior, Glasgow; Harry J. Taylor, Cullompton; Charles Wilkes, Southport; Arthur R. Wood, Derby. Several other gentlemen passed half-way through either, at organ or at paper work.

Mr. Stephens, in proposing a vote of thanks to Sir George Grove, said that besides his mere attendance here to hand them the diplomas, he had offered some very valuable remarks to the young organists. He had insisted upon the importance of an organist not being only an organ player, but in every sense a musician; he should be well read in his art; that Sir George had also spoken, as Mr. Turpin had done, on the great importance of understanding orchestral writing. He (Mr. Stephens) thought this could not be too strongly insisted upon, and thought they would all be thankful for Sir George Grove's remarks; at the same time he objected to organists writing orchestral music, and never studying the effects of the organ. Now this is exactly what they (the examiners) did not want, they wanted the orchestral writing to have its own specialty, and the organ to have its own specialty; and the two are not the same, in fact, they are absolutely distinct in functions and resources. The organist who merely plays the organ is not, strictly speaking, a musician; the organist who studies his art, and has a sufficient knowledge of his art, is exactly what Sir George announces him to be; and for such remarks as he had made, and for the advice he had given, they owed him very many thanks, but also the honour he had given to all those gentlemen who passed through the trying ordeal should make them all join in a sincere wish of their very best thanks.

Dr. Frost, in seconding Mr. Stephens' proposition, said he was sure they would all agree with him they were very much indebted to Sir George Grove for spending his valuable time in distributing the diplomas. He was sure there would be some present who had not received diplomas, and he looked upon their non-receipt of diplomas as simply a postponement of success; if they came forward another time they would, no doubt, succeed as well as the others. With regard to examination, he would observe that a man might come very near the mark and fail for the want of a little collectedness, or a little calmness in his ideas, when he comes to put his mind on paper. He would say to those who were unsuccessful, they should look forward to coming another time and succeeding.

Sir George Grove thanked those present for the vote of thanks, and for having listened to so many kind and good things said in his praise by Mr. Stephens, Dr. Frost, and Mr. Turpin. Sir George Grove, in offering a word of advice to the unsuccessful candidates, said that they should never be disheartened, but only make a resolve not to be beaten next time. He would remind them that these examinations were a kind of preliminary to what they were going through all their lives. We were always going through some examination both by our fellow-men and under the higher powers above, who duly recorded our successes and failures. Therefore, a man should recollect that he had not been sent into the world merely to pass through it, but he had got to do something: he had to add something to the sum of happiness and human knowledge while he resided in the world. That was the man who lived his life properly and did what he had been sent for in the world.

Great regret was expressed at the absence of the much-esteemed treasurer, Mr. M. E. Wesley, through a cold, from which he was, however, recovering. Reference was made to Mr. Wesley's interest in the work of the Organists' Benevolent Society. It was stated that the committee at a recent meeting decided to ask the clergy to kindly put aside collections at special services presenting favourable opportunities, or to be good enough to consent to their organists giving recitals, at which offertories could be taken in aid of the fund, the organists being asked to kindly aid by giving their services in the good cause. Sir George Grove thought it would be a good plan for each organist, to display his interest in this broad and unrestricted charitable scheme, by giving a guinea to its fund. These remarks closed the meeting. The following were among the list of the pieces played by the various candidates for Fellowship:—

Fugue, Rheinberger; Fugue in E minor, Bach; Fugue in A minor, Bach; Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn (first and last movements); Fugue in E minor No. 2, Merkel (first two movements); Pastoral Sonata, Rheinberger (first and last movements); Prelude and Fugue, C major, Bach; Prelude and Fugue, E flat, Bach (St. Ann's); Sonata No. 4, Mendelssohn; Fugue, E major, Bach; Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach; Sonata No. 5, Mendelssohn; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Prelude and Fugue, G major, Bach; Fugue in G minor, Bach; Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; St. Ann's Fugue, Bach; Fugue in A minor, Bach; Fugue in D minor, Bach (The Giant); Sonata No. 1, Bach (first and last movements); Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Prelude and Fugue in A, Bach; Double Fugue, Krebs; Fugue in G minor, Bach; Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn (recitative and finale); Fantasia Sonata in A flat, Rheinberger; Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Fugue in G minor (short), Bach; Sonata No. 8, with Passacaglia, Merkel; Fugue in A minor, Bach; Prelude and Fugue, B minor, Hesse; Prelude and Fugue, in G, Mendelssohn; Fugue in E flat (St. Ann's), Bach; Sonata, No. 6, in E minor, Merkel (first movement); Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn (first and last movement); St. Anne's Fugue, Bach (first and last movement); Fugue in B minor, Bach; Fugue in C minor, Bach; Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn (first and second movement); Fugue in G minor, Bach; Fugue in E minor, Bach; Sonata No. 10, Rheinberger; Postlude in D. major, Smart; Choral, with variations, Smart; Fugue in G minor, Bach; Fugue in C major, Bach; Fugue in A minor, Bach; Fugue (St. Ann's), Bach.

The account of the Associateship Examination must be held over. The diploma distribution, under the presidency of C. E. Stephens, F.C.O., took place on Jan. 20th. A list of examiners' names will also be given next week.

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS' CALENDAR.

College of Organists' Calendar.—On Tuesday next, January 24th, at 8, a paper will be read by A. Trickett, Esq., F.C.O., on "The Church Cantata." The College Library will be opened the same evening from 7 to 8.—E. H. Turpin, Hon. Sec., 95, Great Russell-street, W.C.

ON TWO ORGAN QUESTIONS.

In reply to "H.T.M," the Dead March in "Saul" was scored for strings, flutes, bassoons, trombones, and kettle drums in C and G. The sentences are set alternately for strings and trombones, and for flutes and bassoons—an arrangement which suggests at once picturesque processional divisions, and a theory of gender in music, by the expressive alternate utterance of the grief of strong men, and the sorrow of tender women. In the closing sentence, the whole orchestra is heard in combination, as indicative of the sorrow that is "not without hope." The drum notes are sometimes the third, fourth, and first beats, as one figure answering the three initial chords, and sometimes the single note on the last beat of the bar. Though used throughout, the drums are more sparingly employed in the flute sentences, than in the trombone phrases. There is no authority for the imitated roll at the end of the march, the last phrase ending with all instruments on the third beat of the last measure. The additional roll was originally a military invention. The use of imitated drum rolls, thunder stop, etc., are entirely organists' fanciful additions to the score. In the military use of this famous funeral march, the small drums roll throughout, and the large drum plays on something like the original lines of Handel's drum parts. It may be added that, for miltary purposes, the march is played, it appears, slower than it was heard on the military bands of our forefathers. The muffled drums are a practical mistake, and these instruments must be at least partly uncovered in order to vibrate sufficiently. A completely crape-muffled drum gives only a thud in response to the touch of the drum-stick. Organists would do well to copy the composer's own drum notes, and to use these only in all their simplicity; though some sort of imitation of the drum may be legitimately attempted. This may be best done, perhaps, by using only 32 and 16 feet stops uncoupled, and by suggesting the harmonic effects of the drums by slightly touching the fifth. The left foot should play the lower note firmly, the right foot slightly touching the fifth of both C or G from time to time, as these notes are severally used. As regards combination of stops, the sentences for strings and trombones may be played on great organ soft, open and stopped eight feet coupled and swell, eight feet reeds with closed box. The flute sentences may be given upon a soft flue stop or a soft flute of four feet, played an octave lower than written, with the left hand on swell to oboe. There can be no impropriety in filling up the harmonies judiciously here and there. The full organ should be reserved for the final sentence. These remarks will be taken as merely suggestive; and much depends upon the acoustic properties of the building, character and position of the organ. In answer to the second question of "H.T.M.," there is no settled form of the Offertoire, though, generally, especially when it is an allegro, the Binary form, with two subjects, etc., is employed; The Episodical form is also used, though less frequently. There is no reason, indeed, why the Fugue should not be employed. The Offertory is indeed a sort of middle voluntary, taking its name from its use in the Roman Catholic Church during the collection of the offertory immediately after the Nicene Creed of the "Mass," and before the preface preceding the Sanctus, and more solemn portions of the Eucharistic office. From its position and use in the service, movements of various styles and forms may be appropriately used according to the character of season or service, and the judgment of the composer and officiating organist.—E.H.T.

SPECIFICATIONS.

THE HAGUE, HOLLAND.

The Dutch are a clever, practical people, always willing to take a lesson from other countries, and turn their knowledge to account in their own industries. Especially do they excel in organ-building, where we find the perfect voicing and mechanism of Cavaille-Coll united to a beauty, finish, and durability which is the prevailing characteristic of Dutch organs. The workmanship is conscientious, and only the very best materials are used. Hence it is not uncommon for a Dutch organ to cost twice or even three times as much as one of German build. The best known firm of builders in Holland at the present time is undoubtedly that of Bätz and Co., of Utrecht, who built an organ for the principal church at The Hague.

MANUAL I.

1. Principal	16 ft.	8. Octave	2 ft.
2. Quintation	16 ,,	9. Mixture	—
3. Principal	8 ,,	10. Scharf	—
4. Baarpyp	8 ,,	11. Cornet	—
5. Rohrflote	8 ,,	12. Trumpet	16 ,,
6. Octave	4 ,,	13. Trumpet	8 ,,
7. Quint	3 ,,	14. Trumpet	4 ,,

MANUAL II.

1. Bourdon	16 ft.	8. Nasard	3 ft.
2. Principal	8 ,,	9. Flageolet	2 ,,
3. Violin	8 ,,	10. Mixture	—
4. Hohlflote	4 ,,	11. Cornet	—
5. Flanto traverso	8 ,,	12. Fagott	16 ,,
6. Octave	4 ,,	13. Trumpet	8 ,,
7. Rohrflote	4 ,,	14. Clarinet	8 ,,

MANUAL III.

1. Salicet	8 ft	8. Flute	4 ft
2. Viola	8 ,,	9. Gemshorn	2 ,,
3. Violon	8 ,,	10. Carillon	—
4. Rohrflote	8 ,,	11. Aeoline	16 ,,
5. Quintaton	8 ,,	12. Schalmei (cornet)	8 ,,
6. Voix Celeste	8 ,,	13. Dulcian	8 ,,
7. Salicional	4 ,,

PEDAL ORGAN.

1. Sub-bass	32 ft	8. Quinte	6 ft
2. Principal	16 ,,	9. Octave	4 ,,
3. Sub-bass	16 ,,	10. Posaune	32 ,,
4. Violon	16 ,,	11. Posaune	16 ,,
5. Octave	8 ,,	12. Fagott	16 ,,
6. Bourdon	8 ,,	13. Trumpet	8 ,,
7. Quinte	12 ,,	14. Trumpet	4 ,,

RECITAL NEWS.

GODALMING PARISH CHURCH.—An organ recital was given on January 12th, by E. H. Lemare, Esq., F.C.O., Associate of the Royal Academy of Music, organist of the Parish Church, Sheffield. There was a fairly good attendance, and the music was greatly appreciated. The programme was as follows:—

Con Moto Moderato (en forme d'Ouverture	Smart.
Barcarole	S. Bennett.
Serenade	Schubert.
Toccata, with Pedal Solo (F major)	Bach.
Concert Fantasia on Pleyel's German Hymn	E. H. Lemare
Chorus of Angels	Clark.
Storm Fantasia	Lemmens.
Minuet in A	Boccherini.
a. Andante in G b. Grand Offertoire in C minor	Batiste.

ST. JOHN, LADYWOOD, BIRMINGHAM.—Programme of organ recital given on December 29th, by Mr. H. Taylor, F.C.O.:—

Offertoire on a Noël	Grison.
Christmas Postlude	Garrett.
Andante Pastorale, from "Light of the World"	Sullivan.
Offertoire on Two Noëls	Guilmant.
Christmas March	Merkel.
Variations on "Hark! the Herald Angels Sing"	Frost.

Notes.

A concert was given lately at the Albert Hall, Leipsic. The programme, in addition to orchestral, piano, and vocal music, included a toccata and fugue for organ by Bach, finely played by Herr P. Homeyer, who is a native of Leipsic, and whose performance was received with enthusiastic applause.

The Daily Telegraph observes:—On several occasions, when referring to important musical doings in Gloucester Cathedral, we have called attention to the state of the organ, and are now happy to say that the matter has been taken up by the Dean and Chapter, who have opened a subscription for the amending and enlargement of the instrument at a cost of £1,000. Under ordinary circumstances this would be a purely local concern, but it happens that the Gloucester organ is one of considerable interest to antiquarians. It was built by the elder Harris in 1670; some portions—the case of the choir organ certainly—dating back to 1579, and, therefore, belonging to the oldest examples in the country. It is intended, we believe, religiously to preserve the beautiful case of both great and choir organs. Subscriptions will be received by Dean Spence, Canon Tinling, and the organist, Mr. C. L. Williams, Mus. Bac. Gloucestershire men should heartily respond to the appeal.

ORGANISTS AND ORGAN STUDENTS.

You are kindly requested to write for Ainsworth's "New Patent Organ Pedal Combination List." Ainsworth's "New Patent" is perfectly unique and may be combined easily with any Piano. It is the only one which may be safely combined with any Piano without deteriorating the instrument. Having put down at my works two engines and machinery of the most desirable kind, I am now supplying my goods at a price which enables every organist and organ student to have always ready for use in his Studio an

ORGAN PEDAL PIANO,

AFFORDING PERFECTLY UNIQUE PEDAL PRACTICE.

34, Sheen Park, Richmond.

DEAR SIR,—I have deferred writing to comment upon your Pedals and Action now attached to my pianoforte until I could satisfy myself of their utility and efficiency. I can now conscientiously say that they more than fulfil all my anticipations. Although I am no carpenter, aided by your lucid diagram I had little difficulty in attaching them myself, and it is impossible to over-estimate the comfort they give to me or to conceive the saving of time one experiences in one's own room.—Believe me, yours truly,

BURNHAM HORNER, F.R. Hist.S.

To Mr. Mr. Ainsworth.

DEAR SIR,—It gives me great pleasure to bear testimony to the perfection of your Invention. I am more than satisfied with your Patent Action and Organ Pedals, and consider them worth double the money. Organists and organ students who desire to improve in the Art of Pedalling, which is so essential to a good organist, will do well to procure a set. I have seen no Action half so effective, and one can sit at the Piano and play, "Fixed in his everlasting seat," or any other organ music, or organ arrangement with the greatest pleasure. The touch of pedals could not be better, and the action is as you say, "Absolutely free from annoyances." They cannot be too highly recommended, as by their use, rapid progress is certain.—Believe me, sincerely yours,

I. B. Thornton,
Organist, Birstall, Leeds.

Cologne, July 16th, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have much pleasure in informing you that your Pedals have given the fullest satisfaction. I have them combined with my practice Piano. Many of my musical friends who have seen them, as well as my organ pupils, are quite delighted with them; and I must acknowledge that I have never met with any Pedals so noiseless and pleasant to play upon as yours. The Action I consider durable, and of very good workmanship. Every organist who desires to perfect his playing will welcome your invention. I can recommend your goods in every respect.—Yours truly,

HERR J. RODENKIRCHEN.

To John Ainsworth, Esq. Organist, The Cathedral, Cologne, Germany.

TOOLS.—In order to facilite the attachment, a complete set of tools are sent (four in number) each one marked for its particular use. By the use of these tools, and following carefully the directions, ANY ONE can make a really good attachment.

On Receipt of Trade or Professional Card, you will receive List, with Liberal Terms.

AINSWORTH'S PATENT ORGAN COMBINATION WORKS,
BRINSCALL, CHORLEY.

CASSON'S
PATENT
Organ - Building System

SEPARATE Pedal Organs for each Manual. Expressive and Controllable Pedal Basses. Perfect control of al Couplers. Reduction of number of Claviers without loss of efficiency, &c., &c. See testimonials from

Mr. W. T. BEST.
Rev. Sir F. A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart.
Dr. SPARK.
Dr. J. C. BRIDGE, M.A.
Dr. E. W. TAYLOR, F.C.O.
The late Mr. J. STIMPSON.
Mr. R. BARTHOLOMEW.
Mr. J. HEYWOOD, Birmingham.
Mr. G. A. AUDSLEY, F.R.I.B.A.
M. A. J. HIPKINS, F.S.A.
&c., &c.

Apply to the Secretary—

CASSON'S PATENT ORGAN CO., LIMITED,
DENBIGH.

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, JANUARY 21, 1888.

THE BOLOGNA EXHIBITION.

We are in a position to give some interesting and authentic facts as to the musical programme of the Exhibition that is to be held in connection with the Festival of the Bologna University. The arrangements of that programme have been made by Signor Boito, which accounts for their artistic and, in a historic sense, highly instructive character. The idea, as far as opera is concerned, has been to give a representative synopsis of the Italian Music Drama in the eighteenth century, and it was at first intended to place side by side, and submit to the calm criticism of posterity, two works by the great rivals, Gluck and Piccinni (the two "n's" are found in all Italian papers). It was, however, found that the extraordinary vocal difficulties which Piccinni propounded to his singers were too much for modern Italian artists, and so the committee were happy to have a pretext for letting the lesser light give way to the greater, and Gluck's "Alceste" alone will be given.

The influence of Gluck on Italian art will be illustrated by his pupil Sacchini's "Edipo a Colono," and this will bring the list of "Opere serie" to a close. Even more important than the tragic opera is the "melodramma giocoso," in which Italian humour found its genuine expression, and which alas! is rapidly disappearing before the international platitudes of the operetta. Of this also two specimens will be given: Pergolesi's "Livietta e Tracollo" and Cimarosa's "Il Matrimonio Segreto." The first is a so-called Intermezzo in one act, and will be given, according to the manner of the old days, between two parts of an "opera seria." Cimarosa's "Secret Marriage," as everyone knows, or should know, is the standard work of its kind, as far as the eighteenth century is concerned, even as Rossini's "Il Barbiere" is that of a more modern epoch.

It will be seen that, as far as regards the opera, a great treat is in store for those interested in the history of the art. The concert arrangements are as yet in embryo, and, as far as they are settled, do not call for the same unmixed approval. As the representative work of sacred music, Mendelssohn's "Elijah," of all things in the world, has been selected, which, although beautiful in itself, has absolutely nothing to do with Italian music. A mass by Palestrina, would surely have been a more appropriate choice, and it must be feared that the antagonism to Rome, which is so prevalent amongst intelligent Italians, has here militated against purely artistic considerations. The same remark also applies to Beethoven's 9th Symphony, which is set down for one of the concerts. It will, however, be interesting to English amateurs to compare the Italian renderings of these two works with what they are used to at home. The orchestra will consist of 100 performers, and the chorus of 150 singers. Amongst the exhibits already promised are complete collections of Chinese, Japanese and Indian instruments. America has also promised to contribute.

The English Committee, of which Mr. Cusins is the chairman, has so far been slightly hampered by the hesitation of the Italian authorities to guarantee the insurance of things lent by private individuals as apart from the trade. The Committee felt sure that no one in this country would send interesting autographs or valuable instruments to Italy unless their safety was secured against all risk, and a strong intimation to that effect was accordingly sent to Bologna. We are glad to learn that a letter complying with this sine qua non condition has been recently received, and we are glad to place before our readers the desirability of English art being adequately represented on so important an occasion.

DEATH OF STEPHEN HELLER.

The death of Stephen Heller, on the 14th inst., has brought to a close an uneventful, but in an artistic sense important and interesting career. As a pianist, Heller did not produce much impression, for, although an excellent player, he was too shy and too undemonstrative to show himself at his best in public. By his pupils and his immediate circle of friends he was idolised; their sympathetic presence and encouragement were needed to act as a stimulant on his retiring nature and to make him speak on the piano as few could speak. In this as in other respects he resembled Chopin, to whose works his compositions show much elective affinity. Both were incapable of dealing with the larger forms of music, and the concerti and sonatas which they attempted were not among their masterpieces. It was in short and fugitive thoughts and imaginings that the genius of both found its most congenial embodiment. It is of course impossible to compare Heller with Chopin as a composer. He lacked the deep pathos, the creative individuality of the Polish master, and he also lacked the national type which gives so much of their melancholy charm to Chopin's mazurkas and polonaises. Although born in Hungary and settled for 50 years in Paris, Heller, as a musician, remained German to the core. His compositions breathe that tender sentiment, that delicate reserve of feeling, for which the German language alone has a word, "Gemüth," because the thing is rarely found outside Germany. The word completely defines Heller's music, although, it should be added, he was a master of his craft, and gave to his smallest pieces the finish of works of art. Apart from this, his music shows that connection with literary currents which was in a manner originated by Schumann, and distinguishes the new school from the old. Two of his collection of pianoforte pieces are named after the books from which they derive their inspiration, the Promenades d'un Solitaire pointing to Rousseau, and the Blumen, Frucht, und Dornen Stücke to Jean Paul Richter. In these two collections the composer's best work is perhaps embodied. Heller was born at Pesth on May 15, 1815, and appeared in public at a very early age. He studied at Vienna, and lived for a few years at Augsburg; but in 1838 he settled in Paris, where he resided for the rest of his life, universally esteemed as an artist and loved by those who knew him intimately. His biography, by M. Barbedette, has been translated into English by the Rev. R. Brown-Borthwick, of Scarborough.—The Times.

Popular Concerts.

Last Monday's attendance was a large one, as is almost invariably the case when Schubert's Octet is in the programme. This beautiful work, once so strangely neglected, was admirably played by Madame Norman-Neruda and MM. Ries, Straus, Piatti, Reynolds, Lazarus, Paersch, and Wotton, and the audience waxed enthusiastic at its conclusion. Mr. Chappell is, moreover, to be congratulated upon unwonted enterprise in giving a hearing to a new English composer. Mr. J. A. Dykes, the composer in question, is a son of the late distinguished organist of that name, and has received his musical training in Germany. His Trio in E minor at once stamps him as a conscientious artist with aims in the direction of the highest in art, and a considerable degree of technical skill. He is evidently influenced by Brahms, both as regards design and treatment; but, this notwithstanding, the work is highly interesting and promising. Of the four movements of which it consists, the scherzo and adagio sostenuto are perhaps the best; the opening allegro is rather diffuse and overworked, while the finale is brilliant and clever, if the thematic material is not always of the highest order. The trio was excellently played by Miss Fanny Davies, Madame Neruda, and Signor Piatti, and the composer was loudly applauded on his appearance at its conclusion. Miss Bertha Moore was the vocalist, giving a pretty rendering of Sullivan's "Orpheus with his Lute."

M. DE PACHMANN'S CONCERT.

The fairly numerous and, towards the end of the concert, very enthusiastic audience which attended M. de Pachmann's pianforte recital on Monday afternoon was destined to meet with something akin to a surprise. This excellent artist is on the pianoforte what Keats is in poetry. Tenderness of feeling, delicacy of touch, subtlety of effect rather than dramatic passion—these are the qualities which have given a position apart to M. de Pachmann, and have made him among other things the predestined interpreter of Chopin, that dreamiest and most poetic of all composers. On Monday the pianist appeared in a somewhat different light. Whether it was owing to an instrument of more than ordinary richness and beauty of tone, or whether he was determined to approach the somewhat difficult task of his programme in the heroic vein, certain it is that his touch seemed more emphatic, more marked, his reading broader and more developed, than they had been on any previous occasion. Bach and Beethoven (sonata, op. 54) decidedly gained by the change, and a finer performance than that of the latter by M. de Pachmann could not have been desired. Schumann's "Warum?" next met with a congenial rendering, but in the same composer's "Ende vom Lied" some excess of force was noticeable, and it was a matter for some disappointment that the Chopin selection did not, and according to the choice of pieces could scarcely display any of those infinitely subtle touches of feeling and of rhythm for which, as we said before, this pianist is unrivalled. There was, for example, not a single nocturne among the number. M. de Pachmann's wonted delicacy curiously enough returned to him in the last piece, Liszt's magnificent Polonaise in E, which, in addition to much that is impetuous and wild, contains some music fit for the revels of Oberon and his fairies. Here the pianist was at his best. We should also mention a very pretty "Romance" by Madame de Pachmann, which was part of the programme. If we may finally offer a piece of advice to so great an artist as M. de Pachmann, we should urge upon him not to neglect the qualities which he possesses over others which he may acquire. The number of bravura players nowadays is legion and their physical endurance inexhaustible, but the light of poetry which M. de Pachmann throws upon Chopin, and Mozart, and Henselt is as rare as ever it was.

M. PRADEAU'S RECITAL.

The pianoforte recital given by M. Gustave Pradeau, at the Princes' Hall, the first of a series of four confined entirely to Schumann's music, cannot be said to have been a brilliant success. M. Pradeau brings, it is true, a musicianly and earnest spirit to bear upon the interpretation of the composer he delights to honour—a composer who has enriched the repertory of pianoforte players with some of the most exquisite creations of genius—but his command of phrasing and expression does not reach the high degree of artistic excellence which is demanded by the nature of this self-imposed task. It is doubtful whether a programme consisting entirely of Schumann's pianoforte works is likely to attract the fastidious amateur, no matter who be the exponent; he would prefer smaller and more delicate doses of his favourite composer, unless the hour or two be taken up with a whole work, or pieces more directly connected together than the Sonata in F sharp minor, the Fantasia in C, the Nachtstücke, and the selections from the Novelletten and other small pieces. However, M. Pradeau was able to gain the sympathy of the audience in the familiar pieces he brought forward, through the undoubted qualities of sound, though not brilliant, musicianship which, as we said before, he brought to bear on their rendering.

LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

At the concert of last Wednesday afternoon, the "sensation" turned out to be Mr. Edward Lloyd's very fine delivery of Lohengrin's "Legend" and "Farewell," declaimed—to English words, more's the pity—with such power and energy, as well as beauty of voice, as fairly to carry away the audience. Apart from Mr. Lloyd's singing, this piece was, as music, the finest thing in the programme, which, but for it (and it is, after all, but a fragment), contained no composition of the very highest order, though much that was extremely good. The principal orchestral piece was Brahms's "Serenade" in D. This early work (op. 11), though pleasing, especially in the first four of its six movements, can hardly lay claim to much originality. One striking note-coincidence with a theme of Beethoven's occurs in the second scherzo, but the atmosphere of the whole work is redolent of Beethoven's symphonies; all its movements are full of those affinities of rhythm, of context, of character, which constitute associations far stronger and more subtle than mere note-coincidences, and which accordingly suggest or recall alternately and again and again, the 2nd, 4th, 5th, 6th, and 9th symphonies of Beethoven. In spite of this, the serenade is, we repeat, pleasing. The themes are genial and easy to grasp; their treatment, without being recondite, is sufficiently interesting; the orchestration is clear and effective. It was very well played, the performance of the two curiously scored minuets deserving an especial word of admiration. Signor Piatti played two movements of a Concerto by Molique, with such consummate mastery and such incomparable charm, as to lend to the insipid music a grace and beauty not its own. He was enthusiastically applauded and recalled. Mr. Lloyd's first song was the pretty tenor romance—not often heard—from "Euryanthe." The concert opened with Gade's melodious "Highland" overture, and closed with an orchestral version of Rubinstein's Polonaise from the "Bal Costumé," a somewhat disappointing piece.

At the next concert, on Tuesday evening, the 24th inst., Dr. Bridge's M.S. overture, "Morte d'Arthur," and Bizet's Suite, "Roma," will be performed, each for the first time in London.

Olympia.

Last Tuesday an entirely new cast of programme was presented by Mr. Houcke to a very large audience. The improvements made are as varied as they are numerous, and therefore cannot be dealt with in detail here. Among the more remarkable changes may be noted the daring and graceful riding of Jenny O'Brien and Gilbert, who do a jockey act in first-rate style; next, "an interrupted fishing adventure," winding up with an extraordinary collection of horses, men, and wheels, the whole passing funny. It is impossible to describe this mimic pantomime, but we do say it is bound to draw London "in its thousands." In part two, M. Kremo on the tight rope, the Morocco jumpers, Professor Corradini and his highly trained horses, successively and successfully amused us all. The fête at Rome, which ends this show, is a gorgeous spectacle, and a fitting conclusion to about the best thing to be seen in London.

We may mention that there are two performances daily, at 2·30 and 8, but the doors of the National Agricultural Hall open long before, to enable visitors to refresh themselves under the guidance of Messts. J. Bertram & Co.

TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

The diplomas and certificates gained at the Trinity College higher examinations just concluded were distributed to the successful candidates on Tuesday evening, by the Warden, the Rev. Dr. Bonavia Hunt. The distribution was preceded by an unpretentious little musical performance. Gounod's song, "The Valley," was nicely given by Mr. Frank Swinford, in spite of a trifling difference of opinion on the subject of time between himself and his accompanist, in the second verse; but the Toreador's song from "Carmen" was quite unsuited to his style, which is wanting in the requisite verve and spirit. Moreover, the pronunciation of Tore-ay-dor was somewhat afflicting, though most genuinely English.

The best style, on the whole, was displayed by Miss Emily Rivett, Benedict Exhibitioner, who played Nicodé's "Traum und Erwachen," for pianoforte, with very considerable brilliancy and delicacy. Miss Gertrude Corbin's rendering of Schubert's "La Fontaine" was creditable, especially to a young lady in statu pupillari. Donizetti's "Nella fatal di Rimini," by Miss Ada Cartwright, was not remarkable; and the tin-kettle tendencies of the pianoforte, anything but a good or sympathetic instrument, were rather prominently elicited under the by no means elastic touch of Miss Louise Goldhawk, in Mendelssohn's Prelude and Fugue in B minor.

After distributing the diplomas (during which ceremony the familiar name of Miss Florence Nightingale evoked much apparent enthusiasm) Dr. Bonavia Hunt drew attention to the fact that there had not been one successful candidate for the highest diploma in the gift of the College, that of Licentiate in music. Several candidates had presented themselves, but each and all had been remitted back to their studies for six months. Dr. Hunt also remarked that some of these had failed in subjects in which they had before succeeded, while succeeding in the subjects which had caused their previous rejection; and he urged upon all students the importance of keeping up all the branches of their education, instead of cramming on one or two subjects and leaving the rest to take their chance. In conclusion, he pointed out the importance and the advantage of a high standard being insisted upon by the examiners, diplomas too easily awarded having no practical value whatever.

Next Week's Music.

		P.M
THIS DAY (SATURDAY).
Popular Concert	St. James's Hall	3.0
MONDAY, 23.
Popular Concert	St. James's Hall	8 30
TUESDAY, 24.
M. Pradeau	Princes' Hall	3 0
London Symphony Concert	St. James's Hall	8.30
WEDNESDAY 25.
Mr. Henschel's Recital	Prince's Hall	3.0
London Ballad Concert	St. James's Hall	8.0
Scotch Concert	Albert Hall
THURSDAY 26.
"Elijah" (Finsbury Choral Union)	Holloway Hall	8.0
Royal College Students	Alexandra House	7.30

Music Publishers' Weekly List.

SONGS.
Five songs for Baritone (No. 1) Diaphenia; (2) Spring; (3) Cavalier War Song; (4) To Althea from Prison; (5) The Soul's Errand	Walter Frere	L. Music Pub. Co.
I Once had a Sweet Little Doll (C to G, with 'cello obbligato)	Mary Shillington	,, ORGAN.
Organist's Quarterly Journal (Part 79)	Ed. by W. Spark	Novello.
PART SONG.
My Country	G. Staker	L. Music Pub. Co.

PROVINCIAL.

MUSIC IN SCOTLAND.

Our Glasgow Correspondent writes:—

In spite of the financial failure of last year and the continuance of dull trade, the short musical season which each year may literally be said to visit Glasgow, has so far progressed briskly. Though the attendance of the fashionable world at the Tuesday concerts is fair, and of the non-fashionables at the Saturday popular concerts as steady and encouraging as ever, there has been an ominous falling off of subscribers to the Choral Union Series This may not turn out to be an unmitigated misfortune, if, as we hope, it has the effect of making the guarantors and promoters of the concerts reconsider the means by which these concerts are provided. At present, music has no real abiding place with us, and there is not a single orchestra resident in Scotland. The number of those who see the bad economy, musically and financially, of such a system, is, we are glad to observe, steadily increasing. The programmes of the classical concerts have not, so far, brought us any important novelty or revival. In fact, the programmes of the classical and popular concerts seem for the time being to have changed places. At the subscription concerts, we have heard a good deal of the French ballet music which is more suitable for promenade popular, than for high class orchestral performances. The symphonies given have been Beethoven's C minor at the first concert, on December 13, Mozart's in E flat, Mendelssohn's in A, and, more recently, as the chief symphonic item, Liszt's "Les Préludes." At the Saturday concerts there has been less light music, and we have there heard Schubert's two symphonies in B minor and C major; Beethoven's "Pastoral"; and Mendelssohn's "Scotch" symphony. At the coming popular concert, on Saturday, Schumann's D minor symphony will be performed. Mr. Hamish McCunn's overture "The Land of Mountain and Flood," a vigorous work full of the best promise, has also been played at a popular concert. On December 27, Herr Bernhard Stavenhagen gave a powerful rendering of Beethoven's C minor concerto, and displayed extraordinary virtuosity in the rendering of one of Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsodies. Two members of Mr. Manns's orchestra have also specially distinguished themselves as solo performers. M. Gillett has performed an effective concerto by Goltermann, for violoncello and orchestra, and a much inferior work of the same class, by Popper, on the 5th of January. M. Gillett is an executant of the highest order, has technical acquirements which are exceptional, and great musical intelligence. Senor Fernandez Arbos, the leader of the orchestra, who gave last night a highly-finished and poetical rendering of Mendelssohn's violin concerto, is a young artist who, if we are not mistaken, is likely to be heard of in the future. He has brilliant, polished technique, rare beauty of tone, and plays with the spontaneous warmth and fire not often found in combination with breadth and dignity of style. He is a pupil of Joachim, and has recently been appointed concertmeister of the Hamburg Philharmonic Society. The principal singers who have appeared have been Madame Nordica and Miss Hope Glenn, who sang in "Elijah" on the 20th December; Miss Annie Marriott, Madame Patey, Mr. Bantock Pierpoint, and Mr. Piercy, who sang in the "Messiah" on New Year's Day; Mdlle. Gambogi, Miss Gomes, and Miss Alice Whitacre. As usual, however, a great part of the vocal music contributed by these singers has been below the level of what ought to be heard from cultivated artists at classical orchestral concerts. Schubert, Schumann, Franz, and Brahms would appear to be as unknown to these vocalists as they certainly are to the general public in the North. An important step has this year been taken in the appointment of Mr. Joseph Bradley, recently connected with Mr. Hallé's Manchester concerts, as conductor and choirmaster of the Choral Union. Under Mr. Bradley's direction the quality of the choral singing has already distinctly improved. He is an admirable accompanist, and has more than average ability as a conductor. The performance of the "Elijah," though the tempi taken were in some cases too rapid, was the finest heard here for many years. On the 23rd December, Mr. William Nicholl and Miss Marguerite Hall gave a chamber concert of vocal music, remarkable both as to the excellence of the selection of music, and the manner in which it was rendered by the two accomplished artistes.—L.Y.

Our Edinburgh correspondent writes:—

During the past few weeks, a number of more or less important events have transpired in our musical life here. The first of these, taking them in their natural order of sequence, was the opening concert of Messrs. Della Torre and Townsend's series of chamber concerts, on the 28th November. Both the trios selected for performance were for pianoforte and strings; the one by Mozart, op. 14 in E. flat, and the other, Schumann's grand work in D minor, op. 63. In addition to these, Beethoven's pianoforte and 'cello sonata, No. 2, op. 5, Mendelssohn's pianoforte duo, "Allegro brillante," and Handel's violin sonata in A made up the programme. Nothing could better illustrate the development of chamber music in modern times than the juxtaposition of the two trios named. Mozart's melodious work suffered a good deal, however, from a somewhat loose rendering in two of the parts, the piano and 'cello. The Schumann trio, on the other hand, in all its changeful moods, solid grandeur, and glorious colouring, received a fitting and sympathetic interpretation by each of the executants, Messrs. Townsend, M'Kenzie, and M'Neil. The performances of the other items of the programme, while in each case creditable to those concerned, do not call for any special remark.

The next event, a week later, was the first concert of the season given by the Amateur Orchestral Society. In the execution of the first number, Gade's "Echoes of Ossian" overture, there appeared to be strong evidence of a distinct improvement, both as regards tone and precision of attack, on the part of the band generally since the closing concert of the previous season. This impression, however, was doomed to vanish as the concert proceeded. In one or two of the more trying numbers that followed—Mendelssohn's Italian symphony and Rossini's Tell overture—all the old indications of weakness made themselves apparent, and particularly so in the latter-mentioned work, which suffered cruelly. A noticeable feature of the concert was Beethoven's Concerto in B flat, No. 2, op. 19, for pianoforte and orchestra, the piano part of which was, in some respects, very creditably played by a local lady amateur. But although there was a display of a fair amount of technique, there was a lack of tone, as well as of power to grasp the rhythmical ideas observable in more than one of the movements, which went a long way to mar the effects of the otherwise respectable performance. There were two vocalists also, but the contributions of neither rose above the level of mediocrity. Mr. C. D. Hamilton was, as usual, the conductor.

This concert of the Amateur Society was closely followed by a performance of Handel's "Samson," with the assistance of a small string band, by Mr. Kirkhope's Choir, also an amateur organisation. The rendering which the work received was in many respects praiseworthy, and did the choir much credit. The chorus singing generally was characterised by clear and distinct enunciation, and the intonation was also true. The choruses that may be singled out for special praise were "Let the trumpet's lofty sound," "To song and dance," "Fixed in His everlasting seat," and "Let the celestial concerts." The bass songs, also, given to Harrapha, were well declaimed; but the rendering of the other solo parts calls for no comment.

Messrs. Della Torre and Townsend's Second Chamber Concert took place on Monday, December 12, and, it is gratifying to add, attracted a much larger audience than did the first. The programme consisted of four items only—two pianoforte and string trios, the one by Haydn in E flat, and the other by Gade in F., op. 42; a Sonata for pianoforte and violin, by Grieg, op. 8; and a group of pianoforte solos by Schubert, Liszt, and Chopin. Of the trios, the Gade received unquestionably the more acceptable treatment. The effect of Haydn's music was throughout spoilt by the too great prominence given to the piano part. The Grieg sonata, on the other hand, was extremely well rendered by Messrs. Colin M'Kenzie and Paul Della Torre; the dashing swing of the allegro vivace being particularly well given. Some of the legato passages also gave Mr. M'Kenzie an opportunity of exhibiting a tone of more than ordinary sweetness and purity. Chopin's Rondo in E flat was the most noticeable item of the pianoforte works, and its difficulties were, with one or two minor exceptions due to an immoderate use of the pedal, safely surmounted by Mr. Della Torre, who, on the whole, may be said to have given a satisfactory account of the work.

Two days after Messrs. Della Torre and Townsend's concert, Herr A. Gallrein gave the first of another series of similar entertainments. He was assisted by Miss M'Gregor and Mr. T. Warren (violins), Mr. Holder (viola); Miss Charters and Mr. H. Seligmann (vocalists), and Mr. W. Harrison, as accompanist. Herr Gallrein's programme was constituted as follows:—Three string quartets, Haydn's "Emperor," Beethoven's in A., op. 18, parts only of which, unfortunately, were played, and Mozart's in D, No. 7, the whole of which was given; two violin solos, a Romance, by Svendsen, and a Mazurka, by Wieniawski; two 'cello solos, a Lied, by Hofmann, and a Gavotte, by Fitzenhagen; and some ballads of a not very exalted type. The practice of giving snatches only of works of the above character in any circumstances, but specially so at concerts of this kind, where a different sense of the fitness of things might be looked for, is not to be encouraged. As a matter of fact, the whole concert, which, in many respects was well sustained, suffered from the transgression, which, it is to be hoped, will not be repeated in those that are to follow.

The first of Messrs. Paterson's Orchestral Concerts, with Mr. Manns's band, took place during the week before Christmas, in the music-hall, which was unusually well filled. A judicious pruning, and some alterations in the personnel of the band since last year have certainly had the effect of greatly improving its ensemble. On this occasion there was little or none of that raggedness and immaturity apparent that did so much to mar the enjoyment of two or three of the earlier concerts given by the same band twelve months ago. A Beethoven symphony, two overtures, and a suite de ballet, formed the more serious basis of the programme. The symphony chosen was the C minor, No. 5, and it received a most satisfying interpretation, as did also the overtures —Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream" and Rossini's "Tell;" while in the Suite, Delibes's, "Sylvia," the band found further scope for a display of its capabilities. Mdlle. Warnots, who sang Mozart's "Non Paventar" and Gounod's "Mireille" Valse very charmingly, was the vocalist. Mr. Manns himself, of course, conducted.

At the second of these concerts a somewhat weak programme was presented to a larger audience even than attended the first concert. The band also, it is to be regretted, several times evinced a tendency to revert to its old faults, due, no doubt, to lack of adequate opportunities for rehearsal. The concert opened with a somewhat colourless work by a young Scotch composer, Mr. MacCunn, who, in this instance, has thrown his inspiration into the form of an overture, under the rather prolix and pretentious title of "Land of the Mountain and the Flood." The music strives, but not with any great success, to be national in its spirit and character; but apart from this it is difficult to detect any conspicuous indications of promise in the work, which, though it presents here and there some degree of cleverness in the writing, is, on the whole, weakly conceived and crudely scored. The symphony was Mendelssohn's "Scotch," which did not receive so delicate a handling as it is entitled to, and the remainder of the orchestral numbers were Liszt's "Les Préludes," Ponchielli's ballet "Dance of the Hours," and Raff's "Notturno," from the Italian suite, which was by far the most enjoyable work, both as regards its own merits and its mode of rendering, that was heard. Herr Carl Fuchs played two 'cello solos—Schumann's "Träumeri" and Popper's "Tarantella," the latter somewhat indifferently, and Miss Whitacre sang three songs, one of which was Mozart's "Mia Speranza," and during an encore produced great effect by some unusually good examples of rapid staccato vocalisation.

GLASGOW, TUESDAY, 17TH JANUARY.—At the concert given by the Choral Union last Saturday, 14th inst., the programme embraced Verdi's Overture, "Aroldo;" Schumann's "Symphony No. 4, D minor;" Rossini's Overture, "La Gazza Ladra;" Mackenzie's "Ballade for Orchestra." Mons. E. Gillett, as 'cellist, contributed two solos, for which he was recalled, "Air" (Bach), and "Bohemian Dance," by Casella. Miss Whitacre, who was slightly indisposed, sung Mozart's Aria, "Mia Speranza;" Randegger's "Marinella," and Denza's "Come to me," and, in response to an encore, a song by Mulde. The programme concluded with a magnificent performance of Wagner's overture to "Tannähuser." At the concert this evening, Madame Belle Cole will be the vocalist, and Herr Franz Rummel, solo pianist. Beethoven's Symphony in A, and Henselt's Pianoforte Concerto is announced.—E.J.R.B.

LIVERPOOL, Jan. 17.—Mr. Carl Rosa's seven weeks' opera season has commenced very auspiciously, and the support, so far, has equalled the most sanguine anticipations. The programme for the first week presented no strikingly novel features, and, save for the prominent position in the various casts accorded to Miss Fanny Moody, calls for no special mention. The new soprano has an excellent style, a thoroughly intelligent grasp of her roles, a clear and pleasing voice, and a distinctly superior method of enunciation; that her action is somewhat stiff and cold is only to be expected in so young an artist, and an occasional tendency to sing above the pitch needs careful watching. That she will ever become a soprano of the first rank can scarcely be looked for, but that she is a very valuable addition to Mr. Rosa's company is undeniable. Mr. Runcio, who succeeds Mr. Barton M'Guckin, save for his mechanical Italian method, proves thoroughly satisfying, though it is certainly to be regretted that native singers cannot be found. Opera in English is all very well, but when the English words are rendered unintelligible by defective pronunciation, it is difficult to see where the advantage over Italian or French libretti comes in. The opening night of the second week (Monday last), saw the first novelty of the season in the production of the oddly-compounded "Galatea." It will be remembered that this piece was produced in October last at Bristol, and that it has since been played on tour. In its original form, "Galatea" was one of Victor Massé's earliest works, and was produced as a two-act lever de rideau. To render it useful for Mr. Rosa's purposes it has been found necessary to extend the piece by the engrafting of an act culled from the same composer's "Cléopâtre," a somewhat later work. The result is hardly satisfying. The first and third acts, wherein the whole of the story is told, are placed in Pygmalion's Athenian studio, and the music throughout these portions is of the lightest, brightest, and most trivial description, the orchestration being especially pretty, flowing, and characterless. On the other hand, the second, or interpolated act, which is played in the groves of the Temple of Venus, is much heavier, has far more light and shade and distinct character, and is interesting from an orchestral, as well as a vocal, or rather a choral, point of view. The solo numbers, outside one or two florid and essentially suitable arias for Galatea, are not such as are likely to arouse much enthusiasm, but the choral and concerted pieces are exceedingly ingenious, and are full of pleasing variety and delicate fancies. The story has been done into English by Messrs. W. Grist and Frank Wyatt, and thoughout the whole range of lyric poetry, a branch of the divine art which, while capable of the highest and noblest treatment, has always been grossly abused in this country, it would be difficult to find a worse libretto, or one in which every canon of literary style has been so neglected. Not only is the humour of the piece of a class usually associated with that of a transpontine theatre farce, but every vestige of poetic fancy which the work may have possessed in the original French, has been rendered more than commonplace, and rhyme, rhythm, and accent have been tortured in a manner which must treble the difficulties of the singers. The climatic influences had so serious an effect upon one of the principal performers, Mr. F. H. Celli, as Pygmalion, that anything like a criticism of the performers as a whole would be unjust, but so far as the other principal character is concerned, it may at once be contended that nothing in the repertoire of Madame Marie Roze is more suitable to her vocal abilities, and herein, probably, appears Mr. Rosa's reason for the production of a work which we scarcely think he ever expected would become a lastingly prominent feature in his programme. The acting, moreover, of this lady was another striking feature in a performance by no means too full of interest. Anything more delightful, more picturesque, or more purely artistic than her awakening into life could scarcely be imagined. It is like the crystalization of a poet's dream, but the whole of the subtle inspiration of the moment is spoiled by the immediately following discovery by the vivified statue that she has an aching void, which is not want of love, but want of food. The other principal parts are filled by Mr. Payne Clarke, who, as Midas, sings acceptably, but spoils his impersonation by assuming the make-up of a Gorgon, and by Mr. John Child, who is quite satisfying as Ganymede. The mounting, save for one or two incongruities in the shape of a modern roof and modern curtains in the studio scene, was very charming, as was the dressing, while the strengthened orchestra did capitally under Mr. Goossens's tactical and essentially artistic guidance. The production, on a scale of considerable spectacular splendour, of "Masaniello" is the next important item in the programme for the season, and of this more may be said next week. The second half of the Philharmonic Society's season commenced on Tuesday last, the chief feature of this, the seventh concert, being Svendsen's Grand Symphony No. 2 in B flat, played for the first time here, and excellently, too, and a series of admirably executed piano soli by Mdlle. Janotha, whose performance created some enthusiasm. Miss Hope Glenn was the vocalist, and the chorus sang one or two minor items in an average manner. At the next concert, on the 29th inst., Mdlle Lablache will sing, and Herr Ondricek will play Beethoven's violin concerto in D, op. 61, while the symphony will be Spohr's "Power of Sound."—F.W.P.

LEEDS, Jan. 17.—After the period of stagnation in musical doings, which always occurs during Christmastide, the concert season was resumed on the 11th, by the fifth of Mr. Ford's "Popular Concerts," at which an interesting programme of chamber music, chiefly for combinations of wind instruments with pianoforte and strings, was performed by a company of capital artists. Beethoven's early, and not very characteristic quintet in E flat (op. 16), for pianoforte and wind, was finely played by Messrs. Franz Rummel, Dubrucq, C. Fawcett, T. E. Mann, and D. Lalande; whilst Hummel's favourite septet in D minor (op. 74) received a somewhat rough, but spirited, rendering at the hands of the same pianist, oboist, and horn-player, in conjunction with Messrs. Radcliff, Eckener, Giessing, and H. Dearlove. Mr. Rummel's very fine playing in these works deserves, however, especial notice, as does his masterly interpretation of Chopin's B flat minor Sonata, waltz. (op. 42) and Berceuse, (op. 57) and the second of Liszt's piquant and brilliant "Rhapsodies Hongroises." Mr. Radcliffe contributed a flute solo, and Mdlle. Antoinette Trebelli, several songs, which her pleasing and fresh voice, excellent style of vocalisation, and refreshing freedom from affectation, combined to render highly acceptable. In Handel's amusingly naïve air from "L'Allegro," "Sweet Bird," Mr. Radcliffe played the flute obbligato.

BATH, Jan. 18.—On Saturday evening the first of the English Popular Ballad Concerts, organised by Mr. Albert Visetti, took place at the Assembly Rooms. The programme opened with a grand duo for two pianofortes on "Bellisario," by Goria, capitally rendered by Miss Charlotte Davies and Mr. Visetti. Miss Davies was recalled for her pianoforte solo, (a) barcarolle, by Kendel, (b) valse in A flat, Chopin. She was associated with Herr Van Praag in Schubert's "Rondo Brillante" for piano and violin. Herr Van Praag's interpretation of Vieuxtemps's "Ballade and Polonaise" was appreciated, and he was obliged to return and bow his acknowledgment of the applause. Mr. S. Page—a pupil of Mr. Visetti's, possessing a tenor voice of both sweetness and power—gained hearty applause for his first song, "The Death of Nelson"; in the second part he sang a ballad by Allen, "Return and Stay," and in response to an encore substituted "Come into the Garden, Maud." Miss Lillian Egerton, soprano, also a pupil of Mr. Visetti's, delighted the audience by her rendering of Balfe's "I'm a merry Zingara," her verve and gaiety winning a deserved encore. She also sang Louis Diehl's pretty ballad, "Going to Market," in pleasing style. Miss Florence Hoskins, contralto, a student of the Royal College of Music, gave "Waiting," by Millward, with much expression. Her second song, "Sunshine and Rain," Blumenthal being encored, she gave instead the old ballad "Come, lasses and lads." The great attraction of the evening was Mr. Santley, who was heartily welcomed on ascending the platform. He sang the following ballads:—Tosti's "For Ever and Ever"; as an encore, "To Anthea"; "Christmas comes but once a year," by Ralph Betterton; encore, "Time was when love and I were well acquainted"; "The Vicar of Bray," with "Here's a health unto His Majesty." A most enjoyable concert was brought to a close by the Coronation March, Meyerbeer, played on two pianofortes by Miss Charlotte Davies and Mr. Albert Visetti. There was a fairly good room, and Mr. Visetti, who so ably accompanied the vocal items, is to be congratulated on the success of the first concert of the series. The next is announced for Feb. 18, with Madame Rose Hersee.

ENNISKILLEN.—Mr. Arnold's Fourth Matinée Musicale of classical music was given on January 13, in the Protestant Hall. The programme was as follows:—Trio, Pianoforte, Violin, and Viola, No. 2, Hatton (Lieut. Dundas, Mr. C. H. Arnold and Mr. M. Arnold); Solo Pianoforte March Funèbre, Chopin (Lieut. Dundas); Sonata, Violin and Pianoforte, (op. 21), Gade (Mr. Arnold and Son); Solo Pianoforte (a) Largo, op. 7, Beethoven, (b) Andante and Rondo, op. 14, Mendelssohn (Mr. Arnold); Trio, Pianoforte, Violin, and Viola, op. 97, Beethoven, Scherzo and Andante, (Mrs. and Miss Eunice Evens, and Mr. Arnold); Solo Pianoforte (a) Rondo, op. 24, Weber, (b) Sonata, op. 13, Beethoven, (Mr. C. Haydn Arnold); Sonata, Violin and Pianoforte, No. 5, Mozart, (Mr. Arnold and son); Duett Pianoforte, Nicolai, (Lieut. Dundas and Mr. Arnold).

AMERICAN.

NEW YORK, Jan. 7.—Weber's "Euryanthe" has attracted large audiences to the Metropolitan Opera House. Fräuleins Lehmann and Brandt were excellent as Euryanthe and Eglantine. Herr Alvary was Adolar, and made great efforts to do justice to the trying music, and Herr Fischer was even more successful in his part. "Siegfried" was repeated last week; Spontini's "Ferdinand Cortez" has followed, and next week, we are to have "Aida," with Fräulein Lehmann, and Herr Alvary, and Robinson. "The presentation of a silver table set, of the value of 2,500 dols., made by the stockholders of the Metropolitan Opera House to Mr. Edward C. Stanton," says Freund's Music and Drama" is a most appropriate recognition of the distinguished services which this gentleman has rendered since he took charge of that establishment, more than three years ago, The big building in which Mr. Abbey, with his disastrous Italian opera season, had just dropped something like 200,000 dollars, was then a very big white elephant, with which the owners did not know what to do. Thanks to Dr. Damrosch's enthusiastic efforts on behalf of musical art, and, even more, thanks to Mr. Stanton's admirable business tact and intelligence, the Metropolitan, under the latter's management, has become the greatest operatic establishment which this country has ever seen, and one worthy, in every respect, to hold its place by the side of the richly endowed organisations of the Old World. Not only the stockholders, but the New York public owe Mr. Stanton a debt of gratitude which can never be undervalued." While Madame Gerster is, for a time, withdrawn from public life, in the hope of recovering her voice, it is confidently expected by some very good authorities on the voice that a spell of rest will once again restore its tone and strength. Madame Gerster has always deliberately avoided singing Wagner, and has confined her vocal and dramatic powers to the stage of Italian opera, so that here, at least, the exploded prejudice in favour of Italian against German art, "for the sake of the singers," gains no support. In the meantime, Madame Ilma de Murzka has been induced to appear in the place of Madame Gerster, and with little success. There evidently is an evil genius that rules the destinies of the National Opera Company. Mr. Charles E. Locke, who accomplished a miracle in resuscitating the company after its disastrous failure last June, and made about six weeks ago a new start under most favourable conditions, has again come to grief. His two principal artists, Madame Fursch-Madi and Eloi Sylva, the tenor, have left him and arrived here last week, both with a claim of a couple of thousand dollars against the manager. Madame Fursch-Madi is very indignant and bitter in her denunciation of Mr. Locke According to her statement, the company started with 280 people, no money, but plenty of debts. The infuriated prima-donna declares that, notwithstanding the excellent business done in Philadelphia and Baltimore, salaries were only partly paid after the second week of the season.

OBITUARY.—During the last two months the deaths have been announced of W. J. Strugnell, double-bass player, and George Venables, of the South London Institute of Music.—At Berlin, Frau von Voggenhuber, an admired prima donna, member since 1868 of the Berlin Royal Opera, and the exponent of many important Wagnerian and other rôles.—At Paris, aged 73, Stephen Heller.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER'S
ROYAL IRISH CAMBRIC POCKET-HANDKERCHIEFS.
Samples and Price Lists Post Free.
Per doz.—Children's, 1s. 2d.; Ladies', 2s. 4½d.; Gents' 3s. 6d.
Hemstitched—Ladies', 2s. 11½d.; Gents', 4s. 11d.
——:0:——
BY APPOINTMENTS TO THE QUEEN AND TH CROWN PRINCESS OF GERMANY.
ROBINSON AND CLEAVER, BELFAST.

Dr. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.
For sore throat, hoarseness, and relaxed throat, also for improving the voice
FOR SINGING AND SPEAKING
without fatiguing the voice. Celebrated in every town in Europe, India, America, and the Colonies. Testimonials from Patti, Trebelli, Patey, Santley, and the most eminent medical men.
Sold in boxes; 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d.; also in bottles for abroad.

A BLESSING IN EVERY FAMILY.
HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.
These Remedies have stood the test of FIFTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE, and are pronounced the best medicines for family use. Tens of thousands of written testimonials bear witness to their marvellous curative properties. They are acknowledged by the whole civilised world to be the greatest efficacy in every form of disease.
Sold by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors.
Manufactured only at THOMAS HOLLOWAY'S ESTABLISHMENT,
78, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.
N.B.—Advice gratis at the above address, daily, between the hours of 11 and 4, or by letter

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL RECEIPTS EXCEED FIVE MILLIONS.
HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate possession and Rent to pay. Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY, 39, Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.
HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate possession, either for Building or Gardening purposes. Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY, as above.
The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, on application.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

GRATIS AND POST FREE
ALL SUFFERERS FROM RUPTURE should read Mr. C. B. HARNESS' Illustrated book on the Nature, Cause, and Successful Treatment of every form of HERNIA. It contains a full description of Harness' washable Xylonite Truss, which is the most perfect and comfortable appliance ever invented. This little book should be carefully read by every sufferer in the Kingdom. Don't delay!
WRITE TO-DAY.
Note Address—
MEDICAL BATTERY CO. Limited,
52, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.
Corner of Rathbone Place.

ASCHERBERG PIANOS.

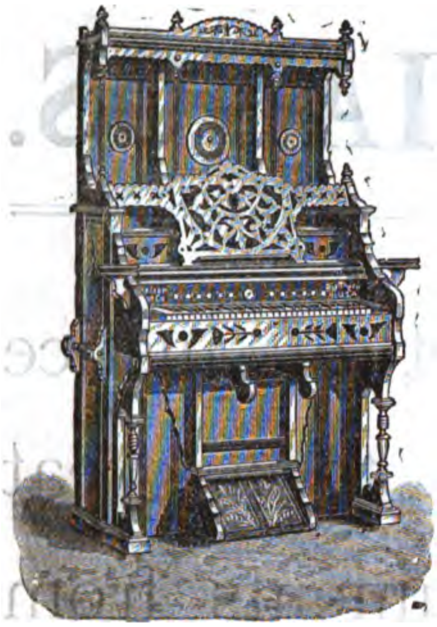
"I only perform an act of justice when I ascribe my successes to a great extent to the excellent Instruments from your factory, on which I was favoured to play before the public. Remain convinced that I shall at all times and everywhere give preference to your Pianos over all others, and accept the assurance of my unbounded esteem.

Respectfully,

VLADIMIR VON PACHMANN."

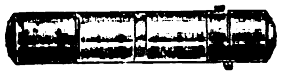
ASCHERBERG PIANO DEPOT,

211, REGENT STREET, W.



CARPENTER'S
ANGELUS ORGANS
CANNOT BE EQUALLED FOR
QUALITY OF TONE AND TOUCH. BEAUTY OF DESIGN. MODERATION IN PRICE.
Special styles for Church, Chapel, and School Pedal Organs with one or two manuals
HIGHLY RECOMMENDED BY THE PROFESSION.
Prices from £5 5s. to £262 10s.
HIRE PURCHASE OR LIBERAL DISCOUNT FOR CASH.
Illustrated Catalogues of Organs, Pinaos, and Harmoniums free by post.
SOLE EUROPEAN AGENTS:
JOHN C. MURDOCH and Co., Limited,
91 & 93, FARRINGDON ROAD, E.C., 247, UPPER STREET, HIGHBURY, N.
And GLASGOW, EDINBURGH, NEWCASTLE, SHIELDS, BIRMINGHAM, REDHILL, &c.

THORNHILL'S
NEW "GLOVE" BOTTLE.



FOR PERFUME & SMELLING SALTS.

Large Variety of Patterns at Various Prices

THORNHILL'S TOILET CASES FOR LADIES AND GENTLEMEN

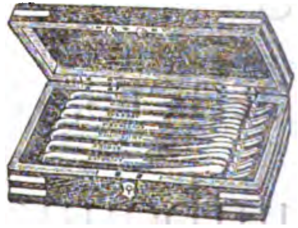
THORNHILL'S ARTISTIC FANS.
A LARGE and VARIED STOCK of the BEST QUALITY.

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.
—o—
THORNHILL'S
Fully Illustrated
CHRISTMAS LIST
OF
LATEST NOVELTIES
POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

THORNHILL'S
OPERA GLASSES

IN GREAT VARIETY.

THORNHILL'S
Guaranteed Razors Singly or in Se



W. THORNHILL & CO., TO THE QUEEN & ROYAL FAMILY. 144, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON. ESTABLISHED 1734.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER'S
LINEN COLLARS, CUFFS, AND SHIRTS.
Samples and Price Lists Post Free.

COLLARS—LADIES' 3-fold, from 3s. 6d. per doz. GENTS' 4-fold, 4s. 11d. to 5s. 11d. per doz.
CUFFS—For Ladies or Gentlemen, 5s. 11d. to 10s. 6d. per doz.
SHIRTS—Best quality Long Cloth, with 4-fold Linen Fronts 35s. 6d. per half-doz. (To measure, 2s. extra.)
N.B.—OLD SHIRTS made as good as new with best materials in Neckbands, Cuffs, and Fronts, for 14s. the half-doz.
ROBINSON AND CLEAVER, BELFAST.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE & RETAIL.
J. P. GUIVIER & CO.,
Manufacturers and Importers of all kinds of Strings
FOR
VIOLIN, VIOLA, CELLO, DOUBLE BASS, HARP,
ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO,
Have always in STOCK the Largest ASSORTMENT of any House in the World.
6, GOLDEN SQUARE, W.

Printed and Published by MACRAE, CURTICE & Co. (LIMITED), 12, Catherine Street, Strand, W.C.

WEEKLY.]

The Musical World.

ESTABLISHED 1822.
REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED; IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST WEEKLY, 17/6 PER ANNUM (Payable in advance).

VOL. 67.—No. 5. SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1888. PRICE {3D. Unstamped. 4D. By Post.

THE
KARN AMERICAN ORGANS,

Manufactured by D. W. KARN & CO.,
WOODSTOCK, ONTARIO, CANADA.

The Karn Organ is a reproduction of the Pipe Organ in miniature, of pre-eminent value as an effective music exponent for the Home.

OUR AIM has not been to see how cheaply an organ can be built, BUT HOW CHEAPLY A FIRST-CLASS ORGAN can be made.

OUR CLAIM is that we are building organs equal to, if not surpassing, all others, at the very lowest reasonable prices.

COMPARISON CHEERFULLY INVITED.

New Illustrated Catalogue & Price Lists Free of the
SOLE EUROPEAN AGENTS:
THE SCHREIBER PIANO CO.,
18, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W.

NOW READY FOR 1888.

The Musical Directory Annual and Almanack. Contents: The names and addresses of Professors & Traders in London & Great Britain, arranged in Alphabetical order, the latter under each town. List of new copyright music published during the past year. The principal Concerts given by Musical Societies and others in London and the provinces, &c., &c.

Price—In paper cover, by Post, 3s. 3d.,
Crimson Cloth, 4s. 3d.

Rudall Carte & Co., 23, Berners Street, London.

The Professional Pocket Book and Daily and Hourly Engagement Diary, published according to the plan of the late Sir Julius Benedict, containing spaces for appointments, lessons, &c., being invaluable to those who give lessons, or have many engagements. Principal concerts, meetings, and general information.

Price—In Roan Case, by Post, 3s 2d,
In Russian Leather, 6s. 2d

Rudall Carte & Co., 23, Berners Street, London.

Special Notices.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

THE SATURDAY CONCERTS will be resumed on FEBRUARY 11.
Vocalist:
Mr. SIMS REEVES.
Violin:
Herr FRANZ ONDRICEK.
Conductor:—Mr. AUGUSTUS MANNS.
Seats from 6d. to 2s. 6d.
Admission to Palace Daily, One Shilling, except Saturday, February 11, when Admission will be 2s. 6d. before Five; 1s. after.

THE LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERTS. — Mr. HENSCHEL, Conductor.—Twelfth CONCERT, THURSDAY EVENING Next, Feb. 7th, ST. JAMES'S HALL, at 8.30.—Programme.—Symphony No. 3 in E flat, op. 55 (Eroica) (Beethoven); Prelude and Finale (Vorspiel and Isolden's Liebestod) from "Tristan and Isolde;" (Wagner, died Feb. 13, 1883) "Siegfried Idyll" (Wagner); Prelude to "Parsifal" (Wagner); "Kaisirmarsch" (Wagner). Reserved Seats, 10s. 6d., 7s. 6d., and 4s. Admission, 1s. At Austin's Office, St. James's Hall, and usual agents.—N. Vert, 6, Cork Street, W.

MR. and MRS. HENSCHEL'S VOCAL RECITALS.—The SECOND RECITAL will take place on Wednesday afternoon next, Feb. 8th, Prince's Hall, at 3. The THIRD RECITAL, Wednesday afternoon, Feb. 22nd, at 3. Tickets, 7s. 6d., 3s., and 1s., at the Hall and usual agents. —N. Vert, 6, Cork-street, W.

M. PRADEAU'S FOURTH SCHUMANN RECITAL, at Prince's Hall. Tuesday afternoon next, February 7th, at 3 o'clock. Programme:—Sonata in F minor, op. 14, Kreissleriana, op. 16, eight pieces; Toccata, op. 7; Forest scenes, op. 82; Toaumesevirren, from op. 12; Novellettes, op. 21, Nos. 6 and 7. Stalls (reserved), 10s. 6d.; balcony, 5s.; admission, 2s. 6d., at Austin's office, St. James's Hall, and usual agents.—N. Vert, 6, Cork Street, W.

MADAME DE PACHMANN will give a PIANOFORTE RECITAL at Prince's Hall, Picadilly, on Monday afternoon next, Feb. 6, at 3 o'clock. Programme:—Sonata in F minor, op. 5 (Brahms); Impromptu Elégiaque, op. 90, No. 3 (Schubert); Rondo a' bapriccio, op. 129 (Beethoven); "Thème et Variation" and "Rêverie du Lac" (Margaret de Pachmann); two Etudes, and Andante Spianato and Grande Polonaise, op. 22 (Chopin); "Tarantelle" (J. F. Barnett); "Pensez un pen á moi" and "Si oiseau Jétais (Henselt); "Au bord d'une Source" (Liszt); "Etude en forme de Valse" (Saint-Saëns). Stalls, 7s. 6d.; balcony, 3s.; admission, 1s., at Austin's office, St. James's Hall, and usual agents.—N. Vert, 6, Cork Street, W.

THE FRASER QUINTET. Misses Violet (Vocalist), Ida, and Ethel (Pianist, Violoncello, and Viola), Mabel and Stella Violinists), play Quartets, Solos, Duets, two Pianofortes, &c. For Engagements, for Concerts, "At Homes," Dinner and Garden Parties.—Address: 121, Adelaide Road, N.W.

DRURY LANE.—Augustus Harris, Lessee and Manager.—TWICE DAILY, at 1.30 and 7.30. Augustus Harris's Ninth Annual Pantomime.

PUSS IN BOOTS, at DRURY LANE.

DRURY LANE.—PUSS IN BOOTS.—Mesdames Wadman, Lettie Lind, Marie Williams, Jenny Dawson, Leslie Bell, Lily Miska, Violet Newham, Minnie Inch, Helen Capet, Florrence Graham, Mabel Coates, Marguerite Etoile, Millie Vere, Charlotte Elworthy, Alice Hammack, Bettina de Sortis (Premiere Danseuse); Messrs. Harry Nichols, Herbert Campbell Lionel Rignold, Charles Danby, Charles Lauri, jun., Reuben Inch, J. B. Gordon, Griffiths Brothers, Harry Payne (clown).—Box office open daily from ten to six.

Institutes and Colleges.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, KENSINGTON GORE, LONDON, S.W.

Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.

President - - H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES, K.G.
Director - - Sir GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L., LL. D.

Next College Concert, February 9th, at 7.30 p.m.

The Half-Term will commence on February 13th.

Associate Examination—

The Examination for 1888 is fixed for April 16th. Last day for receiving applications, March 6th.

Forms and particulars may be obtained from the Registrar, Mr. GEORGE WATSON, at the College.

CHARLES MORLEY, Honorary Secretary.

UNIVERSITY OF TRINITY COLLEGE, TORONTO. (The Church of England University of Upper Canada.)

FACULTY OF MUSIC.

The next Examinations for the degree of Bachelor of Music will be held simultaneously in Toronto and London in Easter week, 1888. Women are admissable to these examinations. For particulars apply to Rev. E. K. Kendal, D.C.L., Registrar for England, Southsea.

TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON. For MUSICAL EDUCATION and EXAMINATION, &c., and for the Granting of Certificates and Diplomas in Music. Inst. 1872.

President - - The EARL of ABERDEEN.

THE ANNUAL DINNER will take place at the Holborn Restaurant, on Monday, February 13th, at 7 o'clock, with the Right Hon. the Earl of Aberdeen, in the chair.

THE NEXT STUDENTS' INVITATION CONCERT will take place on Tuesday evening, February 7th, at 8 o'clock

THE HIGHER EXAMINATIONS for Diplomas and Special Certificates are held in January and July, the Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge in June and December, and Local Examinations in Instrumental and Vocal Music during the year at various centres, on dates to be learned on application.

Tickets, regulations, lists of centres, &c., can be had from the Secretary, Trinity College, London, W.

By Order of the Academical Board.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, W.

ACADEMY for the HIGHER DEVELOPMENT of PIANOFORTE PLAYING. 12, Hinde Street, Manchester Square, W. (Established 1873.)

President - - - - - - FRANKLIN TAYLOR.
Director - - - - - - OSCAR BERINGER.

Christmas Term commenced October 3. Entrance Day, October 1, from ten to five. Fee: Six Guineas. The Academy is for Amateur and Professional Students. Two Pianoforte and One Harmony Lessons weekly. For prospectus and all particulars apply to the Director.

GUILD OF ORGANISTS, 35, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C.

Patron—The Right Rev. THE LORD BISHOP OF LONDON.

PRESIDENTS.

The REV. CANON SIR F. H. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., Mus. Doc.
Sir HERBERT OAKELEY, Bart., Mus. Doc.
Sir ROBERT STEWART, Mus. Doc.
Vice-President—WILLIAM PINNEY, Mus. Bac., Oxon.
Warden—CHARLES VINCENT, Mus. Doc., Oxon.

Established to advance the cause of Church music and the truest interests of its Professors, etc.

Members of the Church of England and Ireland, and the Episcopal Church of Scotland, are eligible for election. Subscription: Professional Organists (Associates) 10s. 6d. per annum; Amateurs (Members) 15s. per annum; Life subscription, 5 guineas.

Next Fellowship examination in Easter Week.

Prospectus and further particulars may be obtained from the Hon. Sec., Dr. J. H. Lewis, Staines, Middlesex.

ACCOMPANIST Wanted by Vocalist for Daily Practice, Near Willesden Junction.—State terms and particulars to Crotchet, 12, College Park Terrace, Harrow Road, W.

FOR TRANSFER.—The goodwill and connection of a School of Music, established eight years, under distinguished patronage, in an important city about one hundred miles from London. Immediate possession. Terms of transfer very moderate.—Apply, B. A., MUSICAL WORLD Office.

London Organ School and International College of Music.

Established 1865, by the Rev. SCOTSON CLARK, Mus.B.

Patron—His Grace The ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY.

Principal—HENRY CLARK.

THE NEXT STUDENTS' MATINEE MUSICALE will take place on SATURDAY, February 11th.

Piano, Singing, Violin, 'Cello, Flute, Harp, Organ Lessons, with Practice, and Harmony. Private Lessons and Classes.

Candidates for Musical Degrees at any of the English Universities are expressly prepared for the Matriculation Examinations by Oxford and Cambridge graduates (in honours). Branches at Kensington and St. John's Wood.

Apply to the Director of Classes, T. H. Y. TROTTER, M.A., Mus.Bac., Oxon., 3, Princes Street, Cavendish Square, W. (close to Oxford Circus).

Publishers' Announcements.

"BIRD RAPTURES,"

Song (for Soprano).
WORDS BY CHRISTINA G. ROSETTI.
Music (G) MOIR CLARK.

PRESS OPINIONS.

"'Bird Raptures' is a song of exceptional merit. The accompaniment plays an important part, and contains several original charming effects."—THE MUSICAL WORLD, June 11, 1887.

"One of the most earnest and beautiful songs that has appeared for many a long day."—Musical Standard, Dec. 23, 1887.

"When the public can appreciate a song like this, the trade of the vulgar ballad-monger will be gone."—Musical Review, December, 1887.

BY THE SAME COMPOSER,

"BAUVA,"

Four Sketches for Pianoforte Duet.

"Admirably written, and marked by an originality which will recommend them to pianists of culture."—THE MUSICAL WORLD, June 11, 1887.

STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER AND CO., 84, New Bond Street, W.

Under the Sanction and Approval of the Rev. Sir FREDERICK A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., M.A., Mus. Doc., and of Sir G. A. MACFARREN, Mus. Doc.

THE MUSICIAN:

GUIDE FOR PIANOFORTE STUDENTS,

By RIDLEY PRENTICE.

CONTAINS ANALYSES OF WELL-KNOWN PIECES PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED, ENABLING THE PUPIL TO UNITE A STUDY OF MUSICAL FORM WITH THE ORDINARY PIANOFORTE PRACTICE.

Saturday Review.—"We are far from suggesting that there is any royal road for acquiring technical knowledge, but we are quite certain Mr. Ridley Prentice's road is in every way the pleasantest that has yet been laid before any pianoforte student."

Academy.—"A knowledge of form is imparted in simple and pleasant language. We heartily commend it to all who desire to understand, satisfactorily interpret, and enjoy beautiful music."

Graphic.—"Written with the laudable purpose of helping the pianoforte student to understand and enjoy beautiful music."

School Board Chronicle.—"A useful book for earnest teachers."

Musical Review.—"Mr. Ridley Prentice has newly developed an important though much neglected branch of the teacher's duties."

Monthly Musical Record.—"No more valuable work of the kind is in existence."

W. SWAN SONNENSCHEIN & CO., PATERNOSTER SQUARE:

And all Book and Music Sellers.

TO ORGANISTS.—For Professional Practice, Teaching, or Concert purpose, and Home use, the "Bach Model" Pedal Instrument is only reliable substitute for a pipe organ. For design, improved action, connections, and tone, it embraces the merits of the highest class instruments; and without paying an exorbitant price you may have an instrument with organ measurements that removes the deficiencies hitherto experienced in pedal instruments.—Apply for illustrated lists, terms, and prices, to J. L. Scholefield, Musical Instrument Manufacturer, Huddersfield.

ORGAN FOR SALE.—Superior; second hand; two manuals thirteen stops; separate pedal organ.—Apply, Maley, Young, and Co., 125, York-road, N.

NOW Published for Piano, "Air de Ballet," composed by Mr. Edgar Barker, of Bradford. Published by Phillips and Page, 43, Kilburn High Road, London, N.W.

TO ORGAN STUDENTS.—For Sale, a perfect set of Dyer's Organ Pedals and action for attaching to Piano. Almost new. Price, with stool (polished), blocks, and foot rest, packed, £4 7s. 6d.—Davies, Aysgarth, Bedale, Yorks.

Professional Cards.

The subscription for a "card" space in these columns is £1 10s. for six months, and £1 per quarter—payable in advance, including copy of the paper each week. Subscriptions should be sent to the office of The Musical World 12, Catherine Street, Strand, London, W.C.

Conductors and Composers.

Mr. FREDERIC H. COWEN,
73, Hamilton Terrace,
St. John's Wood, N.W.

Mr. WILHELM GANZ
(Professor of the Pianoforte, Composer, and Conductor),
126, Harley Street, W.

Mr. F. KILVINGTON HATTERSLEY,
A.R.A.M.
(Professor of the Pianoforte, Composer, and Conductor),
17, Finsbury Park Villas,
Green Lanes, N.

Mr. ALBERT VISETTI
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Conductor),
12, Westbourne Park Terrace, W.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN
(Guitar, Concertina, and Gigelira. Wood and Straw Instrument),
22a, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W.

Mr. F. St. JOHN LACY
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Vocalist (baritone),
Fitzroy Mansion, Charlotte Street,
Fitzroy Square, W.

Mr. H. MARTYN VAN LENNEP
(Teacher of Singing, Composer, and Conductor),
Address—7, Wimpole Street,
Cavendish Square, W.

Mr. G. ARTHUR HIGGS, F.C.O.
L. Mus. and Tallis Gold Medallist. T.C.L. Pupil of Mr. Albert Visetti. Teacher of Singing, Harmony, Conductor, and Vocalist. (Baritone.)
Address—Trinity College, London, W.

Vocalists—Sopranos.

Madame VALLERIA
(Opera and Concerts),
Bosworth House, Husband's Bosworth,
Rugby.

Miss EDITH DESMOND
(Opera and Concerts),
c/o Nolan & Jackson.

Miss KATE FLINN
(Concerts and Oratorios),
41, Welbeck Street,
Cavendish Square, W.

Mdlle. VELMI
(Opera and Concerts),
7, Chesilton Road, Munster Park,
Fulham, S.W.

Miss AGNES LARKCOM
Has removed to
158, Portsdown Road, W.

Madame ISABEL GEORGE, L.R.A.M.
(Concert and Oratorio),
29, Albany Street, Regent's Park, N.W.

Contraltos.

Miss JOSEPHINE CRAVINO
(Concerts and Oratorio),
2, Sedgmoor Villas,
Private Lessons given. Camberwell, S.E.

Miss MARY E. DAKIN, R.A.M.
(Mez. Sop.),
(Ballads, Oratorio, &c.)
31, Monmouth Road,
Bayswater, London, W.

Miss LENA LITTLE
(Concerts),
42, Norfolk Square, Hyde Park, W.

Contraltos.—Continued.

Miss PATTIE MICHIE,
68, Park Walk, Fulham Road,
London, S.W.

Madame OSCAR POLLACK
(Concerts),
56, Duchess Road,
Edgbaston, Birmingham.

Tenors.

Mr. BARTON McGUCKIN
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. Alfred Moul,
26, Old Bond Street, W.,
Or, 270, Elgin Avenue, Maida Vale, W.

Mr. ARNOLD BREEDEN
(Concerts, Oratorio, and Opera),
Address—N. Vert, Esq.,
6, Cork Street, W.

Mr. SEYMOUR JACKSON
(Concerts and Oratorio),
Old Trafford, Manchester.

Mr. PAYNE CLARKE
(Concerts and Oratorio),
28, Devonshire Street, Islington, N.

Mr. J. DALGETY HENDERSON,
Gothic Lodge,
Lordship Lane, S.E.

Mr. REDFERN HOLLINS,
30, St. Stephen's Avenue,
Shepherd's Bush, W.

Mr. BERNARD LANE,
60, Westbourne Park Villas, W.

Chevalier EDWARD SCOVEL
(Opera, Concerts, and Oratorio),
Hotel de L'Europe,
Milan, Italy.

Mr. W. ESMOND,
24, Upper Mount Street, Dublin.

Baritones.

Mr. WALTER CLIFFORD
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concerts),
c/o N. Vert, Esq.,
6, Cork Street, W.

Mr. FREDERIC KING
(Concerts and Oratorio),
19, Canfield Gardens, S. Hampstead.

Mr. NORRIS CROKER,
Egremont, Croxted Road,
West Dulwich, S.E.

Mr. JOSEPH LYNDE
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concerts),
63, Stafford Place,
Buckingham Gate, S.W.

Mr. ALBERT REAKES
(Bass-Baritone, of the "London Ballad Singers," Oratorios, Concerts, &c.),
30, Lancaster Road,
Notting Hill, W.

Herr RAGNAR GREVILLIUS
(Concerts, Oratorio, and Opera),
70, Portsdown Road, Maida Vale, W.

Bass.

Mr. WATKIN MILLS requests that in future all communications respecting Concerts, &c., be addressed to his residence, Huntcliffe, Bexley, Kent.

Mr. FRANK CELLI
(Concerts and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. N. Vert, 6, Cork St.,
Burlington Gardens, W.

Trumpet and Cornet.

Mr. THOMAS HARPER,
185, King's Road, N.W

Pianoforte.

Mr. G. PRADEAU
(Lessons and Recitals),
1, Stowe Road,
Shepherd's Bush, W.

Guitar.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN, Guitariste, Instructress to H.R.H. the Princess Louise, has returned to town, 22a, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W., where may be had her celebrated book, "Learning the Guitar Simplified," 10s. 6d.

Violin.

Mr. ALLAN CAMPBELL
(Formerly Pupil of Mr. Henry Holmes and Dr. S. S. Wesley),
23, Thicket Road,
Pupils visited and received. Anerley, S.E.

Mr. JULES KOOPMAN
(Late Professor at Conservatoire Groningen. Lessons, Concerts, and Private Soirées),
109, Sutherland Gardens, W.,
Or, Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co.,
84, New Bond Street, W.

Mr. LESLIE CROTTY and
Madame GEORGINA BURNS,
c/o Mr. Alfred Moul (sole agent),
26, Old Bond Street, W.

Miss AGNES JANSON requests that all communications respecting engagements may be sent to her new address, 34a, Gloucester Place, Portman Square, W.; or to Mr. N. Vert, 6, Cork Street, W.

MR. HEALEY'S SPECIAL LIST.

Madame LILIAN NORDICA (Soprano)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert),
Address to
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mdlle. LOUISE LABLACHE (Mez. Sop.)
(Opera and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W

Mdlle. HELENE HASTREITER (Contr.)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert)
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Madame BELLE COLE (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. JOHN PROBERT (Tenor)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. VAUGHAN EDWARDES (Baritone)
(Concerts and Oratorio),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. MULES BROWN (Baritone)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. HENRY POPE (Bass)
(Opera, Concerts, and Oratorio),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. T. L. CAMPION (Bass)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. WILLIAM NICHOLL,
28, Belsize Road, N.W.,
Or, Sole Agent, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES.

Public Speakers and Singers

Can use "Brown's Bronchial Troches" as freely as requisite, containing nothing that can injure the system. They are invaluable in allaying the hoarseness and irritation incident to vocal exertion, effectually Clearing and Strengthening the Voice.

"They seem to act specially on the organs of the voice, and produce a clear enunciation."—MARIE ROZE-MAPLESON.

Ask. for and obtain only "Brown's Bronchial Troches" Sold everywhere at 1s. 1½d a box.

ORGANISTS AND ORGAN STUDENTS.

You are kindly requested to write for Ainsworth's "New Patent Organ Pedal Combination List." Ainsworth's "New Patent" is perfectly unique and may be combined easily with any Piano. It is the only one which may be safely combined with any Piano without deteriorating the instrument. Having put down at my works two engines and machinery of the most desirable kind, I am now supplying my goods at a price which enables every organist and organ student to have always ready for use in his Studio an

ORGAN PEDAL PIANO,

AFFORDING PERFECTLY UNIQUE PEDAL PRACTICE.

34, Sheen Park, Richmond.

DEAR SIR,—I have deferred writing to comment upon your Pedals and Action now attached to my pianoforte until I could satisfy myself of their utility and efficiency. I can now conscientiously say that they more than fulfil all my anticipations. Although I am no carpenter, aided by your lucid diagram I had little difficulty in attaching them myself, and it is impossible to over-estimate the comfort they give to me or to conceive the saving of time one experiences in one's own room.—Believe me, yours truly,

BURNHAM HORNER, F.R. Hist.S.

To Mr. Mr. Ainsworth.

DEAR SIR,—It gives me great pleasure to bear testimony to the perfection of your Invention. I am more than satisfied with your Patent Action and Organ Pedals, and consider them worth double the money. Organists and organ students who desire to improve in the Art of Pedalling, which is so essential to a good organist, will do well to procure a set. I have seen no Action half so effective, and one can sit at the Piano and play, "Fixed in his everlasting seat," or any other organ music, or organ arrangement with the greatest pleasure. The touch of pedals could not be better, and the action is as you say, "Absolutely free from annoyances." They cannot be too highly recommended, as by their use, rapid progress is certain.—Believe me, sincerely yours,

I. B. Thornton,
Organist, Birstall, Leeds.

Cologne, July 16th, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have much pleasure in informing you that your Pedals have given the fullest satisfaction. I have them combined with my practice Piano. Many of my musical friends who have seen them, as well as my organ pupils, are quite delighted with them; and I must acknowledge that I have never met with any Pedals so noiseless and pleasant to play upon as yours. The Action I consider durable, and of very good workmanship. Every organist who desires to perfect his playing will welcome your invention. I can recommend your goods in every respect.—Yours truly,

HERR J. RODENKIRCHEN.
To John Ainsworth, Esq. Organist, The Cathedral, Cologne, Germany.

TOOLS.—In order to facilite the attachment, a complete set of tools are sent (four in number) each one marked for its particular use. By the use of these tools, and following carefully the directions, ANY ONE can make a really good attachment.

On Receipt of Trade or Professional Card, you will receive List, with Liberal Terms.

AINSWORTH'S PATENT ORGAN COMBINATION WORKS
BRINSCALL, CHORLEY.

Facts and Comments.

By the death of Mr. Henry John Parry, late a member of the well-known firm of Messrs. Ashdown and Parry, the music-publishing trade loses one of its best-known members. The house was first established by Wessell, more than sixty years ago, who won renown as the introducer of much of the music of Stephen Heller, Liszt, and Chopin. The original founder retired in 1860, transferring his business to Messrs. Edwin Ashdown and H. J. Parry, who had long been his managers. Mr. Parry retired from the business six years ago, leaving Mr. Edwin Ashdown as the sole representative of the firm.

A paragraph, originally copied, we believe, from the Athenæum, has gone the round of the papers, according to which the English version of the "Correspondence between Wagner and Liszt," to be published by Messrs. Grevil and Co., of King Street, Covent Garden, will be "edited" by Dr. Francis Hueffer. The information is in the main correct, but it will not be a case of editing, but merely of literal translation, without the omission or change of a single comma. The translator will, however, contribute a preface to the volumes.

The plans for the Victoria Concert Hall, Regent Street, have been approved by the Metropolitan Board of Works, and it is expected that the hall will be opened early next autumn. The great hall is calculated to seat 3,500, with an orchestra for 700 performers, and there will also be a minor hall capable of seating 1,000 persons. The building will be lighted throughout by electricity, and there will be no less than five separate exits into the street. The architects are Messrs. T. E. Knightley and Phipps. We understand that Mr. A. Bevan will be appointed managing director.

This is Mr. Haweis's cock that crowed in the morn,
And woke Mrs. Helen Ratcliff all forlorn.

Such should have been the device of the interesting legal battle fought before Mr. D'Eyncourt at the Westminster Police Court last week. The defendant, the Rev. H. R. Haweis, it should be known, inhabits 16, Cheyne Walk, formerly the residence of Rossetti, the painter; and Mrs. Ratcliffe, the widow of Colonel Ratcliffe, abides close by, at No. 3, Cheyne Gardens. Mr. Haweis, it appears, keeps an obstreperous fowl which, as lately as Jan. 23, greeted the rising sun no less than 28 times between six and half-past.

Mr. Haweis, in his predilection for crowing cocks, is evidently influenced by the local traditions of the place. Everyone knows the story of poor Carlyle, in his historic house in Cheyne Row, having his morning slumber disturbed by similar causes, and how he replied to the fowl-owner—a female in his case—who said that the singing of her bird was both melodious and intermittent: "Ah, madam, but you don't know what it is to be waiting for the crowing of that cock!"

Mrs. Ratcliff proved less pliable than the irate philosopher. To Mr. Haweis's polite suggestion that he would allow her gardener to construct a fowl coop in any part of his garden, she replied by a lawyer's letter. The witnesses called on both sides differed, as witnesses and doctors are apt to differ. Some neighbours complained, others—ladies—who one would like to think "sit under" Mr. Haweis, declared that "they rather liked it," a remark which was received with great laughter in court.

The legal pleading which ensued showed, although in a negative way, how useful a certain acquaintance with polite literature may be to the advocate. Mr. Elliott, Mrs. Ratcliffe's representative, appealed to the feelings of Mr. Haweis as a clergyman. He would have had a much stronger argument if he had been aware that that gentleman is the author of "Music and Morals." He might have pointed out that to keep one's neighbours from their natural rest was distinctly immoral, and that the crow of a cock was the reverse of musical; which latter statement Mr. Haweis, in his turn, might have controverted by citing so illustrious a precedent as Bach's Passion music. All this never struck the lawyer, and a splendid chance was lost.

On Tuesday, February 28 next, Dr. Bradford's oratorio "Judith" is to be performed at St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, under the direction of the composer, for the first time in London, with a band and chorus of three hundred performers, Miss Anna Williams, Miss Hope Glenn, Mr. C. Banks, Mr.

Lawrence Fryer, Mr. Frederic King, and Mr. Brereton taking the principal solo parts, with Mr. Stedman's choir-boys for the Angels' Chorus, Mr. E. H. Turpin presiding at the organ. We understand that the proceeds are to be devoted to the organ fund of the Royal Naval School, and that the performance is under the patronage of the Duke of Edinburgh, the Earl of Clanwilliam, Lord Lewisham, the Rev. Sir Frederick A. Gore-Ouseley, Sir Arthur Sullivan, Sir George Elvey, and others.

A new "Singing Manual" is announced, founded on the systems of Crevelli, Novello, Garcia, Lablache and Ferrari of the older Italian school, and Schira and Negri of the more modern, from the two latter of whom the author has received instruction on the cultivation of the voice. The author, Mr. Fearnside, was a chorister in Norwich Cathedral in 1848, and afterwards articled to Dr. Buck, the organist, who in his time was justly considered one of the best teachers in the kingdom.

The Academical Board of Trinity College, London, has just elected James Shaw-Ford to an Organ Exhibition, Herbert Goom to a Violin Exhibition, and awarded the Maybrick Prize for Ballad Singing, to Maria Arabella Bowley, and the Pianoforte Accompaniment Prize to Edith Amy Sullivan.

At an ordinary meeting of the Birmingham and Midland Municipal Guild, which will be held this evening, Mr. Thos. Casson, of Denbigh, delivers a lecture on his organ-building reform. The synopsis of the lecture includes the discussion of the mistake made in bringing forward mere details, while leaving untouched serious defects of principle: the organ basses; the advantages and defects of the long manuals; the advantages and defects of the C C manual; the theory of the pedal organ; the C C organ abroad; manual organs; the unnecessary multiplication of claviers and consequent enormous complication of couplers, and other matters for interest to the organ world.

M. Saint-Saëns has left Paris for Algiers to finish his score of "Benvenuto Cellini," which he has promised the Grand Opéra for the end of August. He must be a bold man to touch a subject adorned by Berlioz—not Berlioz at his best, it is true. Ambroise Thomas, also, has left the noise and the madding crowd of Paris for the quietude of his little villa at Hyères. He is bent upon a ballet on the subject of "The Tempest," also destined for the Grand Opéra, without losing sight of a new opera "Circe," which M. Paravey has commissioned for the Opéra Comique.

We regret to hear of the death of M. Charles Schœnmehl. Born in Paris 15th March, 1855, he showed in his childhood strong musical faculties. He received musical instruction from MM. Pasdeloup, Deslandes, and Ch. Vervoitte (the General Inspector of Musical Instruction in France). His fine soprano voice created a sensation in Paris; and when at Monseigneur de Segur's house, young Schœnmehl made the acquaintance of Charles Gounod, whose melodious style of composing had great influence on the development of M. Schœnmehl's talent. Napoleon III. having heard of Charles Schœnmehl, bade him to the Tuileries, where he sang to the Emperor, and was thenceforward attached to the Imperial House. He came to England, and wrote compositions which have been much appreciated at concerts and in drawing-rooms. Madame Adelina Patti was especially delighted with an Ave Maria which Schœnmehl composed for her. One day, after having conducted his "A la France," performed by the orchestra of the Alexandra Palace, he caught cold in hurrying to another concert engagement, and, neglecting this cold, it reached his lungs. He was advised by his doctor to go to Australia, where he died, at Heidelberg, a country seat near Melbourne.

M. Gounod started last Saturday for Nantes, where he will conduct the last rehearsals of a concert which was to take place on the 3rd of this month. A grand banquet will be given in honour of the occasion, and the representatives of the local press are already invited.

Madame Kastner, the widow of the well-known musical savant, has bequeathed to the Académie Française the sum of 55,000 francs for the foundation of various prizes.

The following new works were performed for the first time at the Paris classical concerts last Sunday. "Viviane," poème symphonique by E. Chausson (at Lamoureux's concert); "Didon," scène dramatique, by G. Charpentier (at Colonne's concert), and E. Lalo's Rapsodie Norvégienne (at the Conservatoire).

English audiences are said to be omnivorous in the matter of music, but what are they compared with the public of Milan? where, the other night, Goldmark's "Queen of Sheba' without cuts, was followed by the ballet "Excelsior," the entertainment lasting from eight o'clock one evening until half-past two next morning.

Little Miss Nikita is doing wonders in Germany, and, remembering her performances at the Promenade Concerts, one reads with a smile the raptures with which the grave German critics record her earnestness, her artistic spirit, and the like. Even more enthusiastic than the critics are the bards, foremost amongst them Bodenstedt, the author of the "Songs of Mirza Shaffy," set to delightful music by Rubinstein, who by this time must have reached the reflective age of three score or thereabouts. Fancy Tennyson writing to a little chit of a girl,

> Where poetry joins with the vocal art,
> There must my heart make concord with thy heart.

But the Germans have no more sense of humour than the Scotch are supposed to have.

The creation, by an Imperial ukase, of M. Anton Rubinstein a member of the Council of State, with the title of "Excellency," is only another sign of the honour in which the distinguished pianist and composer is held, unlike most prophets, in his own country. Already M. Rubinstein holds a patent of nobility, and has been decorated with the famous order of Vladimir. The new dignity is, however, probably unique, for, although it is far from unusual to recognise distinction in music by the award of the Legion of Honour in France at least, the high dignity conferred on the Bessarabian pianist is without a parallel. The honour is tantamount to electing a great English musician a member of the Privy Council.

Two new fires have to be added to the incendiary record of recent times. Madrid, on Jan. 30, narrowly escaped a disaster which would in all probability have involved a very serious loss of life. An old theatre in one of the most populous quarters was entirely destroyed by fire after the conclusion of the performance on Friday night. The Variedades Theatre was one of the numerous low-priced houses in Madrid, and was always densely crowded. It was built more than 50 years ago, and a large amount of wood having been used in the construction, it burned like tinder. Though much has been done lately to improve the theatres of Madrid, in deference to the universal demand for greater safety in places of entertainment, little or nothing had been done to this, and, considering the extreme narrowness of the passages and the long distance to be traversed from the auditorium to the street, it is not difficult to perceive that a frightful catastrophe must almost certainly have occurred had the fire broken out while the audience was in the house. Several of the surrounding houses have been wholly or partially destroyed.

The American papers report the destruction of Cain's

Winter Garden Variety Theatre, in Steubenville, Ohio, and the burning to death of Miss Annie Devoe, a variety actress. The fire broke out about five o'clock on the afternoon of the 16th ult., just after rehearsal. It originated on the stage, and the scenery was soon in a blaze. Cain's Hotel was situated immediately in front of the theatre, and to this the flames soon spread. The performers, who were to appear that night, were quartered in the hotel, and it was with the greatest difficulty that they succeeded in making their escape from the latter building. The theatre was almost completely destroyed, but the hotel was only partially burned. Miss Annie Devoe, one of the leading actresses, could not escape from the hotel, in one of the rooms of which her charred remains were found after the fire had been put out.

It is stated that Messrs. Abbey and Schoefel lost £50,000 by their Italian Opera season at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, during 1883-4. It is further stated that, by a turn of the wheel of fortune, they have wiped out the whole of this crushing loss. Mr. Abbey has long been envied in this country as the theatrical godfather of Miss Mary Anderson, and from out of the enormous profits made upon the tours of "Our Mary," Mrs. Langtry, Madame Bernhardt, and Madame Patti, the enterprising managers have succeeded in recouping their losses in connection with Italian Opera.

BERLIOZ'S "LES TROYENS."

(Continued from Page 68.)

"The President of the Council," Berlioz writes, "and Count de Morny, both members of the Committee of the Opéra, have read and heard my libretto, have pronounced it to be good, and spoken in my favour at the last meeting; and because the Opéra is managed by a semi-literary man, who does not believe in musical expression, and is of opinion that words of the Marseillaise go as well to the air of La Grâce de Dieu, as to that composed by Rouget de Lisle, I am to be kept at arm's length, very possibly for seven or eight years."*

Berlioz's subsequent letters contain many references to his attempts at hearing something definite with regard to the "Troyens," and these replies seem to have been so unsatisfactory, that he was seriously thinking of making overtures to the director of the Théâtre-Lyrique, then about to be newly re-established. This is what he says in another letter to Humbert Ferrand :—

"Speaking of that great canoe which Robinson Crusoe cannot float, I must tell you that the theatre wherein my work is to be performed is approaching completion; but shall I find the people I need to sing it? That is the question. One of my friends has been to the Director of the Théâtre-Lyrique, who, we suppose, will be at the head of that administration next year, also to tell him that he will place fifty thousand francs at his disposal to assist him in producing the 'Troyens' in a suitable manner. It is a great deal, but it is not all. So many things are needed for such a musical epopée."

However, soon after, Berlioz thought he saw still a chance of having it accepted at the Opéra, and of course the negotiations with the third-rate lyrical theatre were closed—at least, as will be seen—for a time. The following is Berlioz's next important step :—

"One evening, at the Tuileries, I managed to have a moment's conversation with the Emperor, who authorised me to bring him the libretto, promising to read it if he could find an hour's leisure. But what leisure has the Emperor of the French? I sent my manuscript to his Majesty, who did not read it, and despatched it to the theatrical Head Office. There my work was slandered and treated as absurd; a rumour was circulated that it would take eight hours, and required two companies, each as large as that of the Opéra, and three hundred extra singers, &c. A year later, however, they seemed disposed to have something to say to it. One day Alphonse Royer told me, from the Minister, that he was going to make them begin upon it at the Opéra, and wished to give me entire satisfaction.

"This spontaneous promise was no better kept than all the rest, and from that time forth," &c.

It was owing to this circumstance that Berlioz at last consented to hand over the "Troyens" for production to M. Carvalho, then the director of the Théâtre Lyrique, and in a subsequent letter to Humbert Ferrand, he says :—"I have broken with the Opéra once and for all in regard to 'Les Troyens,' and I have accepted the proposals of the director of the Théâtre Lyrique. He is now hard at work getting the company, orchestra, and chorus together. The rehearsals will begin next May, so that we may be able to produce the work in December."

Very soon after M. Carvalho had received the score he found that the limited resources of his theatre would not permit the engagement of two expensive primadonnas on the same evening, so Berlioz, to oblige him, divided and arranged his work into two portions, as we now have it, viz., "La Prise de Troie," and "Les Troyens à Carthage," the last mentioned to be produced, and the other later on. All this was of course heart-rending to a man of nervous temperament like Berlioz, and he cried, "Ah, my noble Cassandra, my heroic virgin, I must need resign myself to never hearing thee." But this was not all. When the "Troyens à Carthage" was in course of preparation, Berlioz was nearly worried to death at the rehearsals. The following episode is Berlioz's own description of one of them :—

"Your rhapsodist with his four-stringed lyre is intended, I know, to account for the four notes struck by the harp in the orchestra. You wanted to show off a little archæology.

"Well?"

"That is dangerous. People will laugh."

"It certainly is a great matter for laughter. Ha! ha! ha! a tetrachord! An antique lyre, striking only four notes. Ha! ha! ha!"

"There is one word in your prologue that alarms me."

"What is that?"

"The word triomphaux."

"And why should that alarm you? Is it not the plural of triomphal, as chevaux is of cheval, originaux of original, madrigaux of madrigal, municipaux of municipal?"

"Yes, but it is not a word in common use."

"By Jove! if I am only to employ words in use at the music-halls and vaudeville theatres for an epic subject, there will be a great many forbidden expressions, and the style of the work will be remarkably poor."

"People will laugh at it, you will see."

"Ha! ha! ha! Triomphaux, that is funny. Triomphaux, it is very nearly as ludicrous as tarte à la crème in Molière. Ha! ha! ha!"

"Æneas must not appear on the stage in a helmet."

"Why not?"

"Because Mangin, who sells pencils in the street, also wears a helmet; a helmet of the middle ages, certainly, but still a helmet, and the gods in the top gallery will begin to laugh and call out Mangin."

"Oh, of course; a Trojan hero must not wear a helmet, because people will laugh. Ha! ha! ha! a helmet; ha! ha! Mangin!"

"Look here, will you do me a favour?"

"Well, what now?"

"Suppress Mercury; the wings to his heels and head will make people laugh. No one has seen wings except on the shoulders."

"Oh! human beings have been seen with wings on their shoulders; I did not know that. But, however, I can understand that wings on the heels, and still more on the head, will make people laugh. Ha! ha! ha! And so, as Mercury is not often to be found in the streets of Paris, let him be suppressed."

Though Berlioz describes the rehearsals with considerable humour, they were by no means pleasant to his sensitive nature, and M. Daniel Bernard, the well-known writer on music, tells us that at the conclusion of the last rehearsal, he called upon Madame d'Ortigue, the wife of one of his oldest friends. He looked like a ghost, so pale, thin, and gaunt was he. "What has happened?" she exclaimed, in alarm. "Has the rehearsal gone badly?" "On the contrary," said he, as he sank into a chair, "it is splendid, sublime," and he burst into tears.

---

* The extracts from the Memoirs are from R. and E. Holmes's English translation, and those from the published letters from Mr. Mainwaring Dunstan's.

However, at last the long-expected first performance took place on the 4th November, 1868. But what a performance! "The work," as Berlioz says, "still required three or four serious additional rehearsals, and nothing went with certainty, particularly on the stage." Berlioz's own description is by no means exaggerated, since many who were present on that memorable evening give even a worse account of it.

"The mise en scène of the hunting interlude was wretched. Instead of a real waterfall, there was a painted one; the dancing satyrs were represented by little girls of twelve, and the blazing branches which they ought to have waved were forbidden for fear of fire; so were the nymphs who were to rush through the forest with dishevelled hair, crying "Italy!" The female singers were placed in the side-scenes, and could not be heard in the theatre; the thunderbolt was scarcely audible, notwithstanding the weakness of the orchestra. After this contemptible parody, the scene-shifter took at least forty minutes to change the scenes. I myself, therefore, requested that the interlude might be suppressed. In spite of my furious resistence, Carvalho insisted on cutting out the scene between Narbal and Anna; and also the air de ballet, and the sentinels' duet, which seemed to him too familiar for the epic style. The verses of Iopas were omitted by my own advice, as the singer was incapable of doing them justice. In the duet between Æneas and Dido, I soon discovered that Madame Charton's voice was unequal to so violent a scene, and it fatigued her so much that she had not strength enough left to sing the terrible recitative in the fifth act, Dieux immortels! il part, and her last song and the scene of the funeral pile. Lastly, the song of Hylas, which took at the first performances, and was very well sung by young Cabel, disappeared whilst I was absent with an attack of bronchitis. As Cabel was required for the piece played the day after 'Les Troyens,' and his engagement only bound him to sing fifteen times in the month, they had to pay him 200 francs for each extra night. Carvalho therefore suppressed the song for the sake of economy, without giving me notice."

Berlioz's troubles with his manager did not end here, for he tells us that "Carvalho was at his wits' end to keep up his répertoire, the house was empty every night, and he wanted to extricate himself from this unfortunate position as quickly as possible. Everybody knows that in such cases managers are ferocious. My friends and I expected a stormy evening and all sorts of hostile demonstrations, but nothing happened. My enemies dared not show themselves; a solitary hiss was heard at the end when I was called for, and that was all. The individual who had hissed was evidently determined to continue his insults, for he returned with a comrade, and hissed exactly at the same place at the third, fifth, seventh, and tenth performances. Others held forth in the lobbies with comical vehemence, saying that such music could not and ought not to be allowed. Five papers insulted me in terms expressly chosen to wound my feelings as an artist. But, on the other hand, more than fifty articles appeared during the fortnight, in a tone of appreciative criticism, by Messrs. Gasperini, Fioretitino, d'Ortigue, Leon Kreutzer, Damcke, Joannes Weber, and many others, written with an enthusiasm and ability that filled me with delight such as I had not felt for a long time past. Besides this, I received a great many letters, some eloquent, others naif, but all in earnest, and all touching me deeply. I saw people in tears at several of the performances, and during the two months following the first performance of the piece I was often stopped in the street by strangers asking permission to shake hands with me, and thanking me for having produced it. This was surely ample compensation for the insults of people whose enmity was due less to my criticisms than to my musical tendencies, and whose hatred, indeed, was such as to honour me. . ."

(To be continued.)

THE CORRESPONDENCE OF WAGNER AND LISZT.

The series of important and interesting letters* between these two great men which has lately been published by Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel, and will appear before long in an English dress, is not a subject for criticism properly so called, any more than is Shakespeare or the "Waldstein" sonata. As we have already announced, we propose shortly to lay before our readers a translation of those passages which have reference to Wagner's stay in London during 1855, and are therefore of special interest to Englishmen. In the meantime we reprint a notice of the volumes which appeared in the "St. James's Gazette," and gives a comprehensive summary of their contents.

The familiar saying that a man's nature is most faithfully shown in his letters has seldom been more strikingly illustrated than by the correspondence of Wagner and Liszt, which has just been published at Leipzig. It should have been pointed out, however, that these letters although extending over twenty years, by no means cover the life-long friendship of the two great musicians. One would like to know why the year 1861 has been made the terminus of these interesting communications, although the relations of the correspondents became even more intimate at a later period by the marriage of Wagner with Liszt's daughter, Cosima, the wife of Hans von Bülow. The views of the father-in-law, who had in the meantime become an abbé, as to this somewhat irregular union are not of course to be looked for, at any rate during the lifetime of two of the parties most nearly concerned; but it would have been pleasant to see Liszt take part in Wagner's subsequent triumphs, even as he had been the sympathetic and helpful sharer of his early struggles. Of all this a further instalment of the correspondence, if ever it should be given to the light, will probably bear record; in the meantime we must be thankful for such materials as the executrix of Liszt's will on the one side and Wagner's widow on the other have vouchsafed.

The first of the letters here published—a mere formal request for an interview addressed by Wagner to Liszt—is dated as far back as March, 1841, and throws a curious light on the beginning of this remarkable friendship. That beginning was the reverse of promising. Liszt at the time was at Paris, in the zenith of his fame; while Wagner lived in the same city in absolute obscurity, drudging for the music-publishers, and by that means narrowly escaping starvation. Being casually introduced to Liszt, he was received with ordinary politeness but admitted to no kind of intimacy by the famous pianist, whose well known kindliness of nature and almost exaggerated generosity subjected him to appeals for help from every needy German artist in Paris. That amongst so many competitors Wagner's special claim should have been overlooked was only too natural, as he himself was fain to acknowledge later on. But at the time he held another and a less fair view. He mistook indifference for hostility; and of that he complained bitterly whenever a mutual friend would lend a willing ear. Liszt, when told of these charges, became anxious to remove a misconception; and at the same time eager to know something of the work of a man whom he had so unwittingly offended, he went to Dresden, where in the meantime "Rienzi" had been brought out with considerable éclat. The opera pleased him; and in its two immediate successors—"The Flying Dutchman" and "Tannhäuser"—he discovered signs of a genius which, as he foresaw, would revolutionise the operatic stage. Thereupon he took it upon himself to proclaim that genius to the world, and at the same time to minister to the comfort of its possessor. How true he remained to Wagner every one knows; but of the incidents of the struggle, continued through many years, these letters give the first complete and authentic record. The two things which most impeded the success of Wagner's works were, first, their novel and in many ways startling nature; and, second, the composer's enforced absence from Germany, which severed him from all connection with his friends and his artistic interpreters. Wagner, it will be remembered had taken an active part in the revolutionary rising of 1849; and the King of Saxony, not unjustly incensed at the conduct of his eccentric Capellmeister, refused for many years to cancel the sentence of banishment pronounced against the fugitive rebel. The manner in which Liszt endeavoured to assist his friend in these two important points does almost more credit to him even than the pecuniary assistance afforded him out of limited means. Not only did he produce "Lohengrin" and mount "Tannhäuser" with great splendour at Weimar, but he also made propaganda for these and other of Wagner's operas in every quarter where his influence was of weight. In doing so, he had no consideration for his own interests. Liszt himself was a composer, admired, not to say worshipped, by exactly the same class of young musicians whom he exhorted to take up the cause of Wagner. By claiming for that master the first place he voluntarily retired to the second. But Liszt did more than this. Although he had earned large sums, his unbounded generosity had left him a poor man; and at the time we are speaking of his only settled income was the salary of about £170 which he received from the Weimar Court Theatre. Yet his desire, repeated again and again in these letters, was to have Wagner appointed to the post of conductor at that theatre, and to enable him to return to Germany in an official capacity. No wonder that Wagner's gratitude is unbounded, that he calls Liszt his benefactor, his patron, without whose encouragement and ever-ready help his best work would have remained undone.

---

* "Briefwechsel zwischen Wagner und Liszt." Two vols. (Leipzig: Breitkopf und Härtel. London: Trübner and Co.)

To return these benefits in a more substantial manner was out of Wagner's power. During the twenty years over which these letters extend he was a homeless wanderer, and would have been a beggar but for the assistance of a few friends. Everything he undertook led only to fresh disappointments. In Germany his operas, which now draw larger houses than those of any other composer, made their way slowly and intermittently, and abroad his chances were even more doubtful. More than once he went to Paris in the vain hope of gaining access to the Grand Opéra, but always in vain. It was not till several years later that, through the influence of the Princess Metternich and by command of the Emperor, "Tannhäuser" was mounted at the great French theatre, with the disastrous result generally known. One of the curious schemes mentioned in these letters was to accept an offer from the Emperor of Brazil and write an opera for Rio Janeiro. Another favourite idea of Wagner's was an English performance of "Lohengrin." Here also Liszt is ready with counsel and help; but "Lohengrin" in English was not produced till more than twenty-five years after the scheme is first mentioned in these letters. Another English plan led to more immediate results. In a letter without date, but belonging evidently to the last month of 1854, Wagner writes:—"To-day I have been asked by the Philharmonic Society of London, whether I should be inclined to conduct their concerts next season. I have before everything else inquired—(1) Have they got a second conductor for the stupid stuff? (2) Will the orchestra have as many rehearsals as I shall find necessary? If they satisfy me in all this, shall I then accept? If I could earn a little money without disgrace, I should be well enough satisfied. Write to me quickly what you think of it." The further stages of this important transaction may be distinctly traced in these letters. Mr. Anderson, the treasurer of the Philharmonic Society, and Mr. Cusins's predecessor as master of the Queen's music, called on Wagner at Zurich, and the terms were settled at the rate of £200 for the eight concerts. Wagner at first was very hopeful as to the possible results, and the cheering voice of Liszt is again heard. "The chief thing," he says, "is to get a firm position in London; and first of all to impress upon the public and the orchestra your idea of Beethoven, Gluck, &c." The results of the memorable Philharmonic season of 1855 are still in the memory of many living men. From the first rehearsal almost, Wagner gained the sympathy of his orchestra, although he was unable to address them in anything but very barbarous French; and the performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony under his leadership is still spoken of by those who were present as one of the finest ever heard in London. The public also were delighted; but soon it turned out that in the inner circle of musicians there were strong antagonistic currents against the new conductor, whose manner, it must be owned, was at no time conciliatory, and who was in the habit of expressing his opinions in a very emphatic manner. He was known not to like Italian music; and the Italians, with the all-powerful Signor Costa at their head, hated him accordingly, as did also the worshippers of Mendelssohn, at that time the idol of English amateurs. Nevertheless, the concerts were well attended, and we are assured on good authority that the season was, from a financial point of view, extremely successful. So strong, however, was the opposition, that the directors did not venture to renew the engagement; and Wagner did not again visit our shores till 1877, when he conducted some concerts at the Albert Hall. In his letters to Liszt he says comparatively little about his London troubles. He was at the time finishing the score of his "Walküre," and also studying Buddhism; and over such more engrossing topics he was apt to forget the events of the day. In English society he does not seem to have mixed at all, and almost the only English person of whom he speaks with gratitude, and even affection, is the Queen. "You have heard already," he writes, "how very charmingly Queen Victoria has behaved towards me. She visited the seventh concert, together with Prince Albert, and, as they wished to hear something of mine, I had the 'Tannhäuser' overture repeated. I really seem to have pleased the Queen. In a conversation I had with her after the first part of the concert she behaved so cordially, so kindly, that I was really quite touched. These two were the first people in England who dared to speak up for me openly and boldly; and if you consider that they had to deal with a political outcast accused of high treason, and with the police at his heels, you will think me justified in being cordially grateful to both of them."

We recommend these interesting volumes to the attention of our musical readers. They are full of important biographical and artistic material, and the characters of the two men stand forth as boldly as in a silhouette. If that of Liszt appears upon the whole the more amiable of the two, it should be remembered that he was placed in the favourable position of conferring benefits, while Wagner had to receive them.

Reviews.

INSTRUMENTAL.

The evident signs of musicianly sincerity noticeable in various songs and smaller pieces which have already come under our notice, by Mr. Erskine Allon, caused us to turn with some curiosity to a Sonata for the pianoforte in C major, bearing the same name (London Music Publishing Company), and it is satisfactory to find former impressions of this composer's capacity and sound acquirements now confirmed in a more sustained and ambitious effort. Imagination of a high order cannot be claimed for it, but the work, showing in some parts the influence of both Schubert and Mendelssohn, gives indication throughout of a pleasant fluency of ideas both melodic and harmonic, of careful study of good models, and of genuine gifts, which work well, and are likely in time to work still better in the time-honoured classical forms. There is a freshness and "go" about the opening subject, attacked without preamble, which proves at once that the composer has something to say, but the second subject, on the other hand, is not so spontaneous. If in this movement, and elsewhere, transitional passages are somewhat needlessly excursive and overcrowded, this only means that, like many other composers of more established pretensions, Mr. Allon has yet to fully master the secret of subordinating ideas and preserving the perfect proportion and balance of design found only in the highest examples. There is not much display of ingenuity in the second part, that crucial test of a composer's power of treatment or contrast, but it is unaffected and agreeable throughout. Similar interest, and within similar limits, will be found in the "poco andante quasi allegretto" in A flat major, commencing with a melody of undeniable charm, which again, has its companion subject in the dominant, the whole being worked out rather lengthily, in regular sonata form; in the graceful scherzo and trio in C minor and C major respectively, and in the final movement, which has for its principal a firmly marked theme, with octaves, of a more declamatory character.

Two really valuable books of studies come from Mr. Alfred Mapleson; "Difficult Passages for the Violin," by J. T. Carrodus, in which extracts from the principal overtures of the great masters have been used for technical purposes; and "Solo and Important Passages for the Flute," by William L. Barrett, constructed on the same lines, for the benefit of flute players. Orchestral performers and students of the instruments generally will not be slow to appreciate the practical usefulness of these volumes, in which an excellent plan has been ably carried out by acknowledged authorities in the respective instruments.

The Organ World.

THE GENIUS OF THE ORGAN.

II.

From the time the organ, in its most primitive condition, passed from the lips of the player to be supplied with wind by mechanical means, its destiny as a wind instrument was changed, and the course of its development was placed upon new and original lines. The position was so unique in the story of the art, and fraught with such great results regarding the future genius of the instrument, as to be worthy of the present consideration of the player. There was a time in the early history of the organ when its development might have taken a different course, as a single note instrument, and a position secured for it in the ranks of the then limited and imperfect orchestral mediums. But even in its earliest form, as a small collection of single-tone pipes, the organ contained the germ of its own future in the possibility of having more than one pipe sounding at once, a possibility which primarily opened the way for the gradual building up of the greatest exponent of harmony and counterpoint ever to be placed within the grasp of one performer. The application of a mechanical wind supply to the organ was a natural result of the inevitable multiplication of its pipes, and a form of development calling for centuries of slow and patiently conducted growth. Looking back through the long ages which have passed since the mechanical wind supply fixed the course of the future of the organ, one might wonder what the early organ makers could expect from their simple attempts to secure musical speech by a wind supply outside the player's control. Certainly, it was no more within the vision of these workmen to foresee the wonders of the modern organ, than it was possible for the original experimentalists in steam to anticipate the stupendous applications of steam power of our days. The adoption of mechanical organ-blowing doubtless had become a necessity from the multiplication of pipes; thenceforward a gradual pipe multiplication necessarily followed the adoption of mechanical organ-blowing; for these two conditions of organ building acted and re-acted upon each other, and the fiat, which decreed organ development must proceed through the process of mechanical complication, was recognised as one of no "uncertain sound." Whether the development of the organ had philosophically "taken a wrong turning" or not, had become a question no longer to be considered. Certain it is, that the growth of the instrument was continued under conditions undeniably artistic. An increase of tone-power called for variety in tone-quality; the still unsatisfied desire for power and variety in turn compelled the study of artificial harmonic resonance; this, again, demanded depth of tone, in order that a better foundation might be secured; and variety of tone led to the introduction of the imitative faculty, whereby instruments of single notes and special tone-qualities could find representation, however imperfect, within the scheme of huge, absorbing, pervading, and dictatorial musical mechanism we call the organ. Mechanically, the demand for power and variety of tone not only compelled the multiplication of pipes and stops, but ultimately called for such organic divisions as distinct organs with separate manuals and pedals, and, in the end, different wind pressures. Then another necessary branch of the art of organ-building was the work of bringing all these multiform sources of power and effect within the mental comprehension and physical grasp of one performer. Now, granting that this has been done with a success truly wonderful, it cannot be denied that no one mind, no single manipulator, can be expected to obtain a command over detail which results from such concentration and singleness of purpose we find at once diffused through, and conglomerated in, the resources of the modern orchestra. Berlioz has spoken of the orchestra and organ as musical monarchs, as an emperor and king, unable to tolerate each other's pre-eminence; perhaps they may be better described as the sun and moon of the musical firmament. The orchestra, as the sun, is a vast aggregation of minds concentrated in the production of musical light and life, through direct, individual, and simple musical mediums. The organ as the moon of the musical system, shines with a paler and a borrowed light, by reason of being the expression of one mind only, and that mind being to no small extent removed from absolutely direct contact with the listener, in consequence of the intervention of a complication of artificial machinery. The orchestra in its power represents a maximum of life; while the organ may be said to be governed by a minimum of life, as represented by its one performer. Thus the genius of the instrument is far less active, varied, and assertive than is the genius of the orchestra; while it is more passive, reflective, and of a calmer type than its great rival. The effect of the distinctive gifts of the instrument upon its musical position and duties will claim further consideration presently.

E. H. Turpin.

A SERVICE OF ANTHEMS AT ST. MARGARET'S, WESTMINSTER.

The Family Churchman gives a special report, from which the following passages are extracted:—

Lately St. Margaret's Church, Westminster, was crowded to hear a lecture on the foreign composers of Church anthems, illustrated by the members of the choir of the Abbey, under the direction of Dr. Bridge. Organ accompaniments were played by Mr. Winter, deputy organist at the Abbey. Several collects and prayers preceded the lecture. Archdeacon Farrar said that last year he had endeavoured to give a short history of the English anthem, illustrated by specimens of the Church music of the greatest of our English composers from the sixteenth century to the present day, with the object of deepening their interest in the anthem. They would hear that night specimens of the Church music of some of the great foreign composers. One great line of demarcation divided the composers of the fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth centuries from those which followed. The former were polyphonic, they wrote for voices alone; whereas the great composers of the eighteenth century composed for instruments alone, or for voices accompanied by instruments. The style existed in Flanders at the latter part of the fourteenth century. That style was represented by two composers, Arcadelt and Palestrina. Of Jacob Arcadelt but little was known, except that he was one of the most prominent of a distinguished band of Netherland musicians, who taught in Italy in the sixteenth century. In 1539 he was master of the boys in St. Peter's at Rome. His works were chiefly madrigals and masses. His style was lofty and natural. He (the archdeacon) believed that his authorship of the Ave Maria associated with his name was uncertain. Giovanni Pier-Luigi da Palestrina was born in Palestrina in 1524, and died in 1594. As a boy of thirteen he went to Rome, and, being heard singing in the street, was introduced into a choir, and from that he rose to be chapel master of the Julian Chapel in the Vatician at the age of 27. His earliest masses were dedicated to Pope Julius III., who appointed him singer in the Papal chapel. Marcellus succeeded Julius. Pope Paul IV., who followed, dismissed Palestrina, partly because he was married, and partly because his voice was no longer good. He received a small pension, but the disappointment made him seriously ill. But his great triumph was yet to come. Music had fallen into a state of pedantry and the divine and natural was sacrificed to the hard subtleties of science, which utterly dominated over the meaning of the words. It had almost ceased to be religious or suitable to the sacredness of public worship; it was largely founded on secular melodies, sometimes even of a degrading character, of which the evil words were sometimes sung in church by the subordinate singers. So flagrant were these delinquencies that the Pope in his indignation by an edict nearly stopped Church music altogether, which would have been disastrous. The great Council of Trent was sitting and the prelates were agreed as to the necessity of some great reform. In 1563 Pope Pius issued a commission of eight cardinals to examine the matter, and Palestrina was commissioned to write a mass as the type of what the solemn office should be. He was so impressed by the importance of the occasion, that he wrote three, and it was the third of these, known as the "Mass of Pope Marcellus," which saved Church music from entire proscription. It was felt that by that mass the future destiny of the sacred art was determined. It was so transcendentally excellent that, at the close of the service, the enraptured Pontiff said, "It must have been some such music that the Apostle of the Apocalypse heard sung by the Angels in the Jerusalem." Palestrina was rewarded by the post of composer to the Papal choir, and was confirmed in that post by seven successive Popes. His pay was small and his life passed in chronic penury and domestic affliction. In 1575 fifteen hundred singers from his native town entered Rome with Palestrina at their head chanting his beloved music. He left an unworthy son whom he bade on his death-bed get his remaining music published to the glory of God. Thus was he true to the end with that sympathy, piety, and purity which during half a century had drawn him to turn all the beauties of his fancy and resources of his love to the glory of his Maker. He died in the arms of his dear friend and confessor. He subjected art to the service of nature; it was not the beauty of the construction of his music which made it immortal, but the soul in it. His grave and earnest mind rescued the music of worship from being the vehicle for the conveyance of popular melodies. His genius guided him on sound principles and introduced a new epoch, placed him on the loftiest pinnacle of fame, and enshrined him in the hearts of all true lovers of the art.

The next two anthems marked a new epoch. As was often the case after great masters, the period of Palestrina was followed by one of great but not complete decadence, until the polyphonic school died out in 1561. Of the great English composers of the 17th century he spoke last May, but the next marked epoch in foreign Church music was marked in 1733. Bach and Handel threw a flood of colour over the 18th century. Johann Sebastian Bach was born at Eisenach, in Saxony, in 1685, and Handel was born at Halle in the same year. But though Bach was twice at Halle they did not seem to have met. They united in their own persons all the influences and tendencies of modern thought which brought about the revolution from the art of Palestrina to that of the present day. Handel founded no school, he exhausted all that art could do in the direction of oratorio. The two composers were not alike: Bach lived in retirement, Handel lived in a blaze of publicity; Bach appealed to the most serious, Handel to all. Handel met with recognition even in his own lifetime, but Bach had affected as deeply the minds of modern composers, though his music did not make a marked impression till 50 years after his death. It was said that music owed to both almost as much as religion to its founder. Left, as a young boy, under the tyranny of an elder brother, Bach showed intense earnestness in pursuit of music, getting hold of a manuscript book of music and copying it all by stealth in the moonlight. Having a beautiful soprano voice, he became a chorister at Luneberg, and during his whole uneventful life, till he became blind, he devoted his powers to musical composition. His music was inspired by a deeply religious feeling. Endowed with a spirit of almost patriarchal simplicity, he was content with humble circumstances; his art and his family were the two great blessings of his life. Outwardly, his life was modest and insignificant; inwardly, it was luxuriant in growth and production. Starting with instrumental music, he developed it in a new manner, and created a new style. His character was full of quiet nobleness, modest, yet conscious of genius, he thought genius was patience. The establishment of his fame was due to two later masters. Mozart, hearing one of his motetts, said, "Thank God, here is something, and I can learn something new." In Handel the music of the oratorio reached its highest point; he had been rightly called the Milton of music and one of the greatest composers the world had ever known. Discouraged by his father, his indomitable heart asserted itself, and he taught himself to play on a dumb spinet in a garret until his genius was discovered. Fourteen years after the death of Purcell, Handel came to London, and though we could not claim the glory of his birth, his grave was in Westminster Abbey, and England rewarded the genuis it had no small part in evoking. He became chapel master to the Duke of Chandos, but his series of great works only began at 55. "Saul" and "Israel in Egypt" were first performed in 1740, the "Messiah" was performed at Dublin in 1742. It was devoted first to the cause of charity and the service of the lowly, and brought in £10,000 to the Foundling Hospital, and had since brought in many thousands of pounds to many a holy cause. Thus, Handel consecrated his greatest work to the help of the unfortunate little ones, and perhaps it was that thought from which the "Messiah" caught one more tone of his best inspiration and joy. In 1749 the whole audience rose to its feet, the King also in tears, when the "Hallelujah Chorus" was begun, and that was why the people always rose at the performance of that chorus. In the "Messiah" he united the finest of all themes to the noblest of all music. Well might it be so, for he said he seemed to see the heavens open and an innumerable host of angels singing round the throne of God. In later years he became blind, but he rose indomitably above the affliction and would still play for his oratorios, and he was led out very pale to receive the reward of his genius. His whole mind showed some of the best features of the English character—stubborn, independent, fearless, true, generous feeling, horror of all pretence and false sentiment hiding itself under a blunt address. He developed ideas out of facts, not facts out of ideas. Something he learnt from Purcell, but in clearness of ideas and directness of means stood supreme, as also industry. He regarded his life as a kind of priesthood and devoted it to his art. He prayed that he might meet his Saviour on the day of His crucifixion, and on Good Friday he died.

The next two composers, Haydn and Mozart, had been called the school of Vienna. Since Handel no new principle was discovered, no new types, no new forms of expression, except that of romanticism. The work of the 19th century had been, however, a setting forth of the truths of the 18th, and Haydn might be regarded as the father of modern music and symphony. Joseph Haydn was born of humble parentage in 1732 and died in 1809. At 10 he became a chorister in the church of St. Stephen in Vienna. When his voice broke, he was thrown on the world friendless and with an empty purse. He was taken into the house of an old chorister, where he studied music for 16 or sometimes 18 hours a day, and made such a good impression on an old Italian master that he gave him some instruction. He was, however, mainly self-taught, and copied out the whole of one book of musical instruction. Hence the originality of his inspiration. He was very fond of England, and in 1790 he was living in Holborn, and was present at the great Handel Festival, where he had a good place near George III. He was impressed by the mighty choruses, and while listening to the Hallelujah Chorus he wept like a child, and said of Handel, "He is the master of us all." The "Creation," of which they would hear a selection, his great work, was the ripe fruit of an old age full of Christian serenity. He said he was never so pious as when composing the "Creation," and he prayed every day to God to give him inspiration and bless his work. He was present at the performance of it in 1808, and Beethoven, who was there, kissed his hand. Unable to sit out the remainder of the performance he was carried from the hall, and at the door he paused and lifted up his hand as though blessing in God's name the vast assembled multitude. He was of a singularly pious mind, and at the top of each score wrote the words, "In nomine Domini," and at the end "In laus Deo." He said, "I know God has bestowed a talent upon me, and I thank Him for it; I think I have done my duty." There was a lucidity, a charm, and freshness of melody about Haydn's work which were always supported without being overpowered by brilliant orchestration. It might be said that he revolutionised instrumental music, and he had been called one of the greatest musical reformers of any age. Mozart recognised no laws but those of nature, and at an early age he showed his genius. His father said of him, "God daily works new miracles in this child," and at the age of six he attracted the attention of the Imperial family at Vienna, especially of Marie Antoinette. He did not create a school, he was a school; he did not invent a style, it came to him. The dry formalities engendered by musical learning vanished in his presence like mist before the sun. He wrote from the heart and not from the head, and produced the happiest effects by means never before tried, He died in 1791. The piece they would hear was said to be his last composition.

Mendelssohn might stand as the most prominent representative of the modern school of foreign composers. He was born at Berlin in 1809, and died in 1847, not yet forty years old. He retained throughout his life his strong, masterful individuality, but he drew from the accumulations of the genius of his predecessors—from Handel the perfection of power, from Mozart and Haydn form, and from Bach part-writing. At eight he would play music at sight. He came to England in 1832, and lived in Great Portland-street. Like the other great composers, he was a good man. His father, the undistinguished son of a great father, and the undistinguished father of a great son, said of him, "I cannot express what he has been to me, what a treasure of love, patience, endurance, thoughtfulness, and tender care he has lavished upon me." His was the character truly musical, full of childlike simplicity and thoughtful deference to age, and ready to lend his genius to the pleasure of the poor and needy. His whole life was happy and prosperous. He was never tried by the stress of poverty, ill-health, neglect, disappointment, or blindness, which tried Bach, Handel, Beethoven, Schumann, and others. The happiness of his life and the noble refinement of his surroundings expressed themselves in his compositions. His "Elijah" was performed at Birmingham in 1847. The Prince Consort was present, and afterwards handed the composer his copy of the oratorio with words of high praise written on it. Mendelssohn died early, but he lived long.

Of the last three composers—Spohr, Gounod, and Dvorak—the first two were well known. Dvorak was but little known, and he might mention that he was born in a small village in Bohemia, the son of a butcher and innkeeper, and was destined to follow his father's trade. His musical genius showed itself early and he composed at fourteen. He went to Prague, where he lived for sixteen years in an almost penniless struggle. In 1877 his genius was recognised, and since then he had been uniformly successful. His wonderfully thoughtful and original setting of the "Stabat Mater" made his fame, and he obtained recognition far and wide, and especially in England, where the most important of his later works were produced.

SPECIFICATIONS.

West Brighton.—The following is the specification of the organ built for the Church of the Sacred Heart, Norton-road, by Messrs. Bevington and Sons, of Soho, London :—

Great Organ. CC to G. 56 Notes.

Double gamba	16 ft.	Harmonic flute	4 ft.
Open diapason	8 ,,	Principal	4 ,,
Echo dulciana	8 ,,	Super octave	2 ,,
Claribel	8 ,,	Full mixture	various
Röhr flote	8 ,,	Trumpet	8 ft.

Swell Organ. CC to G. 56 Notes.

Double diapason	16 ft.	Piccolo	2 ft.
Open diapason	8 ,,	Octave piccolo	1 ,,
Leiblich gedact	8 ,,	Full mixture	various
Viol d'amour	8 ,,	Cornepean	8 ft.
Voix célestes	8 ,,	Oboe	8 ,,
Principal	4 ,,	Vox Humana	8 ,,

Choir Organ. CC to C. 61 Notes.
(Prepared for.)

Viol da gamba	8 ft.	Echo flute	4 ft.
Salcional	8 ,,	Flageolette	2 ,,
Höhl flute	8 ,,	Clarinet et bassoon	8 ,,

Pedal Organ. CCC to F. 30 Notes.

Open diapason	16 ft.	Violoncello	8 ft.
Bourdon	16 ,,	Flute bass	8 ,,

Couplers.

Swell to great	Swell to sub-octave
Swell to pedals	Great to pedals
Swell to choir	Choir to pedals
Swell to super-octave

Four composition pedals to great organ, and three ditto to swell. Tremulant to swell, by pneumatic pistons under swell keys. Tubular pneumatic action to pedal organ. Pedal clavier, parallel and concave with radial sharps. Position and scale as suggested by the College of Organists, London.

When the choir organ is completed, the echo dulciana, great organ, will be replaced by a large scale bell diapason, 8 feet. Casework pitch-pine, and varnished.

RECITAL NEWS.

Edgworth Congregational Church.—At the opening of the new organ, organ recitals were given by Mr. S. W. Pilling, of Mirfield, on Jan. 21st. The vocalists for the evening concert were Miss Effie Thomas, of Huddersfield; Miss Louie Turner, of Manchester; Mr. Henry Taylor, of Bolton; and Mr. Howard, of Manchester.

Afternoon Recital.

Slow Movement	Hesse.
Prelude and Fugue	Bach.
Meditation	Grison.
Theme (With variations for the organ by E. H. Turpin)	Weber.
(a) Andante Cantabile (b) Allegro Pomposo	Smart.
Portuguese Hymn "Adeste Fideles"	Adams.
(a) Idylle "Evening Rest" (b) March, C major	Merkel.

Evening Recital.

The organ solos were :—

Overture	Morandi.
Concert Fantasia on "Pleyel's German Hymn"	Lemare.
Sonata in F major	Van den Bogaert.
Andante and Grand Chœur	Lemaigre.

DESCRIPTION OF THE ORGAN.

(Built by Mr. J. J. Binns, of Bramley, near Leeds, to a specification prepared by Mr. Pilling.)

Pedal Organ. CCC to F. 30 Notes.

Contre bass	16 ft.	Sub-bass	(tone) 16 ft.

Great Organ. CC to A. 58 Notes.

Lieblich bourdon (tone)	16 ft.	Violoncello	8 ft.
Open diapason	8 ,,	Octave diapason	4 ,,
Lieblich gedact	8 ,,	Doublette	2 ,,
Dolce	8 ,,

Swell Organ. CC to A. 58 Notes.

Violin diapason	8 ft.	Geigen principal	4 ft.
Hohl Flôte	8 ,,	Mixture of three ranks	—
Echo gamba	8 ,,	Cornopean	8 ,,
Voix celestes	8 ,,

Couplers.

Swell to great. Swell to pedal. Great to pedal.

Two composition pedals to the swell organ stops.
Three composition pedals to the great organ stops.
One double-acting pedal to work coupler swell to great.

Bow and Bromley Institute.—The Saturday recitals were resumed last week, by Mr. A. R. Gaul, of Birmingham, who played selections and arrangements of a popular kind. Mr. Balfour will play to-night.

The organ is erected in the choir gallery, behind the pulpit. The case, designed to harmonise with the architecture of the church, is made of figured pitch pine, stained and varnished, with dark, diapered pipes. A special feature of the scheme is the proportionately large number of 16 feet and 8 feet stops in the organ, which produce a sufficiency of foundation and true organ tone seldom obtained in an instrument of this size.

Ashby-de-la-Zouch.—A highly successful organ recital was given on January the 20th at Holy Trinity Church in this town by Mr. G. F. McCleary, A.C.O., the organist and choirmaster of the church. The programme was as follows :— Overture, "Occasional Oratorio," Handel; Allegretto, in B minor, Guilmant; Toccata and Fugue, in D minor, Bach; Melody, in F, Gladstone; Cantilène, in A, Grand Chœur in A, Salomé. Vocal solos were contributed by Messrs. Tomblin and Stimson.

St. Paul's Cathedral.—On January the 25th, the annual rendering of Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" in commemoration of the Festival of the "Conversion of St. Paul" took place. The ordinary evening service was repeated, the Bishop and the Archdeacon of London, Canons Gregory, Liddon, and Holland, and several minor canons and others being among the clergy who took part. The Psalms were sung to chants by Crotch, Lamb, and Stainer; Tallis's responses were of course used, and the "Magnificat" and "Nunc dimittis" were by Dr. Stainer. The overture to the oratorio was played before the service, and after the collects, Dr. Stainer, mounted to the desk behind the lectern, and customary selections from "St. Paul" began. There was a full orchestra, and Dr. Martin was at the organ, the choir boys and men being reinforced by drafts from the abbey and other churches, and the solos being entrusted to the leading vocalists of the choir. The effect was impressive; indeed it may be questioned whether Mendelssohn's great work is ever heard under more impressive conditions.

Oratory, Brompton.—On Sunday, the 29th of January, a selection from Macfarren's works was given in the afternoon, at one of those quiet services characterised by offerings both devotional and artistic, which are given here from time to time. Portions of the trio in E were excellently given by that accomplished young pianist, Mr. Ernest Kiver (pianoforte), Messrs. S. Szczepanowski and Whitehouse (violin and violoncello). To organists, the most interesting item was the Andante and Rondo in E, for violin and organ, admirably given by M. Szczepanowski and Mr. E. d'Evry, one of our rising and talented young organ-players. Vocal selections were given by Master Hawkins, Messrs. Russon, Pearson, and Musgrove Tufnail, from Macfarren's sacred works, and Mr. d'Evry played the same composer's March for organ in E flat as a voluntary. The music was under the very able direction of Mr. Thomas Wingham.

SHELTON PARISH CHURCH.—The inauguration of free seats in this church formed a suitable occasion for an excellent organ recital given on January 16th, by Mr. W. Edwards, A.C.O., organist of St. Luke's Church (Wellington), Hanley. Programme:—

Andante "Morning Prayer"	E. W. Taylor.
Larghetto and Allegro	J. Varley Roberts.
Larghetto (op. 108)	Mozart.
Prelude and Fugue in C	Bach.
Andante "Hymn of Nuns"	Wely.
"Quis est homo" Stabat Mater	Rossini.
Trumpet March	Jude.

The local press favourably noticed the performance.

CARDIFF.—Probably the most successful of the enjoyable series of organ recitals at the Park Hall, was given on Jan. 25. The instrumentalist for the evening was Mr. E. H. Lemare, F.C.O., formerly organist at the hall and St. Andrew's Church, and now organist at the Parish Church, Sheffield. Mr. Lemare, who is considered one of the most promising young musicians of the day, is well-known in Cardiff, and on this occasion was the recipient of a welcome, the spontaneous heartiness of which must have convinced him that he is in no danger of being forgotten by his numerous friends and admirers there. His selections included the overture to Rossini's "Semiramide," Gounod's "Funeral March of a Marionette," the Fugue in D major of Bach, a fantasia of his own on Pleyel's German Hymn, the overture to "Der Freischütz," and Rossini's duo, "Quis est homo." This last piece was followed by such an encore, successfully resisted in the case of other items on the programme, as could not be denied. Madame Annie Williams, of London, was the vocalist. Mr. A. W. Thomas accompanied.

Notes.

A COMBINED PIPE AND REED ORGAN AND PIPE ORGANETTE.—It may not generally be known that a Pittsburgh (U.S.) inventor, Mr. Arthur Wales, is engaged in bringing to a success a beautiful invention in home musical instruments, a combined pipe and reed organ and pipe organette, constructed on principles of which he is the inventor and patentee. The principle upon which this invention works is an organ working in a manner just the reverse of the well-known pipe-organ, and consists mainly in inclosing the pipes within an air-tight box connected to an exhaust bellows, which draws the air in through the pipes into the box, thus sounding them. As all drawing-room organs use the exhaust bellows and system of action only, it is thus seen that by the means described the organ pipes may be combined with the reeds in the organ with entire success, and a new combination organ produced having new possibilities.

BRISTOL CATHEDRAL.—In 1543 the value attached to the several offices in the Cathedral of Bristol were as follows:—

The Dean	£100	0	0	per annum
The six Prebends, each	20	0	0	"
The first six Minor Canons, each	10	0	0	"
The Gospeller and Epistoler, each	6	13	4	"
The Organist (John Senny)	10	0	0	"

Compiled from Willis' Cathedrals, II., 760.

From the above it will be seen that the organist received the same salary as higher divisions of minor canons, and half the salary of a prebend.

A prize recently offered by the Royal Musical Institute of Florence for the best prelude and fugue for the organ was divided between Giovanni Battista Polleri and Guiseppe Cerquetelli. Honourable mention was made of two other competitors.

Mr. F. Dean, the organist of Lancaster Church, where the organ is said to contain some fine old diapason work by Green, has composed a comic opera "Magna Charta, or a Romance of Runymede," which, it is stated, has been successfully produced in Lancaster.

The Newark Call, N.J., shows that Mr. E. Bowman, A.C.O., the well-known American organist, is doing good work in his new sphere of action, where he has an important appointment as organist, and is conductor of the local harmonic society.

The Oswestry Advertiser notes that an extraordinary state of affairs exists at Llangollen parish church. Owing to a dispute as to the musical character of the services, they have been conducted for several recent Sundays with an entire absence of music, either vocal or instrumental.

Norton Canes Church, near Cannock, was lately destroyed by fire, caused by the explosion of a lamp which was left burning in the organ loft to air it. The tower alone remains. The church was recently restored by the Lady of the Manor at a cost of £1,500.

FINSBURY CHORAL ASSOCIATION.—This excellent and spirited young society gave "Elijah" on January 26th at the Holloway Hall. The principal singers, who executed their parts with artistic power, were Mrs. Hutchinson, Miss Hope Glenn, Messrs. J. Probert, and Bantock Pierpoint. The orchestra was complete and effective; and the chorus was telling, and evidently singing with the enthusiasm which has done much to make the Association a power in the art world. Mr. C. J. Dale, the society's greatly esteemed conductor, directed the performance with his usual zeal and judgment, and Mendelssohn's masterpiece was greatly enjoyed by the large audience present.

The assertion that organist-composers generally handle the science of orchestration with marked dignity and effect, finds a further confirmation in the musicianly score of Dr. J. F. Bridge's fine overture produced at concerts at Birmingham and Bristol, and heard the other day with gratifying success at the London Symphony Concerts under the composer's direction.

SYRACUSE, U.S.—In St Paul's cathedral, on Sunday, January 8, Mr. Henry R. Fuller, precentor of the surpliced choir and organist, was ordained deacon. The services were peculiarly impressive. The sermon was preached by Bishop Huntingdon, who, in his affectionate address to the candidate, alluded tenderly to the father, the Rev. S. G. Fuller, former rector of the parish, to the grandfather, Dr. Fuller of the Berkeley Divinity School, and to the great-grandfather, the eminent jurist, Simon Greenleaf, who was Professor of Law in Harvard University. Afterwards the bishop announced to the congregation that henceforth the daily worship of Morning and Evening Prayer was appointed to be held regularly in the cathedral, the church being kept "open" at all hours of week days as well as Sundays. There are a few English organists now in Holy Orders, and there are earnest advocates for a return to the closer union of our organists with the Church by ordination, as in the days of old. To such persons the above account will be a matter of interest.

KELVINSIDE FREE CHURCH.—Mr Herbert S. Lewis, Mus. Bac., continued his interesting Historical Organ Recitals. Jan. 7. French school, Rameau—"Allegro in D," L. Wely; "Offertoire, D minor, Hymn of Nuns, and March in E flat," E. Batiste; Communion, Offertoire in D, J. Lemmens; Storm Fantasia, and Triumphal March. Jan. 21, Gounod—March Romaine, "O Salutaris"; Saint-Saëns, Communion; Salomé, Grand Chœur, Andante; A. Guilmant, Grand Chœur in D; Priere et Berceuse, Allegretto and Triumphal March.

RADSTOCK.—A sacred concert was recently given at the Wells Hill Chapel. The vocalists were Miss Kate Spary, Miss Bird, Miss Chivers, Miss Maude Gullick, Miss L. A. Thompson, Mr. James A. Taylor. There was an efficient choir. The instrumentalists were Dr. C. W. Pearce, organ; Mr. Percy Victor Sharman, violin; Mrs. C. W. Pearce and Miss L. A. Thompson, pianoforte. The programme contained the following organ pieces:—

"Grand March" (Tannhaüser)	Wagner.
Trio "Largo" (violin, piano, and organ)	Handel.
Mr. P. V. Sharman, Mrs. C. W. Pearce, Dr. Pearce.
Duo "Marche Triomphale" (organ and piano) ...	Alex. Guilmant.
Dr. Pearce and Miss Thompson.
"Barcarolle"	Sir W. S. Bennett.
New Quartetto "The Life Everlasting" (voice, violin, piano, and organ)	C. W. Pearce.
(Composed expressly for this Concert.)
Miss Bird, Mr. Sharman, Miss Thompson, and the Composer.
Quartett "Ave Maria" (voice, violin, piano, and organ)	Gounod.
Miss Bird, Mr. Sharman, Miss Thompson, and Dr. Pearce.

The World mentions a "Choir Guild" which has been formed for the city of Brooklyn, U.S., and diocese of Long Island, of which Bishop Littlejohn as president, and some thirty rectors form the committee. It appears that the object of the guild is to promote the use of Plainsong, and encourage the vesting, or surplicing, of choirs. The World is puzzled, as well it might be, at Rule VII., which provides that "Cushing's Manual of Parliamentary Law shall govern the proceedings of the guild."

Mr. Essex, of the firm of Hodge and Essex, the London agents of the Estey organ, has composed a new oratorio on the subject of "King David." At one time it was thought likely that the work would be performed at one of the festivals, but other arrangements have been made. The oratorio is highly spoken of.

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS' CALENDAR.

On Tuesday next, February 7th, the library will be open from 7 till 10; February 28, Lecture; April 9th, Annual College Dinner; April 24th, Lecture; May 22nd, Lecture; June 26th, Lecture; July 17th, 18th, and 19th, Examination for F.C.O. Diploma; July 20th, Diploma Distribution; July 24th, 25th, 26th, A.C.O. Examination; July 27th, Diploma Distribution. Other arrangements and particulars will be duly announced.

E. H. TURPIN, Hon. Sec.

95, Great Russell street, Bloomsbury, W.C.

NOW READY. PRICE ONE SHILLING.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE,

FEBRUARY, 1888,

Containing the first instalment of a Remarkable Collection of

MENDELSSOHN'S LETTERS

TO MOSCHELES,

NOW FOR THE FIRST TIME PUBLISHED.

Fully Illustrated with Portraits of Mendelssohn, Moscheles, and others, and with reproductions of several drawings by Mendelssohn.

The concluding instalment will be published in the March number.

FREDERICK WARNE & Co.,
15, Bedford Street, Strand.

CASSON'S

PATENT

Organ - Building System

SEPARATE Pedal Organs for each Manual. Expressive and Controllable Pedal Basses. Perfect control of all Couplers. Reduction of number of Claviers without loss of efficiency, &c., &c. See testimonials from

Mr. W. T. BEST.
Rev. Sir F. A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart.
Dr. SPARK.
Dr. J. C. BRIDGE, M.A.
Dr. E. W. TAYLOR, F.C.O.
The late Mr. J. STIMPSON.
Mr. R. BARTHOLOMEW.
Mr. J. HEYWOOD, Birmingham.
Mr. G. A. AUDSLEY, F.R.I.B.A.
M. A. J. HIPKINS, F.S.A.
&c., &c.

Apply to the Secretary—

CASSON'S PATENT ORGAN CO., LIMITED
DENBIGH.

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1888.

A CRŒSUS OF THE RIGHT SORT.

The splendid gift with which Mr. Samson Fox has endowed the Royal College of Music is by this time known to all our readers. It appears that the munificent offer of £30,000 was made to the Prince of Wales at Marlborough House, a few days ago, that his Royal Highness was naturally much gratified by so remarkable an instance of public spirit from a private individual, and it is hardly necessary to say, that he accepted it on the spot. Sir George Grove states that the new building which Mr. Fox's generous gift is intended to supply, will relieve the College of a serious amount of inconvenience, caused by the inadequate nature of the present house, and he expresses a hope that it may be of a collegiate character, such as to be remembered by the pupils in after life with interesting and elevating associations. With regard to the generous donor, the following facts have been supplied to us from an authentic source, and we publish them with pleasure; for the more the world knows of so good a man, the better it will be for the world.

Mr. Samson Fox, of Harrogate and Leeds, who has bestowed—quite spontaneously—the above munificent gift on the Royal College of Music, is one of those active, ingenious, and noble men of whom our country has produced so many. He is a civil engineer, and is well known in naval and commercial circles as the inventor and manufacturer of the celebrated "corrugated flues" for steamship boilers, the increased efficiency of which has powerfully contributed to the diminution which has recently taken place in the length of the voyage to New York, Australia, etc. Mr. Fox is a keen amateur of music, and his natural gifts are so great that he was originally very nearly being educated for the musical profession. Music is much practised in the house, and his eldest son, who is to be a civil engineer, like his father, is a violin player of no mean pretensions. Mr. Fox is connected with music in another way, being the constructor, and, we believe, also largely the designer, of the Leeds Colosseum, a concert hall which, notwithstanding its great size—it holds 6,000 people—is truly admirable for sound. Its somewhat unusual proportions were calculated by Mr. Fox, and the result is one of which any city might be proud. It is pretty certain that in the rooms of the new College, not only proportion, but ventilation, warmth, and all other similar necessities will be carefully attended to.

The question of the site of the building is probably not yet fixed, but we can only trust that either on the estate of the Royal Commissioners of 1851 or elsewhere, a piece of ground may be found which will not only admit of a spacious and well-arranged college being built, with all adjuncts of theatre, concert-room, lecture-rooms, libraries, offices, organs, etc., but with sufficient room for extension in future years as the college grows. The college should (as Sir G. Grove says) be such as in some degree to make a collegiate impression on the recollection of the pupils. They ought in after life to love the memory of their college as an Oxford or Cambridge man loves the memory of his. There should certainly be a quadrangle, and such other surroundings as may conduce to the good effect just mentioned. For this purpose profuse applied ornament is not necessary; more may be done by form and proportion than by that lavish display of decoration which is occasionally so much out of place. With the old-fashioned device "vivat sequens!" we leave for the present Mr. Fox and his generous gift.

"A CRESCENDO."

A whisper rose throughout the land,
As of some wak'ning strain;
Half vague and of confusèd theme,
It rose and fell again;
And Nature sympathetic heard,
To strange delicious feeling stirr'd.

Till now the whisper grew to be
Of full and certain sound,
As if some weird musician's mind
Its clear intent had found;
And Nature, with perception fine,
Its perfect meaning could divine.

And now upon the fragrant air,
In soft and sweet control,
The warbling of a fresh young voice
In joyous music stole;
And irresistible, began
To rouse the slower sense of Man,

Who, list'ning with attention rapt,
Was filled with wonder long,
From whence this voice that sang, it seem'd
In half-familiar song?
'Till memory recalling came,
And gently breath'd the singer's name.

And now the voice to treble realms
Did soar on tuneful speech,
So that its free, exulting strains
Earth's uttermost might reach;
And never falt'ring, never shrill,
Rose sweeter, higher, gladder, till—

On loud expanding note it paus'd,
And then with instinct grand,
A rich sustained, deep harmony,
Responded from the land;
And Nature, Man, and everything,
Combined to swell the song—of Spring.

GERTRUDE HARRADEN.

LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The London Symphony of last week contained one or two pieces which, if not absolutely new, had, at least, never been heard in the metropolis. One of these, placed at the commencement of the programme, was Dr. F. Bridge's overture "Morte d'Arthur," originally composed for, and first performed at, one of Mr. Stockley's concerts in the Town-hall, Birmingham, three years ago. Its subject-matter has been supplied by Tennyson's poem, and detached lines of that poem are quoted to account for the various sections of the overture. Thus, the opening andante maestoso stands for the battle in which King Arthur's fate is decided, and in its mournful accents foreshadows the tragic issue of that fate rather than it describes the actual turmoil of the struggle. Later on, the dialogue between the wounded King and bold Sir Bedivere supplies the keynote of the music, and other incidents of the poem are also referred to. At the same time, Dr. Bridge does not forget "absolute" form over poetic or pictorial motive. He has written a well-developed and well-sounding piece of music, which the audience received with much favour, recalling the composer, who conducted his own work, to the platform twice. Another piece of "programme" music concluded the concert. This was Bizet's orchestral suite, "Roma," written in 1866, and only once performed during the composer's lifetime, at one of M. Pasdeloup's concerts. If a justification were needed of the rules which require the gainers of the "Prix de Rome" to spend some time in the Eternal City, this piece would supply it. Rome, though no longer a musical centre, still is, or was at least twenty years ago, full of Southern life, and a musician may find there much inspiration, if not much actual knowledge, for his art. Bizet's suite is impregnated with the colour and brilliancy of that life vibrating in the melancholy andante tranquillo, no less than in the buoyant scherzo, and reaching its climax in the final allegro vivacissimo, surnamed "Carnaval," the themes of which palpably foreshadow "Carmen" in more than one instance. Admirably played by the orchestra, the beautiful work did not fail to rouse the enthusiasm of the audience, albeit placed at the end of the concert. The programme further included Mozart's so-called "Haffner" serenade, the violin solo in which was admirably played by Madame Norman-Neruda, and a song set to words from Goethe's "Claudine von Villabella" by Beethoven. This has been recently discovered and, like most "posthumous" pieces of the great masters, is chiefly of antiquarian interest. It was admirably declaimed by Mr. Henschel. The concert of last Thursday was given too late for notice in this week's issue.

POPULAR CONCERTS

Last Saturday's programme calls for no special comment. Mozart and Beethoven were the sources from which the principal items were taken, the former being represented by the quintet in C major, and the latter by the pianoforte trio in G major. The quintet was well played by Madame Neruda and MM. Ries, Hollander, Gibson, and Piatti, the first and last named artists being associated with Miss Fanny Davies in an excellent rendering of the trio. Signor Piatti introduced some pieces of the old Italian school, for which he exhibits a particular predilection, from the pen of Ariosti, a contemporary of Handel; the trifles are sufficiently harmless, but of no importance. Miss Fanny Davies was heard to advantage in Schumann's "Davidsbündler," and Mrs. Hutchinson sang in her well-known refined and artistic manner.

Monday's concert opened with Mendelssohn's quintet in B flat (op. 87), one of the composer's best contributions to the repertory of chamber music. The adagio in this quintet is perhaps the finest movement of its kind that Mendelssohn ever wrote, and, in common with the rest of the work, received an exceptionally good rendering at the hands of Madame Neruda and MM. Ries, Hollander, and Piatti, the approving demonstrations of the audience at the conclusion of the adagio being of unusual warmth. Miss Fanny Davies gave a very correct and spirited rendering of Bach's difficult Fugue in A minor, but the gifted young artist did not seem to be in sympathy with Brahms's rhapsody in G minor, and her rendering of the fine work was cold and formal. Signor Piatti obtained a determined encore for the playing of his own "Ossian's Song," a work full of pleasing melody if of no great depth, and with Miss Fanny Davies rendered Beethoven's poetic sonata in A major (op. 69) in a manner eminently worthy of its great beauties. That charming singer, Miss Liza Lehmann, again showed her taste in the selection of songs, and was heard to great advantage in Schubert's "Who is Sylvia?" Godard's "Fleur du Vallon," and Paladilhe's "J'ai dit aux étoiles."

MR. AND MRS. HENSCHEL'S RECITAL.

The recital of this gifted couple, notice of which was for reasons of space deferred last week, was, as usual, a model of what such entertainments should be, the programme being as varied as it was well carried out. The past was represented by a duet from Handel's "Giulio Cesare," Purcell's "Nymphs and Shepherds," and specimens of Pergolesi and Haydn; and Beethoven and Schubert marked the transitition to the present, embodied in songs by Brahms, Saint-Saëns, and Mr. Henschel. As usual, the last-named artist performed the pianoforte accompaniments with remarkable finish and délicacy, thus proving once more his talent in at least three branches of the art.

MISS FANNY DAVIES'S RECITAL.

Miss Fanny Davies gave a pianoforte recital at Princes' Hall on Wednesday afternoon, when she once more established her reputation as an earnest and accomplished worshipper of the divine art. Showing more modesty than is common with pianists in our days, she called to her aid a vocalist, whose contributions to the programme gave considerable relief to what might otherwise have proved to be a monotonous entertainment; as so many concerts are, when the pianoforte is alone relied upon for a two hours' concert. Miss Hedwig Sicca is a singer new to London audiences, and she made an excellent impression in songs by Schubert, Schumann, Franz, and others. She possesses a good voice, and, what is less common in a German singer, produces it well; while her intelligence and earnestness are such as belong to the German school. Miss Fanny Davies played the Waldstein Sonata with true dignity of style, but was heard to, perhaps, even greater advantage in Schumann's "Etudes Symphoniques," a work for which her natural idiosyncracy and her training under the great composer's widow qualify her in a special manner. The audience was as appreciative as it was large.

CITY SCHOOL OF MUSIC CONCERT.

A crowded audience, composed chiefly of the working classes, assembled at the St. Alban's Hall, Holborn, when a concert was given under the auspices of the City School of Music, and Franz Abt's cantata, "A Silver Cloud," formed the principal item. The solo parts were well rendered by Miss Maude Heywood (a pupil of Mr. Glover, who conducted), Miss Cubitt, and Miss Murdoch, who were well supported by the Ladies' Choir of the City School of Music. Mr. Arthur Walenn, with his sister, Miss Dorothea Walenn, gave a very effective rendering of Dundas's "Duo Concertante," and were repeatedly recalled. Miss Cubitt, Miss Evans, and Mr. Geo. F. Glover also contributed to a capital programme, which was thoroughly appreciated by all present. The City School of Music makes an especial feature of giving these frequent concerts for the people in all parts of London, and is well known in the East-end. At the same time, the School endeavours to provide a sound musical training for the masses at the lowest possible cost, its head-quarters being in Knightrider-street, St. Paul's.

MR. RICHARDS'S CONCERT.

Mr. H. W. Richards gave a very interesting Orchestral Concert on Saturday afternoon last, at the Paddington Baths Hall, with a programme considerably above the average order of merit. A carefully-selected and well-balanced band of thirty instrumentalists, containing some well-known names, and under the direction of Mr. Alfred Laubach, performed in a highly efficient manner, Lachner's Suite No. 1; Weber's Overture to "Oberon;" Saint-Saëns's Concerto in G minor for pianoforte and orchestra; and Polonaise brillante in E (Weber-Liszt), also for pianoforte and orchestra. The young pianist, in the two latter works, as well as in three studies for piano by Chopin, proved himself an artist of considerable ability and technique, and showed his power as well as control over the instrument, by the dashing style in which he played Saint-Saëns's Concerto, a work requiring great execution and judgment. In the Weber-Liszt "Polonaise," and Chopin's "3 Etudes," Mr. Richards also shone with great brilliancy, so much so that the audience, which must have numbered quite a thousand, would not be satisfied until they had obtained a repetition. Mr. Henry Pope's fine bass voice was heard to great advantage in the air, "Non piu andrai," from "Le Nozze di Figaro" (Mozart); he also sang the recit. and air from "Irene," "She alone charmeth my sadness" (Gounod), his deep notes in the concluding passage telling out with great purity and resonance. The other vocalist was Mr. S. Jaronski, who sang Schumann's "Widmung," and Mendelssohn's "Frühlingslied."

MISCELLANEOUS CONCERTS.

The Society for the Encouragement of the Fine Arts held their first Conversazione on January 19th, at the galleries of the Royal Institute of Painters in Oil Colours, Piccadilly. A short programme of music was given, and was much enjoyed by the guests, Madame Isabel George in "Rose softly blooming" and "Orpheus and his lute," and Mr. Herbert Thorndike in Somervell's "Once at the Angelus," and Hervey's "I care not," being particularly successful. Miss Marianne Eissler played some violin pieces, and Miss Eissler and Mr. Albert Gilbert presided ably at the pianoforte.

The usual students' fortnightly recital was held at the London Organ School and International College of Music, on the 28th of January. These recitals are of great service in showing the progress made by the pupils, and in affording a means of comparison between the work done at this and other musical institutions.

The members of the Lyric Club gave their first soirée of the present series on Thursday, 26th January, at the Galleries of the Royal Institute, Piccadilly, when they entertained upwards of five hundred guests. A most enjoyable evening was spent, and amongst those who contributed to the success of the same were Madame Osborne Williams, Miss Lucille Saunders, Madame Schluter, Miss Cloeté Brown, Mrs. Carlisle, Mr. Hayden Coffin, Mr. Thorndike, Mr. Luther Munday, and Mr. Lawrence Kellie as vocalists; Miss Millward, Mr. William Terriss, Mr. George Giddens, Mr. F. Upton, and Mr. H. Boucicault gave recitations; M. Theo. Liebe played the 'cello, and Mr. Percy Woodgate the violin; while Miss Hope Temple, Signor Ducci, Signor Denza, and Mr. Wilfred Bendall did good service at the piano. The next soirée is fixed for Thursday, the 16th, and will also be given at the Royal Institute.

Miss Helen Killik gave a successful concert last Tuesday evening, at the Vestry Hall, Turnham Green, in aid of the West London Hospital. The programme was well chosen, and the numerous items executed in an artistic manner. The giver of the concert, Miss Killik won great applause by her rendering of "Come Back," in which she was accompanied by the composer, Mr. H. M. Van Lennep. Mr. Templar Saxe, Madame Wilson Osman, Mr. Bernard Lane, Miss Ruthven and Mdlle. Dinelli also won golden opinions.

PRINCE OF WALES'S THEATRE.

L'ARLESIENNE.

The twofold interest attaching to the production, last Thursday week, of an English adaptation of Daudet's three-act-play "L'Arlésienne," with the overture and incidental music, composed by Bizet, received recognition in (for a matinée) unusually careful staging and considerable increase in the strength of the orchestra, to which were added the services of the chorus, belonging to the "Dorothy" Company. "The Love that Kills" is the title chosen for the English version presented by Mr. Jocelyn Brandon. The original text has in the main been adhered to; the adaptor having displayed his dramatic feeling more in the way he has remodelled the endings of certain scenes with decided advantage to their effect, than in the style of his dialogue, which abounds in passages of a formal and literary kind, instead of being, as it should be, colloquial and spontaneous. In a play almost destitute of anything humorous—except in one part, where that quality is unconsciously approached—and pitched throughout in so sorrowful a key, the absence of even such relief as is afforded by really natural, unaffected talk, becomes specially noticeable. "L'Arlésienne" is essentially a novelist's play. It deals in great measure with feelings, inward conflicts, and moral perturbations, better suited for exposition in the pages of a writer addicted to psychological analysis, than for indication by the more rapid method appropriate to a stage play. In any case, it may, perhaps, be questioned whether all the skill of novelist and essayist combined would succeed in defending, as consonant with life as we find it, the theory of love which is employed as the basis of many a romance in this country and of many more in France.

John Stuart Mill has somewhere remarked upon the exaggerated prominence accorded to this passion by some writers of fiction, who, not satisfied with regarding it as an immensely powerful motor in the conduct of human affairs, such as it undoubtedly is, seem inclined to treat it as the all in all and sole ambition of life, as the one irresistible influence under whose sway men and women are rendered utterly helpless in their battle with destiny. Whether or not "The Love that Kills" is to be ranked among the stern realities of life, or to be relegated to the realm of the poet's fancies, and to such conceptions as Alfred de Musset's charming "On ne badine pas avec l'amour," is a discussion which scarcely arises in the present case; for the fact that the victim of this incurable passion well knows the worthlessness of its object certainly serves to detract materially from our sympathy and belief. Nor is the experiment of omitting the title-rôle from the play altogether a happy one. The beautiful, heartless "Arlésienne" who, by her treachery, wrecks the happiness of a home, is heard of, but never seen. Thus attention is confined to the anguish, delineated with considerable force and feeling by Miss Sophie Eyre, of a doting mother condemned to watch the progress of a fatal love-sickness that slowly undermines the mental and bodily health of her son, and finally drives him to suicide. With the difficulties of the latter very trying part, Mr. Laurence Cautley coped always bravely and sometimes successfully. But there is another victim to the dreadful malady, in the person of Baltazar, a shepherd (Mr. Julian Cross), who, however, manages to attain to a good, but doleful old age, in spite of his disappointment; and it is during his meeting, after many years of separation, with the now aged idol of his heart, that what we have ventured to call a touch of unconscious humour occurs. It will be taken for granted that Miss Norreys, as a pretty, artless village maiden, lent considerable charm to the scene. She acted, moreover, with genuine feeling, and proved her capacity for parts of a more emotional kind than have hitherto been allotted to her. That Patron Marc, the ostensibly comic character, is not very mirth-inspiring, and has really nothing to do with the action, is not the fault of Mr. Arthur Roberts, who does all that is possible to relieve the gloomier episodes. Without Bizet's beautiful incidental music, the piece would at times certainly flag, and the manner in which portions that would be otherwise ineffective have been idealised by the composer's aid, should supply a hint to both musicians and managers. Of this music, much has already been made familiar in the concert-room. The strains, purely incidental to the action, are appropriately pastoral in character, and include rustic choruses, one of which is written in canon, village dances, and a particularly charming slow melody, full of pathos and sad expectation, which is played sotto voce by the orchestra before the opening of the final tragic act. The performance of both chorus and orchestra, the latter under the direction of Mr. Ivan Caryll was, throughout, excellent.

TARES.

There is so much good stuff in Mr. Oscar Beringer's new play "Tares," performed for the first time at the Prince of Wales's Theatre last Tuesday afternoon, that the old question arises, how is it that the many experienced persons associated with the production should have failed to urge the necessity of compression and of some other changes, while yet there was time, instead of leaving it to critics to point out after the event? Had this been done, there is no reason why the interest aroused in the story and in the many excellent bits of characterisation which occur in its development, should not have been maintained to the end, instead of receiving a check from time to time by the needlessly-long explanations and over-written speeches. Let us hasten to add that the strong sympathy enlisted at first in the principal personages of the piece, though it may have fluctuated was never wholly lost. The first act was charmingly conceived, and, ending with an effective situation, raised high expectations; the second, which ought to have been the strongest, was the weakest; while the last contained some excellent ideas which would have created even a deeper impression but for the defects hinted at, and, alas, it must be added, were it not for a certain unpleasantness in the leading motive. Things, for instance, are not fully explained in the first act, and we think it a mistake that the audience should be permitted even for a moment to surmise that the infant found seven years before in the rectory garden, and since then adopted in the rector's family, may possibly turn, out to be the illegitimate child of the loveable daughter of the house, Margaret Gyde. The cross purposes and cross suspicions having reference to this awkward problem, by means of which she and her former lover, each suspecting the other, are kept apart throughout the play, seem, however unintentionally, to somewhat hurt our conception of the noble-minded, guileless girl, otherwise so charmingly presented. Nor is it easy to believe that however intense Margaret Gyde's affection for the lad she had reared with more than motherly care, it would have been sufficient, unless it amounted to an actual monomania, to induce her at one time to make a false accusation against herself, rather than part with him. There were also some bewildering features in the unexpected introduction of strangulation for the final tragic dénoûment. To sum up, there are, in this piece, some drawbacks, but, on the other hand, much cleverness and promise of future good work; and it is pleasant to be able to record the very encouraging reception given by the audience, last Tuesday, to a play written by a lady bearing a name so intimately associated with music. We cannot offer her a better wish than that in all her future efforts she may be as fortunate in her interpreters as on the present occasion. It would, indeed, be difficult to imagine better work than that contributed by all concerned, from the heroine down to the nurse and gardener.

Of Miss Janet Achurch we have already expressed our opinion, when noticing her début in "Devil's Carefoot," that she is likely to make her mark on the English stage. Miss Sophie Eyre represented the erring, scornful, and finally repentant governess with admirable art. Mr. Forbes-Robertson as Nigel Chester, Mr. Lewis Waller as the villainous cousin, Mr. Allen Beaumont, Mr. Harry Eversfield, Miss Annie Hughes, Mrs. Gaston Murray, all did excellent work, and the valuable services of Mr. R. Pateman were clearly perceptible in the superior manner in which the piece was staged. Special applause was accorded to Miss Vera Beringer's Jack, and it is fair to say that she would have obtained this even had her relationship to the authoress been concealed.

Next Week's Music.

This Day (Saturday).
Madame de Pachmann	Princes' Hall.	3
Popular Concert	St. James's Hall.	3
"Elijah"	Albert Hall.	3
Charity Concert	Ladbroke Hall.	8
Monday, 6.
Popular Concert	St. James's Hall.	8 30
Tuesday, 7.
M. Pradeau	Princes' Hall.	3
London Symphony Concert	St. James's Hall.	8.30
Chamber Concert	Grosvenor Gallery.	8.30
Trinity College	Mandeville Place.	8
Wednesday, 8.
Mr. and Mrs. Henschel	Princes' Hall.	3
Miss Esther Barnett	St. James's Hall.	3
London Ballad Concert	St. James's Hall.	8
Thursday, 9.
Miss Grace Woodward	Highbury Athenæum.	8

Music Publishers' Weekly List.

SONGS.
By another way (sacred song) (C to F)	G. Gilbert, F.C.O.	Novello.
Marriage Song (D to G)	... ...	J. Williams.
Six Songs to Browning's words (One way of loving, Misconception, Nay, but you who do not love her. Apparitions, James Lee's wife, A Lover's quarrel)	E. C. Gregory	Novello.
CANTATA, ANTHEMS.
Give ear to my prayer	C. Darnton	Curwen.
Rejoice the soul of Thy servant	,,	,,
Soul's Pilgrimage	W. H. Hadow	,,
The Lord is my Shepherd	R. E. Bryson	Smith, Liverpool.
Te Deum	J. Macmeikan	Hart & Co.
PIANOFORTE.
Tarantella	W. Dawson	Dawson, Liverpool.

PROVINCIAL.

Birmingham, Jan. 31.—The distinct advance which Mr. Stocklev's orchestra has made was clearly defined on the occasion when Mr. F. H. Cowen consented to come among us to conduct his latest orchestral work, his fifth Symphony in F. That a provincial orchestra composed, with one or two exceptions, of local men, could do justice to and fully interpret a work of such magnitude, bristling with untold difficulties, was manifested here to the great satisfaction of the composer himself and of the critical audience then assembled on the occasion of Mr. Stockley's second orchestral concert of the current series. Mr. Cowen's Symphony was fully reviewed in these columns in June last; and the deep impression it created in the minds of all earnest musicians at the time, was in a high degree corroborated here, and the general verdict spoke in favour of the gifted English composer. The Symphony does not appeal to the multitude. Musicians only can appreciate the wondrous orchestration, clever tone-painting, and musicianly scholarship; and although the Symphony No 5 may be counted as Mr. Cowen's greatest work, yet the Scandinavian and Cambrian will find more favour with the general public. The various movements were played with great care, and the performers were evidently on their mettle. The horns, trombones, and bassoons were superb, and the strings, lead by Messrs. Abbott and Ward, deserve a word of high commendation. Mr. Cowen at the close was most heartily applauded, and had to re-appear in the orchestra to receive the acclamation he fully merited. The other orchestral items were Berlioz's Hungarian March and Danse des Sylphes from "Faust," Flotow's Stradella Overture, Weber's Invitation à la Valse, and a trivial piece called "Forget me Not," by Allan Macbeth, quite unworthy of such an orchestra, and which would have found a worthier resting place in the "Wood of Birnam." Mr. Stockley, as usual, conducted with musicianly skill and judgment. The vocalists were Miss Eleanor Rees and Mr. Orlando Harley. Both artists were in excellent voice, and created a much better impression than when last we heard them in the Town-hall. The audience greeted them with genuine enthusiasm and vociferous applause. Messrs. Harrison's third popular concert on Monday last may be truly styled popular, the programme consisting of items which a fashionable audience at a fashionable concert can appreciate. The hall was again crowded, and all the world and his wife were present. Messrs. Harrison well know how to cater for all tastes, and therein lies the secret of their great success. The artists who appeared were Mdlle. Antoinette Trebelli, Miss Alice Whitacre, Madame Trebelli, Mr. Henry Piercy, Mr. Barrington Foote, and Mr. Edward Lloyd; solo violoncello, Mr. Joseph Hollman; solo organ, Mr. Halliley; solo pianoforte and conductor, Signor Bisaccia. Miss Alice Whitacre, who made her début here, at once established her reputation as an artist, possessing a pure soprano of high range, and whose vocalisation shows most careful training and high finish. THE MUSICAL WORLD of November 27th, 1886, brought out an excellent likeness of Miss Whitacre, and at the time predicted a successful future for the American singer, which since then has been realised to a degree. The reception accorded to her by an immense assembly must have been highly gratifying to the charming young artist. Madame and Mdlle. Trebelli earned enthusiastic applause and encores. Cela va sans dire. Madame Trebelli sang the gavotte from "Mignon" for the encore, and Mdlle. Trebelli gave Auber's "Laughing Song," and "Within a Mile." The latter we think was not suitable. Mr. Edward Lloyd showed no signs of his recent illness, and sang to perfection. We cannot sufficiently express the delight which Mr. Barrington Foote gave by his impressive singing. His voice has gained immensely, his enunciation is perfect, and we consider that he will rank as the foremost baritone in this country. Mr. Henry Piercy, who only lately sang in the "Messiah" here made a most favourable impression. The encores were too many to be enumerated, and in conclusion we must not omit saying that Monsieur Joseph Hollman, as violoncellist, and Signor Bisaccia, as accompanist and solo pianist, won golden laurels at one of the most enjoyable concerts Messrs. Harrison ever gave. Major Thomas Casson from Denbigh will deliver a lecture on his "Organ Building Reform," on Saturday next, before the members of the Birmingham and Midland Musical Guild. The Birmingham Festival Choral Society will produce next week, for the first time here, Dr. Villiers Stanford's cantata "The Revenge," also Dvorak's "Spectre's Bride," the principals being Madame Dotti (instead of Madame Henschel, who is unable to fulfil her engagement), Mr. Orlando Harley, and Mr. Robert Grice.—O.P.

BATH, Jan. 31.—On Tuesday evening last a concert in aid of a charity was held at the Assembly Rooms, Bath, under the patronage of Lord Arthur Hervey, the Bishop of the Diocese, and under the direction of Mr. Albert Visetti, the conductor of the Bath Philarmonic Society. The programme was a good one, in which the following artists took part:—Madame Pinto Leite, Miss Ellen Shackell, Miss Thorndike, Miss Davidson, Miss Hilda Benson, Mr. Albert Reakes, Mr. Pinto Leite, Mr. Harris, and Mr. Visetti, who also accompanied. The concert was an excellent one, and ought to have been better supported. The daily concerts at the Pump Room continue to draw a great number of visitors. Many new pieces have been added to the repertory, while old favourites and standard works are not neglected. Several "special" concerts have been held already this season, when additional attractions have been offered.

BRISTOL, Feb. 2nd.—On the 28th ult., Mrs. Viner-Pomeroy, a local pianist and teacher of great ability, commenced a series of musical matinées at the Alexandra. With her were associated as instrumentalists Mr. Theo. Carrington (violin), and Mr. Pomeroy ('cello). These three artists gave very fine renderings of Rubinstein's Trio in B flat, and of the andante and finale from Reissiger's F sharp minor trio. Besides this they were heard in solos for their respective instruments. The vocalists on this occasion were Mrs. Wilson-Osman and Mr. Dyved Lewis. The lady, a great favourite here, sang, with much much refinement and expression, Rubinstein's lovely setting of "Keines," "Du bist wie eine Blume," and Hartog's "The year's at the spring, and the day's at the morn." The gentleman who has not been heard here before, showed that whilst he had a tenor voice of good compass and sympathetic quality, he had still much to learn in the art of vocalisation, his pronunciation of certain vowels being also particularly unhappy. The accompaniments to the vocal items were most ably supplied by the youthful daughter of Mr. Carrington. Judging from the attendance at the first matinée the success of the series would seem to be assured. On the 31st ult., another highly-esteemed local professor, Miss Farler, gave her annual concert at the Victoria Rooms. The artists announced to appear besides the concert giver, were Mdlle. Dotti, Mdlle. Medori, Mdlle. Decca, Signori Ravelli and Padilla, as vocalists, with Miss Pauline Ellice (piano), and Mr. van Biene ('cello). Of these Mdlle. Decca and Signor Ravelli, having caught cold, were unable to appear, and it was also feared that the youthful pianist would not be able to put in an appearance, but, happily, she arrived, though somewhat late, and fulfilled her engagement. The concert was not as well attended as it should have been, but the audience were very enthusiastic, encoring nearly every single item in a long programme, of which it is useless to speak in detail. It will suffice to say that all the artists, vocal and instrumental, fully sustained the high reputations they individually enjoy. M. de Pachmann is announced to give a recital here on the 1st March.

MANCHESTER, Jan. 31.—Stephen Heller passed the later years of his life in such seclusion as to cause himself to be largely forgotten, save in his works, and it is probable that there were few in England whom his death affected with anything like a sense of personal loss. Amongst these few must be reckoned Mr. Hallé, whose friendship with the composer was of long standing, dating from their early days together in Paris. Hence one felt it to be a motive both natural and commendable that induced our pianist to replace the programme for his recital in connection with the gentlemen's concerts—Jan 23—by one consisting entirely of Heller's works. The selection was an admirably representative one, comprising two of his sonatas (B minor and C major), Serenade in C sharp minor, Tarantelle in E minor, Wanderstunden, Caprice Brilliant sur "La Truite," and pieces from the "Promenades d'un Solitaire" and "Nuits Blanches." On the whole, the recital seemed to us to confirm the general opinion that Heller's claims to remembrance rest chiefly upon such of his work as he has thrown into smaller forms, for it is in these that his genius finds its truest and most unembarassed expression. It is true that the sonatas contain much that is beautiful, and that ought to preserve them from obscurity; but, taken as a whole, they give the same impression of a want of coherence and unity that we find in the sonatas of Chopin. Those parts of them in which the composer essays a more ambitious flight than is his wont are not always free from bombast, while individual numbers, informed with his perfect charm and grace, would be more favourably heard if they were detached from the chains that bind them, and were played as separate pieces. His minor compositions, on the other hand, are, so far as they go, without a flaw, and are stamped with an individuality as complete as that which marks the works of Chopin; and although they are very far indeed from penetrating to the depths reached by the "gifted Pole," they are certainly free from the somewhat morbid tendencies of the latter. Heller's best work is thoroughly healthy and fresh, and from its artistic and technical value can hardly fail to live. Of Mr. Hallé's performance little need be said. He did not play quite as well as he usually does, though, of course, large allowance should be made for the very short time available for preparation.—At Mr. Hallé's fourteenth concert, Berlioz's "Symphonie Fantastique" was repeated "by general desire." It was evident that this expression involved no exaggeration, for none of Mr. Hallé's orchestral concerts during the present season have succeeded in attracting so large an audience. Having noticed the work so recently, we need only say that further acquaintance with it reveals new beauties, and makes more clear how profoundly interesting it is as a psychological study. Madame Neruda appeared as the solo violinist, and played with the perfect purity of tone which makes her so delightful to listen to. Her elections were Spohr's "Twelfth concerto in A major," and, in the second part, the andante from the "Kreutzer" Sonata, and Raff's "Ungarisches." If this last work had been replaced by the rest of the Kreutzer, we think few would have grumbled. Mr. Santley, the vocalist of the evening, was most successful in Gounod's "Au bruit des lourds marteaux." The grand scene from "Die Walküre" ("Wotan's Abschied" and "Feuerzauber") was finely declaimed, but he hardly succeeded in filling the magnificent orchestral setting which Wagner has supplied to the voice part. He achieved a hearty encore for his rendering of "Christmas comes but once a year," by "Ralph Betterton"—a song seasonable at Christmas time, but otherwise demanding no special comment.

FOREIGN.

BRUSSELS, Jan. 26.—After the triumph of "Die Walküre" another true success has been scored at La Monnaie by Thomas's "Le Caid," with Madame Landouzy, M. Gandubert, and M. Ishardon. The management has secured the engagement for two years of Madame Melba, and the statement made in Paris journals that this successful singer had signed a contract with MM. Ritt and Gailhard, and would appear shortly in Paris, is false.

RATISBON.—Mr. Oberthür, the famous London harpist, has been giving concerts here, astonishing the natives to a considerable extent. The concert he gave at our Stadt Theatre was crowded in every part of the house, and the audience was not chary in its applause. A Fantasie Brilliante for the harp, Mr. Oberthür's own composition, was followed by a "Berceuse" for harp and violin, in which the composer represented his own instrument, while Herr Hans Beer sustained the violin part with considerable success. A Concertino for harp and orchestra brought the concert to a brilliant close. Prince Carnival has been holding his Court at our old Ratisbon, as elsewhere, and one of the musical events of this merry time was an excellent performance of the Operetta, "The King is Coming," by our vocal and orchestral union. The performers were, of course, amateurs, but they acted and sang better than most artists in this part of the world.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER'S

ROYAL IRISH CAMBRIC POCKET-HANDKERCHIEFS.

Samples and Price Lists Post Free.

Per doz.—Children's, 1s. 2d.; Ladies', 2s. 4½d.; Gents' 3s. 6d.

Hemstitched—Ladies', 2s. 11½d.; Gents', 4s. 11d.

—:0:—

BY APPOINTMENTS TO THE QUEEN AND THE CROWN PRINCESS OF GERMANY.

ROBINSON AND CLEAVER, BELFAST.

Dr. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For sore throat, hoarseness, and relaxed throat, also for improving the voice

FOR SINGING AND SPEAKING

without fatiguing the voice. Celebrated in every town in Europe, India, America, and the Colonies. Testimonials from Patti, Trebelli, Patey, Santley, and the most eminent medical men.

Sold in boxes; 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d.; also in bottles for abroad.

A BLESSING IN EVERY FAMILY.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.

These Remedies have stood the test of FIFTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE and are pronounced the best medicines for family use. Tens of thousands of written testimonials bear witness to their marvellous curative properties. They are acknowledged by the whole civilised world to be the greatest efficacy in every form of disease.

Sold by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors.

Manufactured only at THOMAS HOLLOWAY'S ESTABLISHMENT,
78, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

N.B.—Advice gratis at the above address, daily, between the hours of 11 and 4, or by letter

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised & Improved, of
A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR
THE VOICE,
By T. A. Wallworth.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Madame Alwina Valleria, Mr. Iver M'Kay, and other successful Vocalists:

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & CO. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL RECEIPTS EXCEED FIVE MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with immediate possession and Rent to pay. Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY, 39, Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with immediate possession, either for Building or Gardening purposes. Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY, as above.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, on application.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

The Successful Treatment of Rupture

GRATIS AND POST FREE

ALL SUFFERERS FROM RUPTURE should read MR. C. B. HARNESS' Illustrated book on the Nature, Cause, and Successful Treatment of every form of HERNIA. It contains a full description of Harness' Washable Xylonite Truss, which is the most perfect and comfortable appliance ever invented. This little book should be carefully read by every sufferer in the Kingdom. Don't delay!

WRITE TO-DAY.

Note Address—
MEDICAL BATTERY CO. Limited,
52, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.
Corner of Rathbone Place

FURNISH THROUGHOUT (REGD.)

OETZMANN & CO.,

67, 69, 71, 73, 75, 77, and 79, HAMPSTEAD ROAD (Near Tottenham Court Road.)

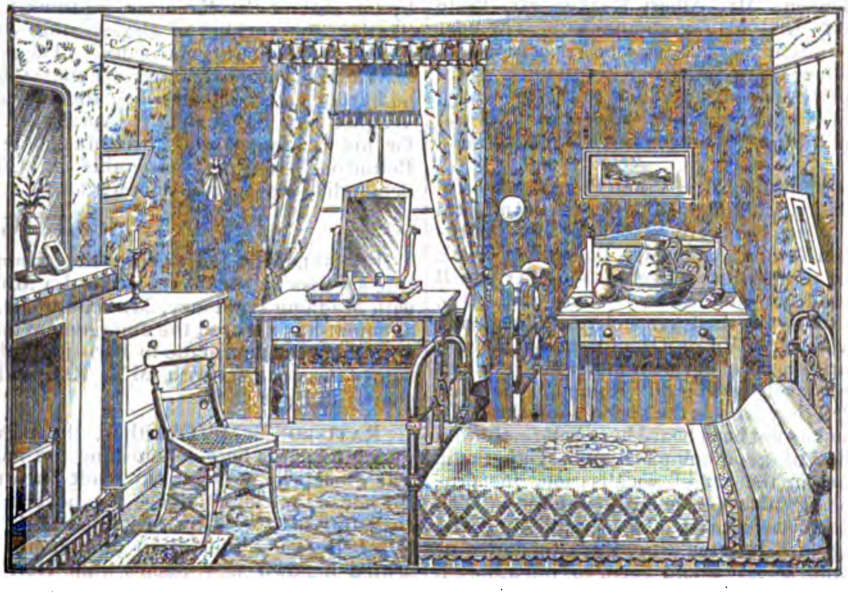
CARPETS, FURNITURE, BEDDING, DRAPERY, FURNISHING, IRONMONGERY, CHINA, GLASS, &c.

Orders per Post receive prompt and faithful attention.

INEXPENSIVE ART TAPESTRY CURTAINS.

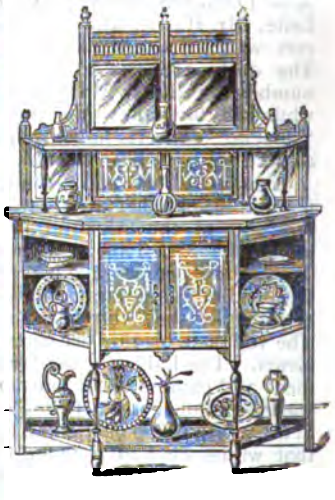
THE BURMESE. 7s. 6d. per pair, in all colours.

THE IMPERIAL. 38s. 6d. per pair, in all shades.



BEDROOM FURNISHED COMPLETE FOR FIVE GUINEAS.

Consisting of Chest of Drawers, Toilet Table, Washstand with marble top and tiled back, Toilet Glass, Towel Airer, in plain art colours or in imitation of various woods. Strong Iron French Bedstead, Palliasse, Top Mattress, Bolster, Pillow, Toilet Set, Water Bottle and Tumbler, Fender, Fire Irons, Carpet (9 ft. by 6 ft.), and Rug. Five Guineas Complete.



EBONIZED CABINET.

Four bevelled silvered plates at back, 4 feet wide.

75s.

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE, THE BEST FURNISHING GUIDE EXTANT, POST FREE.

ASCHERBERG PIANOS.

"I only perform an act of justice when I ascribe my successes to a great extent to the excellent Instruments from your factory, on which I was favoured to play before the public. Remain convinced that I shall at all times and everywhere give preference to your Pianos over all others, and accept the assurance of my unbounded esteem.

Respectfully,

VLADIMIR VON PACHMANN."

ASCHERBERG PIANO DEPOT,

211, REGENT STREET, W.

CARPENTER'S
ANGELUS ORGANS
CANNOT BE EQUALLED FOR
QUALITY OF TONE AND TOUCH. BEAUTY OF DESIGN. MODERATION IN PRICE.
Special styles for Church, Chapel, and School Pedal Organs with one or two manuals
HIGHLY RECOMMENDED BY THE PROFESSION.
Prices from £5 5s. to £262 10s.
HIRE PURCHASE OR LIBERAL DISCOUNT FOR CASH.
Illustrated Catalogues of Organs, Pinaos, and Harmoniums free by post.
SOLE EUROPEAN AGENTS:
JOHN C. MURDOCH and Co., Limited,
91 & 93, FARRINGDON ROAD, E.C., 247, UPPER STREET, HIGHBURY, N.
And GLASGOW, EDINBURGH, NEWCASTLE, SHIELDS, BIRMINGHAM, REDHILL, &c.

THORNHILL'S
NEW "GLOVE" BOTTLE.

For Perfume & Smelling Salts.

Large Variety of Patterns at Various Prices

THORNHILL'S
TOILET CASES
FOR LADIES AND GENTLEMEN

THORNHILL'S ARTISTIC FANS.
A LARGE and VARIED STOCK of the BEST QUALITY.

PRESENTS.

THORNHILL'S
Fully Illustrated
LIST
OF
LATEST
NOVELTIES

POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

THORNHILL'S
OPERA GLASSES.

IN GREAT VARIETY.

THORNHILL'S
Guaranteed Razors Singly or in Sets.

W. THORNHILL & CO., TO THE QUEEN & ROYAL FAMILY. 144, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON. ESTABLISHED 1734.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER'S
LINEN COLLARS, CUFFS, AND SHIRTS.
Samples and Price Lists Post Free.

COLLARS—Ladies' 3-fold, from 3s. 6d. per doz. Gents' 4-fold, 4s. 11d. to 5s. 11d. per doz.
CUFFS—For Ladies or Gentlemen, 5s. 11d. to 10s. 6d. per doz.
SHIRTS—Best quality Long Cloth, with 4-fold Linen Fronts 35s. 6d. per half-doz. (To measure, 2s. extra.)
N.B.—OLD SHIRTS made as good as new with best materials in Neckbands, Cuffs, and Fronts, for 14s. the half-doz.

ROBINSON AND CLEAVER, BELFAST.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE & RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & CO.,
Manufacturers and Importers of all kinds of Strings
FOR
VIOLIN, VIOLA, CELLO, DOUBLE BASS, HARP,
ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO,
Have always in STOCK the Largest ASSORTMENT of any House in the World.

6, GOLDEN SQUARE, W.

Printed and Published by MacRae, Curtice & Co. (Limited), 12, Catherine Street, Strand, W.C.

WEEKLY.]

The Musical World.

ESTABLISHED 1822.
REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED; IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST WEEKLY, 17/6 PER ANNUM (Payable in advance).

VOL. 67.—No. 6. SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1888. PRICE {3D. Unstamped. 4D. By Post.}

THE

KARN AMERICAN ORGANS,

Manufactured by D. W. KARN & CO.,

WOODSTOCK, ONTARIO, CANADA.

The Karn Organ is a reproduction of the Pipe Organ in miniature, of pre-eminent value as an effective music exponent for the Home.

OUR AIM has not been to see how cheaply an organ can be built, BUT HOW CHEAPLY A FIRST-CLASS ORGAN can be made.

OUR CLAIM is that we are building organs equal to, if not surpassing, all others, at the very lowest reasonable prices.

COMPARISON CHEERFULLY INVITED.

New Illustrated Catalogue & Price Lists Free of the
SOLE EUROPEAN AGENTS:

THE SCHREIBER PIANO CO.,
18, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W.

NOW READY FOR 1888.

The Musical Directory Annual and Almanack. Contents: The names and addresses of Professors & Traders in London & Great Britain, arranged in Alphabetical order, the latter under each town. List of new copyright music published during the past year. The principal Concerts given by Musical Societies and others in London and the provinces, &c., &c.

Price—In paper cover, by Post, 3s. 3d.,
Crimson Cloth, 4s. 3d.

Rudall Carte & Co., 23, Berners Street, London.

The Professional Pocket Book and Daily and Hourly Engagement Diary, published according to the plan of the late Sir Julius Benedict, containing spaces for appointments, lessons, &c., being invaluable to those who give lessons, or have many engagements. Principal concerts, meetings, and general information.

Price—In Roan Case, by Post, 3s 2d,
In Russian Leather, 6s. 2d

Rudall Carte & Co., 23, Berners Street, London.

Special Notices.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL CHORAL SOCIETY.
Patron—Her Majesty the QUEEN.
President—H.R.H. the Duke of EDINBURGH, K.G.
Conductor.—Mr. BARNBY.

Handel's "MESSIAH," on ASH-WEDNESDAY, Feb. 15, at Eight. Artists: Madame Nordica, Madame Patey, Mr. Charles Banks, and Mr. Watkin Mills. Band and Chorus. 1,000. Organist, Dr. Stainer. Prices, 7s. 6d., 5s., 4s., 3s., and gallery (promenade only) 1s.

THE LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERTS. — Mr. HENSCHEL, Conductor. — Programme of the Thirteenth CONCERT, WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON Next, Feb. 15, ST. JAMES'S HALL, at 3.0. —Overture to St. Paul (Mendelssohn); concerto in A, for violin and violoncello (MS.) (Brahms) (first performance in England), Dr. Joachim and Mr. Hausman; symphony in C (Haydn); violin solo (a) Garten melodie, (b) Am Springbrunnen, (c) Abendlied (Schumann) (with orchestral accompaniments by E. Rudoroff), Dr. Joachim; violoncello solo Kol Nidrei (Bruch), Mr. Hausmann; Hochzeits-Zug, from Feremors (Rubinstein). Reserved Seats, 10s. 6d., 7s. 6d., and 4s.; admission, 1s.; at Austin's Office, St. James's Hall, and usual agents.—N. Vert, 6, Cork Street, W.

UNIVERSITY OF MELBOURNE.

The Council of the University having decided to create a professorship of Music, Candidates for the appointment are requested to forward their applications, with testimonials, to the Agent General for Victoria not later than the 22nd of February. The Candidate chosen, besides delivering Lectures on the History, Science, and Teaching of Vocal and Instrumental Music, will be required to conduct examinations of Candidates for Musical Degrees, to act as Organist to the University, to periodically report upon the progress of Scholars in Music, and to conduct examinations of candidates for certificated Teachers. The commencing salary will be £750 per annum, rising by quinquennial increments, should the funds of the endowment allow it, to an ultimate maximum of £1,200, with an allowance for House Rent of £100 per annum.

Further particulars may be obtained on application to the Agent General for Victoria, Victoria Office, 8, Victoria Chambers, Westminster, S.W.

ORGANIST Wanted for the Parish Church of Penpont, Thornhill, Dumfriesshire, N.B. Salary, £40 per annum. Must be qualified to train the choir.—Applications, with references, to be sent to Wm. Lawson, Penpont, by the 15th February.

FOR SALE, three-manual ORGAN, 21 stops. A fine-toned instrument, handsome case, richly decorated pipes, &c. Apply to the London Music Publishing Company (Limited), 54, Great Marlborough Street, W.

TO ORGANISTS.—For Professional Practice, Teaching, or Concert purpose, and Home use, the "Bach Model" Pedal Instrument is only reliable substitute for a pipe organ. For design, improved action, connections, and tone, it embraces the merits of the highest class instruments; and without paying an exorbitant price you may have an instrument with organ measurements that removes the deficiencies hitherto experienced in pedal instruments.—Apply for illustrated lists, terms, and prices, to J. L. Scholefield, Musical Instrument Manufacturer, Huddersfield.

THE FRASER QUINTET. Misses Violet (Vocalist), Ida, and Ethel (Pianist, Violoncello, and Viola), Mabel and Stella Violinists), play Quartets, Solos, Duets, two Pianofortes, &c. For Engagements, for Concerts, "At Homes," Dinner and Garden Parties.—Address: 121, Adelaide Road, N.W.

DRURY LANE.—Augustus Harris, Lessee and Manager.—TWICE DAILY, at 1.30 and 7.30. Augustus Harris's Ninth Annual Pantomime.

PUSS IN BOOTS, at DRURY LANE.

DRURY LANE.—PUSS IN BOOTS.—Mesdames Wadman, Lettie Lind, Marie Williams, Jenny Dawson, Leslie Bell, Lily Miska, Violet Newham, Minnie Inch, Helen Capet, Florrence Graham, Mabel Coates, Marguerite Etoile, Millie Vere, Charlotte Elworthy, Alice Hammack, Bettina de Sortis (Premiere Danseuse); Messrs. Harry Nichols, Herbert Campbell Lionel Rignold, Charles Danby, Charles Lauri, jun., Reuben Inch, J. B. Gordon, Griffiths Brothers, Harry Payne (clown).—Box office open daily from ten to six.

Institutes and Colleges.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, KENSINGTON GORE, LONDON, S.W.

Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.

President - - H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES, K.G.
Director - - Sir GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L., LL. D.

Next College Concert, February 23rd, at 7.30 p.m.

The Half-Term will commence on February 13th.

Associate Examination—

The Examination for 1888 is fixed for April 16th. Last day for receiving applications, March 6th.

Forms and particulars may be obtained from the Registrar, Mr. GEORGE WATSON, at the College.

CHARLES MORLEY, Honorary Secretary.

UNIVERSITY OF TRINITY COLLEGE, TORONTO. (The Church of England University of Upper Canada.)

FACULTY OF MUSIC.

The next Examinations for the degree of Bachelor of Music will be held simultaneously in Toronto and London in Easter week, 1888. Women are admissable to these examinations. For particulars apply to Rev. E. K. Kendal, D.C.L., Registrar for England, Southsea.

TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON. For MUSICAL EDUCATION and EXAMINATION, &c., and for the Granting of Certificates and Diplomas in Music. Inst. 1872.

President - - The EARL of ABERDEEN.

HIGHER EXAMINATIONS for the Diplomas of L. Mus. T.C.L. and A. Mus. T.C.L. are held twice a year, in January and July, and are open to persons of either sex, whether students of the College or not. Special Certificates (including the positions of Associate Pianist, Associate Vocalist, etc.), are also given for Harmony, Counterpoint, Instrumentation, Solo Singing, Pianoforte, Organ, Violin, and Violoncello, or any other Orchestral Instrument approved by the Academical Board. Candidates may enter for one or more subjects at the same Examination.

LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN INSTRUMENTAL and VOCAL MUSIC are held during the year at the various centres, on dates to be learned on application.

LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSICAL KNOWLEDGE are held at the various centres of the College every June and December. There are national prizes, Honour Certificates, and Pass Certificates.

Regulations, lists of centres, and all particulars can be obtained from the Secretary, Trinity College, London, W.

By Order of the Academical Board.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, W.

GUILD OF ORGANISTS, 35, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C.

Patron—The Right Rev. THE LORD BISHOP OF LONDON.

PRESIDENTS.

The REV. CANON SIR F. H. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., Mus. Doc.
Sir HERBERT OAKELEY, Bart., Mus. Doc.
Sir ROBERT STEWART, Mus. Doc.
Vice-President—WILLIAM PINNEY, Mus. Bac., Oxon.
Warden—CHARLES VINCENT, Mus. Doc., Oxon.

Established to advance the cause of Church music and the truest interests of its Professors, etc.

Members of the Church of England and Ireland, and the Episcopal Church of Scotland, are eligible for election. Subscription: Professional Organists (Associates) 10s. 6d. per annum; Amateurs (Members) 15s. per annum; Life subscription, 5 guineas.

Next Fellowship examination in Easter Week.

Prospectus and further particulars may be obtained from the Hon. Sec., Dr. J. H. Lewis, Staines, Middlesex.

London Organ School and International College of Music.

Established 1865, by the Rev. SCOTSON CLARK, Mus.B.

Patron—His Grace The ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY.

Principal—HENRY CLARK.

THE NEXT STUDENTS' MATINEE MUSICALE will take place on SATURDAY, February 11th.

Piano, Singing, Violin, 'Cello, Flute, Harp, Organ Lessons, with Practice, and Harmony. Private Lessons and Classes.

Candidates for Musical Degrees at any of the English Universities are expressly prepared for the Matriculation Examinations by Oxford and Cambridge graduates (in honours). Branches at Kensington and St. John's Wood.

Apply to the Director of Classes, T. H. Y. TROTTER, M.A., Mus.Bac., Oxon., 3, Princes Street, Cavendish Square, W. (close to Oxford Circus).

Publishers' Announcements.

"BIRD RAPTURES,"
Song (for Soprano).
WORDS BY CHRISTINA G. ROSETTI.
Music (G) MOIR CLARK.

PRESS OPINIONS.

"'Bird Raptures' is a song of exceptional merit. The accompaniment plays an important part, and contains several original, charming effects."—THE MUSICAL WORLD, June 11, 1887.

"One of the most earnest and beautiful songs that has appeared for many a long day."—Musical Standard, Dec. 23, 1887.

"When the public can appreciate a song like this, the trade of the vulgar ballad-monger will be gone."—Musical Review, December, 1887.

BY THE SAME COMPOSER,
"BAUVA,"
Four Sketches for Pianoforte Duet.

"Admirably written, and marked by an originality which will recommend them to pianists of culture."—THE MUSICAL WORLD, June 11, 1887.

STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER AND Co., 84, New Bond Street, W.

TO be performed at the CRYSTAL PALACE, FEBRUARY 18,
"THE DAY-DREAM."
Cantata for Solo Voices, Chorus, and Orchestra.
The Poetry by
ALFRED LARD TENNYSON.
The Music Composed by
CHARLTON T. SPEER.
PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.
LONDON AND NEW YORK:—NOVELLO, EWER, AND CO.

Just Published, with Portrait, fcap., cloth, 1s. 6d.

BIOGRAPHIES of GREAT COMPOSERS.
HANDEL,
By J. CUTHBERT HADDEN.

LONDON: W. H. ALLEN & CO., 13, WATERLOO PLACE.

THE TONIC SOL-FA METHOD

Is endorsed by the following musicians:

SIR ROBERT STEWART.
DR. STAINER.
DR. BRIDGE.
MR. BARNBY.
MR. HENRY LESLIE.
MR. E. H. TURPIN.
MR. BRINLEY RICHARDS (deceased).
MR. E. PROUT.
PROF. HELMHOLTZ.
MR. A. R. GAUL.
MR. A. J. ELLIS, F.R.S.

Those desirous of becoming acquainted with the system should purchase

HOW TO READ MUSIC. 1s.
TONIC SOL-FA PRIMER. 1s.
SPECIMEN LESSONS. 1s. 6d.
HOW TO OBSERVE HARMONY. 2s.
THE STANDARD COURSE. 3s. 6d.

London: J. CURWEN & SONS, 8 & 9, Warwick Lane, E.C.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised & Improved, of
A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR
THE VOICE,
By T. A. Wallworth.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Madame Alwina Valleria, Mr. Iver M'Kay, and other successful Vocalists:

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & CO. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER'S
ROYAL IRISH CAMBRIC POCKET-HANDKERCHIEFS.

Samples and Price Lists Post Free.

Per doz.—Children's, 1s. 2d.; Ladies', 2s. 4½d.; Gents' 3s. 6d.

Hemstitched—Ladies', 2s. 11½d.; Gents', 4s. 11d.

BY APPOINTMENTS TO THE QUEEN AND THE CROWN PRINCESS OF GERMANY.

ROBINSON AND CLEAVER, BELFAST.

Professional Cards.

The subscription for a "card" space in these columns is £1 10s. for six months, and £1 per quarter—payable in advance, including copy of the paper each week. Subscriptions should be sent to the office of THE MUSICAL WORLD 12, Catherine Street, Strand, London, W.C.

Conductors and Composers.

Mr. FREDERIC H. COWEN,
73, HAMILTON TERRACE,
ST. JOHN'S WOOD, N.W.

Mr. WILHELM GANZ
(Professor of the Pianoforte, Composer, and Conductor),
126, HARLEY STREET, W.

Mr. F. KILVINGTON HATTERSLEY,
A.R.A.M.
(Professor of the Pianoforte, Composer, and Conductor),
17, FINSBURY PARK VILLAS,
GREEN LANES, N.

Mr. ALBERT VISETTI
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Conductor),
12, WESTBOURNE PARK TERRACE, W.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN
(Guitar, Concertina, and Gigelira. Wood and Straw Instrument),
22A, DORSET STREET, PORTMAN SQUARE, W.

Mr. F. ST. JOHN LACY
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Vocalist) (baritone),
FITZROY MANSION, CHARLOTTE STREET,
FITZROY SQUARE, W.

Mr. H. MARTYN VAN LENNEP
(Teacher of Singing, Composer, and Conductor),
Address—7, WIMPOLE STREET,
CAVENDISH SQUARE, W.

Mr. G. ARTHUR HIGGS, F.C.O.
L. Mus. and Tallis Gold Medallist. T.C.L. Pupil of Mr. Albert Visetti. Teacher of Singing, Harmony, Conductor, and Vocalist. (Baritone.)
Address—TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON, W.

Vocalists—Sopranos.

Madame VALLERIA
(Opera and Concerts),
BOSWORTH HOUSE, HUSBAND'S BOSWORTH,
RUGBY.

Miss EDITH DESMOND
(Opera and Concerts),
c/o NOLAN & JACKSON.

Miss KATE FLINN
(Concerts and Oratorios),
41, WELBECK STREET,
CAVENDISH SQUARE, W.

Mdlle. VELMI
(Opera and Concerts),
7, CHESILTON ROAD, MUNSTER PARK,
FULHAM, S.W.

Miss AGNES LARKCOM
Has removed to
158, PORTSDOWN ROAD, W.

Madame ISABEL GEORGE, L.R.A.M.
(Concert and Oratorio),
29, ALBANY STREET, REGENT'S PARK, N.W.

Contraltos.

Miss JOSEPHINE CRAVINO
(Concerts and Oratorio),
2, SEDGMOOR VILLAS,
Private Lessons given. CAMBERWELL, S.E.

Miss MARY E. DAKIN, R.A.M.
(Mez. Sop.),
(Ballads, Oratorio, &c.
31, MONMOUTH ROAD,
BAYSWATER, LONDON, W.

Miss LENA LITTLE
(Concerts),
42, NORFOLK SQUARE, HYDE PARK, W.

Contraltos.—Continued.

Miss PATTIE MICHIE,
68, PARK WALK, FULHAM ROAD,
LONDON, S.W.

Madame OSCAR POLLACK
(Concerts).
56, DUCHESS ROAD,
EDGBASTON, BIRMINGHAM.

Tenors.

Mr. BARTON McGUCKIN
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
c/o MR. ALFRED MOUL,
26, OLD BOND STREET, W.,
Or, 270, ELGIN AVENUE, MAIDA VALE, W.

Mr. ARNOLD BREEDEN
(Concerts, Oratorio, and Opera),
Address—N. VERT, Esq.,
6, CORK STREET, W.

Mr. SEYMOUR JACKSON
(Concerts and Oratorio).
OLD TRAFFORD, MANCHESTER.

Mr. PAYNE CLARKE
(Concerts and Oratorio).
28, DEVONSHIRE STREET, ISLINGTON, N.

Mr. J. DALGETY HENDERSON,
GOTHIC LODGE,
LORDSHIP LANE, S.E.

Mr. REDFERN HOLLINS,
30, ST. STEPHEN'S AVENUE,
SHEPHERD'S BUSH, W.

Mr. BERNARD LANE,
60, WESTBOURNE PARK VILLAS, W.

Chevalier EDWARD SCOVEL
(Opera, Concerts, and Oratorio),
HOTEL DE L'EUROPE,
MILAN, ITALY.

Mr. W. ESMOND,
24, UPPER MOUNT STREET, DUBLIN.

Baritones.

Mr. WALTER CLIFFORD
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concerts);
c/o N. VERT, Esq.,
6, CORK STREET, W.

Mr. FREDERIC KING
(Concerts and Oratorio),
19, CANFIELD GARDENS, S. HAMPSTEAD.

Mr. NORRIS CROKER,
EGREMONT, CROXTED ROAD,
WEST DULWICH, S.E.

Mr. JOSEPH LYNDE
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concerts),
63, STAFFORD PLACE,
BUCKINGHAM GATE, S.W.

Mr. ALBERT REAKES
(Bass-Baritone, of the "London Ballad Singers," Oratorios, Concerts, &c.),
30, LANCASTER ROAD,
NOTTING HILL, W.

Herr RAGNAR GREVILLIUS
(Concerts, Oratorio, and Opera),
70, PORTSDOWN ROAD, MAIDA VALE, W.

Bass.

Mr. WATKIN MILLS requests that in future all communications respecting Concerts, &c., be addressed to his residence, Huntcliffe, Bexley, Kent.

Mr. FRANK CELLI
(Concerts and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. N. VERT, 6, CORK ST.,
BURLINGTON GARDENS, W.

Trumpet and Cornet.

Mr. THOMAS HARPER,
185, KING'S ROAD, N.W

Pianoforte.

Mr. G. PRADEAU
(Lessons and Recitals),
1, STOWE ROAD,
SHEPHERD'S BUSH, W.

Guitar.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN, Guitariste, Instructress to H.R.H. the Princess Louise, has returned to town, 22A, DORSET STREET, PORTMAN SQUARE, W., where may be had her celebrated book, "Learning the Guitar Simplified," 10s. 6d.

Violin.

Mr. ALLAN CAMPBELL
(Formerly Pupil of Mr. Henry Holmes and Dr. S. S. Wesley),
23, THICKET ROAD,
Pupils visited and received. ANERLEY, S.E.

Mr. JULES KOOPMAN
(Late Professor at Conservatoire Groningen. Lessons, Concerts, and Private Soirées),
109, SUTHERLAND GARDENS, W.,
Or, STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER & Co.,
84, NEW BOND STREET, W.

Mr. LESLIE CROTTY and
Madame GEORGINA BURNS,
c/o Mr. ALFRED MOUL (sole agent),
26, OLD BOND STREET, W.

MISS AGNES JANSON requests that all communications respecting engagements may be sent to her new address, 34A, Gloucester Place, Portman Square, W.; or to Mr. N. VERT, 6, Cork Street, W.

MR. HEALEY'S SPECIAL LIST.

Madame LILIAN NORDICA (Soprano)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert),
Address to
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mdlle. LOUISE LABLACHE (Mez. Sop.)
(Opera and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W

Mdlle. HELENE HASTREITER (Contr.)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert)
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Madame BELLE COLE (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. JOHN PROBERT (Tenor)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. VAUGHAN EDWARDES (Baritone)
(Concerts and Oratorio),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. MULES BROWN (Baritone)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. HENRY POPE (Bass)
(Opera, Concerts, and Oratorio),
Business Manager. W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. T. L. CAMPION (Bass)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. WILLIAM NICHOLL,
28, BELSIZE ROAD, N.W.,
Or, Sole Agent, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES.

Public Speakers and Singers

Can use "Brown's Bronchial Troches" as freely as requisite, containing nothing that can injure the system. They are invaluable in allaying the hoarseness and irritation incident to vocal exertion, effectually Clearing and Strengthening the Voice.

"They seem to act specially on the organs of the voice, and produce a clear enunciation."—MARIE ROZE-MAPLESON.

Ask. for and obtain only "Brown's Bronchial Troches." Sold everywhere at 1s. 1½d a box.

ORGANISTS AND ORGAN STUDENTS.

You are kindly requested to write for Ainsworth's "New Patent Organ Pedal Combination List." Ainsworth's "New Patent" is perfectly unique and may be combined easily with any Piano. It is the only one which may be safely combined with any Piano without deteriorating the instrument. Having put down at my works two engines and machinery of the most desirable kind, I am now supplying my goods at a price which enables every organist and organ student to have always ready for use in his Studio an

ORGAN PEDAL PIANO,

AFFORDING PERFECTLY UNIQUE PEDAL PRACTICE.

34, Sheen Park, Richmond.

DEAR SIR,—I have deferred writing to comment upon your Pedals and Action now attached to my pianoforte until I could satisfy myself of their utility and efficiency. I can now conscientiously say that they more than fulfil all my anticipations. Although I am no carpenter, aided by your lucid diagram I had little difficulty in attaching them myself, and it is impossible to over-estimate the comfort they give to me or to conceive the saving of time one experiences in one's own room.—Believe me, yours truly,

BURNHAM HORNER, F.R. Hist.S.

To Mr. Mr. Ainsworth.

DEAR SIR,—It gives me great pleasure to bear testimony to the perfection of your Invention. I am more than satisfied with your Patent Action and Organ Pedals, and consider them worth double the money. Organists and organ students who desire to improve in the Art of Pedalling, which is so essential to a good organist, will do well to procure a set. I have seen no Action half so effective, and one can sit at the Piano and play, "Fixed in his everlasting seat," or any other organ music, or organ arrangement with the greatest pleasure. The touch of pedals could not be better, and the action is as you say, "Absolutely free from annoyances." They cannot be too highly recommended, as by their use, rapid progress is certain.—Believe me, sincerely yours,

I. B. Thornton,
Organist, Birstall, Leeds.

Cologne, July 16th, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have much pleasure in informing you that your Pedals have given the fullest satisfaction. I have them combined with my practice Piano. Many of my musical friends who have seen them, as well as my organ pupils, are quite delighted with them; and I must acknowledge that I have never met with any Pedals so noiseless and pleasant to play upon as yours. The Action I consider durable, and of very good workmanship. Every organist who desires to perfect his playing will welcome your invention. I can recommend your goods in every respect.—Yours truly,

HERR J. RODENKIRCHEN.

To John Ainsworth, Esq. Organist, The Cathedral, Cologne, Germany.

TOOLS.—In order to facilite the attachment, a complete set of tools are sent (four in number) each one marked for its particular use. By the use of these tools, and following carefully the directions, ANY ONE can make a really good attachment.

On Receipt of Trade or Professional Card, you will receive List, with Liberal Terms.

AINSWORTH'S PATENT ORGAN COMBINATION WORKS
BRINSCALL, CHORLEY.

Facts and Comments.

Mr. Cusins is putting the finishing touches to a new Symphony, which promises to be an interesting, nobly-designed, and largely-developed work.

We understand that at the recent competition for the Mendelssohn Scholarship only four candidates presented themselves, none of whom was found worthy of the prize.

According to an advertisement in the Tablet, it was intended to perform at the memorial service for the Young Pretender, Cherubini's Mass in X flat. What a pity that the loyal feeling of Cardinal Manning for the reigning dynasty has prevented the production of so remarkable a work, not mentioned either in Cherubini's detailed catalogue, or in any of his biographies.

The election of the new Principal of the Royal Academy will take place in a few days, and expectation as to who the chosen favourite will be runs mountain high. If musicians were at all a betting race, the odds on the favourite would vary from hour to hour.

Mr. Barnby, Mr. Cowen, and Mr. A. C. Mackenzie are the principal competitors, and it will be seen that if the Academy does not choose a good man it will be its own fault. Every one will be glad to learn that Mr. Walter Macfarren has retired from the competition, his interest and that of his party having been transferred to that of Mr. Mackenzie. The salary is £500; and it must be cited as a remarkable instance of disinterestedness, that Mr. Barnby is prepared to forego three times that income at Eton, in order to devote his time to an institution which is sadly in need of a strong, though gentle, hand to free it from the rank growths of mediocrity and old fogeydom.

Mr. Thomas Threlfall has been selected chairman, and his appointment, a purely honorary one, we understand, will relieve the Principal from the care of business transactions. This seems a step in the right direction.

The terms for Mr. Harris's season at Covent Garden are settled, and the engagements of Mesdames Nordica and Albani, the two de Reszkes, Signor Ravelli, and probably Mdlle. Arnoldson and M. Lassalle are announced. There is also some hope of Madame Valleria once more being heard on the Italian stage, where she gained her early triumphs. Signor Mancinelli and Mr. Randegger will once more be the conductors.

All this promises well. But how about the repertoire? We have more than once pointed out that an operatic season to have any chance of success should include at least one important novelty, and everything in this instance points to Verdi's "Otello" as that novelty. It would be a great pity if the publishers and the impresario should fail once more to come to terms; and if England should thus be deprived of a work which draws its primary inspiration from an English poet.

"Mr. Charles Wade begs to announce that, owing to unforeseen circumstances, over which he has no control, the Grosvenor Gallery is no longer available for his concerts. They will, consequently, take place in Princes' Hall on the dates already announced, with the exception of that advertised for the 7th February, which is transferred to the 28th February." This curious announcement requires some explanation. Messrs. Hallé and Comyns Carr, it is well known, have given in their resignation, for the reason, amongst others, that they consider the giving of concerts and other frivolous entertainments a degradation of the sacred precincts of a picture gallery. But why should the prohibition continue now that these vigorous purists have departed for another and, let us hope, a better place?

Mr. William West, who died last week, at the age of 98, is better known in the theatrical than in the musical world. He was, however, in conjunction with Elliston, greatly instrumental in the first production of Weber's "Der Freischütz" in London. In 1820 Mr. West was lessee of Drury Lane Theatre. Among the songs of his composing were "Bold Robin Hood," and the hymn "Simply to Thy Cross I cling."

Sir Arthur Sullivan's "Golden Legend," has been given for the first time in Cork with the greatest possible success, under the direction of Dr. J. C. Marks.

The prospectus of the Philharmonic Society for the coming season has been issued. Seven concerts in all will be given, commencing on March 15th, and ending June 16th with a morning performance. The principal new works announced are a suite by Edward Grieg, who will also play his pianoforte concerto in A minor, and two orchestral pieces, respectively by Widor and Tschaikowsky, who will conduct their own music. Mr. G. J. Bennett, the young English composer, will contribute a new concert overture, and Mr. Silas, an orchestral work, as yet nondescript. Perhaps the most important feature of the prospectus is the announcement that Madame Schumann will at the first concert play Chopin's pianoforte concerto in F minor. Mr. F. H. Cowen will conduct all the concerts.

Every musician should buy a copy of this month's Scribner's Magazine, which contains the first instalment of a series of letters addressed by Mendelssohn to his old friend, Moscheles. The charm of Mendelssohn's epistolary style is sufficiently known to make quotation almost unnecessary. We may extract however, the following passage referring to Henri Herz, the recently deceased pianist, and showing the estimation in which that virtuoso was held by the better musicians of his time.

> And what do you sad to their hissing little Herz? Why, that testifies to a high degree of culture! Has he consoled himself with guineas and Misses, or was it too crushing? You are particularly silent on the subject, and yet it is true, and Moritz Schlesinger will not be slow to triumph. Well, if he will only abstain from writing variations for two performers, or, if that is too much to ask, if he will only avoid winding up with those rondos that are so frightfully vulgar that I am ashamed to play them to decent people, then, for aught I care, let him be made King of the Belgians, or rather Semiquaver-king, just as one says Fire-king. After all, I like him; he certainly is a characteristic figure of these times, of the year 1834, and as art should be a mirror reflecting the character of the times, as Hegel or someone else probably says somewhere, he certainly does reflect most truly all salons and vanities and a little yearning and a deal of yawning and kid gloves and musk scent which I abhor.
>
> If, in his latter days, he should take to the Romantic, and write melancholy music, or to the Classical, and give us fugues —and I should not be surprised if he did—Berlioz can compose a new symphony on him: "De la vie d'un Artiste," which I am sure will be better than the first.

The sneering reference to Berlioz at the end of the letter is further developed in some remarks made about the same symphony in a subsequent letter de dato Berlin, August 13th, 1835:—

> What you say about Berlioz's symphony is literally true, I am sure; only I must add that the whole thing seems to me so dreadfully slow, and what could be worse? A piece of music may be a piece of uncouth, crazy, barefaced impudence, and, with all that, have some go about it, and be amusing; but this is simply insipid, and altogether without life.

It will be seen that Berlioz's instinct was only too just when he felt that, in spite of the memorable exchange of bâtons—tomahawks Berlioz calls them—Mendelssohn was profoundly antagonistic to himself. The two men's natures were, in fact, opposed. One could not understand the other, no more than Schumann could understand Wagner or Wagner Schumann. To explain these antipathies from mere professional jealousy would be altogether amiss. The cause lies much deeper, and is, indeed, connected with the very essence of original genius. A great creative artist is very rarely a good critic.

The letters, a second instalment of which will be published in the March number of Scribner, are introduced and commented upon by Mr. William F. Abthorpe, a musical critic of repute, who is, however, quite wrong in saying in his first sentence that "few notable musicians have shown any decided literary gift." Wagner, Berlioz, Schumann, Mendelssohn, and Liszt are sufficient to prove the contrary. And if the earlier masters did not write well, the reason was not want of literary gift, but want of education. The rough and ready sentences of Beethoven's letters, especially of his love letters, show a remarkable power of literary utterance. They are like a block of unhewn marble, formless but colossal.

As to the collection of which these letters form part, Mr. Felix Moscheles writes so us:—

Feb. 6th, 1888.

Dear Sir,

The letters of Mendelssohn to Moscheles, which Messrs. Scribner publish in their February number, and announce for March, are selected from a manuscript shortly to appear in London, Leipsic, and Boston as a volume. These letters I have translated from the originals in my possession, and have connected them with a running commentary, embodying the substances of my father's answers to Mendelssohn, and such extracts from his diaries as had bearing on the correspondence. Should the magazine article come under your notice, you would sincerely oblige me by mentioning the volume now in the press, and my share in the work.

I am, dear sir, yours truly,
Felix Moscheles.

Nothing, perhaps, is more characteristic of the the English Church than the indecent haste which is too often shown at the conclusion of the service. This is the more remarkable, inasmuch as an effective ending in the case of a musical service is as valuable as in the case of any other artistic effort. The use of the Triune Amen after the Benediction is slowly gaining ground, and wherever it is adopted, as at All Saints, Margaret-street, and Marylebone Parish Church, for instance, it never fails to add a devotional grandeur to the close of the service. A more extended form is the concluding evening hymn which is used in some churches, particularly in the neighbourhood of Manchester. This consists of a short setting of "I will lay me down in peace," some twelve bars in length, which, when sung slowly and softly, with a gradual diminuendo and pianissimo to the end, makes a very effective close. One much used and quite suitable to its purpose has been composed by Mr. F. W. Blacow, and is published in London by Messrs. Novello, and in Manchester by Messrs. Hime and Addison.

As the Lenten season approaches, arrangements are being made in certain leading churches to hold special musical services. The enterprising organist of Canon Barker's church in Marylebone will not be behindhand in this matter this season, and rehearsals are already in full swing at St. Anne's, Soho, for the performance of Bach's Passion music. This will be given every Friday evening during Lent, and admission may be obtained as heretofore upon application to the churchwardens, or to Canon Wade, the applicant enclosing a stamped addressed envelope. Mr. Charles Wade will again sing the solo tenor music.

At this season of the year, when routs and parties are the order of the day, and at those assemblies which do not entirely taboo "square" dances, various attempts are from time to time made to vary the monotony of pianoforte music. "Singing quadrilles" are generally a failure, owing chiefly to the unwillingness of the company to exhibit their vocal powers, or the unsuitability of the music chosen. Nothing, however, could be more pleasant than Mr. J. Farmer's quadrilles set to such nursery rhymes as Jack and Jill, Little Bo-peep, and Ride a Cock Horse. Even if the company is not sufficiently acquainted with the music to sing the vocal parts, the music alone is sufficiently good and attractive to form an agreeable change from the everlasting "fantasia on popular airs," which is generally the order of the day.

The last resting-place of the Tyrtaeus of the British Navy is threatened, for the St. Martin's burial-ground in the uncongenial neighbourhood of Pratt-street, Camden Town, after lying waste for many years, is to be opened as a recreation ground. All record of Charles Dibdin, except that which remains in the immortal "Tom Bowling," "The Waterman," "Poor Jack," and a few more of his works, will pass away unless something is done, and it should be, to perpetuate his fame in some place not likely to be disturbed. As the all but obliterated quotation on his tomb says,

> His form was of the manliest beauty,
> His heart was kind and soft;
> Faithful below he did his duty,
> And now he's gone aloft.

Apart from his merit as a musician, "grand old Dibdin" deserves more than the passing tribute of a sigh for the real influence the sea songs he wrote had on the spirits and hearts of our seamen during the most glorious period of our naval history. The versatile and hard-working son of the Southampton silversmith never received so much praise and reward in his life-time as to warrant a grateful nation in ignoring his claims to a proper memorial now. Political reasons, which deprived the author of "The Waterman" of his well-earned pension when he most needed it, and restored it to him when it was almost too late to be of any real service, need no longer influence the national mind, and the present is a fitting time to erect a memorial to one of the most versatile musicians of the eighteenth century.

The members of the Lyric Club will shortly leave their old quarters in Bond Street, having taken what is known as the Prince's Hotel, in Coventry Street. This building, which adjoins the Prince of Wales's Theatre, will, when the necessary alterations are completed, be one of the finest club houses in London. There is to be a concert hall to seat upwards of 700, a ball room, and, perhaps, even a small theatre, besides dining, reading, and smoking rooms, and about forty bed-rooms for the use of members. In addition to the usual soirées and smoking concerts, now so well known, dramatic performances and dances will be given by the members; so, to judge from what report says, an attraction of the coming season will be the Lyric Club entertainments. It is more than probable that Royalty will be present at the opening of the new premises, which is expected to take place in April next.

We hear that Madame Enriquez has been engaged as principal contralto for the forthcoming Hereford Musical Festival.

In the small hours of Friday morning, when we are going to press, Mr. Henry J. Leslie is celebrating the five-hundredth performance of "Dorothy" by a ball at the Marlborough Rooms.

A select company is invited to a gathering at the Hôtel Métropole on the afternoon of next Saturday, when the presentation of the address, signed by the past and present pupils of Mr. Pollitzer, will be handed to him on their behalf by Mr. Joseph Barnby.

On February 3rd, at Gothic Lodge, Lordship-lane, Dulwich, S.E., the wife of J. Dalgety Henderson of a son.

Madame Patti was warmly welcomed at Madrid, her native city, on her appearance at the Royal Opera House on Saturday night. She appeared in "Linda di Chamouni" and gave "Il Bacio" as a bonne bouche. The stalls were six dollars to twenty dollars. Standing room in the top gallery cost a dollar. All the leading members of Madrid society were present. Madame Patti receives £3,000 sterling for six performances. She will afterwards go to South America, viâ Lisbon, with Signor Nicolini, starring through the Spanish-American Republics until the autumn. Madame Patti was born in Madrid forty-five years ago.

They do some things better in Madrid than nearer home. At a recent meeting of the Municipal Council of that city it was decided that all theatres not provided with the electric light should forthwith be closed. When will our wretched Board of Works take a step in a similar direction?

Charles Reade, who saw "Lohengrin" at Dresden, said: "Two or three of us had taken a front seat in a proscenium box. Suddenly a stranger took a seat behind us, and expressed himself in such sentences as 'Ach Himmel! Sehr gut! Ach schlecht, sehr schlecht!' and many other gutturals of the same sort, clapping his hands meanwhile and stamping like a demented creature, until he became absolutely intolerable. As soon as the first act was over I sought the usher, requesting him to have the apparent lunatic removed. But I can never hope to give you the gestures or expression with which he replied, 'Ach, das ist Herr Wagner.'"

Madame Joachim, who, since her marriage, had foresworn the theatre altogether, will shortly appear at the Kroll Opera in Berlin, and will be heard as Orpheus, Fides in the "Prophète," and Asuczena.

The appointment of Josef Sucher, the excellent conductor of Hamburg in the same capacity at the Royal Opera of Berlin has received the signature of the Emperor, and Herr Sucher will enter upon his duties July 1.

"The production of books in Germany," says the "Frankfurter Journal," "is attaining enormous dimensions, but it is being hard run by the competition of musical publications." During the last three months of 1887 the novelties and new editions of "Musikalien" reached the prodigious number of 1,700 works, 1,035 of which were exclusively for instrumental performance. This was an increase of 20 per cent. over the number published in the corresponding quarter of 1886. The pianoforte literature dominates the market, and has increased at the rate of nearly 60 per cent. during the year. The export of musical works from Leipzig to North America during the three months, it is said, brought the Saxon city of books the handsome sum of 78,000 dollars.

Heinrich Heine, who has supplied more, and more beautiful, "words for music" than any other poet, dead or alive, is to receive monumental honours in his native city of Düsseldorf. Subscriptions are briskly coming in from all parts of Germany, and the Vienna Männergesangverein announces a concert for the same excellent purpose. But the largest contributor to the fund is the Empress of Austria, who has already sent £2,500, and promises to send more, much to the horror of some of her bigoted subjects. England, and musical England especially, should not be behindhand in doing honour to the poet to whom the art owes so much.

London amateurs who remember hearing the pianist Alfred Reisenauer some years ago will regret to learn that this artist has broken his left arm. The accident befell him at Tiflis before he had completed his tour, a triumphal one, through Russia.

Herr Hanslick of Vienna, whose name and opinions are familiar to the critics of our country, has been giving a course of lectures in Vienna upon Beethoven. The lecturer asserted that the small failings of a great composer's character and little details of his life were worthy of contemplation; and he gave to his hearers several lively examples of Beethoven's so-called "indelicacy" with regard to money matters. In the course of the lectures, Herr Hanslick played three dances by the great master, said to belong to the period of the Choral Symphony. Be that as it may, Beethoven would probably have wished to consign these unpublished trifles, together with the record of his little imperfections of character, to a kindly oblivion.

Il Trovatore, of Milan, has announced the transformation of the Lonigo theatre into a convent, a body of nuns having bought it for use as an oratory.

The American Society for the Protection of Children and other bodies and persons, have taken up the cause of poor young Hofmann, declaring that he was suffering from nervous prostration, that frequently he cried when he left the platform, and was, in short, being worked to death by those who derived profit from his talent. On Wednesday, last week, the infant phenomenon was examined by three medical men in the presence of the Mayor of New York. The conclusion was that the boy's physical powers were in good order, but that he was a child of highly-organised nervous temperament, and must not be judged like other children. He had sustained no injury from his public performances, but ought not to give more than four a week, and, as far as possible, there should be an interval of a day after each. The father and manager were told by the Mayor that they must limit the performances to four a week or he would revoke their licence, and they promised to do so henceforth. It was announced to the father at the examination that a well-known gentleman in this city had offered to give immediately 50,000 dollars for the boy's education, provided he were at once withdrawn from exhibition. The father said he ought to have at least 100,000 dollars. He said also that the boy's health had greatly improved since he began to appear in public.

The interest which has cumulated around the organ loft at St. Paul's Cathedral is becoming greater. The question concerning the successor to Dr. Stainer may be expected to be settled in the course of the coming week, for it is said that the Dean and Chapter only await the return of Dr. Stainer from Ventnor, where he at present is staying, to announce their decision. In the meantime it seems entirely to have been lost sight of by outside commentators that it is the business of the Dean and Chapter, and them alone, to decide on the merits of the various competitors for the post. An anonymous writer in the Guardian, for instance, has thought fit to attack Dr. Martin's candidature, on the ground that the present Deputy plays pieces by the "Modern French School." So far from there being any truth in this statement, Dr. Martin is well known to hold the "Modern French School" of organ composers in very low esteem.

Signor Abramoff, whatever his merits as a singer may happen to be, does not please the critical and exacting audience of Piacenza. The Gazzetta Musicale tell a story of the first performance here of "Mignon." The theatre was full, and the audience demonstrative as usual. Several members were received with great favour, and the Signore Haussmann and Vera-Domelli, as Mignon and Philine roused great enthusiasm. As the opera proceeded, however, the hisses predominated over the applause, until the final trio was almost drowned in the disapprobation of the public. Signor Abramoff, greatly incensed at the treatment he and some of his fellow artists received, gave vent to his feelings by stepping forward and denouncing the occupants of the upper galleries as "Idiots, all of you!" The scene of confusion that followed was indescribable.

The curtain was dropped, but poor Signor Abramoff was not allowed to leave the theatre until a very late hour, for the doors were beset by an indignant crowd. At last he was able to reach his hotel under a strong escort of Carbiniers. Public feeling in Piacenza (like that at Muggleton on the schoolboys' half-holidays) still runs so high that the magistrate (an Italian Mr. Nupkins) has forbidden a second performance of "Mignon."

Among newly-completed Italian operas is one founded upon a poem of Thomas Moore, composed by Angelo Balladori, and entitled "Gli Adorati del Sole."

A great misfortune has befallen Messrs. Gorgo, of Rome, whose pianoforte and music establishment has been burnt to the ground, none of the instruments escaping the flames.

A Music Festival is to be held this summer in Copenhagen, and will bring to light compositions by many promising Scandinavian musicians, as well as works by Gade and others, whose reputation is already great. The scheme comprises works by Kuhlau, Selmer, Hartmann, Berwald, Heise, Horneman, Svensden, the Danish Bendix, Weyse, Lange Müller, Rung, Rosenfeld, Winding, Malling, Barnekow; the Swedish Norman, Lindbad, Josephson, Sjögren, Södermann, Hallén, Rubenson, and Berwald; and the Norwegian Sinding, Kjerulf, Grieg, Elling, and Svendsen.

GERMAN OPERA IN AMERICA.

Freund's Music and Drama says:—"There was no novelty performed at the Metropolitan last week, yet it was one of greatest enjoyment and interest. The production of Wagner's great music drama, 'Siegfried,' on Friday last, which, on this occasion, was given for the eighth time this season, was not only the best performance of that great work which has ever been given here, but it was one which would do the highest credit to the opera houses at Vienna, Berlin, Munich, or any of the large musical cities of Germany, and would be an honour even to Bayreuth. On no previous occasion has Herr Alvari proved so distinctly that he is on the high road of becoming one of the great Wagner singers of the world as on this. He was in splendid voice, and not only his rendering of the difficult and exacting music, but his dramatic impersonation of the character of the young hero were worthy of the highest praise. Lilli Lehmann, too, seemed to surpass all her previous performances. She was in superb form, and made us feel all the more keenly the regret that in this opera she appears only in one, though intensely powerful and impressive scene. Herr Fischer, as Wotan, has seldom been in better voice and more dramatic and interesting than on this occasion. But it was not the individual excellence of the artists that made this particular evening one of the most interesting that has ever occurred at the Metropolitan; it was the general ensemble, the tone, which pervaded the entire production that will not be easily forgotten by those who witnessed it. The house was crowded to excess and the enthusiasm of the audience was unbounded; five and six recalls of the principal artists took place after every act. On Wednesday the 'Walküre' was produced for the first time this season; and Spontini's noisy spectacular opera, 'Ferdinand Cortez' was given for the last time this season."

In sad contrast with this glowing account is a telegram which appeared in the Daily News of the 6th, and according to which the German Opera at New York has ceased to exist. "After losing 10,000*l.* a year for many seasons, the capitalists who supported the enterprise have relinquished the undertaking, and the Metropolitan Opera House has been closed, to the great regret of the large German-American population of the city."

BERLIOZ'S "LES TROYENS."

(Continued from page 87.)

Notwithstanding what Berlioz says, it must be confessed that he became the laughing stock of the whole of Paris, for the following six months, not only in the press, both serious and comic, which never tired of trying to kill him by its poisonous darts, which it eventually did, but also on the burlesque stage. The poetasters and pamphleters, too, were not behind in trying to obtain a passing notoriety by their effusions. This is a specimen of one of the epigrams:—

La race des Troyens aux Hectors est funeste,
L'un périt en héros sans pouvoir les sauver,
L'autre tombe étouffé dans les plis d'une veste
En voulant les ressusciter.

and the following is the title of one of the pamphlets:—"L'Opéra les Troyens au Père-Lachaise, lettre de feu Nantho ex-timbalier soliste, ex-membre de la sociéte des Buccinophiles et autres sociétés savantes." There are many more in the same style, but these are for future historians to unearth, because, at the present time, it would be a rather delicate matter, especially as the authors of some of these productions are still in the land of the living, and not a few occupy positions of eminence in the musical world. But they have since swallowed their own former opinions, and now look as infallible as ever.

With further regard to the "Troyens à Carthage," Berlioz says:—

"In spite, however, of all Carvalho's corrections and cuts, the 'Troyens à Carthage' only ran twenty-one nights. As the receipts did not come up to his expectations, he consented to cancel the engagement of Madame Charton. She accordingly left for Madrid, and the work disappeared from the bills, to my great relief. My fees from these twenty-one representations were considerable, owing to my having written both words and music; and as I had disposed of the pianoforte arrangement, both in Paris and London, I found, to my intense delight, that the interest of the sum total was about equal to my annual salary from the Journal des Débats. I therefore at once resigned my post as critic. At last, after thirty years' bondage, I am free! No more feuilletons to write, no more commonplaces to excuse, no more mediocrities to praise, no more indignation to suppress, no more lies, no more comedies, no more mean compromises—I am free! I need never again set foot in an operatic theatre, nor speak of, nor listen to, nor even laugh at the queer medley of music produced there. Gloria in excelsis Deo, et in terra pax hominibus bonæ voluntatis."

"LA PRISE DE TROIE."

The first part consists of three short acts, and the principal rôles are as follows:—Cassandra, a Trojan prophetess (mezzo-soprano); Hecuba, the wife of Priam (mezzo-soprano); Helen, the daughter of Priam (soprano); Ascanius, the son of Æneas (strange to say, soprano); Æneas, a Trojan hero (tenor); Chorebe, the betrothed of Cassandra (baritone); Priam, a Grecian chief (bass); the Ghost of Hector (bass); and Panthée, a Trojan priest (bass). There is no overture or prelude, and after a few bars of introduction, the curtain opens on a scene representing the deserted camp on the plains of Troy, which the Greeks have just abandoned, after a siege of ten years. The Trojan people assemble, and sing praises in commemoration of the happy event in a spirited chorus.

Soon after, the people make a rush towards the sea-shore, to view the wooden horse which the Greeks have left behind. While they are admiring it, Cassandra enters, and says to them:—

Les Grecs ont disparu! mais quel dessein fatal
Cache de ce départ l'étrange promptitude?
Tout vient justifier ma sombre inquiétude!
J'ai vu l'ombre d'Hector parcourir nos remparts
Comme un vielleur de nuit; j'ai vu ses noirs regards
Interroger au loin le détroit de Sigeè . . .
Malheur! . . . dans la folie et l'ivresse plongée
La foule sort des murs; et Priam la conduit!

This leads to a languishing yet passionate air.

A second theme is then soon heard, in which Cassandra dwells upon her lover's want of perception.

Cassandra falls into tender reverie, and softly says:—

Chorebe! Il faut qu'il parte et quitte la Troade.

As soon as this is said, Chorebe enters, Cassandra recognises him at once, and cries, "C'est lui!" A long and passionate scene follows, and Chorebe opens it by saying:—

Quand Troie éclate en transports jusqu'aux cieux
Vous fuyer les palais joyeux
Pour les bois et les champs, pensive Hamadriade
De vous on s'inquiète. . . .

Cassandra answers:—

Ah! je cache à vos yeux
Le trouble affreux dont mon âme est remplie!
Quitte moi. Pars je t'en supplie!

To which Chorebe replies:—

Moi! partir! te quitter quand le plus saint des nœuds. . .

But Cassandra tells him that:—

C'est le temps de mourir et non pas d'être heureux.

Chorebe, who believes that his betrothed's mind is wandering, then tries to console her, and breaks forth into a strain of rapturous fervour.

This, however, fails to have any effect on Cassandra, who still grieves to see that not even her lover will believe in her prophecy.

She then falls into a frenzy of despair and rage, and in a wild and terrible speech, cries:—

Il va tomber sur Troie
A sa fureur en proie
Le peuple va rugir
Et de son sang rougir
Le pavé de nos rues.

* * * * * *

Chorebe once again tries to console her, and repeats, "Reviens à toi, Vierge adorée," but in vain.

This leads to a duet. Berlioz then, by a happy instinct, makes use of the idée fixe, or love theme, which plays so conspicuous a part in the Symphonie Fantastique, "Episode de la Vie d'un Artiste," and the monologue "Lelio,"* of which he himself is the hero, and his first wife, the unfortunate Irish actress, Henrietta Smithson, the heroine. The first example of the idée fixe appears in a somewhat modified but unmistakable form, first sung by Cassandra and afterwards taken up by Chorebe; and the lovers then unite their voices. Cassandra now becomes more loveable, and in an admirable recitative, tenderly clings to her lover.

The second act takes place in a shady part on the plains near the city wall. On one side of the stage a throne is erected, and on the other an altar. It opens with a sacred march and chorus of much beauty, sung by the people and priests.

This is succeeded by a dance of wrestlers, which has often been played at concerts during the last few years, and therefore need not detain us. The people now bring presents to offer to the gods, and Astyanax, led by his mother, Andromache, places a wreath of flowers on the altar. Priam and Hecuba bless the child, who shortly after, with his mother, retires from the scene. Æneas, in great excitement, enters, and tells the populace that Laocoon, the high priest, who had thrust his spear into the side of the wooden horse, has been suddenly devoured by two serpents, which the offended goddess, Pallas, had sent out of the sea. This gives rise to an elaborate concerted piece, "Châtiment effroyable." Æneas and Priam, to abate the wrath of the goddess Pallas, then agree to bring the wooden horse into the city. As soon as the people hear this, they rush off without a moment's hesitation. Cassandra, who has remained apart from the crowd, all this while, now comes forward. She weeps to see her country going to ruin and that no one will believe in her predictions.

(To be continued.)

---

* Wagner also adapted the same device of introducing themes from his previous works, in the "Mastersingers" and in "Parsifal."

The Organ World.

THE CHURCH ORGAN RECITAL.

A recent decision on the part of the Bishop of Rochester, prohibiting an organ recital at an important suburban church, on the ground that admission was by sale of tickets, seems to bring to the front the question, What is to be the future position of the organ recital in our churches? In justice to the Bishop, and as registering a thoughtful suggestion, it must be added he is said to have proposed a preliminary short service and an offertory as the best conditions accompanying the church organ recital. At the same time, it is, perhaps, well to add that the Bishop does not seem to view music in church with a friendliness which can be called more than neutral.

Dealing with the incident itself, though without knowledge of the surrounding circumstances, it may be felt that the incumbent of the church in question might have done well to meet the scruples of his Bishop, though it is possible, on the other hand, that the arrangements had become too fixed for any convenient departure to be made; and in this case it would, perhaps, have been considerate and graceful on the part of the Diocesan to waive judgment for once. There is, anyway, the satisfaction of knowing that the organ recital has certainly a place in church under conditions of due regard for ecclesiastical propriety, even according to the ideas of an authority whose views on Church music are presumably not of an enthusiastic character.

As it has been shown in these columns that the organ voluntary outside the services of the Church is an institution beyond the control of the Incumbent, it might be a matter of curiosity to know what legal and ecclesiastical authorities have to say regarding the position of the organ recital. However, the organ recital has become an acknowledged and useful institution, and is in no danger of being ousted out of Church, even by those who are obtuse enough to regard sacred oratory as the only art justifying the exercise of personal gifts and training in Church; and music "the ordained means of praise" is once more fixed in her best home, that devoted to public worship. At the same time, thoughtful persons, both laymen and clerical officers of the Church, are much exercised regarding the conditions under which special musical services and even special sermons are being held and given. It may be said advisedly that the manner in which such occasions are announced is perhaps the initial difficulty of the whole position. Is it not true, indeed, that Church duties are liable in these days of publicity-seeking, eagerly competitive professional life to become advertising opportunities? Is it not true that no place seems too sacred and no calling is too high to secure a decent repression of the keen professional instincts of the modern practitioner? A worthy clergyman lately protested against the often marked want of self-abnegation which covers our church walls and doors with flaming announcements that the Right Reverend, or the Very Reverend, or the Venerable or Reverend, Bishop, Dean, Archdeacon, or Vicar will preach, &c.; and to all this display of ecclesiastical authority and prestige is added the constantly paraded letters denoting academical distinctions of worldly stamp and origin. "Why cannot clergymen do their work," observed this excellent, though behind-the-times, clergyman, "without a parade their sacred profession emphatically calls upon them to resign?" But we organists are not in the position to "cast the first stone," for it must be feared that we are consenting to a somewhat needless amount of professional demonstration in our Church work, and more especially in connection with organ recitals in church. Of course, a certain amount of announcement has become, and indeed always has been, necessary, in this mundane state; even church bells are a form of announcement, and it would be unreasonable to ask for too much self-forgetfulness, as it would be unadvisable to deprive the public of the means of knowing what is to be done, and who is to be the doer. Still, it would be well to keep in mind a clearly defined line of demarcation regarding Church and concert room publicity, remembering that such proper prudence will do much to reconcile objectors and to fully establish the Organ Recital as an institution, with certain modifications, quite as well adapted for church as concert room. Then we organ-players are, perhaps, just a little too prone to use music in church carrying outside and secular associations. This may be said, even granting that music is an absolutely pure language, and even bearing in mind that quotations other than scriptural are, when made with judgment, not out of place, even in a pulpit oration. There would seem to be a parallel distinction between sermons and lectures and organ recitals in and out of church. And this natural and not-to-be-thoughtlessly-violated distinction seems to be based upon the doctrine of a sufficient professional self-abnegation, and this self-sacrifice is practically demonstrated in the two directions—an absence of needless announcement parade, and a like care in avoiding an excess of artistic display, or in bringing into church unnecessarily art forms which give rise to associations and memories specially connected with more worldly and freer forms of intellectual delight. There are timely reasons for these imperfect words, which are written in no prudish spirit, and there are reasons specially affecting the diplomés and members of the College of Organists. These artists, as representing the only incorporated and recognised institution devoted exclusively to the organ-playing art, are called upon by public opinion to justify their responsibilities in connection with the one musical foundation able to speak authoritatively upon organic questions and to bestow distinctions indicating the possession of complete qualifications and commanding universal respect, and they are pledged to set examples good to follow in matters of routine appertaining to the organist's duties, and to support only the highest standards of the organ-playing art. Then an appeal is to be presently made by the committee of the Organists' Benevolent Society to all clergymen and organists to aid in building up the funds of a free and much-needed charity by offertories gained, it may be, at organ recitals given chiefly in church and at special musical services. Such efforts will be calculated to bring the organ recital as a useful Church institution still more before the public; and to aid so noble a charity is a truly religious work, well worthy of being done in a truly Christian spirit. The College of Organists, through its now large army of members and diplomés, is pledged not only to greatly help on a good and useful charity, but to largely assist in a complete and dignified solution of the question, What is to be the future position of the organ recital in our churches?

E. H. TURPIN.

ST. PAUL'S: ITS ORGAN AND ORGANIST.

Under the title of "In the Organ-Loft at St. Paul's," the Daily News has an article from which the following is extracted:—

"Ten minutes to seven o'clock in the evening. Already the vast area under the dome of St. Paul's is a sea of faces. The great building is flooded with abundant light shed down from the gas-jets high up overhead, and reflected from the gleaming white and gold reredos. But the enormous spaces of the interior of St. Paul's render the light hazy and dreamy, and it falls all ineffectual on the sombre clothing of the throng, and glints but feebly on their faces, which have a curiously spectral, unfamiliar aspect. Looking from the front across the hazily-illuminated dome, and away down the nave to the western door, the people constituting the rapidly-growing crowd seem to have lost their individualism and to be merged in one silent, thoughtful, expectant personality. Passing in by the handsome iron gates at the north-east corner of the dome, white-robed choirmen and sable-clad vergers are seen grouped in the 'dim, mysterious aisle,' as Samuel Prout was fond of seeing them; and in the glamour of the light flashed down upon them by that gorgeous white and shining reredos they are strikingly picturesque, with broad masses of soft shadows and vaguely discernible architecture all around them.

"On the right hand is a little spiral iron staircase, winding up through a forest of pipes to a small landing, on which are bookshelves laden with scarlet-bound music books; and thence up to the organ-loft, from which, through little apertures in the oak carving, and between the gilded pipes, the organist can look down into the misty void. Aided by cunningly-adjusted mirrors he can be seated here and watch the movements of the celebrant at the Communion table yonder at the eastern end of the church, or the preacher in the pulpit, or the great congregation, by this time stretching away in an almost unbroken mass to the western doors. What a body of people it is gathered here when St. Paul's is full, and when one comes to look down upon them from this elevation! They are surging all round the pillars, away right and left and down yonder, fading off into the mist till one can see only the faintest indications of upturned faces. No wonder that so many of the preachers of St. Paul's experience a nervous trepidation as they step up into that pulpit yonder and face this vast critical throng. The church looks now to be full to overflowing. Down the centre is left a narrow strip of space, and on the left-hand side of this avenue, as seen from the organ, is a straight black band running the entire length of the church, from the reading desk to the western entrance. It is the black coats and black cloaks of the people seated in their chairs at the ends of the rows, and it is the only space all over the Cathedral floor undotted by human faces.

"Seven o'clock, and a sharp 'whir-r-r' is heard somewhere down from behind the great organ. It is an electric signal flashed across the cathedral from the Dean's vestry, intimating that service time has arrived. Electricity plays an important part here. Already a signal has gone down to the engine-room in the crypt, where an Otto silent gas engine has been started, and the swelling bellows have automatically telegraphed back 'Wind on.' It has begun to blow a small hurricane through two trunk pipes leading out of 'Willis's patent cylindrical feeders.' These feeders are four cylinders, each provided with a double set of valves; two cylinders supplying a high-pressure reservoir and two the low pressure. 'Wind on' has been signalled up from the engine-room, and now is heard the 'whir-r-r' from the Dean's vestry to the minor canons and the choir. If the organist is not on the alert, another subdued racket will be immediately set up on an electric apparatus just over his head. But he has caught the other signal, and in a moment an overture by Mendelssohn is swelling and soaring gloriously out into the great dome, and a long, white-robed procession is moving slowly through the crowd towards the chancel steps. As far as the eye can distinguish the people, there is a general stir; but it would be difficult to say positively whether or not they are standing up, if it were not for that black band stretching down the church. That suddenly expands to double its width as the choir and clergy appear, and when they have taken their places it shrinks again. The overture is finished now, and if the organist has anything to say to his choir down in the stalls below, he can communicate by telegraphic wire and speaking tube. There is another apparatus here also. On great days, when an orchestra of fifty performers, and a special choir of more than three hundred take part in the service, an electric communication is maintained between the left foot of the conductor down in the body of the church and a moveable arm which beats time close to the music-book of the player.

The organ-loft of St. Paul's Cathedral is a nook into which, of course, only privileged persons can be admitted, and probably not one in a thousand of the worshippers at St. Paul's has any very definite idea whereabouts in the great maze of keyboards and stops and pipes and pedals sits the sensitive and accomplished musician who has it all in such absolute command. So delicately and completely is he in touch with the clergy, choir, and congregation that Dr. Stainer, to one who sits beside him, seems not so much the organist as the very impersonation of the music that goes out into the dim space. One can hardly think of the organ —now, at least, that he is about sorrowfully to part from it—but only of the man who, when seven years old, sang down yonder in the surpliced choir, and who now, at middle age, has become so identified with the music here and so marvellously familiar with the splendid great instrument he has long manipulated, that it seems to have become absolutely a part of himself. Dr. Stainer is said to have been no mean performer on the organ even when he became a chorister at seven years old. Since then he has had forty years and more of incessant study and training and practice. He became a choir-boy in 1847, and he remained at the Cathedral in this capacity till 1856, during the intervening period very often taking the organ. In 1854, however, he was appointed organist and choirmaster of St. Benedict, Paul's Wharf, and in 1856 his connection with St. Paul's as a chorister was terminated by his being selected by Sir. F. Ouseley as the organist of his then newly-founded college at Tenbury. Previous to this, however, he had studied harmony under Mr. Bayley, master of St. Paul's boys, and counterpoint under Dr. Steggall, and he had taken a course of instruction on the organ from George Cooper, of St. Sepulchre's. In 1859 he matriculated at Christ Church, Oxford, and took his degree as Bachelor of Music, and shortly after he entered on a six months' trial for the post of organist at Magdalen College, Oxford, and was eventually appointed to succeed Mr. Blythe there. He became a resident undergraduate at Oxford, having entered at St. Edmund's Hall, and he took his B.A. degree in 1863. On the death of Dr. Elvey Mr. Stainer was appointed organist to the University of Oxford a post which he was able to hold simultaneously with that at Magdalen, where he will long be remembered for the masterly efficiency of his organ performances and the high degree of training attained by his choir. In 1865 he took his degree of Doctor of Music, and the next year proceeded to his M.A., and was appointed one of the University examiners for musical degrees. He was still quite a young man—only six-and-twenty years of age—and even thus far his career must be allowed to have been a remarkable one, and in 1872 this was recognised by his being selected to succeed to the post of organist to St. Paul's Cathedral. He had been appointed to that post at the time the Queen went to the Thanksgiving Service, but Mr. Goss was still the actual holder of it, and upon him was conferred the honour of knighthood.

"Dr. Stainer came to the post of organist with consummate skill and knowledge, a great amount of experience, and an enthusiasm stimulated with life-long associations. It so happened, too, that the organ at the time of his appointment was undergoing complete re-construction, so that with his assumption of control there was an entirely fresh start, and very soon St. Paul's became as conspicuous for the high character and attractiveness of its musical services as it had formerly been for its dulness and slovenliness. The music of St. Paul's has been part of a great renaissance in all things pertaining to public worship, and here in the heart of the metropolis it has exerted an influence that has been felt throughout the kingdom. It is interesting to notice how great has been the change in all sorts of ways at St. Paul's during the past few years. Dr. Stainer says he remembers standing as a choir-boy by the graveside of Turner, the great painter, at a time when the crypt was without windows and the floor was all in puddles. Everybody remembers when the Cathedral was without the splendid ring of bells it now possesses —largely, by the way, owing to the interest and energy of its organist; and Mr. Green, the highly respected Dean's verger, who has been connected with the Cathedral for thirty-six years, tells an amusing story of his having been one Sunday evening, at seven or eight o'clock, called out by a policeman, who was convinced there was 'something up in the Cathedral as didn't ought to be.' There was actually a light in the church!

"The service Dr. Stainer has rendered to English music everybody knows has not been confined to St. Paul's. As an organist, he has few equals, and in some respects he is acknowledged by the highest authorities to be quite unrivalled; but in innumerable other ways he has worked with all the enthusiasm of genius for the promotion and diffusion of the art he has loved from childhood, and there are few men whose influence on the music of this country has been so great, and so entirely and absolutely wholesome. Such honours as are at the disposal of his brother musicians have been freely showered upon him, for he is universally esteemed and beloved, but his presidency of this, and his professorship of that, and his membership of the other thing, have all involved responsibility and incessant hard work, and a high-strung nervous system appears to have been seriously impaired by it. He is out of health, and as he pathetically expresses it, he is going to retire from his post of organist in time he hopes to save what little bit of eyesight is left to him. He is a man of undoubted genius, and he has impaired his health and all but lost his eyesight in the public service. Now that he is retiring after sixteen years in the Metropolitan Cathedral, it would be a graceful thing if the Government were to acknowledge his talent and his service by recommending her Majesty to bestow upon him the honour with which his predecessor retired. Dr. Stainer is about to settle in Oxford, where, as the founder of the Philharmonic and practically the re-founder of the Choral Society, he will be sure to have a cordial reception, and where it is to be hoped he may regain such a measure of health as may enable him to add to the distinction he has already acquired as a composer. He will not, however, be relinquishing his duty at the Cathedral just at present, and he hopes to take up residence at Oxford some time during May."

DENVER, U.S.

There is more about the new great instrument in the Denver Republican. Great interest is felt among musical people in the magnificent new organ, which will cost 30,000 dols., and which, through the generosity of Mr. I. E. Blake, will be placed in the new Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Walter E. Hall, Fellow of the College of Organists, London, has been engaged to take charge of this magnificent instrument.

The following is a brief description of what the organ will be :—

The entire organ is supplied with Roosevelt patent wind-chests, which are tubular pneumatic in principle and action, affording a separate pallet for every pipe, a light and sensitive touch, and a marvellous rapidity of repetition. The Roosevelt patent automatic adjustable combination action is a recently invented device, simple and durable in construction, whereby the organist may change the effect of each piston or pedal at any moment by drawing the desired selection of stops, and then "setting" or "locking" the same by a single touch to such piston or pedal as he may desire, after which the latter, on being pressed, will instantly cause the knobs to revert to the positions occupied when "set." As this mechanism moves the knobs themselves and releases itself at the close of action, the knobs can be operated by hand in conjunction with the combination action, which is not the case with that form which fails to move the knobs.

Crescendos and diminuendos, of remarkable intensity, and of peculiar and novel effect, are rendered possible by the extensive recourse had to the use of swell boxes, of which there are three, together enclosing every stop in the instrument except the pedal organ and the first four of the great organ.

The most complete crescendo by registration is accomplished by the novel Roosevelt pneumatic crescendo pedal, which acts upon the entire organ by means of an ordinary balanced swell pedal, through the medium of pneumatic power, and which also moves the stop-knobs without, however, locking them or preventing their simultaneous operation by hand.

Though the Roosevelt wind chests, even in organs larger than the average, obviate the necessity of pneumatic action, the latter, in an improved form, has been introduced for the great organ and its couplers as a precaution against a possible heavy touch which might result from the unprecedended number of couplers which appear in the instrument.

The wind for the entire organ is supplied by three hydraulic motors with independent feeders for each, from which it is carried to the main reservoirs in the organ under two pressures, viz: seven inches and four inches. From thence it is distributed under various pressures to the different departments, each of which is supplied with an auxilliary reservoir or "regulator," which insures absolute steadiness under all conditions.

The organ will have a rich case, of dignified and tasteful design, which will measure about forty-six feet wide by thirty-six feet high. The instrument will occupy a floor space of forty-six feet by sixteen feet, in front of the congregation, with every acoustic condition designed to secure the most perfect results.

RECITAL NEWS.

St. Nicholas Cole-Abbey, E.C.—Mr. H. W. Weston, F.C.O. (organist and choirmaster, Balham Parish Church), gave a recital on January 21st. The programme was as follows :—

Organ Sonata in D	Bridge.
March de Rois Mages	Dubois.
Prelude and Fugue in G (with pedal solo)	Bach.
Barcarole in F sharp minor	St. Saëns.
Grand Concerto in G (No. 8)	Corelli.
Pastorale in F	Lemmens.
Fest Overture, "Gutenburg"	Carl Loewe.

Caistor, Lincolnshire.—Mr. Arthur H. Cross, organist of Sandringham Church, gave two recitals in the parish church, on January 19th ; the programmes as follows :—

AFTERNOON.

Grand Sonata tn A, No. 3	Mendelssohn.
Cautilene in A minor	Salomè.
Minuet and Trio (G minor symphony)	Sterndale Bennett.
Fugue in D major, No. 6	Bach.
Allegretto in B minor	Guilmant.
Chorus, "The night is departing" (Lobgesang)	Mendelssohn.
Andante con Moto in A	Smart.
Triumphal March	Guilmant.

EVENING.

Chorus, "Fix'd in his everlasting seat" (Samson)	Handel.
Offertoire on Two Christmas Themes	Guilmant.
Jubilant March in A flat, No. 13	Frost.
Minuet and Trio (G minor symphony)	Sterndale Bennett.
Crand Chœur	Salomè.
Romance sans Paroles	Gounod.
Grand Offertoire in G, No. 4	L. Wely.

Godalming Parish Church.—An organ recital was given on January 26th, by Mr. F. de G. English, B.A., A.C.O. Programme :—

Offertoire in C	Lefébure Wély.
Adagio in E	G. Merkel.
Choral ("Jesu, Lover of my Soul") (with variations)	H. Smart.
Minuet and Trio (Symphony)	Sterndale Bennett.
Funeral March	Chopin.
Evening Prayer	Smart.
Fugue in G minor	J. S. Bach.
"There is a green hill"	Gounod.
Sonata I. in F minor	Mendelssohn.

Westerham, Kent.—Mr. Ernest H. Smith, A.C.O., gave an organ recital in the parish church on Sunday, 29th ult., after the evening service, which was thoroughly appreciated by a number of the congregation. The following is a list of pieces selected :—

Sonata II	Mendelssohn.
Adante Sostenuto	Ernest H. Smith.
Postlude in B flat
Adagio Cantabile	Beethoven.
Offertoire in G	Batiste.
Andante in F	Smart.
The Chorister	Sullivan.
Marche Religieuse	Guilmant.

Melbourne, Australia.—At Christmas time, two excellent performances of the "Messiah" were given. The choir mustered in force and fairly well balanced condition ; the desks of the instrumentalists were as well attended as could be hoped. Mr. George Peake was at the organ, and the whole work was produced under the bâton of Mr. David Lee, the hon. conductor to the Philharmonic Society. This musical organisation has an honourable record, in that its members can show a succession of 35 annual performances of the oratorio.

St. Andrew, Undershaft, St. Mary Axe, E.C.—A recital was recently given in the above church by Mr. W. M. Wait (organist and choirmaster), with sacred vocal solos by Mr. George Ward. The programme was as follows :—

Prelude and Fugue in B flat on the name Bach	Rink.
Tenor solo, "Be thou faithful"	Mendelssohn.
Hommage à Mozart	J. B. Calkin.
Andante in F	H. Smart.
Tenor solo, "Then shall the righteous"	Mendelssohn.
Postlude in B flat	L. Wély.

Brentford.—Mr. John H. Marsh lately gave an organ recital at St. Paul's Church. The programme was as follows :—

Fugue in G minor	Bach.
Melody in F	Rubinstein.
Concerto in A	Corelli.
Offertoire in A	Wély.
Finale in E flat	Guilmant.

Christ Church, Hendon.—On Sunday, Feb. 5, at the close of evening service, a short recital was given by the organist, Mr. H. A. Wheeldon, F.C.O. The programme included :—

Fantasia in C	B. Tours.
"The Lost Chord"	Sullivan.
Serenade	Gounod.
March Triumphale	R. de Vilbac.

This admirably played selection gave much pleasure to the listeners.

Notes.

In connection with the Birmingham and Midland Musical Guild, Grand Hotel, Colmore-row, Mr. Thomas Casson, gave a lecture on his organ building reform proposals on February 4th.

Readers will regret to hear of the illness of Mr. Thomas Helmore, the veteran champion of Gregorian music, whose services to the Church of England have been many and important. He is suffering from disease of the heart, and there is, unhappily, little prospect of recovery. Mr. Helmore is seventy years of age.

The orchestra employed at the festivals in St. Agnes' Church, Kennington, is usually seated in the spacious rood-loft. The other week some capital music was rendered in connection with the dedication festival.

A contemporary observes two facts will always operate against the revival of Plainsong. In the first place the world (both clerical and musical) has learned a good deal about the possibilities of harmony since Plainsong was the uniform music of the Church; and secondly, choristers with good voices are seldom content with unison singing. On the other hand, in country parishes we can conceive nothing more advantageous than the adoption of Plainsong. Undeniably reverent, it has a way of fixing words in the memory, and bringing home truths to the soul which only the very best modern Church music can attain to.

No one will be surprised, though all will regret, to hear that the Rev. Charles Mackeson is at last stricken down by over-work. During the last eight years he has had only one holiday, and his multifarious employments include the charge of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Kentish-town, with its numerous services, bible classes, and Sunday-schools, parochial visitation, and extensive literary and editoral work. Mr. Mackeson is an excellent Church musician and writer on music, and he has given excellent lectures on the subject before the College of Organists, &c.

The death of Mrs. F. Davison is announced. This lady was the daughter of Mr. Gray, the celebrated organ builder, and the wife of Mr. Frederick Davison, the esteemed head of the firm of Messrs. Gray and Davison.

The Rev. A. Wellesley Batson, Muc. Bac., Oxon., takes the place of Precentor at St. Anne's, Soho, vacated by the resignation of Mr. W. H. Cummings, who was preceded by Mr. Joseph Barnby. Mr. Batson has a reputation, and the musical services at St. Anne's will, no doubt, continue to attract.

The new suffragan Bishop of Lichfield, the Bishop of Shrewsbury, is an accomplished musician—probably the best musician who has held the office of bishop in this century. He is associated with the well-known hymnal, "Ancient and Modern."

The centenary of Caspar Ett was celebrated in München on January 16th, by a memorial concert, in which the Choral Union took part, under the direction of Herr Eugen Wöbrle, choirmaster of St. Michael's Church, Caspar Ett (born 1788, died 1847) was organist of St. Michael's Church from 1816 till the time of his death. As a Church composer he was little known, most of his works being unpublished, but he attained considerable reputation, and was highly esteemed, as a teacher of counterpoint. The programme, consisting entirely of Ett's compositions, included a Mass in F for double choir and a nine-part chorus.

An organ recital was recently given in a new church at Berlin by Herr Adam Ore, a distinguished German organist.

A new suite for organ, violin, and violoncello, by Joseph Rheinberger, was recently produced with success at a Gewandhaus in Leipsic. The artists, Herren Paul Homeyer, Henri Petri, and Albin Schröder, were recalled and loudly applauded at the conclusion of the suite.

It is said that a daughter of Mendelssohn was among those present at St. Paul's Cathedral at the service on the Festival of the Conversion, when the new reredos was unveiled. As usual on that day, her father's oratorio of "St. Paul" was sung.

Dr. Stainer will conduct a rendering of his sacred cantata, "The Crucifixion," at Marylebone Parish Church, on the first Friday in Lent, at 8 p.m.

Peel, Isle of Man.—Recently the new church was filled by a large congregation, who enjoyed a performance of solos and choruses from the "Messiah" (Handel). The members of the choral society, including the church choir, mustered to the number of 60. Previous to the performance the vicar gave a highly interesting and instructive address on the great work composed by Handel. Taking as his text the words from Isaiah, "Comfort ye, comfort ye, my people saith your God." The performance commenced with the chorus "And the Glory," the nice equality of the parts being observable. We may here state that Mr. Cottie was the conductor. The choir deserves every possible credit for their efforts, and their success on this occasion should stimulate them to more doughty deeds in the future. The greatest share of the success fell to Miss Wood, A.C.O., who, in addition to having trained the choir, accompanied in a most polished and excellent manner all the solos and choruses.

According to the Nonconformist, "the Bishop of Rochester has prohibited an organ recital announced to be held at St. John's Church. It was then decided to apply for the New Road Presbyterian Church for the purpose. This was granted, and the recital duly given." "What the Bishop prohibited," says Church Bells, "was not the organ recital, but the sale of tickets for admission to the church, which, as every clergyman ought to know, is illegal. Every parishioner has a right to enter his parish church whenever it is open. We have known the right claimed even when tickets had been given to secure space for the friends of the candidates at a Confirmation. Some Churchmen at Woolwich, it seems, represented to the Bishop that St. John's Church was, by the sale of tickets, being treated as a concert-hall, and his lordship could do nothing else but prohibit the illegality. We believe, however, that he suggested the right way of raising the desired funds—namely, by having a short service before and an offertory after the recital."

SHOBNALL MISSION CHURCH.—A new organ, built by Mr. Alfred Kirkland, of 655, Holloway-road, London, N., was recently opened by Mr. Plant, Mus. Bac., F.C.O., and, on the following Sunday Mr. Thompson, organist of the church, presided.

St. John the Baptist's, Nottingham.—Special services were conducted in St. John the Baptist's Church, Leen-side, Nottingham, on Septuagesima Sunday, on the occasion of the re-opening of the organ, which has been undergoing repair and improvement at the hands of Messrs. C. Lloyd and Co., Nottingham, the makers. The organ now contains altogether 27 stops, together with three manuals and a pedal organ. The additions have greatly enhanced the capabilities of the instrument, and the quality of its tone. The cost of the alterations is estimated at about £90, towards which the sum of £53 10s. has been obtained, and when the proceeds of the collections are added this will be considerably increased. Dr. C. Warwick Jordan (organist and director of the choir of St. Stephen's, Lewisham, and hon. organist of the London Gregorian Choral Association), presided at the organ, which was supplemented by four brass instruments—two cornets, a trombone, and euphonium. The processional hymn was 315 A. and M., and Dr. Jordan's Communion Service in E was sung in an efficient manner. The Rev. A. G. M. Mengens preached from the words "And David spake to the chief of the Levites to appoint their brethern singers, with instruments of music singing aloud, and lifting up their voices with joy" (1st Chronicles xv., 16, revised translation). In the afternoon a children's service was held, and in the evening the Rev. W. H. Draper, M.A. (vicar of Alfreton), preached, the words of his text being taken from Psalm lxxi., 21. The anthem was "I will sing of Thy power" (Sir A. Sullivan). There was a crowded congregation, and at the close of the service Dr. Jordan played a selection of music on the organ, and greatly delighted the listeners by his masterly performances.

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS' CALENDAR.

On Tuesday next, February 7th, the library will be open from 7 till 10; February 28, Lecture, by Mr. T. L. Southgate, on "The Physiology of Pianoforte Playing, etc."; April 9th, Annual College Dinner; April 10th, Lecture by Dr. E. J. Hopkins; April 24th, Lecture, by Dr. F. J. Sawyer, on "The Principles of Organ and Pianoforte Fingering"; May 22nd, Lecture; June 26th, Lecture; July 17th, 18th, and 19th, Examination for F.C.O. Diploma; July 20th, Diploma Distribution; July 24th, 25th, 26th, A.C.O. Examination; July 27th, Diploma Distribution. Other arrangements and particulars will be duly announced.

E. H. TURPIN, Hon. Sec.

95, Great Russell street, Bloomsbury, W.C.

NOW READY. PRICE ONE SHILLING.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE,

FEBRUARY, 1888,

Containing the first instalment of a Remarkable Collection of

MENDELSSOHN'S LETTERS

TO MOSCHELES,

NOW FOR THE FIRST TIME PUBLISHED.

Fully Illustrated with Portraits of Mendelssohn, Moscheles, and others, and with reproductions of several drawings by Mendelssohn.

The concluding instalment will be published in the March number.

FREDERICK WARNE & Co.,
15, Bedford Street, Strand.

CASSON'S
PATENT
Organ - Building System

SEPARATE Pedal Organs for each Manual. Expressive and Controllable Pedal Basses. Perfect control of all Couplers. Reduction of number of Claviers without loss of efficiency, &c., &c. See testimonials from

Mr. W. T. BEST.
Rev. Sir F. A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart.
Dr. SPARK.
Dr. J. C. BRIDGE, M.A.
Dr. E. W. TAYLOR, F.C.O.
The late Mr. J. STIMPSON.
Mr. R. BARTHOLOMEW.
Mr. J. HEYWOOD, Birmingham.
Mr. G. A. AUDSLEY, F.R.I.B.A.
M. A. J. HIPKINS, F.S.A.
&c., &c.

Apply to the Secretary—

CASSON'S PATENT ORGAN CO., LIMITED
DENBIGH.

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1888.

THE PEOPLE'S CONCERT SOCIETY.

The popular chamber concerts given by this Society have been noticed before in these columns. The Society have been as active as ever this winter, and have given already, it appears, forty-five concerts. Any detailed notice of so many performances will, of course, be impossible, but we are glad to keep our readers in mind of this persistent effort to promote the popular enjoyment and knowledge of good music. The concerts have included a series given (every Saturday evening) at Poplar, on the far East side of London; another, twelve concerts, on Saturday evenings, in the South Place Institute, Finsbury; and a third series in St. Andrew's Hall, Newman Street. These last are held at four o'clock on Sunday afternoons. The performance of last Sunday was the 407th given by the Society. People may reasonably differ on the much agitated "Sunday question" (and, we understand, this Society makes no profession of being militant on that subject), but few, we should hope, will object to a scheme which gives Londoners the chance of getting, if they like it, some really good music on a Sunday afternoon. The following programme may serve as a sample of the music given at these performances:—

TRIO.—Pianoforte and strings. Beethoven in B flat, op. 97.
SONATA.—Violin and pianoforte. Grieg, in G minor.
DUET.—Violoncello and pianoforte. Chopin's "Introduction and Polonaise," op. 11.
SOLOS.—Pianoforte, Henselt, "Wiegenlied," &c. Violin, Tartini's Sonata in G major.
SONGS.—"Lascia ch'io pianga" (Handel); "The Better Land" (Cowen); "Nazareth" (Gounod); "To Anthea" (Hatton).

The artists at this concert were Mr. Gompertz (violin), Mr. Ould (violoncello), Mr. C. H. Ould (pianoforte), with Miss Marguerite Hall and Mr. Dundas Gardiner as vocalists. The large instrumental works given at these Sunday afternoon performances since October include Schumann's pianoforte quintet, six pianoforte trios of Beethoven (most of them played twice), the two trios of Mendelssohn (also both repeated), Schumann in F, op. 80, Schubert's great trio in B flat, and others; also string quartets by Haydn, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Schubert, Schumann, and Spohr, and the clarinet quintet of Mozart. A large number of well-known artists have taken part in these concerts; the first violinists, to name only one group, have been Herr Wiener, Herr Henkel, Mr. Gompertz, Mr. Sutton, Miss Anna Lang, Mdlle. Dinelli, Mdlle. Brousil, and Miss Gates.

The St. Andrew's Hall series is to close on the first Sunday of next month. At these there is no charge for admission; at the week-day concerts the admission is 6d. and 1d.

On the 18th ultimo the experiment was tried of giving, for the first time, a classical concert in the vast hall of the new "People's Palace" at Mile-end. The room is a magnificent one for sound, but too big, no doubt, for the quieter sort of music to be well heard. But, in spite of this drawback, an audience of some 1,500 people listened well, and apparently with enjoyment, to the Quintet of Schumann, Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto, and part of the "Canzonet" Quartet, and a concert of a like kind is to be given in the same place on the 22nd of this month.

POPULAR CONCERTS.

Last Monday's concert was robbed of a great deal of its interest owing to an accident, fortunately slight, to one of Madame Neruda's fingers, which prevented the rehearsal and performance of Brahms's Quartet in C minor. Madame Neruda, however, had happily sufficiently recovered from her mishap to be able to take part in Haydn's Quartet in E flat, op. 71, No. 3, and also in the popular Beethoven Septet. With the assistance of MM. Ries, Straus, and Piatti, an adequate rendering of the melodious quartet was secured, while these artists, with Messrs. Lazarus, Paersch, and Wotton, played the latter work in the style familiar to Popular audiences. Madame Frickenhaus played Schumann's rather exacting Sonata in G minor, op. 22, but cannot be entirely congratulated on her performance. Her touch is somewhat hard, and she indulges too much in the Sturm und Drang, which some modern pianists seem to regard as the acme of pianoforte playing, a method utterly destructive of his peculiar "colour," when applied to Schumann. Mdlle. Elvira Gambogi was the vocalist, and in Handel's "Si t'amo o caro," and Godard's charming "Chanson de Florian," compensated for a somewhat hard voice by polished and refined vocalisation.

LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The most interesting feature of the Symphony Concert of last Thursday week, was the production of an excerpt from the work of a young English composer, Mr. Marshall Hall. It is, however, impossible to judge of the merits of an opera written on a large scale, from the performance of a single scene. The scene which was presented at the Symphony Concert was from "Harold," and consisted of the "Defence of Earl Godwin before the Witan." The solo part was entrusted to Mr. Santley, but the chorus was unrepresented. Of this fragmentary performance we are only able to say that Mr. Marshall Hall appears to possess dramatic feeling and high aims. Certain crudities and defects are very evident; but it may be said that these faults lie on the surface, and that they are such as can well be remedied by larger experience. The remainder of the concert consisted of familiar pieces.

Notwithstanding the insistence of some good folk that the taste for Wagner is a "craze," or "fever," rapidly becoming a thing of the past, a very large and enthusiastic audience was attracted by last Tuesday's programme, which, with the exception of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, was entirely composed of Wagner's works. The Symphony was finely played, although Mr. Henschel took the marcia a trifle fast. Mr. Henschel's chief failing seems to be an uncertainty in his tempi; the Vorspiel to "Tristan" (bracketed as usual with the "Liebestod") was decidedly too slow, while the statement of the fine theme at the conclusion of the "Kaisermarsch," erred in exactly the opposite direction, being taken at so rapid a pace as to entirely destroy its dignified and pompous effect. On the other hand, the "Siegfried Idyll" was exquisitely played, with all the delicacy and fine taste which are indispensable to the proper rendering of this musical gem. The Vorspiel to "Parsifal" completed an excellent concert.

MADAME DE PACHMANN.

Great interest was felt in the appearance of Madame de Pachmann at a recital of her own at the Princes' Hall on Monday. The reputation of M. de Pachmann as a pianist is now so fully recognised that some curiosity was felt as to whether the playing of his talented wife would show exclusively the influence of his peculiar style, or whether she would have retained some degree of individuality in her performances. It may here be mentioned that Madame de Pachmann, as Miss M. Okey, received her musical training at Dr. Wylde's London Academy. The question of individuality was on Monday set at rest in the opinion of most of the audience. Madame de Pachmann has not attained to the supremely delicate conception and execution of Chopin's music which is displayed by her husband; the neatness and the accuracy are there, without the subtlety and poetry. In works of greater weight and importance, however, the lady showed a broader grasp of the meaning and greater physical force than does M. de Pachmann in pieces of the same school. Brahms's Sonata in F minor thus received on Monday a very excellent interpretation, which alone would be enough to prove the right of Madame de Pachmann to a place among pianists of merit. Two delicate pieces of the pianist's own composition, Schubert's Impromtu Elégiaque, Beethoven's Rondo a Capriccio, and two trifles by Henselt, were further features of an interesting and highly appreciated concert.

MISS ESTHER BARNETT'S RECITAL.

Yet another aspirant to the honours of the pianoforte appeared before the public on Wednesday afternoon, when Miss Esther Barnett gave a well-attended recital at St. James's Hall. A concerto and a fugue by Bach, two of Rameau's fancifully-named pieces Beethoven's thirty-two variations, and a host of modern works, would at one time have appeared a gigantic undertaking for any pianist. But, nowadays, the technique of that instrument, has so far advanced that the feat itself is not a very remarkable one. Miss Barnett, a very young pianist, however, performed that feat in a somewhat remarkable manner. Her memory, her physical endurance, her manipulative skill, and, in places, her delicacy and neatness of phrasing, gave much promise, and more than once excited the enthusiasm of the audience. What at present she lacks is a certain repose and breadth of rendering—these experience and further study may bring.

MISCELLANEOUS CONCERTS.

Mr. Algernon H. Lindo gave his first pianoforte recital at Steinway Hall on Tuesday, the 7th, including in his programme such very diverse works as Bach's Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Beethoven's Sonata in E minor, Scarlatti's Allegro in A, "The Harmonious Blacksmith," Schumann's "Faschingschwank"—of which Mr. Lindo's reading is very different from that of M. Gustave Pradeau, and decidedly more satisfactory; Raff's "La Fileuse" and Listz's "Rhaphsodie Hongroise (No. 9), which two latter, in particular, were very brilliantly and effectively rendered. Miss Bertha Moore's unavoidable absence necessitated her place being taken by her sister, Miss Jessie Moore, whose pleasing and sympathetic style was duly appreciated, as was Madame Osborne Williams's singing of Louis Diehl's "In the golden long ago." An agreeable variety was afforded by Mr. Frank Lindo's clever recitations, in which no small degree of dramatic power was evinced. The concert ended with G. Satter's "Tarantelle," a duet for two pianos, admirably executed by Mr. A. Lindo and Mr. W. Bendall.

The Students' Concert at Trinity College, London, the same evening, lasted an hour and a quarter. Miss Edith M. Idle played Mendelssohn's "Variations Sérieuses" most creditably; Miss Elizabeth Grose's rendering of Mendelssohn's "Presto Agitato," and Miss Emily Rivett's of an Allegro of Götz's, were likewise satisfactory. But of the songs the less said the better. Nothing could well have been much more faulty than the style in which "Ah, rendimi quel core" was given. In "Robert, toi que j'aime," Miss Florence Verey displayed such clear brilliancy in some of her higher notes that it was impossible to avoid regretting that such promising material should not receive better treatment. Considering the unfavourable position of the organ, blocked up in a corner under a low, flat ceiling, the solo on that instrument, Mendelssohn's second Organ Sonata, was a creditable performance.

At Stratford, on February 2nd, a very successful concert was given to a large audience. The artists were Miss Clara Dowle, Miss Sharp, Mr. Maddiss, and Mr. Foster, vocalists; Mr. Robinson, solo cornet; Mr. F. Wood, solo clarionet; Miss Adela Duckham and Mr. A. H. Gaster, A.C.O., accompanists. The Leytonstone Orchestral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. W. T. Haynes, performed several pieces during the evening.

On Tuesday, February 7th, a concert was given at St. Mary's, Whitechapel, in aid of the funds of the Church Choirs' Union, for the Deanery of Spitalfields. The artists were Miss Clara Dowle, Miss Kate Hemming, Mr. W. H. Wheatley, Mr. George Ward, Mr. C. Wolff, and Mr. G. Snell, vocalists; Miss Adela Duckham, solo violinist; Miss Cater, solo pianoforte; Miss Madeline Rowsell and Mr. Harvey, reciters; Miss Adela Duckham, and Miss Cater, accompanists; and Mr. W. H. Ward, conductor. Miss Clara Dowle was encored for both her songs, "Waiting" (Millard), and "Poor Wandering One" (Sullivan), and in response gave "Cherry Ripe" and "Caller Herrin'." Miss Adela Duckham's violin solos, "Gipsy Dances" (Sarasate), and "Fantasia on Scotch airs" (Loepke), greatly pleased the audience, who insisted on her giving encores, when she gave "Spanish Dances" (Moskowski), and repeated a part of the Fantasia. Miss Madeline Rowsell's recitations "The Silent Chimes" and "The Lifeboat," were well rendered, and she was much applauded, as was also Mr. Harvey for his, each reciter having to give additional pieces.

The Artists' Rifle Volunteers (20th Middlesex) held their annual dinner on Saturday last, at the Criterion, Colonel Edis presiding. Major-General Sir Reginald Gipps, Commandant of the Home District, distributed the prizes, which included pictures by Royal Academicians, cups, &c. Subsequently a programme of music was performed by members of the Artists' Musical Society, under the conductorship of Captain W. Henry Thomas. Lieutenant Maybrick, unfortunately suffering from a bad cold, was unable to sing a new song by Stephen Adams, called "Goodwin Sands," but sang another instead, and joined in a duet, "Excelsior," of Balfe, with Mr. Dalgety Henderson; the latter sang most charmingly "The Thorn" and "Annie Laurie." Mr. John Radcliffe, an old member of the Corps, gave a selection of airs with variations on the flute. Private Charles Ganz performed very successfully on the violin. The part songs sung by the members included Bishop's "Stand, who's there?" and, what was one of the successes of the evening, a solo and chorus, by Richard Genée, called "Italian Salad," which is a musical joke on the usual musical marks of expression, in the form of an opera finale of the old style.

The performance of "Elijah" at the Albert Hall on Saturday was a very satisfactory one. The solo quartet was taken by Mesdames Nordica, Belle Cole, Messrs. Lloyd and Henschel, the only encore of the evening being accorded to the contralto air.

AN ELECTRIC PIANO.

Notwithstanding the comparative degree of perfection which has been reached in the manufacture of the piano, improvements and new inventions in connection with it are still the order of the day. Such a one is undoubtedly the new keyboard by Paul von Janko. That invention, by the way, introduces a radical change also in the manner of playing.

Another invention which is announced with a great flourish of trumpets from the States is that of an electric piano. Mr. Geo. N. McCain tells the story of the invention very graphically in the current issue of the New York Electrical Review. Mr. Joseph Webber, a tall, well-built young man of about 24, is a telegrapher by occupation, but for the past two months he has been in the employ of one of the largest and best-known firms of piano-makers in the United States. He has patents on a number of electrical contrivances and novelties. One day, as he passed along Fourteenth Street, his eye caught the word "pianos" on a large gilt sign over the office of a manufacturing firm in that business. The idea of applying electricity to pianos struck him, and he began to develop a scheme in his brain as he walked home. An electrical piano or organ was feasible. He had never heard of or seen one, and so the next day found him in the office of a wealthy firm explaining his prospects to the head of the establishment. It struck the old gentleman as a clever idea. He became interested at once, and encouraged a free discussion of Webber's plan. "I'll tell you what I'll do," said the piano-manufacturer. "I will send one of our pianos down to your house. Make whatever use of it you see fit. Put your idea into practical shape, and when you can make the instrument do what you say, you can let me know. In the meantime, do not say a word to anybody. Your salary of 200 dols. a month begins from to-day."

That was nearly three months ago. A fortnight ago four gentlemen stood in the parlour of Mr. Webber's house. It looked more like a pattern-shop or plumber's establishment than a parlour. In one corner of the room was an upright piano, and near it several battery-cells and coils of wire. A small brass cylinder, such as are seen in musical-boxes, stood on a table, and a mass of wires seemed to centre in it. Mr. Webber and his assistant, an electrician, the superintendent of the big piano factory, and a member of the firm, composed the party, and waited results. Webber turned a crank connecting with the music cylinder, stepped back and waited. In a moment the keys of the piano began to move as if unseen fingers were striking them, and the melody of "The Last Rose of Summer" was played throughout, and the first experimental demonstration of the electrical piano was a complete success.

Long before this, however, patent agents had been employed and caveats filed to cover all the inventor's claims. Of course, it is stated to be the purpose of Mr. Webber to protect his patents not only in the United States, but also in Europe. In the parlour, now the workshop of the young inventor, Mr. McCain found him recently in the midst of his idols. Directly opposite the piano, with the electrical attachment, stood a skeleton affair with all its interior of wires, flannel-covered hammers and rows of upright little sticks that bobbed in and out every time a finger touched a key.

In explaining the mechanism of his electrical piano, Mr. Webber said:—"I use a series of levers, one for each key, under or behind the keyboard. Small rods project through the bottom of the piano, resting also on the lever, and each touching a key. When the circuit closes, the armature is drawn down, the rod strikes the bottom of the key, and this makes full action. The circuit is closed by the positive pole of the battery being connected with a revolving cylinder, disc, or moving plane. The projections on this cylinder or disc come in contact with circuit breakers representing each note or pair of magnets, which are connected to the negative pole of a battery, thus closing the current and producing the desired tone on the piano." "What power is used to make the cylinder revolve? Or is it worked on the general plan of a hand-organ?" was asked. "There is no barrel-organ business about it, you may be assured. The cylinder used is somewhat like that in a barrel-organ or music-box, but there the resemblance ceases. A spring, weight, or motor can be successfully used to make the cylinder revolve. There is nothing on the surface in a piano equipped with the electrial attachment. Battery, wires, magnets, motors, everything, is hidden completely inside the instrument. There is no bulky excrescences on the back or sides of the piano case."

It is expected that a public exhibition of the electrical piano would be given in one of the large halls of New York about February 1st, and we shall then doubtless hear more about this novelty, which has as yet an air of mystery about it, notwithstanding the inventor's so-called explanations.—Invention.

RIVAL MUSICIANS.

Among some college and clerical reminiscences in a paper in Good Words, the Reverend Harry Jones gives the following instance of "fellowship" unconcern for undergraduates:—A senior don "kept" in the rooms above mine. He was very musical, and had a resonant grand piano, on which his learned leisure led him generally to begin playing at about ten every morning. By that hour I was supposed to be at my books. Every note of this performing "fellow's" instrument sounded in my room. Reading was impossible. The man drove me half-mad. Of course I ought to have civilly remonstrated (the authorities extinguished a youth who began to learn the cornet, with his window open, at about the same hour); but some information reached me that in my case remonstrance would be waste of energy. My man was not an undergraduate, and in his musical utterances did not, like the cornet-player, address the whole college. He was, I suppose, reported to be unapproachable. So I tried another line of action, and one evening bought a flageolet. Next morning I laid it down by my inkstand and began to read "conic sections." He began a "fugue." I put down my pen and piped "Marlbrough s'en va-t-en guerre." I should observe that to this marked and penetrating melody the youth of the place used to sing "We won't go home till morning." Presently my don staggered and stopped. I stopped. In about ten minutes he began again. So did I. This intermittent instrumental duet went on every forenoon for nearly a week, and was (on my side) watched with much interest by many friends. At last indications of defeat were perceptible. On the fourth or fifth day, when my man found that he could not touch his piano without starting my pipe, I heard him slam down his instrument, stamp about the floor, and presently bang the door, having gone out. I was much encouraged, and used not only to play bits of tunes in moments of leisure, but left a standing note on my table by the flageolet requesting any friend who might come in to do his best. At last our enraged musician appealed to the authorities against me. I could only reply that, while I admired his efficiency and regretted my own want of skill, I hoped to do better in time and with more practice. The business ended in my victory; he promised not to play in the morning; I did the same. And he was not such a bad fellow after all; for when he was beaten we shook hands, and he asked me to "wine."

Music Publishers' Weekly List.

SONGS.

Come Back (D flat to F and a higher key)	H. M. Van Lennep	Weekes.
Dove and the Raven, The (A to E flat, and two higher keys)	M. W. Balfe ...	Hutchings.
Farewell of the Swallow, The (Duet)	Henry Smart ...	,,
In Dock, (C to C)	Franco Novara	,,
Morning Smiled, the Evening Wept (D sharp to E)	C. Pinsuti ..	,,
Oaktree Farm (C to D)	A. E. Armstrong	,,
Soul-Music (C to D flat)	A. Scott Gatty ...	,,
Woman's Heart (C to G)	Charles Salaman	Lucas Weber.

CANTATA AND ORATORIO.

Cock Robin's Wedding	E. Dorn	Hutchings.
Judith	J. Bradford ...	Lucas Weber.

INSTRUMENTAL.

Compositions for the organ	E. T. Chipp ...	Weekes.
Mazurka and Romance for the violin...	J. Cotrufo ...	Hutchings.
Moigneaux Valse, pianoforte... ...	A. Downes ...	Wilcock.
Sextuor from Lucia di Lammermoor, left hand	J. Romano ...	Hutchings.

Next Week's Music.

THIS DAY (SATURDAY).

Afternoon Concert	Crystal Palace.	3
Popular Concert	St. James's Hall.	3

MONDAY, 13.

Popular Concert	St. James's Hall.	8.30

WEDNESDAY, 15.

London Symphony Concert (Brahms's Concerto)	St. James's Hall.	3
Sacred Concert	St. James's Hall.	8
"The Messiah"	Albert Hall.	8

FRIDAY, 17.

Royal Academy	St. James's Hall.	2.30

FOREIGN.

HAMBURG, Jan. 30.—It was in Hamburg that Mr. Villiers Stanford's opera "Savanarola" was first produced, and Hamburg has ever since that time taken a fatherly interest in the young English, or we should more correctly say Irish, composer. When, therefore, a new work from his pen, this time a symphony, "Irish," in F. minor, was announced for performance by Von Bülow and his band, the occasion was felt to be one of great interest, and called forth much sympathy from our amateurs. The result of the performance was one that fully realised all the hopes and good wishes that had been aroused, and the composer, who had taken the journey to Hamburg in order to be present at the first performance in Germany of his latest work, was, together with the conductor, called and recalled to the platform to receive the congratulatory applause of the audience. Emil Krause, in the Hamburger Fremdenblatt, says: "The Symphony is unquestionably important, and its importance does not rest, as in many modern symphonies, only upon its skilful construction and brilliantly elaborated instrumentation, but rather in its themes and their development. . . . The work as a whole, is one of the most meritorious of our times." The Hamburger Nachrichten says: "The beautiful and characteristic work pleases by its noteworthy traits of a rich faculty of invention, variety of form, excellent musicianship, and genuinely poetic inspiration." Feb. 3.—Verdi's "Otello" was produced here on the 31st January, with great success, under Sucher's conductorship. Frau Sucher was a fine Desdemona, Herr Stritt's Othello was powerful, and Herr Lizmann's Iago excellent in every respect. Chorus and orchestra were satisfactory.

LEIPSIC.—Frau Sophie Menter has been heard at last again at a Gewandhaus Concert. Her playing of Beethoven's E flat Concerto, and of Liszt's "Don Juan" Fantasia was magnificent, technically and intellectually. The orchestra made a great effect in Volkmann's Overture to "Richard III.," and in Reinecke's transcription of Schumann's "Bilder aus Osten." A good impression has been made by Thieriot's Overture to Schiller's "Turandot," as heard in the fourteenth Subscription Concert. Herr Wirth has been delivering some interesting lectures upon "Der Ring des Nibelungen." At the fifteenth Gewandhaus Concert, the novelties were a suite for organ, violin, and 'cello, by Rheinberger, and a pianoforte concerto by Jadassohn, Herr Willy Rehberg playing the solo instrument. Both compositions showed merit. Another item of the programme was Schubert's "Serenade," arranged for alto solo (Fräulein Spies), female choir, and orchestra by Reinecke. Eugene d'Albert has been giving brilliant pianoforte recitals.

BERLIN.—Wagner's "Meistersinger" Overture was played at the last Philharmonic Concert with such perfection, conducted by Von Bülow, that the audience insisted upon its repetition. Eugene d'Albert has been playing in Berlin lately, with his usual great success. He has also made his appearance as a conductor, at a concert of the pianist, Herr Sormann, who gave d'Albert's Concerto. A new opera, called "Irrungen," a version of Shakespeare's "Comedy of Errors," the work of Dr. Lorenz, has been accepted by the manager of the Royal Opera. Fifteen years ago the same work had been rejected by the authorities. The new theatre, of which Ludwig Barnay is the director, is to be named, by permission, the Crown Prince's. Feb. 3.—Kehbaum's "Turandot" has also been accepted. The commemoration of Wagner's death will be held by the Wagner Societies of Berlin and Potsdam at the Royal Opera, by permission of the Emperor. Herren Deppe and Schroeder will superintend the performance, the scheme comprising the "Faust" Overture," Symphony in C, introduction to "Parsifal," the third act of "Götterdämmerung" to the end of the Trauermarsch, and the "Kaisermarsch."—Herr Scharwenka has successfully carried through the third performance of Berlioz's "Requiem." The same musician conducts the excellent popular concerts of the Philharmonic Orchestra.—The Government has raised the subvention for the Royal Opera houses this year by about £24,000, in consideration of the extra expenses of installing the electric light, &c. Feb. 8.—The performance of Dr. Stanford's "Irish Symphony" on Monday was a great and brilliant success, the composer being repeatedly recalled. Herr Hans von Bülow conducted in his usual admirable style, and all the Berlin critics agree that the work is distinguished by remarkable originality and admirable instrumentation.

PARIS, Jan. 29.—Before writing you an account of the month's music in Paris, I must send a few lines to announce the successful production of Salvayre's "Dame de Monsoreau." Though it was fairly well received on the opening night, connoisseurs have come to the conclusion that it will not maintain its position in the repertory for long. The libretto of the opera has been dramatised from the novel, "La Dame de Monsoreau," by Dumas and Macquet, and furnishes a dramatic subject, and a picturesque series of tableaux. However, the result of turning a novel into a drama is the usual one of rather spoiling the story. The subject is the adventures of Diane de Meridor, afterwards Diane de Monsoreau. She marries in order to escape the attentions of the Duc d'Anjou, whom she, however, loves, and who dies for her, murdered by her husband. The greater part of the action is laid in old Paris, at the time of the League, and Henri III. and his entourage play a large part in this spectacular play, of which the mounting is very splendid. The music shows signs of haste, but contains melodious and striking passages. Salvayre, like most modern composers, has come under the influence of Wagner. M. Jean de Reszke took the part of Bussy, and was immensely successful. Madame Bosman was the heroine. The ballet was exceedingly fine.—A revival of Auber's opera "Le Maçon" is in course of preparation at the Opéra Comique. The latest volume of M. Camille Bellaigue's "L'Année Musicale" has just been issued by the firm of Delegrave, of Paris. The work contains interesting accounts of all the principal new operas performed in France and abroad during the year 1887. A new illustrated musical novel, entitled "La Femme d'un Musicien," by Madame Jeanne Maire, has been publisked by the "Librairie de l'Art" in Paris. The late Henri Herz's pianoforte manufactory will in future be carried on by his widow.

ST. PETERSBURG.—At the fourth Symphony Concert, Rimsky Korsakoff's Overture on Russian Themes, and Liszt's Mephisto Waltzes, were given. A great impression was made by Frau Lawrowsky's singing of Tschaikowski's song, "Trawuschka," with orchestral accompaniment. Lalo's Spanish Symphony (solo violin, M. Galkin), was the pièce de resistance of the evening. A new opera by Lischine, entitled "Don Cesar de Bazan," is to be produced at Kieff, and will shortly afterwards be heard at St. Petersburg.

PROVINCIAL.

LEEDS, Feb. 6.—The sixth of the Leeds Popular Concerts, which was given on the 25th January, was of a not very elevated, but undoubtedly "popular" character, Madame Trebelli's concert party providing a programme of light music. The great contralto was hardly in her best "form;" but in such familiar songs as "Nobil Signor," "Il Segreto," and the piquant gavotte from "Mignon," she showed that she still maintains her well-deserved pre-eminence amongst vocalists of the day. Miss Whitacre's florid performances in Proch's "Theme and Variations," and some other commonplace selections evidenced good training and great natural qualifications, and delighted the audience, whilst Messrs. Henry Piercy and Barrington Foote were most acceptable as the tenor and baritone soloists, the former gentleman's rendering of Clay's "I'll sing thee songs of Araby," being to the highest degree artistic. Mr. Hollman played several 'cello solos with admirable purity of tone and complete command over the technical difficulties of his instrument, and Mr. Marmaduke Barton, one of the alumni of the Royal College, and a former resident in Leeds, was the solo pianist, and played solos by Schumann, Chopin, Liszt, and Barnett, with much delicacy and clearness. Signor Bisaccia also played a pianoforte solo, in addition to acting as accompanist.

The Leeds Philharmonic Society gave a highly interesting concert on Wednesday, the 1st February, when the programme consisted of three works by three of the most eminent English composers of this century. Macfarren's "St. John the Baptist," and Stanford's "Revenge" are amongst their respective authors' most successful works; indeed, we have little hesitation in naming the former the master-piece of the late Cambridge professor, whilst we doubt whether his successor in the professional chair has ever produced any composition so completely satisfactory as the vigorous and realistic sea-ballad, which was one of the chief successes of the last Leeds Festival. Sullivan's graceful overture "Di Ballo" was the remaining item of the triad. The solo vocalists were Madame Annie Albu, Mrs. Alfred Broughton, Messrs. Iver McKay and Bridson. The palm of the performance, however, lay with the chorus, who seemed to be on their mettle, and tackled the numerous difficulties in each work with great spirit and abundant success, reflecting great credit on themselves and their teacher and conductor, Mr. Alfred Broughton.

BIRMINGHAM, Feb. 6.—The second popular chamber concert, under the auspices of the Birmingham and Midland Musical Guild, was given at the Masonic-hall on the 2nd inst. Notwithstanding the inclement weather, the attendance was very large and representative. The programme contained items of great interest and novelty, and, on the whole, the concert was, artistically viewed, full of merit, giving pleasure and satisfaction to all present. The artists were all Birmingham musicians, and among them Herr Sück, a violinist who has lately come to us from Cologne, where he studied at the Conservatoire of that city. He is still a very young man, but has already, during his short sojourn here, made a favourable impression as a violinist of no mean order. His tone is very delicate, but refined, his intonation correct, and his bowing does not lack vigour. If any fault can be found, it is that he makes somewhat too much use of "vibrati," probably for effect, but he will outgrow this defect, and we hope will be a valuable addition to our local violinists. The programme included Mozart's Trio in E flat, op. 14, for pianoforte, clarionet, and viola, played by Mrs. Richardson, L.R.A.M., Mr. T. E. Pountney, and Mr. W. Griffin; Rubinstein's Sontata in G, op. 13, for pianoforte and violin, Concerto in E flat, op. 74, for clarionet (Weber), Chopin's Ballade in A flat, op. 17, and Prout's Quartet in F major, op. 18, for piano, violin, viola, and violoncello. Mr. Griffin gave valuable help in the Mozart Trio. He is a viola player of great ability, and an excellent orchestral leader of his instrument. Mr. Pountney, as a clarionet player, ranks very high in his art, both as a soloist and orchestral player. His execution is phenomenal, and his tone was almost overpowering. Of Mr. Owen's talent as a violoncellist, we have often spoken before in these columns. Mrs. Richardson, as pianist, was most at home in concerted music; her playing of Chopin's Ballade lacked poetry and refinement. The only vocalist was Mr. H. Partridge, from Wells Cathedral, who poseesses a sweet tenor voice, and sings with taste and art. He gave a very satisfactory rendering of Beethoven's immortal "Adelaide." Mr. T. Troman, Mus. Bac., accompanied with due regard to light and shade, and with proper judgment.

The Midland Musical Society, under their able hon. conductor, Mr. H. M. Stevenson, gave a capital performance of Handel's "Judas Maccabaeus" with full band, chorus, and organ, the Town Hall being crowded to overflowing. The principal vocalists were Miss Clara Surgey, Mrs. Payton, Mr. R. L. James, and Mr. W. J. Chatwin; Mr. Astley Langston officiating at the organ.—O.P.

GLASGOW, February 7.—Last Tuesday evening, 31st Jan., took place the ninth and last of the Orchestral Concerts given under the direction of the Choral Union. The programme included Schumann's overture "Genovefa"; Haydn's Symphony in E flat; selection from Suite de Ballet, "Coppelia," Delibes; Dvorak's concerto for violin and orchestra, A minor (for the first time in this city); the violin part being admirably rendered by Herr Franz Ondricek. Mr. Iver McKay was the vocalist. His soli were "Salve Dimora" and "There is a Flower that Bloometh," and, as an encore, a romance by Arditi, Mr. Manns conducted. Last Thursday evening "La Damnation de Faust," Berlioz, was given, the soloists being Miss Mary Davies, Mr. Iver McKay, Mr. F. King and Mr. R. Grice. Mr. Bradley conducted. Saturday evening, 4th inst., brought to a close the series of the Saturday Popular Concerts, and for fully an hour before the advertised time for the concert to commence, a seat could not be had, even at a premium. The programme consisted of pieces selected by vote at the concerts of 28th and 31st Jan. They were: Overture "William Tell," Rossini; "Spring Song" and "Spinning Song," Mendelssohn; "Symphony No. 6. Pastorale," Beethoven; "Concert Overture in B minor," Hamish McCunn; "Intermezzo," Gillet and "Gavotte" from "Mignon," Amb. Thomas; "Spring," Ballet air, Verdi and Wagner's overture "Tannhäuser," Mr. Iver McKay was again the vocalist. His soli were, recitative and air "Sound an Alarm," Handel; "Adelaide," Beethoven; and "When other Lips," Balfe; and, in response to a double encore, Wallace's "Let me like a Soldier," and "Come into the Garden, Maud." Master F. C. Barker, contributed John Thomas's harp solo, "Winter," for which he was encored. Mr. Manns conducted and at the close of the concert, in a few words thanked the audience and the public for the manner in which they had welcomed him, and in conclusion stated that he had had a magnificent orchestra to work with, and, amidst the waving of hats and handkerchiefs on sticks, he withdrew.

"Aladdin," at the Grand still continues to draw crowded houses. Miss Alice Ainsley Cook in the title rôle has become quite a favourite. We are sorry to hear that Mr. Harris announces that he will withdraw it on Saturday week, 18th inst., as we are certain that he could run it to the end of the present month, or even into March, without a loss. —E.J.R.B.

DEATHS.—At Brussels, J. Van Hamme, member of the orchestra of La Monnaie.—At Melbourne, Charles Schoenmehl, composer and conductor, member of the Académie de Musique Sacrée.—At Vienna, aged 86, Thomas Klein, clarinettist, member of the Court Band.—At Munich, aged 52, Lehmann, conductor.—At Stuttgart, Fohmann, member of the Court Band, horn player.—At Berlin, aged 63, Rudolf Magnus, conductor and organist, and composer of the choral work "Dornröschen," and others.—At Mannheim, Carl Ditt, buffo bass singer at the Court Opera.—At Parma, aged 52, Ludovico Spiga, professor, and composer of the comic opera "Il Barbiere e l'Avaro."—At Udinne, aged 71, Pietro Santa Caterina, professor of the violin, &c.—At Leghorn, Ranieri del Corona, composer of the opera "Zaira."—At Santiago, Enrico Re, opera singer.—At Frankfort, aged 57, Julius Sachs, composer, pianist (pupil of Moscheles), and professor.

JOTTINGS FROM OUR PARIS CORRESPONDENT.

The directors of the Paris Grand Opéra have engaged a young American singer, Miss Moore, who will make her first appearance either in "Hamlet" or "La Dame de Monsoreau." The young lady is a pupil of M. Barbot, and was a premier prix de chant at the Paris Conservatoire in 1884.

Opera in Italian will have another trial in Paris during the month of April or May. The capitalist who will supply the funds is corresponding with Verdi, for the production of "Otello," but up to the present time the difficulties are of an artistic rather than of a financial nature.

Two marriages in the Parisian musical world are announced, that of Mdlle. Jeanne Barbier, the daughter of the well-known librettist and ex-director of the Opéra Comique, with M. Henri Laffillée, an architect, was to have been celebrated on the 9th; and that of Mlle. Lamoureux, the daughter of the well-known conductor, with M. Chevillard, a young composer of promise will shortly take place.

Madame Carlotta Patti's residence, 16, rue Pierre-Charton, was destroyed by fire last Saturday. Happily, everyone in the building escaped unhurt. M. de Munck, the husband of the prima donna, managed to rescue his violoncello, some jewellery, and some papers of value.

Mr. Eugene d'Albert will arrive in Paris during the month of March, and will give a series of concerts and recitals at the Salle Erard.

A young Hungarian pianist, Carl Fœrster, last week made a highly successful début at the Salle Erard.

M. Schatté the musical conductor of l'Odéon, has just completed an opera in three acts, founded on a Gascon subject of the last century, and entitled, "La Charduchette."

The directors of the Eden Theatre, at Vichy, announces prize competition of 500 francs for the libretto of an opera-bouffe.

Dr. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.
For sore throat, hoarseness, and relaxed throat, also for improving the voice
FOR SINGING AND SPEAKING
without fatiguing the voice. Celebrated in every town in Europe, India, America, and the Colonies. Testimonials from Patti, Trebelli, Patey, Santley, and the most eminent medical men.
Sold in boxes; 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d.; also in bottles for abroad.

A BLESSING IN EVERY FAMILY.
HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.
These Remedies have stood the test of FIFTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE and are pronounced the best medicines for family use. Tens of thousands of written testimonials bear witness to their marvellous curative properties. They are acknowledged by the whole civilised world to be the greatest efficacy in every form of disease.
Sold by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors.
Manufactured only at THOMAS HOLLOWAY'S ESTABLISHMENT,
78, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.
N.B.—Advice gratis at the above address, daily, between the hours of 11 and 4, or by letter.

A LUXURY

A LUXURY
A LUXURY
A LUXURY
A LUXURY

NO LONGER UNKNOWN IN ENGLAND.
BARBER & COMPANY'S
FRENCH COFFEE,
As used in Paris.
In its Highest Perfection.
TENPENCE PER POUND.
("See that you have none other.")
2lb. (sample) in tins sent free per Parcels Post for 2s. 4d.,
Or 5 lb. for 5s. 6d.
Postal Orders from 1s. 6d. to 10s. 6d.
May now be had from all Post Offices.

A LUXURY
A LUXURY
A LUXURY
A LUXURY

This is the choicest and most carefully selected Coffee, "Roasted on the French Principle," and mixed with the Finest Bruges Chicory.

2 lb. Sample Tins sent per Parcels Post to any Post Town in the United Kingdom for 2s. 4d.; 5 lb. in Tins for 5s. 6d.

ONFA CONGO

ONFA
ONFA
ONFA
ONFA

NEVER Sold in England before at the price.

The Pick of the Season's Growth.

BARBER & CO.'S

RICH SIRUPY

Onfa Congo.

ONFA
ONFA
ONFA
ONFA

ONE SHILLING & SIXPENCE PER POUND.

A TEA abounding in Strength and High Quality. Never Sold before in England at the Price.

COMPARE

It with that sold by others at Two Shillings.

6½ lb. sent by Parcels Post for 10s. 9d. to any Post Town in the United Kingdom and Channel Islands. 4½ lb. for 7s. 6d.; 2½ lb. Samples for 4s. 3d.

BARBER AND COMPANY,

274, Regent Circus, Oxford Street, W.
61, Bishopsgate Street, City.
11, Boro' High Street, S.E.

ALSO

102, Westbourne Grove, W.
42, Great Titchfield Street, W.
King's Cross, N.

BRIGHTON, HASTINGS, MANCHESTER, BRISTOL, LIVERPOOL, PRESTON, AND BIRMINGHAM

Postal Orders, from 1s. 6d. to 10s. 6d., may now be had for One Penny from all Post Offices. Cheques to be crossed "London and Westminster."

ASCHERBERG PIANOS.

"I only perform an act of justice when I ascribe my successes to a great extent to the excellent Instruments from your factory, on which I was favoured to play before the public. Remain convinced that I shall at all times and everywhere give preference to your Pianos over all others, and accept the assurance of my unbounded esteem.

Respectfully,

VLADIMIR VON PACHMANN."

ASCHERBERG PIANO DEPOT,

211, REGENT STREET, W.

DEFRIES' Safety Water White Oil.

The Purest, Whitest, and Best Burning Mineral Oil in England.

EQUAL IN QUALITY TO OILS SOLD UNDER FANCY NAMES, at from 1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d. per gall.

FOR USE IN ALL LAMPS AND STOVES.

PRICE 1s. PER GALLON.

FREE DELIVERED IN LONDON AND ALL SUBURBS.

Minimum, 2 gallons. The 5 and 10 gallon drums are fitted with taps. Drums charged, and full price allowed when returned.

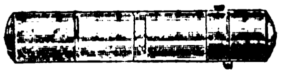
Terms: Cash on or before delivery. Deposit Accounts opened for Oil.

DEFRIES' SAFETY LAMP & OIL CO., LIMITED,

43 and 44, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON, E.C.

THORNHILL'S

NEW "GLOVE" BOTTLE.



FOR PERFUME & SMELLING SALTS.

Large Variety of Patterns at Various Prices

THORNHILL'S ARTISTIC FANS.

A LARGE and VARIED STOCK of the BEST QUALITY.

THORNHILL'S TOILET CASES FOR LADIES AND GENTLEMEN

PRESENTS.

—o—

THORNHILL'S

Fully Illustrated

LIST

OF

LATEST

NOVELTIES

POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

THORNHILL'S

OPERA GLASSES.

IN GREAT VARIETY.

THORNHILL'S

Guaranteed Razors Singly or in Sets.

W. THORNHILL & CO., TO THE QUEEN & ROYAL FAMILY. 144, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON. ESTABLISHED 1734.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER'S

LINEN COLLARS, CUFFS, AND SHIRTS.

Samples and Price Lists Post Free.

COLLARS—Ladies' 3-fold, from 3s. 6d. per doz. Gents' 4-fold, 4s. 11d. to 5s. 11d. per doz.

CUFFS—For Ladies or Gentlemen, 5s. 11d. to 10s. 6d. per doz.

SHIRTS—Best quality Long Cloth, with 4-fold Linen Fronts 35s. 6d. per half-doz. (To measure, 2s. extra.)

N.B.—OLD SHIRTS made as good as new with best materials in Neckbands, Cuffs, and Fronts, for 14s. the half-doz.

ROBINSON AND CLEAVER, BELFAST.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE & RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & CO.,

Manufacturers and Importers of all kinds of Strings

FOR

VIOLIN, VIOLA, CELLO, DOUBLE BASS, HARP, ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO,

Have always in STOCK the Largest ASSORTMENT of any House in the World.

6, GOLDEN SQUARE, W.

Printed and Published by MacRae, Curtice & Co. (Limited), 12, Catherine Street, Strand, W.C.

WEEKLY.]

The Musical World.

ESTABLISHED 1822.
REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED; IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST WEEKLY, 17/6 PER ANNUM (Payable in advance).

VOL. 67.—NO. 7. SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 1888. PRICE {3D. Unstamped. 4D. By Post.

THE

KARN AMERICAN ORGANS,

Manufactured by D. W. KARN & CO.,

WOODSTOCK, ONTARIO, CANADA.

The Karn Organ is a reproduction of the Pipe Organ in miniature, of pre-eminent value as an effective music exponent for the Home.

OUR AIM has not been to see how cheaply an organ can be built, BUT HOW CHEAPLY A FIRST-CLASS ORGAN can be made.

OUR CLAIM is that we are building organs equal to, if not surpassing, all others, at the very lowest reasonable prices.

COMPARISON CHEERFULLY INVITED.

New Illustrated Catalogue & Price Lists Free of the
SOLE EUROPEAN AGENTS:

THE SCHREIBER PIANO CO.,
18, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W.

NOW READY FOR 1888.

The Musical Directory Annual and

Almanack. Contents: The names and addresses of Professors & Traders in London & Great Britain, arranged in Alphabetical order, the latter under each town. List of new copyright music published during the past year. The principal Concerts given by Musical Societies and others in London and the provinces, &c., &c.

Price—In paper cover, by Post, 3s. 3d.,
Crimson Cloth, 4s. 3d.

Rudall Carte & Co., 23, Berners Street, London.

The Professional Pocket Book and

Daily and Hourly Engagement Diary, published according to the plan of the late Sir Julius Benedict, containing spaces for appointments, lessons, &c., being invaluable to those who give lessons, or have many engagements. Principal concerts, meetings, and general information.

Price—In Roan Case, by Post, 3s 2d,
In Russian Leather, 6s. 2d

Rudall Carte & Co., 23, Berners Street, London.

Special Notices.

CRYSTAL PALACE. SATURDAY CONCERT, Feb. 18, at 3 p.m. Vocalists: Miss Thudichum, Mr. Harper Kearton, the Crystal Palace Choir, the Full Orchestra of the Saturday Concerts. Conductor, Mr. August Manns. The Programme will include Mr. C. T. Speer's Cantata, "The Day Dream" (first time), words by Lord Tennyson; Scotch Ballad for Orchestra, composed by Hamish MacCunn (first time); and the following Orchestra works: Overture, "Der Freishütz" (Weber); Symphony No. 8 in B minor, unfinished (Schubert); Suite de Ballet "Sylvia" (Delibes). Seats, 6d. to 1s. 6d.

ELIJAH.—PERFORMANCE by the SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, ST. JAMES'S HALL, THURSDAY, Feb. 23, at 8 o'clock.—Conductor, Mr. W. H. CUMMINGS. Principal Singers—Miss Pauline Cramer, Miss A. Larkcom, Miss Alice Suter, Madame Patey, Mr. A. Grover, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. C. H. Victor, and Mr. Santley. Seats, numbered, 10s. 6d., 7s., 5s.; unnumbered, 3s., 2s., of Austin's, Piccadilly; at Chappel's, Hay's, Keith Prowse's, and at Society's Offices, 12, John Street, Adelphi, W.C.

THE LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.—Mr. HENSCHEL, Conductor.—Programme of the Fourteenth CONCERT, TUESDAY EVENING Next, Feb. 21, ST. JAMES'S HALL, at 8.30.—Overture, "Zur Weihe des Hauses" (op. 124) (Beethoven); concerto in A minor for violin and violoncello (MS.) (Brahms) (second performance in England), Herr Joachim and Herr Hausmann; serenade in F, for strings (op. 63) (Volkmann); violin solo, adagio from the Concerto in D minor (Spohr); Herr Joachim, violoncello solo adagio and allegro (Boccherini), Herr Hausmann; ballad for orchestra, "The Ship o' the Fiend" (Mamish MacCunn), first time of performance). Reserved Seats, 10s. 6d., 7s. 6d., and 4s.; admission, 1s.; at Austin's Office, St. James's Hall, and usual agents.—N. Vert, 6, Cork Street, W.

MR. and MRS. HENSCHEL'S VOCAL RECITALS, PRINCE'S HALL.—Programme of the Third and last Recital, Wednesday afternoon next, Feb. 22nd, at 3. Duet from "Giannina e Bernadone" (Comarosa), Mr. and Mrs. Henschel; sacred song, "Sei nur still" (1670) (J. W. Franck); "Revenge Timotheus cries" (Handel); "Mit Mädeln sich vertragen" from Goethe's "Claudine von Villa Bella" (Beethoven) Mr. Henschel; "Die Soreley" (Liszt); "The Almond Tree" (Schumann); "Auf Waldbekränzter Höhe" from op., 57 (Brahms), Mrs. Henschel. Duett from "Mignon" (A. Thomas), Mr. and Mrs. Henschel; "Wolfram's Phantasy" from the second act of Tannhauser (Wagner); "Henry the Fowler" (Loewe); "The Grenadiers" (Schumann), Mr. Henschel; "Adieux de l'Hôtesse Arabe" (Henschel); "Sia e morta" (Widor); Couplets from "Zerline" (Auber), Mrs. Henschel; Duetto Buffo from "Don Pasguale" (Donizetti), Mr. and Mrs. Herschel. Stalls, 7s. 6d.; Balcony, 3s.; admission, 1s., at Prince's Hall and usual agents.—N. Vert, 6, Cork-street, W.

MR. CHARLES WADE'S CHAMBER CONCERTS, PRINCE'S HALL, TUESDAY EVENINGS, Feb. 21 and 28, March 6 and 20.—FIRST CONCERT, TUESDAY EVENING Next, Feb. 21, at 8.30. First appearance in England of the Cologne Conservatoire String Quartett. Vocalists—Mrs. Henschel and Mr. Charles Wade. Subscription tickets for the four Concerts—stalls, 15s.; single tickets, stalls, 5s.; balcony, 2s. 6d.; admission, 1s.; at the hall, usual agents, and Austin's Office, St. James's Hall.—N. Vert, 6, Cork Street, W.

TO ORGANISTS.—For Professional Practice, Teaching, or Concert purpose, and Home use, the "Bach Model" Pedal Instrument is only reliable substitute for a pipe organ. For design, improved action, connections, and tone, it embraces the merits of the highest class instruments; and without paying an exorbitant price you may have an instrument with organ measurements that removes the deficiencies hitherto experienced in pedal instruments.—Apply for illustrated lists, terms, and prices, to J. L. Scholefield, Musical Instrument Manufacturer, Huddersfield.

Institutes and Colleges.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, KENSINGTON GORE, LONDON, S.W.

Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.

President - - H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES, K.G.
Director - - Sir GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L., LL. D.

Next College Concert, February 23rd, at 7.30 p.m.

The Half-Term will commence on February 13th.

Associate Examination—

The Examination for 1888 is fixed for April 16th. Last day for receiving applications, March 6th.

Forms and particulars may be obtained from the Registrar, Mr. GEORGE WATSON, at the College.

CHARLES MORLEY, Honorary Secretary.

UNIVERSITY OF TRINITY COLLEGE, TORONTO. (The Church of England University of Upper Canada.)

FACULTY OF MUSIC.

The next Examinations for the degree of Bachelor of Music will be held simultaneously in Toronto and London in Easter week, 1888. Women are admissable to these examinations. For particulars apply to Rev. E. K. Kendal, D.C.L., Registrar for England, Southsea.

TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON. For MUSICAL EDUCATION and EXAMINATION, &c., and for the Granting of Certificates and Diplomas in Music. Inst. 1872.

President - - The EARL of ABERDEEN.

THE HALF TERM COMMENCES FEBRUARY 27th, when new Students are received. The following is a list of subjects taught and professors:—

Subjects—Harmony, Counterpoint, Form and Orchestration, Composition, Musical Acoustics, Pianoforte, Organ, Figured Bass Playing, Transposition, &c.; Solo Singing, the Art of Pianoforte Accompaniment, Violin, Violoncello, Double Bass, Flute, Oboe, Clarionet, Harp, Horn, Orchestral Class, Musical History, Sight Singing, Choral Class, Vocal and Aural Physiology (lectures), and Voice Production Class (lectures), and Elocution.

Professors—Higgs, Saunders, Turpin, and Turner; MM. Bambridge, Barrett, Bentlim, Bolton, Carrodus, Cole, Corder, Dubrueq, Fry, Gibson, Goodworth, Lazarus, Lockwood, Malsch, Mann, Mount, Nappi, Ogbourne, Pumej, Radcliff, Reynolds, Semple, Stone, Szczepanowski, Visetti, Wells, Willing, Woolhouse; and Miss Kate Steel.

There are evening as well as day classes, and Harmony, Counterpoint, &c., are also taught by correspondence.

The full prospectus, and all particulars can be obtained by addressing the Secretary.

By Order of the Academical Board.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, W.

GUILD OF ORGANISTS, 35, Wellington Stree Strand, W.C.

Patron—The Right Rev. THE LORD BISHOP OF LONDON.

PRESIDENTS.

The REV. CANON SIR F. H. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., Mus. Doc.
Sir HERBERT OAKELEY, Bart., Mus. Doc.
Sir ROBERT STEWART, Mus. Doc.
Vice-President—WILLIAM PINNEY, Mus. Bac., Oxon.
Warden—CHARLES VINCENT, Mus. Doc., Oxon.

Established to advance the cause of Church music and the truest interests of its Professors, etc.

Members of the Church of England and Ireland, and the Episcopal Church of Scotland, are eligible for election. Subscription: Professional Organists (Associates) 10s. 6d. per annum; Amateurs (Members) 15s. per annum; Life subscription, 5 guineas.

Next Fellowship examination in Easter Week.

Prospectus and further particulars may be obtained from the Hon. Sec., Dr. J. H. Lewis, Staines, Middlesex.

London Organ School and International College of Music.

Established 1865, by the Rev. SCOTSON CLARK, Mus.B.
Patron—His Grace The ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY.
Principal—HENRY CLARK.

THE NEXT STUDENTS' MATINEE MUSICALE will take place on SATURDAY, February 25th.

Piano, Singing, Violin, 'Cello, Flute, Harp, Organ Lessons, with Practice, and Harmony. Private Lessons and Classes.

On Monday, Feb. 27th, Lecture on "Organ Voluntaries," by Mr. W. S. Vinning, Mus. Bac., Cantab.

Candidates for Musical Degrees at any of the English Universities are expressly prepared for the Matriculation Examinations by Oxford and Cambridge graduates (in honours). Branches at Kensington and St. John's Wood.

Apply to the Director of Classes, T. H. Y. TROTTER, M.A., Mus.Bac., Oxon., 3, Princes Street, Cavendish Square, W. (close to Oxford Circus).

ACADEMY for the HIGHER DEVELOPMENT of PIANOFORTE PLAYING. 12, Hinde Street, Manchester Square, W. (Established 1873.)

President - - - - - FRANKLIN TAYLOR.
Director - - - - - OSCAR BERINGER.

Christmas Term commenced October 3. Entrance Day, October 1, from ten to five. Fee: Six Guineas. The Academy is for Amateur and Professional Students. Two Pianoforte and One Harmony Lessons weekly. For prospectus and all particulars apply to the Director.

Publishers' Announcements.

"BIRD RAPTURES,"

Song (for Soprano).
WORDS BY CHRISTINA G. ROSSETTI.
Music by MOIR CLARK.

PRESS OPINIONS.

"'Bird Raptures' is a song of exceptional merit. The accompaniment plays an important part, and contains several original and charming effects."—THE MUSICAL WORLD, June 11, 1887.

"One of the most earnest and beautiful songs that has appeared for many a long day."—Musical Standard, Dec. 23, 1887.

"When the public can appreciate a song like this, the trade of the vulgar ballad-monger will be gone."—Musical Review, December, 1887.

BY THE SAME COMPOSER,
"BANVA,"
Four Sketches for Pianoforte Duet.

"Admirably written, and marked by an originality which will recommend them to pianists of culture."—THE MUSICAL WORLD, June 11, 1887.

STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER AND Co., 84, New Bond Street, W.

TO be performed at the CRYSTAL PALACE, FEBRUARY 18,

"THE DAY-DREAM."

Cantata for Solo Voices, Chorus, and Orchestra.

The Poetry by
ALFRED LARD TENNYSON.
The Music Composed by
CHARLTON T. SPEER.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

LONDON AND NEW YORK:—NOVELLO, EWER, AND CO.

Just Published, with Portrait, fcap., cloth, 1s. 6d.

BIOGRAPHIES OF GREAT COMPOSERS.

HANDEL,

By J. CUTHBERT HADDEN.

LONDON: W. H. ALLEN & CO., 13, WATERLOO PLACE.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised & Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR

THE VOICE,

By T. A. Wallworth.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Madame Alwina Valleria, Mr. Iver M'Kay, and other successful Vocalists:

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & CO. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER'S

ROYAL IRISH CAMBRIC POCKET-HANDKERCHIEFS.

Samples and Price Lists Post Free.

Per doz.—Children's, 1s. 3d.; Ladies', 2s. 4½d.; Gents' 3s. 6d.

Hemstitched—Ladies', 2s. 11½d.; Gents', 4s. 11d.

—:0:—

BY APPOINTMENTS TO THE QUEEN AND THE CROWN PRINCESS OF GERMANY.

ROBINSON AND CLEAVER, BELFAST.

Professional Cards.

The subscription for a "card" space in these columns is £1 10s. for six months, and £1 per quarter—payable in advance, including copy of the paper each week. Subscriptions should be sent to the office of The Musical World 12, Catherine Street, Strand, London, W.C.

Conductors and Composers.

Mr. FREDERIC H. COWEN,
73, Hamilton Terrace,
St. John's Wood, N.W.

Mr. WILHELM GANZ
(Professor of the Pianoforte, Composer, and Conductor),
126, Harley Street, W.

Mr. F. KILVINGTON HATTERSLEY,
A.R.A.M.
(Professor of the Pianoforte, Composer, and Conductor),
17, Finsbury Park Villas,
Green Lanes, N.

Mr. ALBERT VISETTI
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Conductor),
12, Westbourne Park Terrace, W.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN
(Guitar, Concertina, and Gigelira. Wood and Straw Instrument),
22a, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W.

Mr. F. St. JOHN LACY
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Vocalist) (baritone),
Fitzroy Mansion, Charlotte Street,
Fitzroy Square, W.

Mr. H. MARTYN VAN LENNEP
(Teacher of Singing, Composer, and Conductor),
Address—7, Wimpole Street,
Cavendish Square, W.

Mr. G. ARTHUR HIGGS, F.C.O.
L. Mus. and Tallis Gold Medallist. T.C.L. Pupil of Mr. Albert Visetti. Teacher of Singing, Harmony, Conductor, and Vocalist. (Baritone.)
Address—Trinity College, London, W.

Vocalists—Sopranos.

Madame VALLERIA
(Opera and Concerts),
Bosworth House, Husband's Bosworth,
Rugby.

Miss EDITH DESMOND
(Opera and Concerts),
c/o Nolan & Jackson.

Miss KATE FLINN
(Concerts and Oratories),
41, Welbeck Street,
Cavendish Square, W.

Mdlle. VELMI
(Opera and Concerts),
7, Chesilton Road, Munster Park,
Fulham, S.W.

Miss AGNES LARKCOM
Has removed to
158, Portsdown Road, W.

Madame ISABEL GEORGE, L.R.A.M.
(Concert and Oratorio),
29, Albany Street, Regent's Park, N.W.

Contraltos.

Miss JOSEPHINE CRAVINO
(Concerts and Oratorio),
2, Sedgmoor Villas,
Private Lessons given. Camberwell, S.E.

Miss MARY E. DAKIN, R.A.M.
(Mez. Sop.),
(Ballads, Oratorio, &c.)
31, Monmouth Road,
Bayswater, London, W.

Miss LENA LITTLE
(Concerts),
42, Norfolk Square, Hyde Park, W.

Contraltos.—Continued.

Miss PATTIE MICHIE,
68, Park Walk, Fulham Road,
London, S.W.

Madame OSCAR POLLACK
(Concerts),
56, Duchess Road,
Edgbaston, Birmingham.

Tenors.

Mr. BARTON McGUCKIN
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. Alfred Moul,
26, Old Bond Street, W.,
Or, 270, Elgin Avenue, Maida Vale, W.

Mr. ARNOLD BREEDEN
(Concerts, Oratorio, and Opera),
Address—N. Vert, Esq.,
6, Cork Street, W.

Mr. SEYMOUR JACKSON
(Concerts and Oratorio),
Old Trafford, Manchester.

Mr. PAYNE CLARKE
(Concerts and Oratorio).
28, Devonshire Street, Islington, N.

Mr. J. DALGETY HENDERSON,
Gothic Lodge,
Lordship Lane, S.E.

Mr. REDFERN HOLLINS,
39, St. Stephen's Avenue,
Shepherd's Bush, W.

Mr. BERNARD LANE,
60, Westbourne Park Villas, W.

Chevalier EDWARD SCOVEL
(Opera, Concerts, and Oratorio),
Hotel de L'Europe,
Milan, Italy.

Mr. W. ESMOND,
24, Upper Mount Street, Dublin.

Baritones.

Mr. WALTER CLIFFORD
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concerts),
c/o N. Vert, Esq.,
6, Cork Street, W.

Mr. FREDERIC KING
(Concerts and Oratorio),
19, Canfield Gardens, S. Hampstead.

Mr. NORRIS CROKER,
Egremont, Croxted Road,
West Dulwich, S.E.

Mr. JOSEPH LYNDE
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concert
63, Stafford Pl .
Buckingham Gate, S.W.

Mr. ALBERT REAKES
(Bass-Baritone, of the "London Ballad Singers," Oratorios, Concerts, &c.),
30, Lancaster Road,
Notting Hill, W.

Herr RAGNAR GREVILLIUS
(Concerts, Oratorio, and Opera),
70, Portsdown Road, Maida Vale, W.

Bass.

Mr. WATKIN MILLS requests that in future all communications respecting Concerts, &c., be addressed to his residence, Huntcliffe, Bexley, Kent.

Mr. FRANK CELLI
(Concerts and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. N. Vert, 6, Cork St.,
Burlington Gardens, W.

Trumpet and Cornet.

Mr. THOMAS HARPER,
185, King's Road, N.W

Guitar.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN, Guitariste, Instructress to H.R.H. the Princess Louise, has returned to town, 22a, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W., where may be had her celebrated book, "Learning the Guitar Simplified," 10s. 6d.

Violin.

Mr. ALLAN CAMPBELL
(Formerly Pupil of Mr. Henry Holmes and Dr. S. S. Wesley),
23, Thicket Road,
Pupils visited and received. Anerley, S.E.

Mr. JULES KOOPMAN
(Late Professor at Conservatoire Groningen. Lessons, Concerts, and Private Soirées),
109, Sutherland Gardens, W.,
Or, Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co.,
84, New Bond Street, W.

Mr. LESLIE CROTTY and
Madame GEORGINA BURNS,
c/o Mr. Alfred Moul (sole agent),
26, Old Bond Street, W.

Miss AGNES JANSON requests that all communications respecting engagements may be sent to her new address, 34a, Gloucester Place, Portman Square, W.; or to Mr. N. Vert, 6, Cork Street, W.

MR. HEALEY'S SPECIAL LIST.

Madame LILIAN NORDICA (Soprano)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert),
Address to
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mdlle. LOUISE LABLACHE (Mez. Sop.)
(Opera and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W

Mdlle. HELENE HASTREITER (Contr.)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert)
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Madame BELLE COLE (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. WILLIAM NICHOLL (Tenor)
28, Belsize Road, N.W.,
Or, Sole Agent, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Miss MARGUERITE HALL (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. JOHN PROBERT (Tenor)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W

Mr. VAUGHAN EDWARDES (Baritone)
(Concerts and Oratorio),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. MULES BROWN (Baritone)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. HENRY POPE (Bass)
(Opera, Concerts, and Oratorio),
Business Manager. W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. T. L. CAMPION (Bass)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES.

Public Speakers and Singers

Can use "Brown's Bronchial Troches" as freely as requisite, containing nothing that can injure the system. They are invaluable in allaying the hoarseness and irritation incident to vocal exertion, effectually Clearing and Strengthening the Voice.

"They seem to act specially on the organs of the voice, and produce a clear enunciation."—Marie Roze-Mapleson.

Ask for and obtain only "Brown's Bronchial Troches." Sold everywhere at 1s. 1½d a box.

UNIVERSITY OF MELBOURNE.

The Council of the University having decided to create a professorship of Music, Candidates for the appointment are requested to forward their applications, with testimonials, to the Agent General for Victoria not later than the 22nd of February. The Candidate chosen, besides delivering Lectures on the History, Science, and Teaching of Vocal and Instrumental Music, will be required to conduct examinations of Candidates for Musical Degrees, to act as Organist to the University, to periodically report upon the progress of Scholars in Music, and to conduct examinations of candidates for certificated Teachers. The commencing salary will be £750 per annum, rising by quinquennial increments, should the funds of the endowment allow it, to an ultimate maximum of £1,200, with an allowance for House Rent of £100 per annum.

Further particulars may be obtained on application to the Agent General for Victoria, Victoria Office, 8, Victoria Chambers, Westminster, S.W.

THE FRASER QUINTET. Misses Violet (Vocalist), Ida, and Ethel (Pianist, Violoncello, and Viola), Mabel and Stella Violinists), play Quartets, Solos, Duets, two Pianofortes, &c. For Engagements, for Concerts, "At Homes," Dinner and Garden Parties.—Address: 121, Adelaide Road, N.W.

DRURY LANE.—Augustus Harris, Lessee and Manager.— TWICE DAILY, at 1.30 and 7.30. Augustus Harris's Ninth Annual Pantomime.

PUSS IN BOOTS, at DRURY LANE.

DRURY LANE.—PUSS IN BOOTS.—Mesdames Wadman, Lettie Lind, Marie Williams, Jenny Dawson, Leslie Bell, Lily Miska, Violet Newham, Minnie Inch, Helen Capet, Florrence Graham, Mabel Coates, Marguerite Etoile, Millie Vere, Charlotte Elworthy, Alice Hammack, Bettina de Sortis (Premiere Danseuse); Messrs. Harry Nichols, Herbert Campbell Lionel Rignold, Charles Danby, Charles Lauri, jun., Reuben Inch, J. B. Gordon, Griffiths Brothers, Harry Payne (clown).—Box office open daily from ten to six.

THE MUSICAL WORLD is on sale at Merrydew's Library Boulogne-sur-Mer.

Notice to Advertisers.—Advertisements should be sent not later than 5 o'clock on Wednesdays, to the Office, 12, Catherine St., Strand.

Notice to Subscribers.—The Subscription to The Musical World is now reduced to 17s. 6d. per annum (payable in advance).

All business communications to be addressed to the Manager of The Musical World.

All communications in reference to the literary part of the paper to be addressed to the Editor, who cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless accompanied by a stamped directed envelope.

Facts and Comments.

The Queen having promised to attend another concert at the Royal Albert Hall this season, has been pleased to fix a day early in May for that event. Sir Arthur Sullivan's cantata "The Golden Legend" is the work to be performed, and, in obedience to Her Majesty's commands, it will be conducted by the composer, a duty which would otherwise have devolved upon Mr. Barnby.

As anticipated, the post of organist at St. Paul's Cathedral has been offered to and accepted by Dr. Martin.

Mr. Hubert Parry has been delivering a course of lectures at the Royal Institution, the second of which was given on Thursday, while the third and fourth are announced for February 23rd and March 1st respectively. The subject of the series is "Early Secular Choral Music from the 13th to the beginning of the 17th Century." The period of the maturity of the madrigal, its spread to England, and its culmination there will be treated in the third lecture.

Probate has been granted of the will, dated 15th May, 1886, with a codicil made 29th August, 1887, of Madame Jenny Marie Lind-Goldschmidt, who died on 2nd November last, aged 67 years, at Colwell, Herefordshire. She bequeaths to the King of Sweden her painting "The Inundation;" to Mrs. Victor Benecké the portrait of Mendelssohn; to her grandson Victor Francis Maude, the cabinet of books given to her by the Fire Companies of New York; and to the Royal Museum at Stockholm the gold, silver, and bronze medals struck in her honour, and the gold medal with diamond crown presented to her by King Oscar II., to be worn with the riband of Zeraphine. She devises the freehold estate of Wynd's Point to her husband, Otto Goldschmidt, and bequeaths amongst other legacies 50,000 Swedish kröner to the University of Upsala to be called the "Eric Gustof Gezler Stipend," for the maintenance of poor students at the University; and 50,000 kröner to the University of Lund, to be called the "Bishop Isaia's Tegner Stipend" for the maintenance of poor students intending to enter the Protestant Church. Subject to the life interest of her husband, the testatrix appoints the "common fund" settled on her marriage, as to one-third each in trust, for her sons Walter Otto and Ernest Svend David Goldschmidt, and her daughter, Jenny Maria Katherine, the wife of Raymond William de Latham Maude, and she recites that she had previously settled on each £5,000 from her moiety of a "so-called joint fund," derived from joint earnings of her husband and herself, which, although his by law, were at his desire settled as to one moiety, or not less than £15,000 to her appointment. The executors are the said Otto Goldschmidt, Edward Wingfield, and Richard Du Cane, and the value of the personality is declared at £40,630 13s. 8d.

We regret to announce the death, on the 5th inst., at 66, Seymour Street, Portman Square, of Henrietta Anne, widow of Henry Händel Gear.

Miss Shinner has recently played several times before Her Majesty at Osborne, and has been presented by the Queen with a handsome diamond bracelet.

On Wednesday evening the 32nd annual banquet in aid of the benevolent branch of the Dramatic and Musical Sick Fund took place at the Hôtel Métropole. Mr. H. L. W. Lawson, M.P., occupied the chair, and the guests included Mr. Henry Betty (president of the fund), Sir Edwin Arnold, Sir William Hardman, Sir J. Whittaker Ellis, M.P., Sir A. K. Rollit, M.P., Captain M'Calmont, M P., Mr. Montague Williams, Mr. G. A. Sala, Mr. Edward Lawson, Mr. S. B. Bancroft, Mr. Augustus Harris, Mr. J. C. Parkinson, Mr. E. Terry, Mr. Clement Scott, Mr. Edmund Yates, and Mr. H. A. Jones. After the usual loyal toasts had been duly honoured, the Chairman proposed the toast of "The Dramatic and Musical Sick Fund," and in doing so said that the fund was started 32 years ago, originally as a provident and benevolent institution. It comprehended every branch of the profession, and, speaking with due respect of both the General Theatrical Provident and of the Actors' Fund, he must claim precedence for their own. The fund was at a low ebb, and yet from it were relieved authors, musicians, scene painters, stage carpenters, property men, wardrobe mistresses, ballet girls, dressers, scene shifters, cellarmen, pantomimists, gas men, and supers, with their wives or widows—the whole subordinate staff of the theatrical organisation. More than that, it sometimes gave that kindly aid which softened the bitter end of a spoilt career to actors and actresses who had in their day taken considerable parts in high company. One old man was now on their books through no great fault of his own who had played Shakespearian drama with Charles Kean. But for such there was generally other provision; for the super and the mechanician there was none. Their earnings were small, their employment precarious, their work often exhausting, yet those nightly servants of the public were just as much needed for effective performance and display as leading stars and prima donnas. Not many weeks ago there was a successful appeal for those who were thrown out of work by the burning of the Grand Theatre, Islington. The money was given after an appalling disaster, but a mere dislocation of business might have exactly the same effect, yet without such a catastrophe no such subscription was invited. In such cases that fund should do the work, and enable those workers to tide over the period of unemployment and distress—too often the first step to the workhouse and all that word implied—until once more they had the chance of earning an honest livelihood.

The spread of good music throughout England is slow but sure, and the case of Pinxton may be made use of to point a moral of the tale of its progress. At the feasts of this little happy Derbyshire village a great feature is made of music, and even the recent distribution of prizes to the Sunday school was an occasion for the discoursing of much sweet music. Mrs. Sacheverel Coke, of Brookhill Hall, the Lady Bountiful of the neighbourhood, distributed the prizes, and Master Algy Coke, a very small violinist indeed, astonished the natives, who thought young Hofmann was nothing at all compared to him.

A singular robbery took place in Liverpool, last week, of Madame Georgina Burns's jewels, which she wore at the Court Theatre, Liverpool, that evening. During the performance of the opera "Robert" great enthusiasm was manifested by a party of Liverpool University College students in the gallery of the theatre. On the termination of the performance they insisted on drawing Mdme. Burns's carriage to her hotel, and on her objecting to this they determined to escort her thither, and afterwards serenaded her on her arrival at her residence, St. James's Place. In the carriage was placed a handbag containing Madame Burns's jewels, which must either have been cleverly abstracted en route or after her arrival at her lodgings. The handbag—probably owing to the excitement—was missed only some little time after arrival home. The police have failed to obtain a clue to the missing property, which is valued at £500.

It is stated by a contemporary that the Theatre Royal, at Blyth, has been destroyed by fire.

Australia shows a disposition to "advance" in musical as in other ways, if Melbourne be taken as representative of that continent. The proposal that Mr. Cowen should go over to direct a series of concerts in connection with the International Exhibition has been found by the English composer not to clash too seriously with his London engagements. It is true that the last concert of the Philharmonic Society will have to take place in the absence of their chosen conductor, but they will not on that account grudge to Melbourne the temporary services of a musician so well fitted for his task. May he feel no greater pang during his outward voyage than that occasioned by a gentle remorse, when he thinks of his deserted desk at St. James's Hall!

The Bologna Musical Exhibition is beginning to cast its shadow before it, and the members of the English Committee are doing their best to have this country well represented on that memorable occasion. The Duke of Edinburgh will contribute an excellent collection of instruments, and has accepted the honorary presidency of the Committee, Mr. Cusins acting under him as vice-president. It is hoped that the Queen also will be a contributor. Those of our readers who possess interesting MSS., books, pictures, etc., bearing upon the history of English music, or of music in England, are requested to communicate with Mr. Cusins, at 40, Montagu-square, W.

In the meantime, the preparations in Italy are progressing apace. There, also, Royalty, in the person of the Crown Prince, will take an important, albeit an essentially ornamental part in the proceedings, and no less a personage than Verdi is honorary president of the Bologna Committee. The burden of the actual work, as far that is as the performances are concerned, lies, however, on the shoulders of the acting president, Arrigo Boito, who recently paid a visit to the old University city to settle the details of the programme, a sketch of which has already appeared in the MUSICAL WORLD.

Of foreign cities, Berlin will be largely represented, and Prince Bismarck has authorised the State museums to lend some of their greatest treasures. The Belgian department will be under the superintendence of M. Mahillon, who, it will be remembered, took a prominent part in the Loan Exhibition of South Kensington. Special sections will be reserved for Rossini, Bellini, Donizetti, and Wagner. A similar honour was intended for Verdi, whose well-known modesty, however, frustrated this act of glorification.

The operatic season, under the management of the Brothers Corti, of Milan, will, amongst other things, include Verdi's "Otello," and the first Italian performance of Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde," with the famous German tenor, Winkelmann, as Tristan. If such an accumulation of interesting things does not attract amateurs from all parts of the world, then what will?

Italy and Germany are at present interchanging musical courtesies. On January 31st Verdi's "Otello" met with its first performance in Germany at Hamburg, and on the 5th inst. at Munich; and Wagner's "Lohengrin" was about the same time received with unbounded enthusiasm at Padua. The same opera was given at Madrid for the benefit of the conductor of the opera, Signor Mancinelli — the Norwich Mancinelli.

A very important communication with regard to the Wagner and Liszt correspondence is made by Richard Pohl in the current number of the Musikalisches Wochenblatt. The letters, as far as published, end with the year 1861, and Herr Richard Pohl, like everyone else, supposed that further instalments would be published from time to time. Being one of the staunchest and earliest Wagnerites, he thought himself entitled to the best information available. He accordingly solicited an interview, perhaps we should say an audience, of Madame Cosima Wagner, and this is what she told him:—

"My father, soon after the laying of the foundation-stone of the Bayreuth Theatre, handed over to me all my husband's letters, together with the original scores of "Der Fliegende Holländer," "Tannhäuser," "Lohengrin," and the MS. of "Jesus von Nazareth," with the statement that I was the sole owner of these manuscripts, and was free to make what use I liked of them. I believed that these documents should no longer be withheld from publicity. I have myself edited the letters; what concerned other people I have, with a few exceptions of places and individuals, either suppressed or sought to render unrecognisable by the omission of names, because my business was to publish the relations of Wagner and Liszt, and not to enter into outside personalities."

"With the two volumes that have already appeared," Madame Wagner went on to say, "the publication is closed. I do not possess more, and no letters of a later period exist."

The sentence which we have ventured to underline contains a truly astounding statement. Does it mean that during the 22 last years of their joint lives the great masters did not correspond with each other, or that the letters which they wrote have been destroyed, and, if so, by whom, and why? Let us hope that Madame Wagner merely wishes to imply that she does not possess any such letters, but that some one else may, for all she knows. Hints have been occasionally thrown out that during some years the relations between the two friends were somewhat strained; but such a state of things, if it existed at all, must have been of a very passing kind. Everyone who saw Wagner and Liszt together at the first performance of the "Nibelungen," must have seen how the two clung to each other, and it is well known that Liszt literally died, as he had lived, in the cause of his great friend. For in his shattered state of health he would leave his room to witness a performance of "Tristan and Isolde," and thus accelerated, if he did not actually cause, his death. Madame Wagner's statement, to say the least, requires explanation.

Three letters of Beethoven have been unearthed and recently published in the Neue Freie Presse of Vienna, by Dr. von Breuning, the son of one of Beethoven's most intimate friends. They are not of any musical interest, and refer chiefly to the master's ne'er-do-weel nephew, who was the plague of his great and great-hearted uncle, and on one occasion tried to commit suicide, but, unfortunately, did not succeed. To the latter event one of the letters refers, Beethoven being specially eager to withdraw the young scapegrace, who had just recovered from his wounds, from the pernicious influence of his mother.

Perhaps the most remarkable feature of these letters is their spelling, which sets all the rules of orthography at defiance.

While Joachim is introducing Brahms's last instrumental work to the amateurs of Berlin and London, his talented wife proves her devotion to the same composer by rendering, in her unsurpassed style, his latest songs. At her third vocal recital, given in the Berlin Singakademie, the programme consisted of Brahms's music entirely. Besides many well known and popular songs, "Therese" making, perhaps, the greatest sensation, Frau Joachim brought before the public three manuscript Lieder, which greatly delighted audience and critics. These were entitled, "Wie Melodien zieht es," "Immer leiser wird mein Schlummer," and "An die Stolze."

Some novelties in Chamber music have been brought to light by the Dresden Tonkünstler Verein. A MS. sonata for clarinet and piano, by Felix Draeseke, won unanimous approval by its attractive brightness and musicianly construction. A violoncello and piano sonata, however, by W. A. Mozart, the son of the great master, disappointed by its lack of freshness and melody, and will probably be again consigned to the shelf, from which it should never have been taken. W. A. Mozart died in 1844, and is said to have been too direfully oppressed by the weight of his father's glory to do any good work as a composer. A modern musician, Arno Kleffel, has produced, at a recent Gürzenich concert, a work for solo, chorus, and orchestra, "Schwestertreue," which made an excellent impression.

The "Nibelungen" Cycle has been given in Carlsruhe, Herr Mottl conducting, and "Tristan" has been mounted at the Breslau Opera. Leipsic and Berlin have celebrated the anniversary of Wagner's death by performances of his music. Herr Carl Halir, of Weimar, has been engaged as Konzertmeister during the Bayreuth Festival of this year, a post which he filled on a similar occasion two years ago.

Samara's operetta, "Der Sänger von Palermo," was fixed for performance on the 11th at Vienna.

A German baritone, of the Sachs-Altenburg Ducal Court Opera, has composed an opera in three acts, "Melusine," to a libretto by Heinrich Seidel. More interest attaches to an operatic work by Xaver Scharwenka, entitled "Mataswintha," as yet unfinished. The book is founded by Ernst Koppel on Felix Dahn's "Ein Kampf um Rom."

The newly-discovered operetta by Offenbach, "Coscoletto," has, it appears, already been judged and—rejected by the public voice, and that at the Berlin Wallner Theatre, on October 26th, 1865. After four days it had to be withdrawn. It is not likely that the Parisians will care for an operetta that proved too dull for German ears.

Teutonic connoisseurship and criticism of this class of composition have obliged Strauss to revise his "Simplicius." The composer has begun by engaging a first-rate dramatist to remodel the libretto.

At the splendid performance, at Munich, of Verdi's "Otello," Herr Vogl was entrusted with the title-part, Herr Gura was Iago, and Frau Schölles, Desdemona. The secondary parts also appear to have been admirably represented, and the chorus and orchestra have been accorded the warmest praise. Herr Levi conducted.

Of the 800,000 inhabitants of St. Petersburg, an average of no less than 4,000 visit every night the various theatres of the capital. A month or two ago the numbers were taken at the chief theatres, with the results that during one month 34,220 persons visited the Russian Opera, 32,000 the Alexandra Theatre, 22,972 the famous Ciniselli Circus, and 17,500 the Michael Theatre, while the rest were divided among the various smaller play houses.

On Friday, the 10th, Mr. Norman Cummings, son of Mr. W. H. Cummings of the Sacred Harmonic Society, performed Mendelssohn's Capriccio brillante, with orchestra, at the new Concert Room in Leipsic. The "Tageblatt" of the 11th says "he played the Capriccio well off by heart, showing a good technique, and was much applauded."

Americans never say die. In spite of the heavy loss sustained by the German Opera this season, the committee have decided to carry on the enterprise for yet another year, and it is stated that efforts will be made to give a more varied repertoire, and to secure all the available talent. This is both plucky and sensible.

Dorothy has found its way to Boston, where it was produced on the 30th of last month, with Miss Lilian Russell in the cast. In London the five-hundredth performance took place last week. The vicissitudes through which this operetta has passed, from its very unpromising beginnings at the Gaiety to its present climax of success, might form an interesting chapter in the history of the stage, in which the value of "first night" impressions would be shown to be almost nil.

BERLIOZ'S "LES TROYENS."

(Continued from page 108.)

The Triumphal march[*] is now heard in the distance, and the people are bringing the wooden horse into the city of Troy while they sing praises of thankfulness to Pallas, the goddess, undisturbed by the warning voice of Cassandra. The next theme, in G minor, is further emphasised by being solely accompanied by the harps. A more joyous theme is soon heard. It is announced first by the trombones, and is succeeded by a fanfare of oboes, in a manner which reminds one very much of the instruments of antiquity. The accompaniment of harps is again used when the chorus recommences. Cassandra then prophesies for the last time to the misguided Trojans.

The people then depart. The triumphal march is still heard in the distance, and, little by little, it gradually dies away, Cassandra continuing her soliloquy.

All is now over. The Greeks have entered the city, and Cassandra, who knows the fate in store for her, weeps.

This ends the second act.

When the third act commences, the unhappy Trojans are still heard to defend themselves, hopelessly endeavouring to defend their beloved city to the last, against the overwhelming power of the enemy. Æneas, however, is not amongst his countrymen, but is discovered on the stage, asleep on his couch. Shortly after, Ascanius comes in, as if suddenly awakened by the noise in the distance. He listens to the sound of alarm which is now heard, and approaches the resting-place of his father, with the intention of awakening him, but is afraid to do so, and retires. The spectre of Hector then appears and advances towards Æneas. He stands in sad contemplation, till Æneas awakes and discovers who is by his side.

The spectre exclaims:—

"Pergame te confie

"Ses enfants et ses Dieux! . . . Va! . . . cherche l'Italie"

. . . and disappears. At this instant, Ascanius, followed by Chorebe and Panthée enter, and inform Æneas that Priam and the sentries have been massacred by the Greeks.

A crowd of Trojan warriors now rush in, and call upon Æneas to lead them to battle.

The scene then changes to the temple. The wives and daughters of the Trojan warriors are seen weeping and praying before the altar of the goddess Cybelé.

On the approach of Cassandra, they arise. She consoles the women by telling them that:—

Tous ne périront pas. . . le valeureux Enée
Et sa troupe, trois fois au combat ramenée,
Ont délivré nos braves citoyens,
Enfermés dans la citadelle. . . .
Le trésor de Priame est aux mains des Troyens!
Bientôt en Italie, où le sort les appelle,
Ils verront s'élever, plus puissante et plus belle,
Une nouvelle Troie. . . .

The women then inquire after Chorebe, and Cassandra tells them, "Il est mort." As soon as they hear this, their lamentations know no bounds, Cassandra, on the contrary, is as calm as if nothing had happened, and exhorts them rather to die with her than become the slaves of the conquering Greeks.

Some of the women then stand apart and converse amongst themselves, while the others take up their lyres and sing a song of triumph. Those who were silent at first now join in, and Cassandra further excites them to enthusiasm. The Greeks arrive and force their way into the temple. But this does not abate the courage of the brave Trojan women, who continue their triumphal chant, and face the enemy without fear. Cassandra then strikes a dagger into her breast and falls. The Greeks, surprised at this, stand back with horror, and the Trojan women take advantage of this opportunity to go up the parapet which overlooks on the sea. They cry:—

Sauve nos fils, Enée
. . . . .
Italie! Italie!

and throw themselves into the sea as the curtain drops.

"LES TROYENS A CARTHAGE."

This work, which forms the second part of "Les Troyens," is by far the more important of the two, both from a musical and a dramatic point of view, and it is the only part which has hitherto been honoured with a stage representation. It is divided into five acts, and its principal personages are as follows:—Dido, Queen of Carthage (mezzo-soprano); Anna, her sister (contralto); Ascanius, the son of Æneas (soprano); Æneas, a Trojan hero (tenor); Narbal, the Queen's Prime Minister (bass); Panthée, a Trojan priest (bass); Jopas, a poet (second tenor); Hylas, a young sailor (second tenor); two Trojan soldiers (baritone and bass), and besides, some of the personages who were murdered in the "Prise de Troie," now appearing as spectres. The work opens with an instrumental movement of considerable beauty, which the composer entitles "Lamento," and after a few chords by way of introduction, the first theme is given out by the violins alone. This theme is afterwards taken up by the violoncellos, and then the violins have another theme, very much like the first, which forms the accompaniment to a kind of funeral melody in the bass, which justifies the name of "Lamento."

As soon as the orchestral movement is over, the curtain rises and discloses a scene representing the city of Troy in flames after the massacre. A Rhapsodist[*] comes forward and soliloquises over the fall of Troy. He preludes every stanza by striking four notes on his lyre. At this instant the people are heard singing the Trojan march in the distance. This time it is considerably abridged, and instead of being given with enthusiasm, as on the previous occasion, the people mournfully sing it, according to Berlioz's own words, dans le mode triste. As soon as there is silence, the Rhapsodist continues relating the incidents of the first part of the tragedy. He then departs, and after a short instrumental movement, allegro agitato, the prologue ends. The first act opens on the esplanade before the Queen's palace, and in the centre a throne is erected. It commences with a short chorus, "De Carthage les cieux," which depicts the happiness of the contented people. The Queen enters and seats herself on the throne, having her sister, Anna, at her right, and her faithful Prime Minister, Narbal, at her left. On the conclusion of the national song, the Queen rises, and addresses her faithful subjects in a recitative, followed by an air, "Cher Tyriens." The Queen then distributes prizes to several sailors, labourers, and builders, who, by their industry, have helped to raise Carthage to the position it occupies, and the proceedings end with the repetition of the national song, "Gloire à Didon." The next scene is a room in the palace, and the sisters are alone. This, of course, gives rise to a duet. It opens with short and beautiful orchestral prelude, the theme of which is soon heard again in the voice part. After the duet, Jopas, the poet, in great excitement, enters, and announces the arrival of a fleet of unknown vessels. Dido bids them be introduced to her, and the scene changes to the esplanade before the Queen's palace. First comes Dido's air, during which the strangers are heard approaching in the distance. The triumphal march in the mode triste is heard when they are about to come in, and Dido, who is suddenly seized with a strange presentiment, cries—

J'éprouve une soudaine et vive impatience
De le voir . . . et je crains en secret leur presence,

As soon as this is said, the strangers make their appearance. Amongst them are Æneas and his son Ascanius, and Panthée, the Trojan priest, disguised like the rest as sailors. Æneas, fearing the people might recognise him by his voice, commands his son to act as spokesman. Ascanius then asks the Queen the favour of a refuge, on behalf of his companions and himself, and at the same time offers some relics saved from the siege of Troy as presents. The Queen graciously grants their requests, and thanks them for their presents. While the refugees are receiving the congratulations of the people, Narbal, the Prime Minister, arrives in great excitement, and announces the invasion of the country by Jarbas, the Numidian King. As soon as Æneas hears the news, he throws off his disguise, makes his way through the crowd, and approaches the Queen. He then explains his origin, and offers the services of both his army and himself. The Queen at once accepts his offer, and shortly after she whispers softly to her sister—

---

[*] Berlioz wrote on the 26th of January, 1857, to M. Bennet, the father of the pianist, who was known to the public by the name of Theodore Ritter:— "I am just completing the instrumentation of the monster finale . . . . . which up to yesterday was a source of serious anxiety to me, by reason of its size. But I sent Rocquemont to the Conservatoire to find the score of Spontini's Olympie, which has a triumphal march in the same tempo as mine, with bars of the same duration as those in my finale. I have counted the bars; there are 347, and I have only 244. Moreover, there is no action whatever during the immense processional development of the march in the Olympie, whereas I have a Cassandra who is on the stage while the cortége of the wooden horse defiles in the distance."

[*] This part is undertaken by an actor, and the words are not sung, but spoken.

> O ma sœur, qu'il est fier, ce fils de la déesse.

These incidents of course give rise to some ensemble writing. But the most touching episode is that in which Æneas bids farewell to his son, and confides him to the care of the Queen.

The second act is, with the exception of a few choral phrases near the end, entirely instrumental. In this act Berlioz has attempted to depict the hunt which Dido prepares in Æneas's honour, and the French composer follows closely Virgil's narrative*:—

> When next the sun his rising lights displays,
> And gilds the world below with purple rays,
> The queen Æneas, and the Tyrian court,
> Shall to the shady woods, for sylvan game, resort.
> There, while the huntsmen pitch their toils around,
> And cheerful horns from side to side resound,
> A pitchy cloud shall cover all the plain
> With hail, and thunder, and tempestuous rain;
> The fearful train shall take their speedy flight,
> Dispersed, and all involved in gloomy night;
> One cave a grateful shelter shall afford
> To the fair princess and the Trojan lord.

(To be continued.)

Reviews.

VOCAL.

Two songs by Geo. Bernard Gilbert, lately received, afford an agreeable contrast to the flood of common-place, educated and uneducated, which never ceases to pour in upon us—"A Marriage Song" (Joseph Williams) showing decided freshness of fancy, besides having the advantage of pretty words. Both of this, and of a sacred song by the same hand, entitled "By Another Way" (Novello, Ewer, and Co.), it may safely be said, without putting forward any extravagant pretensions for them, that they have been really composed, not manufactured. The gradually increasing fervour and final climax at the close of each verse in the last-named song, are admirably conceived and artistically executed. Another song deserving to be separated from the bulk of recent productions of the sort, is a rendering for soprano or tenor, of Thomas Ingoldsby's well-known verses, "As I lay a thynkinge" (Beare and Son), in which advantage is cleverly taken of the opportunities afforded by the poet for varied expression and telling transitions from grave to gay. Despite this variety, there is a certain simplicity of tone and sentiment running through the words, which we seem to miss in the present treatment; but while the inducement to elaborate might, perhaps, in some parts have been resisted with advantage, the ideas themselves are good, and the song effective. Due credit must be accorded to the painstaking, and, in some respects, successful manner in which six songs, by Robert Browning, have been set to music by E. C. Gregory (Novello, Ewer, and Co.) Tempting to the composer, these words, so full of passion and subtle suggestion, must always be. On the other hand, the pitfalls by which he is waylaid, in the shape of abrupt and startling turns of thought, eccentric metre, and occasionally of expressions more powerful than singable, are curiously illustrated in the result before us. Some of these difficulties have been satisfactorily coped with; and from time to time traces of originality, of a kind congenial to the text, are unmistakably apparent—take, as one example, the sudden prominence given by harmonic expedient to the words "Violets were born" in the wonderfully beautiful poem entitled "Apparitions." Although some monotony of figuration in the accompaniment, and a certain tameness engendered by the over employment of full chords would seem to point to restriction of resource, these songs, written throughout in educated style, show much interesting intention, and contain some excellent effects.

We receive a further instalment of J. Curwen and Sons' issue of popular cantatas, entitled "The Soul's Pilgrimage," by W H. Hadow. The composer has manifestly been an assiduous student of Mendelssohn, and the opening phrases of not a few of the soli and choral numbers nearly land us in some familiar and favourite theme from the works of that master. By a quick movement, however, on "the outer edge," to use a skating expression, he adroitly manages, in many cases, to evade the charge of downright plagiarism, and although the cantata must be classed among imitative productions, it is evidently the work of a capable musician, and will supply pleasant material for choral societies. Recent numbers of the Church Choralist (J. Curwen and Sons) contain two anthems for soli and chorus by Charles Darnton, "Give ear to my prayer, oh God" and "Rejoice the soul of thy servant," both of which possess merit, as does also a "Te Deum Laudamus," of moderate compass, in G major, by John A. Macmeikan (Hart and Co.) Also received, an effective little part song for male voices, "Devotion," by Edward Griffiths (Weekes and Co.)

HANDBOOKS

It would cost even a competent teacher considerable time and thought, to put his subject matter in the form of questions so lucidly expressed, and so judiciously arranged, as those to be found in books one and eleven of "The Groundwork of Music," by C. Webster (Oliver and Boyd, Edinburgh; Simpkin, Marshall, and Co., London). The numerous lessons and examination papers here given, deal thoroughly with such elementary subjects as clefs, time, scales, keys, intervals, and the various technical terms used in music; and the author has evidently grasped the secret, well-known to experienced instructors, that a thing is not permanently taught by being merely once told, but has to be reiterated again and again, and shown in its various aspects, before it becomes available knowledge such as the learner may be said really "to have and to hold." The utility for young beginners of a "Music Copybook" devised by the same author (same publishers), speaks for itself.

A little work on "Handbell-ringing," by C. W. Fletcher (J. Curwen and Sons), gives very complete and systematically arranged information for the benefit of those who aspire to proficiency in that art; for an art it must be called, albeit, a modest one, having doubtless its eminent professors, virtuosi, and music especially written for it; and, for all we know, its rival "systems" and "schools," just like any other art.

JOTTINGS FROM OUR PARIS CORRESPONDENT.

A French translation of the correspondence between Wagner and Liszt will be shortly published at the same time in Paris and Brussels. M. Maurice Kufferath, the Belgian musical critic, recently contributed an article to the Guide Musical of Brussels, containing various extracts from these letters, and La Gazette de France and some other Parisian newspapers have reprinted portions of it.

Active preparations are now being made at the Grand Opéra for the first performance at that theatre of Gounod's "Romeo et Juliette." M. Jean de Reszké will be the Romeo. M. Gounod, it is reported, has composed several additions to the score.

The directors of the Grand Opéra have accepted for early production an opera, entitled "Zaïre," by a young composer, M. Véronge de la Nux.

Mr. Benjamin Godard is completing the instrumentation of his new opera "Ruy Blas." The score, when finished, will be published by the firm of Choudens, and the parts at the Opéra-Comique are distributed as follows:—M. Talazac, Ruy Blas; M. Taskin, Don Salluste; M. Soulacroix, Don César, and Mme. Rose Caron, Marie de Neubourg.

M. Massenet, it is reported, will set to music Victor Hugo's libretto "Esmeralda," when he has completed the new opera for the Grand Opéra, on which he is now engaged.

A very interesting collection, entitled "Mélodies populaires des provinces de France, recueillies et harmonisées par Julien Tiersot," has been recently issued by the publisher of the Ménestrel.

The musical commissioners of the Paris Universal Exhibition of 1889 announce a prize competition for a lyrical poem to celebrate the first French Revolution. The title of the work will be "Quatre-vingt-neuf."

---

* Dryden's Translation.

The Organ World.

THE GENIUS OF THE ORGAN.—III.

The comparison, so briefly and imperfectly stated the other week, between the resources of the orchestra and organ, led to the conclusion that the distinguishing characteristics of the two great musical forces were respectively those of active and passive types. It may be further asserted that these broadly stated characteristics have greatly influenced not only the character of the music, but the several duties assigned to orchestra and organ; and these have naturally in turn largely influenced the style of music written for either of the two leading musical powers. The economy of the organ, as compared with the cost and trouble attending the presence of an orchestra, does not furnish the only argument in favour of the use of the organ in church. The æsthetic reason for the general use of the organ in church is to be found in its negative excellence, the want of real, vivid musical life, which leaves to the organ an artificial calmness, which supplies, strangely enough, a good medium for the expression of devotion feeling, because this feeling is calm and passive in its normal condition. Naturally, such widely endowed powers as the orchestra and organ have within their varied faculties the means of advancing upon each others' duties; and the power of adaptation is large enough to claim artistic respect and consideration, without disturbing the general, grand lines of demarcation. Although organists, by the nature of their various duties and by the prevailing desire to indulge in characteristic tone-colour effects, favour, to a considerable extent, the imitation of orchestral idioms, it is a matter of doubt, whether the organ can imitate the orchestra, or the orchestra the organ, with the best success. As a matter of fact, it would seem to be easier to produce organic effects on the orchestra than to suggest orchestral mannerisms on the organ; because it may be granted that an active body can more readily assume a quiescent attitude, that a passive power can put forth a form of vitality that it does not possess. Perhaps it is better to say that the orchestra can more readily undertake the duties of the organ than the latter power can with effect take the place of former named musical force. This assertion comes home to us at once, if we remember the effect of a well-balanced orchestra in church, and try to imagine what a cold, dull affair an opera would be, accompanied solely by the organ.

But it is well not to push such arguments too far; certain it is that the orchestra and organ have much in common, notwithstanding the great differences there are in the first principles of their several languages and idioms. Again, it cannot be said that in imitating orchestral effects on the organ en cherchant les plaisirs on perd le bonheur, for in the first place the instinct for varied tone colour secures its highest gratification in the orchestra, and therefore every approach to orchestral music brings some gain to the art; then, in the second place, the power of adaptation is one of the most distinct faculties of the organ, and is indicative of its comprehensiveness and usefulness.

In art, as in other affairs of life, cosmopolitanism is a leading characteristic of these days, and a very large development in this spirit is to be noticed in modern organ music. At the same time, it is important that this comprehensive spirit shall be under reasonable control, and that the genius of the organ shall not be too seriously sacrificed in the pursuit of imitative effects. Modern organ building, it is certain, displays its chief triumphs in approaches towards orchestral power and variety; and some organists are asking themselves if this tendency may or may not be carried too far? and whether the genius of the organ, its depth, breadth, and magnificent calmness should not receive more attention at the hands of our organ constructors?

E. H. TURPIN.

SIX HOURS WITH BACH.

Mr. A. E. Bishop, the talented organist of St. Mary Abchurch, City, has struck out an excellent idea, giving six Bach recitals at his church. He prefaces his scheme thus:—

"Johann Sebastian Bach was born at Eisenach, March 21st, 1685, at a time when that part of Germany was full of anarchy, war, and bloodshed.

"When only fifteen years of age he, having been left fatherless, went to Lüneburg, there supporting himself by playing the violin and singing in the little band of musicians connected with the school at that place.

"In August, 1703, he succeeded in getting his first organist's appointment at the New Church at Arnstadt.

"At Lubeck, which is about fifty miles from Arnstadt, there was a celebrated organist and composer named Buxtehude. Young Bach, as soon as he could obtain leave of absence, set out on foot to visit Lubeck, and stayed there so long that he incurred the displeasure of the authorities at Arnstadt; however, this visit was a turning-point in his career as a musician, for here he learnt for the first time the full and independent use of the pedals; besides which, the direct influence of Buxtehude's organ music may perhaps be more clearly traced in Bach's compositions than that of any other writer.

"The organ at Arnstadt upon which Bach played consisted of two manuals and pedals, twenty-five stops—viz., eleven on great, seven on choir, five on pedals, one coupler manual to pedals, and tremulant to great.

"At Easter, 1707, Bach removed to Mühlhausen, and the following year again to Weimar, where he remained nine years and wrote a large number of his organ works. The organ upon which he played while at Weimar consisted of two manuals and pedals, 8 stops on great, 8 stops on choir, 7 stops on pedal.

"In 1717 he left Weimar and went to Cöthen, and in 1723 to Leipzig, where he occupied the post of Cantor at the Thomasschule. While in Leipzig he wrote nearly three hundred church cantatas, a new one being composed for every third or fourth Sunday, all the parts copied out for the band and chorus either by himself or the members of his family, and the work rehearsed and performed as the chief music on the Sunday, according to the custom in the Lutheran Church. Here also he wrote several oratorios and four or five of his largest and finest organ compositions.

"During the month of July, 1750, when at the age of sixty-five, death terminated his useful career, which was one of enormous work and of prodigious achievements, leaving an immortal name and an invaluable example both as a man and a musician. His last composition will be found in the programme of the last recital of this series.

"Before putting before my friends my selection of this great master's organ compositions, it will be, perhaps, as well to take a brief survey of the whole.

"The well-known Peters' edition, seven volumes of which were edited by Griepenkerl and two by Roitsch, gives us one hundred and thirty-seven works (more or less complete), contained in nine volumes and extending over seven hundred and seventy-four folio pages.

"As these volumes were published at various times, and most of the larger and more important works were chosen first in preference to the earlier ones, it follows that the order in this edition is not chronological, but rather the opposite.

"It is important while studying these works to bear in mind that very few of them were engraved during the composer's life-time, but MS. copies were made at the time by his pupils and others for their own use. Details concerning these will be found in the prefaces written by Griepenkerl, and published with the various volumes of the Peters' edition.

"Although, no doubt, these copies were mostly made with Bach's sanction, they contain many and important differences, including—transcriptions into other keys, higher and lower, to suit the compass of various organs; alterations in the pedal parts for the same reason; the use of the term pro organo pleno, which occurs on some existing manuscripts and not on others of the same works; and a few other directions which may have been added for some special reason at the time. An instance of this is given by Spitta, in his excellent work on Bach's life, in the case of a Chorale (Peters, Vol. VI., No. 22) in which the canto fermo played with the left hand is marked in Bach's hand-writing fagotto, while the counterpoint played with the right hand is marked sesquialtera. It is probable that the "sesquialtera" here intended was equivalent to what in old English organs was known as a "mounted cornet," which many years ago was a favourite stop for playing rapid solo passages; some of the larger ones contained as many as ten ranks of pipes, one being an 8ft. stopped diapason. The effect indicated would scarcely be found acceptable to modern ears.

"As in many cases the autographs of the works are altogether lost, the compilers of the Peters' and other original editions were compelled to fall back upon the existing MS. copies, and to use their discretion in adjusting the many differences.

"The Peters' edition contains the following organ works by Bach, about three-fourths of which may be considered more or less suitable for performance, while the remaining fourth part can only be used as examples of contrapuntal devices:—27 Preludes and Fugues, 4 Toccatas and Fugues, 3 Fantasias and Fugues, 8 Fugues (without Preludes), not including those upon chorales, 6 Sonatas (of three movements each), Passacaglia, Pastorale, unfinished, 3 Fantasias (better described as Preludes), 4 Preludes, an Aria, 2 Trios, Canzona, Allabreve, 56 Short Chorales from the "Orgel-büchlein," 73 Movements upon Chorale subjects, 4 sets of Partitas or Variations upon Chorales.

"In addition to the above list, the Peters' edition contains four Concertos, Vol. VIII., which are arranged for the organ by Bach from the compositions of an Italian composer named Vivaldi; also, a Concerto in G, a Fugue in B minor, and a little piece called "Kleines harmonisches labyrinth," of which the authenticity is extremely doubtful.

"In making my selection, it has been my endeavour to choose not so much the most popular numbers, or those making the greatest display, but such as I hope will give to the listener a fair idea of the styles of writing belonging to the various periods of Bach's life.

"With this view it would perhaps have been more desirable to have placed the numbers in chronological order; but as it is necessary to make each programme as far as possible of equal interest and variety, I have simply placed some of the earlier works near the beginning of the series, distributing the more mature works (as the sonatas) through the whole."

The dates of these interesting recitals are the following: Mondays at 3, Feb. 20, 27, March 5, 12, 19, and 26.

CANON BODY ON ART IN CHURCH.

In a recently-preached sermon, the Rev. Canon Body observed:—Now, thank God for it, it had become the most ordinary occasion in the history of a church that they should see it made beautiful by the offerings of Christian loving hearts, and that the members of church congregations should be summoned together to consecrate to God's service this or that beautiful adornment wherewith the glory of His house was made more visibly manifest to men. There was a great movement going on up and down England which was not confined to any one ecclesiastical communion—it certainly was not confined to that dear Church of England, with which most of them were identified. They had lived long enough to see the use of architectural beauty, of music, and of song in Christian communities external to the Church of England. Why one thought that almost the very purpose of their existence was to protest against the things that they adopted. He did not mean that for a single moment the Church had had to adopt all that which she at one time protested against; but he asked them to admit as a fact of modern life that, whether they liked it or disliked it, they were face to face with a development of beauty in connection with religious life and worship that once was an abomination. How were they to stand face to face with that movement? There were those who were still unreconciled to it; and constantly one heard the question, "To what purpose is this waste?" you are spending vast sums of money on the erection of buildings which were conspicuous for architectural loveliness; you are adorning those buildings; you are spending greater or less amounts of money in the development of music and song; "To what purpose is this waste?" In view of the poverty that existed and the condition of modern life, that was a question to which they must be able to give not a transcendental, but a practical and common sense answer if such a service as that which they then kept was really and truly to be anything but a mockery. He confessed he did not like the source from which the question came. They did not like to realise the fact that the first expression they had recorded in the Bible against lavish devotion to Christ in his worship came from the lips of Judas; but whether they liked it or not, it was the fact. But they knew it was not real devotion that made Judas ask the question. Yet, never mind where the question came from, it was a fair question, and one to which they must give an intelligent answer. Why in the present age was it that we looked not with regret but with joy upon the erection of such a reredos as that they commemorated that day, and why did they repudiate with all the power of the language the charge that an effort to make God's house lovely, or worship beautiful, should be designated as an act of waste? If that was waste it was wrong. The question of the text begged the whole question in dispute. He thought that the Church existed in God's world to witness for beauty. Now, did they not want a witness for beauty? Perhaps they did not want it in some parts of the land where everything around was beautiful, except it be the poor hovels in which the labourers lived. But they had but to go outside and be face to face with God's unclouded sky, to see the beauteous hills and dales, the lovely trees, and the trickling brooks; all that was in the country witnessed for the beauty of God. Surely there was need in their towns—surely there was need of some witness for beauty; and that was the province of the Church. They had inherited beautiful buildings, and if by any means they could add to the beauty of every house of God in their midst, they should do so, that they might witness for God in the smoke and turmoil of their daily life. They might laugh at that as æstheticism; but an æsthetic witness in such a community as theirs was needed. There was a great deal around them that witnessed for ugliness; there was a great deal witnessed for despair, and that witnessed for the Gospel; there was a great deal about that made men feel that life was not in God's hands, but the Cross was the solution of the enigma that puzzled men's lives.

MR. THOMAS CASSON ON ORGAN BUILDING.

The following is a summary of a lecture on Organ Building Reform delivered by Mr. Thomas Casson, of Denbigh, before the members of the Birmingham and Midland Musical Guild, at the Grand Hotel, Birmingham, on Saturday evening, February 4th, 1888.

The task of reforming the Organ is not primarily for the builder, and is secondarily only for the player. First and foremost, it is for the "all-round" musician. The work done by the College of Organists in seeking to improve the general musicianship of the organist, is evidence of sound views in this respect as regards playing, and the same policy should be followed in dealing with organ construction. After quoting authorities, the lecturer was fairly able to lay closer the following axioms:—

1. That the modern English organ is unsatisfactory as a whole.

2. That it is especially so in regard to its pedal basses.

3. That it is difficult to stir up organ-builders to the appreciation of progressive ideas.

While giving credit to builders for ingenious and valuable improvements in detail, it is idle to hope for any real progress, until there is a reversion to the sound principles which governed the old English and German schools of building.

The long-manual English organ was admirably adapted for the style of music contemporaneous with it. It is not suitable for the fuller harmonies demanded by the modern ear, and the absence of the pedal obligato is a fatal objection; but it followed a very grand and sound principle, viz., that the separate divisions of the organ, great and choir, must be absolutely complete. This gave perfect facility of control, providing especially sympathetic and appropriate basses.

The compass of the German organ was longer; the basses, which in England would have been cut off at twelve feet, were carried to sixteen feet. As a more convenient method of playing, however, bass stops complementary to the chief manual stops were provided in a pedal organ. Thus the German organ was complete; its distinctive principle being that pedal basses must be provided for all the chief manual stops. These basses were necessarily numerous however, and as there was little or no provision for controlling them, they became, in spite of the theoretical completeness, little more than the bass of the great organ.

On the introduction of pedals into England, they operated upon the great organ only; but were afterwards provided with a reinforcement of "pedal pipes." When the C organ was insisted upon, the English builder made the grave error of supposing the alteration to be, not as it truly was, a lengthening of the compass of the organ, but a shortening of the manual; thus (as Mr. Best says) he "constantly neglected to supply the indispensable equivalent of an adequate pedal organ. Even in the largest instruments, when an attempt is made in this direction, it will be at once remarked that the pedal-bass is only suitable for the great or most powerful clavier." Thus, by different routes the English and German builders arrived at the same miserable result, an instrument without a true bass.

The remedy for the English form of the defect is to adopt the German principle; that for the German defect (lack of control) to adopt the English principle. Thus—

1. Proper basses must be provided for all the chief-named stops.

2. Each department of the organ must be absolutely complete.

We are thus irresistibly driven to a third principle, the central feature of Mr. Casson's system.

3. Each department of the organ must have its own pedal organ.

By means of diagrams, Mr. Casson showed the interesting results of the adoption of this principle, not only for exact basses, but also for pedal solo effects. As he puts it, the freedom and versatility hitherto confined to the manual stops are imparted to those of the pedal organ, entirely abolishing the usual worry with the pedal stops and couplers; the pedal clavier becomes a great mechanical hand, applicable at will to any of the pedal organs.

Some details were explained to show how the system allowed of great economy in room and money, and great simplicity of mechanism and manipulation; but space forbids us to enlarge upon these points. Mr. Casson thus gives a concise summary.

PRINCIPLES.

It is necessary that each division of the organ (great, swell, &c.) be absolutely complete. To this end:—

1. Each division must have its special pedal division, called a pedalier.
2. All couplers are stops of the division which they augment, e.g., swell to great a stop of the great organ, choir to pedal a stop of the choir pedalier.
3. Combination actions must govern a complete division, i.e., all the couplers and other manual and pedal stops.
4. The pipes of the swell pedalier must be in the swell box.
5. The stops of each division must form one group.

PRACTICE.

More than one pedal clavier is impracticable; any pedalier must therefore be attachable to it (to the simultaneous exclusion of others) by stud called a "Pedal Help."

When two manual divisions are coupled, the pedal help of the augmented division must attach the pedaliers of both.

If a pedal stop be suitable for more than one division it must draw and work separately for each.

Any pedalier may contain special melodic stops.

Two or more manual divisions (called in this case subdivisions) may be attachable to one manual clavier by manual helps. In this case the couplers must be allotted separately to each sub-division, and each sub-division is subject to all the above principles.

Correspondence.

RENDERING VISIBLE THE FORM AND MOVEMENTS OF VIBRATING STRINGS.

To the Editor of THE MUSICAL WORLD.

SIR,—I have just noticed, in last week's Electrician, a paragraph which will, I think, interest your readers:—"Herr J. Puling, of Vienna, has devised an extremely ingenious method of rendering visible the form of a stretched string set in vibration. One of its extremities is attached to the prong of a tuning fork, which is kept in motion by an electro-magnet contact breaker, and which gives a definite note, the pitch of which is carefully determined. The vibrating string is lighted up by a vacuum tube connected with a Ruhmkorff coil, the rate of discharge through the tube being alterable at will; and when this is made equal to or some aliquot multiple of the number of vibrations made by the string, the latter is only illumined when occupying some one definite position, and, owing to the persistence of its image on the retina, it appears as if at rest. In this way the form assumed by the string, and the positions of the nodes and ventral segments are rendered clearly visible."

It may be remarked that there does not appear from this account (which is, however, no doubt, an abridgment of a much fuller description) any necessity for determining the frequency of vibration of the tuning fork, or any reason why a desired relation between it and the frequency of illumination of the Geissler tube should not, without trouble, be arrived at by trial, gradually altering the latter frequency. The relation intended is, of course, that the frequency of illumination should be a sub-multiple of that of vibration, otherwise, manifestly, the string would be seen in several phases of each vibration, and would appear to be simultaneously resting in each and all of them.

But if we qualify this condition by making the frequency of illumination a very approximate, and not an exact, submultiple of the vibration frequency, and if—somewhat modifying the apparatus—we greatly reduce the former frequency, and add the condition that the time between successive illuminations shall be, exactly or approximately, that of the persistence of vision, we shall produce a result which is, I venture to think, yet more interesting than to see the string apparently at rest. We shall illumine it at, in comparatively slow succession, any desirable number of points of its vibratory sound. For example: Taking the persistence of vision at one-eighth of a second, let us suppose the vibration frequency to be 96, and the adjustment of the apparatus to have become such as to light up the tube (not 8, but) $7\frac{473}{481}$ times per second; the illuminations of the string would recur after $12\frac{1}{40}$ vibrations, each successive lighting of it consequently presenting, during one-eighth of a second, a phase removed 1 [illegible] of an entire vibration from the preceding one. In other words, the string, continuously present to the eye of the experimenter, would be seen as executing, at the rate of 12 per minute (instead of 5,760) vibrations having, in all respects, the characteristics of its actual indistinguishable ones.

In this way, giving to the visible vibrations of the string any desirable protracted period, the continual change of its curvatures, in combining the movements due to its fundamental note, and to the various overtones in differing intensities present, would, there can be little doubt, be far better realised than by any working out on paper. The necessary modification (alluded to above) of the apparatus would consist merely in replacing the ordinary tongue of the Ruhmkorff coil by one considerably longer and heavier. Without attempting a description of the apparatus, which would require diagrams, and could, of course, in the absence of further information, only be general—and which would have, after all, more interest for the physicist than for the musician—it may be as well to add that, without doubt, the observer looks over, or through, an opening in a reflecting screen, between which and the string the vacuum tube is placed, so that the string appears as a dark line upon a white background beyond (or possibly—and which would be preferable—it may be made white against a dark ground), while the intense light from the tube is prevented from directly entering the eye.

I believe I shall not err in saying that previously to this experiment of Herr Puling no means have existed of rendering visible the actual moving string.—I am, sir, yours faithfully,

CHARLES E. HERBERT.

Charlton, Feb. 10, 1888.

SPECIFICATIONS.

HOLY TRINITY CHURCH, PARIS.

It may interest readers to study the composition of the organ at which M. Alex. Guilmant, F.C.O., presides. It was built by the celebrated firm of M. Cavaille-Coll.

1st MANUAL (lowest): GREAT ORGAN, CC to G, 56 NOTES.

Foundation Stops:

Bourdon (double stopped diapason)	16 ft.	Flute harmonique (harmonic flute)	8 ft.
Montre (open diapason) ...	8 ,,	Bourdon (stopp. diapason)	8 ,,
Violoncello	8 ,,	Prestant (Principal) ...	4 ,,

Combination Stops:

Quinte (twelfth) ...	2⅔ ft.	Basson (double bassoon) ...	16 ft.
Doublette (fifteenth)	2 ,,	Trompette	8 ,,
Plein jeu (mixture) ...	3 to 6 rks.	Clairon	4 ,,

2nd MANUAL: CHOIR ORGAN, CC to G, 56 NOTES.

Principal (open diapason ...	8 ft.	Flute douce (stopp. flute) ...	4 ft.
Bourdon (stopp. diapason)	8 ,,	Doublette (fifteenth) ...	2 ,,
Salicional	8 ,,	Trompette	8 ,,
Unda maris	8 ,,	Clarinette	8 ,,

3rd MANUAL: SWELL ORGAN, CC to G, 56 NOTES.

Foundation Stops:

Quintation	16 ft.	Voix celeste	8 ft.
Diapason (open diapason) ...	8 ,,	Flute octaviante (harmonic flute)	4 ,,
Flute traveresière (German flute)	8 ,,	Basson and hautbois	8 ,,
Viole de gambe	8 ,,	Voix humaine	8 ,,

Combination Stops:

Octavin (harmonic piccolo)	2 ft.	Bombarde (double trumpet)	16 ft.
Plein jeu (mixture) ...	3 to 5 rks.	Trompette ...	8 ,,
Cornet	5 ft.	Clairon (clarion)	4 ,,

PEDAL ORGAN, CCC to F, 30 NOTES.

Foundation Stops:

Contrebasse (open diapason)	16 ft.	Flute	8 ft
Soubasse (stopp. diapason)	16 ,,	Violoncelle (Violoncello) ...	8 ,,

Combination Stops:

Bombarde (trombone) ...	16 ft.	Trompette	8 ft.

COUPLERS AND COMBINATION PEDALS.

- Thunder effect.
- Great to pedals.
- Choir ,,
- Swell ,,
- Adjustable combination affecting pedal combination stops.
- Adjustable combination affecting great combination stops.
- Adjustable combination affecting swell combination stops.
- Great organ to itself in sub-octave.
- Balanced swell pedal.
- Swell organ to itself in sub-octave.
- Great organ to itself in unison.
- Choir to great.
- Swell ,,
- Swell to choir.
- Swell to itself in unison.

ACCESSORY MOVEMENTS.

Swell tremulant. | Bellows signal.

SUMMARY.

Great organ ...	12 stops.	880 pipes.
Choir ,, ...	8 ,,	436 ,,
Swell ,, ...	14 ,,	1,052 ,,
Pedal ,, ...	6 ,,	180 ,,
	40 stops.	2,548 pipes.

RECITAL NEWS.

KENTISH TOWN.—On February 4th, Mr. James Hallé gave a recital at the Church of St. Barnabas. The programme comprised:—

Overture, "Fidelio" (in E major)............	Beethoven.
Adagio and Rondo, from "Sonata Pathetique"	Beethoven.
Romance in F (violin and organ)	Beethoven.
Aria, "If with All" (Elijah)	Mendelssohn.
Concerto in D minor (Allegro—Air—Fugue)	Handel.
Selection from the Water Music.
Largo (violin and organ).
Air, "Oh, had I Jubal's Lyre" (Theodora).
Impromptu Variations.

Miss Marianne Rea and Mr. J. A. Borett (vocalists); the Vicar (violin).

HADFIELD.—A recital was given in St. Andrew's Church, by Mr. W. Mullineux, F.C.O. (organist of Bolton Town Hall, and St. John's Church, Broughton, Manchester, &c.), on February 6th. The following was the programme:—

Grand Prelude and Fugue in E minor...	Bach.
Pastorale in C major	Mullineux.
Offertoire for the Organ in C	Jules Grison.
Barcarole from the Fourth Concerto...	Sterndale Bennett.
Toccata in G major............................	Theo. Dubois.
March for a Church Festival...............	W. T. Best.
Fantasia in A flat	Omer Guiraud.
Scherzo Symphonique Concertant	Lemmens.

Notes.

Speaking of the new organist at Trinity Church, Cleveland, Ohio, a local paper, Church Life, observes, the Music Committee has been fortunate enough to secure the services of a skilled organist and choirmaster. Mr. F. Norman Adams has served under Turpin and Monk in England, and for a year past has been organist at the American church in Paris. He is an enthusiast in the matter of boy choirs, and that is the kind of man we want. His extensive knowledge of music qualifies him to an eminent degree for the positions both of performer and conductor.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.—Organists will rejoice to learn that Dr. G. C. Martin has been appointed successor to Dr. J. Stainer, as organist of St. Paul's Cathedral. This wise and judicious selection was anticipated, but is not less a welcome piece of news. Dr. Martin's great gifts and skill have long been exercised in the cathedral, and widely recognised during the long period he has been assistant to Dr. Stainer. As a choir trainer, Dr. Martin has been not less successful, and the splendid staff of chorister boys of St. Paul's has been raised under his able tuition. He is not only a fine organ player, but a talented composer of Church music. Remembering his gifts, attainments, experience, and the high esteem in which he is held, all must rejoice at the wise selection made by the Dean and Chapter, and all will hope that Dr. Martin will have many years of useful service before him.

CINCINNATI, OHIO.—The pitch of the great organ in the Springer Music Hall, the largest organ in the country, is being lowered a little less than half a tone. When the organ was built, ten years ago, its pitch was made to correspond with the one then generally in vogue. Since then a lower pitch has been widely adopted. Since the change was recommended there has been a lowering of pitch by most of the leading orchestras, and the better class of wind instruments are now made with the new pitch. This change on the part of the orchestra made it necessary that the pitch of the music hall organ should be lowered in order that it may be used with an orchestra at the coming May festival. It is promised that the work will be completed within a month. The cost will be about 2,000 dols.

Organists would do well to attend Mr. T. L. Southgate's Lecture on the "Physiology of Pianoforte Playing," for all keyboard players are interested in the matter of hand and finger training, whether on keys or by external machinery, such as the new inventions of Mr. MacDonald Smith, then to be illustrated and explained. The lecture is fixed for the 28th, as announced below.

At the Bow and Bromley Institute, on Saturday, the features of Mr. Wait's programme were Mendelssohn's second sonata, Lemmens's "Fanfare" and movements by Smart, Welby, and Best. Miss Julia Jones sang very successfully, and Master Horace P. Barton appeared as a juvenile pianist of talent. To-night Mr. Aptommas gives a Harp recital, and on Feb. 5th, Mr. E. H. Lemare, the talented Sheffield Parish Church Organist, will appear.

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS' CALENDAR.

On Tuesday next, February 21st, the library will be open from 7 till 10; February 28, Lecture by Mr. T. L. Southgate on "The Physiology of Pianoforte Playing, etc."; April 9th, Annual College Dinner; April 10th, Lecture by Dr. E. J. Hopkins; April 24th, Lecture, by Dr. F. J. Sawyer, on "The Primary Rules of Organ and Pianoforte Fingering"; May 22nd, Lecture; June 26th, Lecture; July 17th, 18th, and 19th, Examination for F.C.O. Diploma; July 20th, Diploma Distribution; July 24th, 25th, 26th, A.C.O. Examination; July 27th, Diploma Distribution. Other arrangements and particulars will be duly announced.

E. H. TURPIN, Hon. Sec.

95, Great Russell street, Bloomsbury, W.C.

ORGANISTS AND ORGAN STUDENTS.

You are kindly requested to write for Ainsworth's "New Patent Organ Pedal Combination List." Ainsworth's "New Patent" is perfectly unique and may be combined easily with any Piano. It is the only one which may be safely combined with any Piano without deteriorating the instrument. Having put down at my works two engines and machinery of the most desirable kind, I am now supplying my goods at a price which enables every organist and organ student to have always ready for use in his Studio an

ORGAN PEDAL PIANO,
AFFORDING PERFECTLY UNIQUE PEDAL PRACTICE.

34, Sheen Park, Richmond.

DEAR SIR,—I have deferred writing to comment upon your Pedals and Action now attached to my pianoforte until I could satisfy myself of their utility and efficiency. I can now conscientiously say that they more than fulfil all my anticipations. Although I am no carpenter, aided by your lucid diagram I had little difficulty in attaching them myself, and it is impossible to over-estimate the comfort they give to me or to conceive the saving of time one experiences in one's own room.—Believe me, yours truly,
BURNHAM HORNER, F.R. Hist.S.

To Mr. Mr. Ainsworth.

DEAR SIR,—It gives me great pleasure to bear testimony to the perfection of your Invention. I am more than satisfied with your Patent Action and Organ Pedals, and consider them worth double the money. Organists and organ students who desire to improve in the Art of Pedalling, which is so essential to a good organist, will do well to procure a set. I have seen no Action half so effective, and one can sit at the Piano and play, "Fixed in his everlasting seat," or any other organ music, or organ arrangement with the greatest pleasure. The touch of pedals could not be better, and the action is as you say, "Absolutely free from annoyances." They cannot be too highly recommended, as by their use, rapid progress is certain.—Believe me, sincerely yours,
I. B. Thornton,
Organist, Birstall, Leeds.

Cologne, July 16th, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have much pleasure in informing you that your Pedals have given the fullest satisfaction. I have them combined with my practice Piano. Many of my musical friends who have seen them, as well as my organ pupils, are quite delighted with them; and I must acknowledge that I have never met with any Pedals so noiseless and pleasant to play upon as yours. The Action I consider durable, and of very good workmanship. Every organist who desires to perfect his playing will welcome your invention. I can recommend your goods in every respect.—Yours truly,
HERR J. RODENKIRCHEN.
To John Ainsworth, Esq. Organist, The Cathedral, Cologne, Germany.

TOOLS.—In order to facilite the attachment, a complete set of tools are sent (four in number) each one marked for its particular use. By the use of these tools, and following carefully the directions, ANY ONE can make a really good attachment.

On Receipt of Trade or Professional Card, you will receive List, with Liberal Terms.

AINSWORTH'S PATENT ORGAN COMBINATION WORKS
BRINSCALL, CHORLEY.

CASSON'S
PATENT
Organ - Building System

SEPARATE Pedal Organs for each Manual. Expressive and Controllable Pedal Basses. Perfect control of all Couplers. Reduction of number of Claviers without loss of efficiency, &c., &c. See testimonials from

Mr. W. T. BEST.
Rev. Sir F. A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart.
Dr. SPARK.
Dr. J. C. BRIDGE, M.A.
Dr. E. W. TAYLOR, F.C.O.
The late Mr. J. STIMPSON.
Mr. R. BARTHOLOMEW.
Mr. J. HEYWOOD, Birmingham.
Mr. G. A. AUDSLEY, F.R.I.B.A.
M. A. J. HIPKINS, F.S.A.
&c., &c.

Apply to the Secretary—
CASSON'S PATENT ORGAN CO., LIMITED
DENBIGH.

The Musical World.
LONDON: SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 1888.

OUR GREAT MUSICAL SCHOOLS.

II.—THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

To the Editor of THE MUSICAL WORLD.

SIR,—As the Royal Academy is the oldest, so the Royal College of Music is the youngest of our great musical training centres, and your readers may be glad to have an opportunity of forming an opinion of an enterprise which has been launched with the avowed intention of constituting itself the head of musical England, and judging how far such high aspirations are likely to be realised.

Most of your readers are doubtless familiar with the circumstances which led to the establishment of the Royal College in 1883, but there are one or two of those circumstances which will bear repetition, inasmuch as they help to explain the present position of the institution in question. In 1878, when the Prince of Wales summoned the meeting at Marlborough House which was to have such important results, it was intended to amalgamate the Royal Academy and the National Training School of Music, which had been founded in 1875 by the Duke of Edinburgh, and thereout form a thoroughly national conservatoire, on a similar basis to those on the Continent. A large and representative committee was appointed, and resolutions were soon passed by the Academy and the Training School declaring, "First, that it was expedient to promote the further advancement of music by the establishment of a Royal College of Music on a more permanent and extended basis than any existing institution. Second, that it was expedient that a union should be effected between the Royal Academy and the National Training School." This was unmistakable language, but it is now matter of history how the Academy, after some delay, peremptorily rejected the proposals made on behalf of the Royal College, and declined any participation in the new scheme. The rest of the story is soon told. On the 28th February, 1882, was held the large meeting at St. James's Palace at which the scheme was floated, and on the 7th May, 1883, the college was opened.

Before coming to the artistic side of the question, one cannot help being struck by the business-like way in which the affairs of the college are regulated. The government is in the hands of an influential council, the accounts are audited by Sir Charles Lister Regan, K.C.B., and presented to the annual meeting of the corporation of the college, while the artistic direction of the scholars is entrusted to a Board of Professors, under the presidency of the able director, Sir George Grove.

The principal feature of this institution is its scholarships, of which 50 are open and about ten "close" for particular districts. The examinations for these consist of preliminary examinations at some 90 local centres, at which the most promising candidates are selected for the final competition at the college. All the open scholarships are tenable for the period of three years, provided the scholar shows reasonable diligence and aptitude. They provide free instruction to the holder, and in some instances maintenance in addition; but in these latter cases strict inquiry is always made to prevent the possibility of a bestowal of this additional advantage upon a person able to pay for himself. In addition to these scholarships, there are also numerous exhibitions obtainable at different periods of the student's career at the college, so that every inducement is held out to conscientious work. Moreover, the very existence of these scholarships and exhibitions is in itself amply sufficient proof of the excellent aims of the institution. It is essentially an undertaking for the advancement of art, with no ulterior motives of profit, and if for no other reason is worthy of interest and respect.

The subjects of study are of the usual nature, and are in the hands of able professors. The good system of a second study is adopted, and students are expected to attend lectures given from time to time on the history of their art and other kindred subjects. In the principal study two lessons per week of twenty minutes each are given, but the student is obliged to remain in the lesson room one hour, so that he thereby obtains much practical good, while avoiding that dreadful snare and retardation —fatigue. The duration of the lesson may seem short, but from constant observation it has been found that it is the limit which can be attained with safety, for it always holds true that the undue forcing of musical genius results in premature decay. Examinations are conducted by the professors at the end of every term. Classified lists of the results are published, and a healthy spirit of emulation is thereby created amongst the young students. It is superfluous to say that these examinations are conducted with the utmost fairness, the examiners, indeed, sitting behind a screen, which prevents them from seeing the performer. In addition, yearly examinations are conducted by independent musicians of the highest standing, by whom a separate report is furnished to the Council at the annual meeting.

The pernicious sub-professor system does not obtain here. On the contrary, everything is done to secure the advancement of the more promising scholars. In cases where sufficient merit is shown, a scholarship is extended, and there are, indeed, some instances at present of students entering on the fifth year of their scholarships. Besides this, in some cases a student of sufficient merit, on completing his course, is sent to the great Continental musical centres for a year, free of expense, so that he may have opportunities of hearing the best and newest in his art.

The distinction of an Associate (A.R.C.M.) is not to be gained lightly, for the examination is stiff and rigorously conducted. The aims of the College are again shown here by the fact that it is open to all-comers, while nothing short of the high standard adopted entitles a candidate to any recognition from the examiners. A pupil or past pupil is not entitled to append the initials of the College to his name until he has gained the Associateship, and a wholesome check is thereby placed upon a practice which sometimes results in the hindrance rather than advancement of art. Some idea may be gained of the strictness of the examination by the fact that candidates, if taking up a solo instrument, are called upon to prepare all the pieces in the printed list (and there are on an average about seven) instead of two or three at his or her option, as the examiners can require the performance of any or all of them.

But the subject of the greatest importance to be considered in an undertaking of this kind is the class of music that is fostered. In this respect the College leaves little or nothing to be desired. The ancients are given that important place from which they will, let us hope, never be ousted, while the moderns are accorded the position they have justly won. Taking, for example, the list of pianoforte pieces for one of the Associate Examinations, we find composers as different in style as Rameau, Beethoven, Weber, Chopin, Brahms, Thalberg, and Liszt, while, again, pieces for various other instruments have as their composers Max Bruch, Saint-Saëns, Rheinberger, Piatti, Joachim, and Wagner. Our best English composers are also represented, and by their best works; Sullivan's "Come, Margarita, Come," an air from Mackenzie's "Rose of Sharon," and Stanford's "There's a Bower of Roses," are instances taken at random. In the College concerts, held fortnightly, the same open mind is observable, and at a recent concert the young students played Berlioz's difficult symphony, "Harold en Italie," in a highly creditable manner. The students are fortunate in their Director. Sir George Grove happily has no narrow prejudices in favour of any particular school, and, moreover, takes the liveliest personal interest in the pupils themselves as well as their work. It is, of course, as yet premature to speak of the influence of the College upon English art. It has only just got into working order, and is sadly hampered at present by insufficient accommodation, and that, such as it is, of a most inconvenient kind. An institution of its nature requires time to assert itself as an influence, but that it is destined so to do there can be little doubt. It has already done a great deal, and its constitution and method of work are such as to inspire great hopes for the future.—Yours obediently,

A MUSICIAN.

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

Owing partly, no doubt, to the dreadful weather, and partly to the announcement that Mr. Sims Reeves would not be able to appear, last Saturday's audience was very scanty when the second half of these concerts commenced. Wagner's "Faust" overture, one of his few samples of abstract music, and a work full of poetry and significance, opened the concert, and in common with Mozart's melodious and fresh symphony in E flat, and Berlioz's brilliant orchestral arrangement of Weber's "Invitation," received full justice from the fine band. The solo violinist was Herr Franz Ondricek, whose name is now familiar to London audiences. He chose the concerto of his countryman, Dvorak, on this occasion, this being the first performance of the work at these concerts. Like most of Dvorak's music, this concerto is permeated with Slavonic colour, and the orchestration is most masterly throughout. Of the three movements, the slow movement is the best, but the whole work is full of interest. The concerto was played con amore by Herr Ondricek, whose superb tone and exquisite phrasing place him in the very first rank of contemporary virtuosi. In the second half of the programme he played, with even greater success, the "Serenade Mélançolique" of Tschaikowski, and an extraordinary show piece, in which he displayed a marvellous command of harmonics. The vocalist, Mr. Charles Banks, was said to be suffering from a cold, and criticism of his performance is therefore unnecessary; but we would suggest to Mr. Banks that there are songs in existence more appropriate to the character of these concerts than "The Distant Shore."

POPULAR CONCERTS.

The return of Herr Joachim is, perhaps, the event of the season at these concerts, and a large audience assembled on Monday, to greet the great virtuoso. Herr Joachim is an artist whom amateurs always regard with affection, for his aims are of the highest, while he is no party to tricks of any description by which many artists win for themselves a spurious reputation; and his earnestness, dignity of conception and treatment, and masterly style have well earned for the distinguished artist the position he so worthily fills. His easy victory over the well-nigh impossibilities of the adagio and allegro from Bach's C major Sonata, proved that he has come back in the full possession of his great powers, and he was, of course, enthusiastically applauded. With the assistance of MM. Ries, Burnett, Wiener, Hollander, Gibson, Howell, and Piatti, a fine rendering of the Mendelssohn Octet E in flat was secured, Haydn's Quartet in E flat, op. 64, No. 2, being the other concerted item in the programme. Mr. Max Pauer gave a fine reading of Schumann's Toccata, and Mrs. Henschel's rendering of songs by Schubert and her husband was, as usual, all that could be desired.

BRAHMS'S NEW CONCERTO.

Wednesday afternoon's London Symphony Concert was attended by a large and representative audience, eager to witness an event of some importance. The name of Brahms stands foremost among contemporary German composers, and, coupled with the name of Joachim, had evidently been sufficient to conquer the indifference with which English amateurs too frequently regard new works. The concerto in A for violin and violoncello with orchestra, heard for the first time in England on Wednesday, may be called a novelty in a double sense. It was written a few month's ago, and even in Germany has been heard only once or twice. Apart from this, its form shows an important deviation from the accustomed model. A concerto, in the generally-accepted meaning of the word, implies one solo instrument as distinguished from the band. Brahms has given us two such instruments, the violin and the violoncello which speak together and in alternation, and stand forth in bold relief from the orchestral background. The idea is not, of course, without precedent. Handel, for example, in his "twelve grand concerti," employs two violins and a violoncello soli, with accompaniment of the stringed orchestra, but in those days the term concerto was altogether used in a vaguer sense, and since Mozart settled the form in its modern meaning it would be difficult to cite many instances of more than one solo instrument. Beethoven's so-called "triple concerto," Mozart's concerto for two pianos in E flat, and two manuscript concerti for the same combination by Mendelssohn, preserved in the Imperial Library, Berlin, are the exceptions from the rule that most readily occur to the mind. Of Brahms's concerto it is not easy to speak definitely after a single hearing, for although, as in most of his later works, the composer writes with greater simplicity and with more condensation of thought than in his earlier days, there is much that would require careful study to be thoroughly appreciated. The first movement, Allegro, for example, appeared a trifle diffuse, and although the chief theme is melodious and broadly developed, there are so many episodes, so much working out of detail, that the general impression left upon the mind was almost a blank. Comparatively little, also, was made of the two solo instruments, which did not gain much individuality in relation either to the orchestra or to each other. Very different from this is the second movement, written in the so-called aria form, and starting with a beautiful long-drawn melody played by the two instruments in octaves, and subsequently relieved by an episodical theme even more attractive. Here, also, the solo instruments gained due prominence, carrying on a graceful dialogue, which those given to "programme music" could easily construe into a tender love duet. That dialogue is continued, although in a different mood, in the final Vivace non troppo. Here the violoncello starts a very charming theme, which might almost be called humorous but for the minor key, which supplies an element of seriousness, almost of melancholy. Presently the violin begins, partly in reply to, and partly in harmony with, the other instrument. A second subject follows in due course and a climax is finally reached. That climax, however, seems scarcely sufficiently developed. After all that had gone before, one would have liked a broader, a more impressive conclusion. A longer coda would have supplied all that was necessary. As it was, there seemed a want of proportion, a beautiful opening leading to disappointment at the end. Our remarks, as we said before, must be taken as merely tentative; perhaps better acquaintance with the work will greatly modify our judgment. So much, however, seems certain, that no one but Brahms among living masters could have written this work, which shows all the earnestness of purpose, all the freedom from mere clap-trap, to which this composer owes his leading position. Of the performance it would be difficult to speak in too favourable terms. It was perfect, and final in the sense that all subsequent interpreters will simply have to adopt the reading of Herr Joachim at the violin and of Herr Hausmann at the violoncello. So far, these two artists are the only ones that have attempted the concerto. They played it at Cologne in October, when the composer himself conducted, and quite recently at Berlin under Dr. von Bülow's direction, and on each occasion the applause seems to have been as cordial as that which marked the conclusion of the performauce on Wednesday. A special word of praise is due to Mr. Henschel, who secured an excellent rendering of the somewhat uninteresting orchestration. The overture to Mendelssohn's "St. Paul," Haydn's C major Symphony, and various solo pieces were also included in the scheme.—The Times.

MISCELLANEOUS CONCERTS.

A concert was given on the 14th inst., at 49, Euston-square, by Herr Ragnar Grevillius, a Swedish baritone, who has recently come to reside in England. Herr Grevillius has a voice of good quality, which is, however, not entirely free from a defect of the school in which he has evidently been trained—the vibrato—while he sings with considerable taste; his principal effort was Verdi's well-known "Di Provenza il mar," from "La Traviata." Miss Louise Phillips sang, in her always pleasant style, Agathe Backer-Gröndahl's lovely "Til mit Hjertes dronning," a song she has made peculiarly her own, and a song by Wilfred Bendall. Miss Marguerite Hall fully justified her previous successes in songs by Mary Carmichael, M. V. White, and Vidal, and Mr. William Nicholl's beautiful voice and polished style were displayed to advantage. Miss Kate Chaplin and Messrs. Theodore Liebe and Anton Hartvigson contributed solos on the violin, 'cello, and pianoforte, with much acceptance, while Miss Otta Bronnum, in a song by Grieg, showed that she possesses a pretty voice. Eckert's difficult "Echo" song is, however, beyond her capabilities at present.

The second concert of Mr. Malcolm Lawson's "Cycle" took place at the Queen's Gate Hall, South Kensington, on Tuesday evening last. Herr Waldemar Meyer was the violinist, and contributed a Sonata of Tartini's, a Bolero of Moszkowski's, and a Larghetto Religioso of his own, which deservedly created great applause. Miss Mary Howell gave several contralto songs with excellent effect. Mr. John Probert was unavoidably prevented from appearing, but his place was kindly filled by Mr. Hesseltine Owen, who substituted "To Lucasta," and a "Bedouin Love Song," for those announced. Mr. Malcom Lawson was happy in his rendering of some of his own compositions, notably "To Kitty," from the "People's Songs," and his choir of ladies acquitted themselves very creditably in a madrigal ("The Nightingale"), three choruses from the "Tale of Troy," and two Lieder of Ernest Rudorff. The success of the evening, however, belonged to Miss Emily Lawson, who, in Siebel's Song from "Faust," Ch. Salaman's beautiful Rhapsody, "My Star," and a MS. song from "Pippa Passes," set by her brother, displayed genuine artistic feeling, which, combined with her bright, melodious voice, gave her audience great pleasure. The MS. song, we are glad to learn, will shortly appear in a volume about to be published by Mr. Malcolm Lawson. Miss E. Lawson was also associated with her sister in a duet of the latter's composition, "Ye little birds that sit and sing," a graceful and interesting production. The next concert takes place on Tuesday, Feb. 21st, when Mr. Thorndike and other distinguished artists are announced.

OPERA COMIQUE THEATRE.

Should the ingenious contrivance lately proposed by a French manager, for varying the colour of the play-bill according to the "riskiness" of the play, come to be adopted in this country, certainly the announcement of Mrs. Campbell Praed's new piece, "Ariane," produced at the Opera Comique Theatre last week, would justify a display of the red danger-signal, by way of warning to Mr. Gilbert's "girl of fifteen," if not to the British matron herself. An immoral play "Ariane," is not; indeed, such lesson as can be said to be inculcated by so artificial a picture of social life, is altogether of a salutary kind for those whom it concerns. The misery and humiliation which follow in the train of recklessness and false pretence have, perhaps, never been more sternly exemplified on the stage, than in the harassed existence, the quarrellings, and the ultimate tragic fate of Henry Lomax and his wife. Although there is a divorce in the case, the heroine, whatever her other faults, remains firmly virtuous from first to last, and we are at any rate spared the misdirected sympathy by which, in so many Anglo-French dramas, a tinsel halo of romance is thrown around the wavering wife, who weepingly befools her lawful spouse through three acts and a half, but saves herself and appearances just at the last moment, and so lives happy ever after. Nevertheless, the tone, manners, conversation, and actions of the society here presented are decidedly unhealthy; the consolation being that they are also unreal; derived not from actual experience, but from the circulating library. Taken separately, each of the highly objectionable types of character introduced to our acquaintance may not be an impossible one. It is when they are united to represent a distinct social clique, having some repute of respectability, and including among their number learned lords and ladies, an archdeacon, an industrious "chevalier," and a learned professor, all of whom hob-nob together in the somewhat questionable studio of an imbecile artist and his *un*questionable wife—the women flippant, heartless, and fast, the men wanting even in that sense of "honour" which Carlyle was wont to regard as the one saving quality among a certain section of the idle and wealthy classes—that the satire falls flat because it is felt to be untrue. In spite of all this, and of some structural defects, which show it to be the work of no experienced hand, this play, admirably acted as it now is, unquestionably leaves a powerful impression, and affords Mrs. Bernard Beere several opportunities for those passionate outbursts in which she has no English rival on the stage. The dialogue, especially in the first act, requires extensive pruning. Much of it is somewhat in the teacup and saucer school, although in the present instance the tea is "laced" if not with rum, with some potent ingredient leaving a disagreeable flavour. Once admit that "Society" is as bad as this unfortunate heroine, Ariane, is made to find it, that amid all her well-to-do surroundings she is nevertheless unable to find one single true-hearted, sympathetic friend, then the gradual process of hardening which takes place in her nature becomes comprehensible enough. Bound to a good-natured, good-for-nothing husband, and with no better adviser than a gambling father, of shady antecedents, she speedily becomes the object of the attentions of Sir Leopold D'Acosta, one of the scurviest specimens of an English gentleman (for he is evidently intended to be one) ever introduced to an audience. To cut an unpleasant story short, this polished rogue, after vainly attempting the ordinary arts of seduction, becomes an accomplice with the girl's own father in a nefarious scheme to inveigle the unfortunate husband into an illicit love affair, by means of which the ground is cleared for a divorce, and for subsequent marriage with his adored one. For the furthering of this purpose a decoy is found ready to hand in Babette, the artist's fast wife—a character sketched with most uncompromising boldness. Bereft of wife and child, the unhappy husband, after discovering the trick, surprises the two on their bridal day. Thinking only of his own wrongs, while forgetting all the wrong he has done her, he deliberately poisons at its source the one chance of happiness now left to Ariane in her new-found love, by revealing the whole shameful story. He then aims at the husband but shoots the wife, and finally is understood to kill himself behind the scenes. It would be dangerous to attempt to prophesy the fortunes of such a play, or to say that, with the really powerful acting of Mrs. Bernard Beere, who has never been seen to better advantage, admirably supported as she is by Mr. Henry Neville as the erring, not altogether repulsive, Henry Lomax, by Mr. Marius, as the scampish father-in-law (not a very novel type, by the way), and by Miss Laura Linden, as the objectionable Babette, "Ariane" may not rank among the conspicuous successes of the season. Mr. Leonard Boyne found it a hard task to enlist the sympathies of the audience for so sorry a hero as the second husband, D'Acosta, but he, together with Mr. A. Denison, Mr. Arthur Marcel, Miss Fanny Coleman, and others in minor parts, lost no opportunity of adding to the effect of an exceptionally well-acted play. Miss Violet Campbell sustained the part of the child Daisy with admirable naturalness, and this promising young actress must be accorded a foremost place among the several gifted stage children whose appearance of late would seem to be of good augury for the theatre of the future.

The annual dinner of Trinity College, London, held at the Holborn Restaurant, brought together a large attendance of past students, friends, local secretaries, and professors of the institution. The Earl of Aberdeen was in the chair, and in giving the toast of the evening, "Prosperity to the College," of which he is President, laid stress upon the fact that its aims were to combine musical education with general culture, and he complimented all connected with it on the success attained. By its Local Examination in different parts of the country the College had rendered a national service. The Rev. H. G. Bonavia Hunt, Mus.D., the Warden, responded. The other toasts included that of "The Vice-Presidents, Honorary Officers, and Council," given by Dr. Westbrook, and responded to by Mr. G. A. Osborne, Colonel S. W. Wilkinson, Mr. D. Nasmith, Q.C., and Professor E. H. Turpin, who claimed that Trinity College was the largest institution in the world devoted to music unsupported by State or private endowment. The toasts were interspersed with a selection of songs and instrumental solos contributed by Messrs. Walter Bolton, F. G. Cole, L.Mus., G. A. Higgs, L.Mus., John Radcliffe, and Sinclair Dunn. Among the company were the following gentlemen :—Mr. W. Adlington, Mr. G. E. Bambridge, Mr. Henry R. Bird, Mr. G. W. Bloxam, M.A., Mr. F. Butel, Mr. W. L. Bonnett, Mr. Boddington, Mr. A. R. Bax, Mr. T. E. Biddlecombe, Mr. F. B. Corfield, Mr. A. Carnall, Mus.B., Mr. C. J. Duchemin, Mr. A. E. Drinkwater, M.A., Mr. H. Dancey, L.Mus., Mr. Doddeswell, Mr. Shelley Fisher (secretary), Mr. Myles B. Foster, Mr. M. Fisher, Mr. W. G. W. Goodworth, L.Mus., Mr. J. L. Gregory, the Rev. J. A. Gwynne, B.A., Mr. J. S. Gaskell, Mr. A. Howard, Mr. Heath, Mr. A. W. S. Hoare, Mr. J. A. Hammond, Prof. James Higgs, Mus.B., Mr. J. H. Holford, Mr. Henderson, Dr. Warwick Jordan, Mr. E. Burritt Lane, L.Mus., Mr. R. W. Lewis, Mr. F. W. J. Lesser, Mr. J. Lloyd, Mr. Lowels, Mr. Geo. Mount, Mr. F. J. Mitchell, Mr. F. Merrick, L.Mus., Mr. C. E. Moser, Mr. J. H. Nappi, Mr. F. G. M. Oglourne, Dr. Pringner, Mr. W. Pumey, Mus.B., Dr. C. W. Pearce, Mr. W. J. Reynolds, Mus.B., Mr. H. W. Stewardson, L.Mus., Professor Gordon Saunders, Mus.D., Mr. C. E. Stephens, Mr. J. Enos Smith, Mr. Spalding, Mr. J. Stedman, Mr. B. Stringer, Dr. Armand Semple, Mr. J. E. Turner, Professor Bradbury Turner, Mus.B., Professor H. Turpin, Mr. James Turpin, Mus.B., Mr. Upton, Mr. A. Visetti, Rev. R. Viney, M.A., Dr. A. H. Walker, Mr. J. Warriner, L.Mus., Mr. C. E. Willing, Mr. E. Wilding, &c., &c.

GLASGOW CHORAL UNION.

A correspondent writes to the Inverness Courier:—No musical conductor has ever enjoyed such popularity, or excited so much enthusiasm among the inhabitants of the second city of the Empire, as Mr. August Manns, whose reception on Saturday evening at the final orchestral concert of the Glasgow Choral Union series will long be remembered by all who were fortunate enough to witness it. Every nook and cranny of St. Andrew's Hall, spacious building though it is, was occupied long before the commencement of the performance, and many were unable to obtain admission. The orchestra was completely surrounded, and several of the audience appeared entirely oblivious of the trifling inconvenience occasioned by being located in close proximity to a trombone, a cornet, or an ophicleide. On appearing at the conductor's desk for the last time this season, Mr. Manns was accorded a very hearty reception from the densely crowded house, and at the conclusion of the concert, after an almost incomparable interpretation of that massive musical structure, the overture to "Tannhäuser," the enthusiasm which prevailed almost baffles description. When the excitement had somewhat subsided, Mr. Manns made the following remarks :—

"Ladies and Gentlemen,—The joyful greetings with which you welcomed me eight weeks ago assured me once more that I was among friends, and that I had only exchanged one home for another. The sympathetic attention you have given to the art labours of myself and my friends, the members of the orchestra, has proved to me that the task which I set myself nine years ago when accepting the conductorship of the concerts of the Glasgow Choral Union, viz., to produce performances that would find their way to the hearts of all lovers of good music in Glasgow, has been fairly well accomplished. I thank you heartily for your cordial co-operation. I thank you in the name of the members of the orchestra, without whose abilities and goodwill I could not have been so successful, and I beg finally to add that I sincerely trust that that sympathetic co-operation of the audience and executants of these concerts may not only continue, but may grow stronger with every succeeding series which the Glasgow Choral Union may arrange for many years to come. With these hopes and wishes at my heart, I will now bid you 'Good-bye'—nay, not 'Good-bye,' but rather 'Au revoir,' or, what is still more to my liking, 'Auf Wiedersehn.'"

Music Publishers' Weekly List.

SONGS AND CONCERTED VOCAL MUSIC.

He Loves but Me (echo song, simplified edition, C to G)	C. Eckert	Weekes.
Molly's Picture (C to D)	Franco Novara	"
Oh, Fair! Oh, Sweet and Holy! (A to D)	Otto Cantor	Lucas Weber.
Prove your Mettle, Boys! (D to D)	Franco Novara	Weekes.
Rover, The (A to E)	Lawford Huxtable	"
Six songs for Baritone or Mezzo-Soprano	A. W. Marchant	Ascherberg.
Song of the Lighthouse	J. H. Greenhill	Weekes.
Elinore; or, The Border Bride, Cantata.	E. Rogers	"
Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis	E. Griffith	"
Psalm CXXII	Edward Hodges	Novello.
Six Vocal Duets	Wilfrid Bendall	J. Williams.

PIANOFORTE.

Dance of Mummers	J. C. Bridge	Weekes.
Fantasia on Popular National Airs (No. 1 English, 2 Scotch, 3 Irish, 4 Welsh)	W. H. Birch	"
Hymne Patriotique	H. Roubier	J. Williams.
Impromptu, for the left hand	J. H. Anger	Weekes.
Les Cloches de Corneville	Sidney Smith	J. Williams.
Operatic Fantasias, Tannhäuser	E. Davison	Palmer.
Polonaise	J. C. Bridge	Weekes.
Pavane Romantique	Henri Roubier	"
Turkish Cavalry	D. R. Munro	"

Next Week's Music.

THIS DAY (SATURDAY).
Afternoon Concert	Crystal Palace.	3
Popular Concert	St. James's Hall.	3
MONDAY, 20.
Popular Concert	St. James's Hall.	8.30
TUESDAY, 21.
London Symphony Concert	St. James's Hall.	8.30
Cologne Conservatoire String Quartet	Princes' Hall.	8.30
WEDNESDAY, 22.
Ballad Concert	St. James's Hall.	3
Mr. Henschel's Vocal Recital	Princes' Hall.	3
"The Golden Legend" (Novello Oratorio)	St. James's Hall.	8
THURSDAY, 23.
"Elijah" (Sacred Harmonic)	St. James's Hall.	8
FRIDAY, 24.
Mr. Bonawitz's Recital	Portman Rooms.	3

FOREIGN.

NEW YORK.—At the third Philharmonic Concert, the most interesting items were Arnold Krug's Symphonic Prologue to Shakespeare's "Othello," and Tschaikowski's piano concerto in B flat minor, played by M. Joseffy. At the fourth concert Schubert's Symphony in C, an excerpt from Berlioz's "Harold," and Rubinstein's symphonic poem "La Russe" were given. The American Art Journal says of the last piece, "The comparison between this splendid array of national airs, each of which possesses intrinsic musical worth, and our beggarly array of musical doggerel that we call national music was striking, and it would be well for our musicians to set their pens at work to create a little good music that would do some credit to Uncle Sam and Miss Columbia." At the same concert Madame Camilla Urso made her reappearance before the American public, and her brilliant playing aroused great enthusiasm. Professor Klindworth's pianoforte recitals have disappointed people who expected to find the great teacher also a great pianist. His rendering of four or five Beethoven sonatas was decidedly dull, but he was better in the Liszt selection some weeks later. The cast of "Othello" to be produced here in April, under the management of Signor Campanini, has been arranged. For the title-role Signor Marconi has been engaged at the special request of Signor Verdi, and for Iago, the incomparable baritone artist Signor Maurel, who created such a sensation in the same part at the first production at La Scala, Milan. The role of Desdemona will be filled by Signora Terrazzini. The opera will be mounted at the Academy of Music with the scenery and costumes supplied from Milan. The production of "Die Götterdämmerung" at the Metropolitan Opera House has completed the grand enterprise of the German Opera Company this season. "Siegfried," "Die Walküre," and the last of the trilogy will be performed again before the house closes. So lucky do the New York amateurs consider themselves in respect of operatic performances, that they are likely to carry on the enterprise next season, in spite of the loss which the shareholders have to bear. A Wagner drama, however, entails such enormous outlay, that no amount of artistic success, or even crowded houses, can very well refund the management. No further novelty will be produced this season. The rendering by Fräulein Lehmann of the part of Brünnhilde, and by Herr Niemann of Siegfried, was in every way worthy of the reputation of these artists. The other characters were satisfactorily filled by members of the company, Frau Seidl-Krauss, Fräulein Brandt, and Herren Robinson and Fischer, &c. Little Josef Hofmann made his first appearance as a conductor on Jan. 21, evoking the utmost enthusiasm. He had composed and scored for orchestra a "Polonaise Americaine," and I am assured that he received no assistance in the work beyond the few corrections made by his father in passages where the instrumentation would have been ineffective.—The Boston Ideals do not meet with unqualified approval from our critics. The "Daughter of the Regiment" and "Martha" were within their powers, "Carmen," on the other hand, was a fiasco, in spite of the animated efforts of the company's single star, Mdlle. de Lussan.—At Mr. Thomas's sixth symphony concert the novelty was Signor Franchetti's prelude, "Asrael; or, the Angel of Death," part of a grand opera. The composer has studied at Dresden, and is quite German in his methods.—Stanford's Irish Symphony was very favourably received at the last Symphony Society's Concert, under the direction of Mr. W. Damrosch.

BOSTON.—A brilliant concert was given by the National Opera Company at the theatre on the 23rd ult. The concert opened with the overture to "Tannhäuser," by the full orchestra, and operatic selections followed. Mesdames Pierson and Fabris, and Messrs. Sylva, McGuckin, Vetta, Ludwig, and Bassett. Mr. Bassett has since seceded from the company. Mr. John Cheshire, the harpist, gave great delight by his beautiful playing. Of the operatic performances, that of "The Flying Dutchman" has been among the most successful, with Miss Juch as Senta. "Faust" has also been well attended, with Mr. McGuckin in the title-part, and Mrs. Vetta or Mr. Ludwig as Mephistopheles.

LEIPSIC.—At the seventh chamber music concert, Ferrucio Busoni's second (MS.) string quartet was played for the first time, and was found less satisfactory than the composer's first work of the kind. Busoni is a pianist, and has settled himself at Leipsic. At the Gewandhaus concert of Feb. 2. Berlioz's "King Lear," and Rubinstein's Dramatic symphony were the principal orchestral items. Spohr's violin concerto in E minor was played by Herr Petri (of the Gewandhaus orchestra), and Frau Amatie Joachim sang some pieces by Schubert and Brahms. Handel's "Israel in Egypt" was given the following week, and the somewhat unfamiliar work did not fail in its effect, all concerned doing justice to their parts.

VIENNA.—Some novelties have lately been heard in the Philharmonic Concerts. I do not believe you hear any of Fuchs's music in England; this composer has an established reputation amongst us, and his third Symphony in E flat, heard at a recent concert, has considerably added to that reputation. Nowhere is it very deep, but almost all through pleasing. The opening movement contains passages of more breadth and importance than we usually find in this composer. A melancholy andante in C minor, and a pretty allegretto in G, are followed by a lively finale. D'Albert, on the other hand, is a name well known to English musicians. His "Esther" overture did not gain a very warm reception, and, indeed, it does not equal his former efforts in composition. Saint-Saëns's "Rouet d'Omphale" was splendidly played at the same concert. I informed you last week of the performance of a suite by Moszkowski, but had not time to comment on the fine playing of Henri Marteau at the same Gesellshafts concert. The young violinist chose Bruch's Concerto, rather hackneyed here, but he gained with it an enormous success. Verdi's "Otello" will be performed during the season, with Fräulein Schläger (Desdemona), Herr Winkelman (Otello), and Herr Reichmann (Iago) in the principal parts. The young singer, Miss Nikita, has made her first appearance here, and has been greatly admired for her pure soprano voice, excellent production, and certainty of intonation.

PROVINCIAL.

MANCHESTER, Feb. 7.—The Institution of the Gentlemen's Concerts, the oldest, and at one time the most successful, musical society in Manchester, has of late years been steadily drooping; so much so that during the past season or two there have been grounds for fearing that it was absolutely in extremis. The reasons for this decline are somewhat complex, and possess little beyond local interest. However, in order, if possible, to remedy the untoward state of things, and to see if a little more interest in the society could not be aroused intrinsically and extrinsically, a soirée was given by the directors, about three weeks ago, in the concert hall. Perhaps the most noteworthy feature of the evening was Mr. Hallé's speech. He began by stating how far the apparent opposition of his own concerts was an actual one, and justified it by the somewhat different aims of the two series; then, after indicating more minutely the scope of the Gentlemen's Society, he concluded by discussing its future and the necessity of its continued existence in terms which could not fail to be full of encouragement to all who were interested in its welfare. It would seem that this soirée was not without practical results, for the attendance at the next evening concert of the society, Jan. 30, was much larger than usual. We sincerely trust that this sign of renewed vitality may not prove illusory or evanescent. The concert itself was a good one, if somewhat unclassical. The orchestral selections, which constituted the main part of the programme, included a pleasing but somewhat trivial "Ball Suite" (Lachner op. 170), two overtures (Bennett's "Wood Nymphs" and Mendelssohn's "Ruy Blas"), and selections from Delibes's graceful ballet, "Sylvia." Mr. Santley contributed songs, in his own admirable style, and Mr. Hallé gave a finished performance of Beethoven's Second Concerto. The principal feature of Mr. Hallé's fifteenth concert, Feb. 2nd, was Sullivan's "Golden Legend;" and the large and enthuiastic house which assembled testified to the wisdom of our leader's choice in selecting so typically English a work. The popularity of this cantata has been so phenomenally rapid, that to look for an adequate parallel we must turn to Sullivan's other works. Hitherto the only sign of disapproval has come from Germany, and many people, having regard to the success which the "Mikado" achieved in that country, have attributed the indifference with which the "Golden Legend" was received there, mere caprice. This is treating with scant courtesy the greatest musical critics of the world; and for our own part we prefer to believe that the coldness of its reception was due to some statable reason, whether right or wrong. It must be remembered, for one thing, that the standards of criticism adopted for the "Mikado," and for the "Golden Legend" would be very different. What pleased mightily in a comic opera might either not please or displease in a serious cantata. We do not mean to assert that the "Golden Legend" is not superior to the "Mikado"; on the contrary, we consider that a distinct advance has been made. But the very ease with which the two works may be compared, makes us feel it to be not impossible that, for German audiences, one ground of objection arose from the impression that both works had been attacked from too nearly the same point of view; and that this point of view while being entirely adequate for the one, was hardly so for the other. Sullivan has not been able to free himself to any great extent from the trammels which his long servitude to comic opera has fixed upon him; and, in spite of the astonishing wealth of melody and the occasionally strong dramatic treatment, the work appears to us to suffer as a whole, from the composer not having approached his task in a sufficiently classical spirit. The performance for the most part was admirable. The solo parts, being entrusted to Miss Marriott, Miss Hope Glenn, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Watkin Mills, were of course efficiently dealt with, Miss Marriott's interpretation of Elsie being especially praiseworthy. The choruses might on more than one occasion have been improved upon. The second half of the concert comprised Beethoven's Choral Fantasia (pianoforte Mr. Hallé), Weber's Quartet from Oberon "Over the Dark Blue Waters", and the march and chorus "Hail, Bright Abode" from Tannhäuser.

Manchester, Feb. 13.—Amongst a people who, like the English; are not yet free from a tendency to conservatism in musical matters, too much novelty is apt to be followed by disastrous financial results; hence it was with surprise and pleasure that we noted the large audience assembled at Mr. Hallé's sixteenth concert, an important portion of the programme of which was presented to the Manchester public for the first time. No doubt the presence of many was due to the fact that the vocalist, though a débutante, was a Manchester lady; but we are unwilling not to connect the fulness of the house, to some extent, at any rate, with the announcement that a symphony by Dvorak was to be performed. Be this as it may, those who went could not fail to appreciate the concert, which was a most enjoyable one. A large portion of the interest was centered, as we have said, upon the vocalist, Miss Alice Lamb, who is a daughter of a well-known Manchester gentleman. This young lady has, we believe, recently completed a three-years' course of study under Madame Bodda-Pyne, and the teacher has every reason to be satisfied with her pupil. Miss Lamb has a contralto voice of quite remarkable power and range, the depth and volume of her lower register being especially noteworthy, though most hearers would at present probably prefer the quality of her voice in its upper compass, where it displays a maturity and mellowness rarely met with. But the possibilities of her lower notes are very great, and if she can succeed in removing the ruggedness which is somewhat perceptible in them, and, above all, if she is able by further training to bridge over the registers satisfactorily (which she is far from having done at present), we believe that she cannot fail to take a high rank amongst contemporary contralti. Of her three songs she was most successful in, Haydn's "Spirit Song," and Marzials's trivial "River of Years," in both of which she showed herself possessed of considerable artistic insight, though she is capable of advancing still further in this direction. Perhaps she did wisely in choosing Rossini's "Ah! quel giorno," for it served to show that she has not been inattentive to the study of fioriture; but it is our strong opinion that she will find her proper sphere in less flowery lands. The chief orchestral item was Dvorak's Second Symphony in D minor, op. 70. It was given here for the first time, and we fervently reiterate the critics' usual formula on such occasions, that a further acquaintance with the work would be desirable. It is characterised by all the national peculiarities with which the music of this composer is so strongly imbued, and we did not succeed in detecting completely the tonal basis upon which it is constructed, and which a more leisurely study would no doubt reveal. At the same time, it appeared to us to be distinctly the most important work by Dvorak which we have yet met with. And though a large portion of the first two movements is devoted to the development of themes which might perhaps be more clearly enunciated, the work is always interesting and never degenerates into commonplace. The Scherzo is a particularly fine movement, and its boldness and originality would strike anyone. It was evident that the whole symphony created a favourable impression, The soloist of the evening was Mr. Hallé. In carrying out his intention of playing Beethoven's concertos this season, his watchword has evidently been "thorough," for, besides the customary five, he has also given us the Choral Fantasia, and on this occasion he played the violin concerto as arranged by Beethoven for the piano. Of this we may say, that to all who know the original not even Mr. Hallé's splendid playing succeeded in concealing the great inferiority of the pianoforte arrangement. Whose the cadenza in the allegro was we do not know—but we liked it not.

Nottingham, Feb. 9.—The Nottingham Amateurs' Operatic Company have distinguished themselves by their enterpise in producing and performing, by their own unaided efforts, an opera. The story of "Adela" was written by Mr. John Henry Brown, and the music composed by Mr. T. L. Selby, both of Nottingham. The plot is from an historical source, and turns on an incident in the reign of James V. of Scotland; and is said to have proved thoroughly suitable for an opera libretto. The music is very pleasing. The opera is to be performed every evening this week, the cast being as follows: James V. (King of Scotland), Mr. E. H. Johnson; Cardinal Beatoun, Mr. W. F. Fisher; Redhall (the king's advocate) Mr. M. Chadbourne; Earl of Ashkirk (an outlawed noble), Mr. Arthur Johnson; Sir Roland Vipont (captain of the king's ordnance), Mr. J. Lambert; Margaret (Queen of Scotland, wife of James V.), Miss Poppie Lymn; Lady Adela (sister to Earl Ashkirk, betrothed to Sir Roland), Mrs. Whitehill (Miss Emmie Johnson); Lady Sybil Douglas (Cousin to Lady Adela, betrothed to Earl Ashkirk), Miss Fannie Lymn; Pages (to Queen Margaret), Master H. L. Selby and Master P. H. Johnson. There were in addition lords, ladies, citizens, soldiers, and the usual stage crowd. The orchestra did very good work under the composer. "Adela" was written many years ago, and was brought out in concert form in 1867, Mr. Henry Farmer conducting, and in 1872 by the Sacred Harmonic Society, with Madame Blanche Cole, Miss Newton, Mr. George Perren, Mr. George Fox, and Mr. Temple in the principal parts.

Birmingham, February 13.—Antonin Dvorak's Dramatic Cantata, "The Spectre's Bride," and Villiers Stanford's "The Revenge," were given by the Birmingham Festival Choral Society on Thursday evening, February 9, with full band and chorus, the principal vocalists being Madame Dotti (whose services the committee had fortunately secured in place of Madame Henschel, who was unable to fulfil her engagement) Mr. Orlando Harley and Mr. Watkin Mills. The last named gentleman replaced at a very short notice Mr. Grice, who was unfortunately indisposed. The Town Hall, I regret to say, again displayed rows of unoccupied seats, a fact which the occasion did not warrant, and must sooner or later seriously affect our local premier Choral Society. The performance of Dvorak's graphic work was in the highest degree praiseworthy, both band and chorus being in excellent form; some of the accompaniments were given with that artistic finish to which we are only accustomed at Festival times. Thus the poetic setting of the soprano solo, "O, Virgin Mother," most exquisitely sung by Madame Dotti, was splendidly accompanied by the band, the muted strings and harp obbligati being conspicious by their delicacy. Mr. Orlando Harley tried his best, but he lacked dramatic power, and could not fight aganst the labyrinth of such weighty orchestration. Mr. Watkin Mills's voice suffered from the same cause, but every allowance must be made for him, as I have been informed that on the same afternoon he had to sing in "Judas Maccabæus," and then had to journey to Birmingham. Madame Dotti made a most favourable impression here, not having been previously heard in cantata, although well known to Birmingham music lovers in opera. Dr. Villiers Stanford's "Revenge" found even more favour with the public than Dvorak's "Spectre's Bride." It was given here for the first time, and our chorus was perhaps never heard to better advantage. The work had been thoroughly schooled and rehearsed, and special commendation is due to the singers for their perfect intonation and precision Mr. Stockley conducted both works with great tact and judgment. Madame Agnes Miller will give her second Chamber Concert at the Masonic Hall on Thursday, assisted by the well known Shinner Ladies' String Quartet. The programme will include Quartet in A minor, strings, Schubert; Pianoforte Quintet in F minor, Brahms; Sonata in A for violoncello, Boccherini, Fantasia in G minor, for pianoforte, Beethoven.

Glasgow, Tuesday, Feb. 14.—At a concert given at the City Hall, on Saturday evening last, under the auspices of the Abstainers' Union, the annual gold medal competition for amateur vocalists took place. The competitors numbered ten, three sopranos, one contralto, three tenors, and three basses, and they came from towns both in Scotland and Ireland. The programme was an aspiring one, each competitor having to sing three soli, viz., Sacred, Scotch, and English. The gold medal was awarded to Miss Maggie Bowie, contralto, Greenock, and the silver medal to Mr. George Neil, tenor, Thornliebank. The large audience were well pleased by the Judges' decision. The Judges were Messrs. J. Seligmann, Emile Berger, W. M. Miller, Wm. Moodie, and Wm. Smith.—E.J.R.B.

Dr. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.
For sore throat, hoarseness, and relaxed throat, also for improving the voice
FOR SINGING AND SPEAKING
without fatiguing the voice. Celebrated in every town in Europe, India, America, and the Colonies. Testimonials from Patti, Trebelli, Patey, Santley, and the most eminent medical men.
Sold in boxes; 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d.; also in bottles for abroad.

A BLESSING IN EVERY FAMILY.
HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.
These Remedies have stood the test of FIFTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE and are pronounced the best medicines for family use. Tens of thousands of written testimonials bear witness to their marvellous curative properties. They are acknowledged by the whole civilised world to be the greatest efficacy in every form of disease.
Sold by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors.
Manufactured only at THOMAS HOLLOWAY'S ESTABLISHMENT
78, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.
N.B.—Advice gratis at the above address, daily, between the hours of 11 and 4, or by letter

ASCHERBERG PIANOS.

"I only perform an act of justice when I ascribe my successes to a great extent to the excellent Instruments from your factory, on which I was favoured to play before the public. Remain convinced that I shall at all times and everywhere give preference to your Pianos over all others, and accept the assurance of my unbounded esteem.

Respectfully,

VLADIMIR VON PACHMANN."

ASCHERBERG PIANO DEPOT,

211, REGENT STREET, W.

DEFRIES' Safety Water White Oil.

The Purest, Whitest, and Best Burning Mineral Oil in England.

EQUAL IN QUALITY TO OILS SOLD UNDER FANCY NAMES, at from 1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d. per gall.

FOR USE IN ALL LAMPS AND STOVES.

PRICE 1s. PER GALLON.

FREE DELIVERED IN LONDON AND ALL SUBURBS.

Minimum, 2 gallons. The 5 and 10 gallon drums are fitted with taps. Drums charged, and full price allowed when returned.

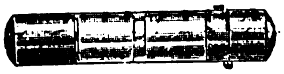
Terms: Cash on or before delivery. Deposit Accounts opened for Oil.

DEFRIES' SAFETY LAMP & OIL CO., LIMITED,

43 and 44, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON, E.C.

THORNHILL'S

NEW "GLOVE" BOTTLE.



FOR PERFUME & SMELLING SALTS.

Large Variety of Patterns at Various Prices

THORNHILL'S TOILET CASES FOR LADIES AND GENTLEMEN

THORNHILL'S ARTISTIC FANS.

A LARGE and VARIED STOCK of the BEST QUALITY.

PRESENTS.

THORNHILL'S

Fully Illustrated

LIST

OF

LATEST

NOVELTIES

POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

THORNHILL'S

OPERA GLASSES.

IN GREAT VARIETY.

THORNHILL'S

Guaranteed Razors Singly or in Sets.

W. THORNHILL & CO., TO THE QUEEN & ROYAL FAMILY. 144, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON. ESTABLISHED 1734.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER'S

LINEN COLLARS, CUFFS, AND SHIRTS.

Samples and Price Lists Post Free.

COLLARS—LADIES' 3-fold, from 3s. 6d. per doz. GENTS' 4-fold, 4s. 11d. to 5s. 11d. per doz.

CUFFS—For Ladies or Gentlemen, 5s. 11d. to 10s. 6d. per doz.

SHIRTS—Best quality Long Cloth, with 4-fold Linen Fronts 35s. 6d. per half-doz. (To measure, 2s. extra.)

N.B.—OLD SHIRTS made as good as new with best materials in Neckbands, Cuffs, and Fronts, for 14s. the half-doz.

ROBINSON AND CLEAVER, BELFAST.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE & RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & CO.,

Manufacturers and Importers of all kinds of Strings

FOR

VIOLIN, VIOLA, CELLO, DOUBLE BASS, HARP, ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO,

Have always in STOCK the Largest ASSORTMENT of any House in the World.

6, GOLDEN SQUARE, W.

Printed and Published by MACRAE, CURTICE & CO. (LIMITED), 12, Catherine Street, Strand, W.C.

WEEKLY.]

The Musical World.

ESTABLISHED 1822.
REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED; IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST WEEKLY, 17/6 PER ANNUM (Payable in advance).

VOL. 67.—NO. 8. SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 1888. PRICE {3D. Unstamped. {4D. By Post.

THE

KARN AMERICAN ORGANS,

Manufactured by D. W. KARN & CO.,

WOODSTOCK, ONTARIO, CANADA.

The Karn Organ is a reproduction of the Pipe Organ in miniature, of pre-eminent value as an effective music exponent for the Home.

OUR AIM has not been to see how cheaply an organ can be built, BUT HOW CHEAPLY A FIRST-CLASS ORGAN can be made.

OUR CLAIM is that we are building organs equal to, if not surpassing, all others, at the very lowest reasonable prices.

COMPARISON CHEERFULLY INVITED.

New Illustrated Catalogue & Price Lists Free of the

SOLE EUROPEAN AGENTS:

THE SCHREIBER PIANO CO.,
18, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W.

GEORGE BELL & SONS' BOOKS.

Crown 8vo, 7*s.* 6*d.*

Schumann's Early Letters.—Originally published by his Wife. Translated by MAY HERBERT. With a Preface by SIR GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L.

'Lovers of Schumann's music will eagerly turn over the pages of an excellent translation, recently contributed by May Herbert, of the early letters originally published by the composer's wife.'—Musical World.

By HENRY C. BANISTER,
Professor of Harmony, Counterpoint, and Composition in the Royal Normal College and Academy of Music for the Blind, in the Guildhall School of Music, and in the Royal Academy of Music.

Crown 8vo, 7*s.* 6*d.*

Lectures on Musical Analysis.—Embracing SONATA-FORM, FUGUE, &c. Illustrated by the Works of the Classical Masters.

'It is beyond comparison the best work on the subject in our language.'—Athenæum.

Fcp. 8vo, cloth, 5*s.*

Text Book of Music.—Thirteenth Edition, 30th to 35th Thousand, with Emendations and Additions.

'A capital little work on the theory of music.'—Athenæum. August 4, 1883.

'Mr. H. C. Banister's book on "Music," which is one of the best and most trustworthy I know.'—Mr. E. Prout in the Academy, March 16, 1878.

Fcp. 8vo, 3*s.* 6*d.*

A Concise History of Music from the commencement of the Christian Era to the present time. For the use of Students. By the Rev. H. G. BONAVIA HUNT, Mus. Doc., F.R.S.E., Warden of Trinity College, London; late Lecturer on Musical History in the same College; Honorary Fellow of the Philharmonic Society of London, Eighth Edition, 15th Thousand, revised to date (1886).

London: GEO. BELL and SONS, York street, Covent Garden.

Special Notices.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF SOUTH WALES AND MONMOUTHSHIRE,
CARDIFF.

The Council of the University College of South Wales and Monmouthshire, are prepared to appoint a Lecturer in Music.

The stipend of the Lecturer will be £100 per annum, with a share of the fees.

Candidates must send in their applications, with testimonials, not later than March 24th.

For further information apply to

IVOR JAMES, REGISTRAR.

UNIVERSITY OF MELBOURNE.

The Council of the University having decided to create a professorship of Music, Candidates for the appointment are requested to forward their applications, with testimonials, to the Agent General for Victoria not later than the 10th of March, to which date the period for receiving applications has now been prolonged. The Candidate chosen, besides delivering Lectures on the History, Science, and Teaching of Vocal and Instrumental Music, will be required to conduct examinations of Candidates for Musical Degrees, to act as Organist to the University, to periodically report upon the progress of Scholars in Music, and to conduct examinations of candidates for certificated Teachers. The commencing salary will be £750 per annum, rising by quinquennial increments, should the funds of the endowment allow it, to an ultimate maximum of £1,200, with an allowance for House Rent of £100 per annum, and £150 for passage money.

Further particulars may be obtained on application to the Agent General for Victoria, Victoria Office, 8, Victoria Chambers, Westminster, S.W.

16th February, 1888.

THE LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.—Mr. HENSCHEL, Conductor.—Programme of the Fifteenth and last concert but one, WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON Next, Feb. 29, ST. JAMES'S HALL, at 3.—Overture "Calm sea and Prosperous voyage" (Mendelssohn); Todtentanz (Danse Macabre) Phantasie variations on the old chant "Dies Iræ" for Pianoforte and Orchestra (Liszt) (repeated by desire), Mr. Frits Hartvigson. Pastoral Symphony (No. 6 in F, op. 68) (Beethoven); Duet from "Béatrice et Bénédict" (Berlioz), Mrs. Henschel and Miss Marguerite Hall; Overture to "The Flying Dutchman" (Wagner). Reserved Seats, 10s. 6d., 7s. 6d., and 4s.; admission, 1s.; at Austin's Office, St. James's Hall, and usual agents.—N. Vert, 6, Cork Street, W.

PRINCES' HALL, PICCADILLY.—MDLLE. JEANNE DOUSTE'S Third Pianoforte Recital, assisted by Messrs. Frank Arnold and W. Whitehouse, on Wednesday afternoon, February 29th, at three o'clock. Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Balcony, 5s.; admission, 1s. Tickets to be obtained of Chappell & Co's, 50, New Bond Street, and 15, Poultry; at Princes' Hall; and of Mdlle. Douste, 7, Wetherby Terrace, South Kensington, and all the usual agents.

TO ORGANISTS.—For Professional Practice, Teaching, or Concert purpose, and Home use, the "Bach Model" Pedal Instrument is only reliable substitute for a pipe organ. For design, improved action, connections, and tone, it embraces the merits of the highest class instruments; and without paying an exorbitant price you may have an instrument with organ measurements that removes the deficiencies hitherto experienced in pedal instruments.—Apply for illustrated lists, terms, and prices, to J. L. Scholefield, Musical Instrument Manufacturer, Huddersfield.

DRURY LANE.—AUGUSTUS HARRIS. Lessee and Manager.—EVERY EVENING, at 7.30. MORNING PERFORMANCES EVERY MONDAY, WEDNESDAY, and SATURDAY, at 1.30. Augustus Harris's NINTH ANNUAL PANTOMIME, PUSS IN BOOTS. Children half-price on payment at the doors, Morning Performances only. The Evening Performances commence with the Harlequinade. Box-office open daily from 10.0 to 6.0.

THE GENUINE PANTOMIME SUCCESS of the SEASON is PUSS IN BOOTS, AT DRURY LANE, where the receipts are more than three times those of any other pantomime.

Institutes and Colleges.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, KENSINGTON GORE, LONDON, S.W.

Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.
President - - H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES, K.G.
Director - - Sir GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L., LL.D.

Next College Concert, March 1st, at 7.30 p.m.

Associate Examination—

The Examination for 1888 is fixed for April 16th. Last day for receiving applications, March 6th.

Forms and particulars may be obtained from the Registrar, Mr. GEORGE WATSON, at the College.

CHARLES MORLEY, Honorary Secretary.

UNIVERSITY OF TRINITY COLLEGE, TORONTO. (The Church of England University of Upper Canada.)

FACULTY OF MUSIC.

The next Examinations for the degree of Bachelor of Music will be held simultaneously in Toronto and London in Easter week, 1886. Women are admissable to these examinations. For particulars apply to Rev. E. K. Kendal, D.C.L., Registrar for England, Southsea.

TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON. For MUSICAL EDUCATION and EXAMINATION, &c., and for the Granting of Certificates and Diplomas in Music. Inst. 1872.

President - - The EARL of ABERDEEN.

THE HALF TERM COMMENCES FEBRUARY 27th, when new Students are received. The following is a list of subjects taught and professors :—

Subjects—Harmony, Counterpoint, Form and Orchestration, Composition, Musical Acoustics, Pianoforte, Organ, Figured Bass Playing, Transposition, &c. ; Solo Singing, the Art of Pianoforte Accompaniment, Violin, Violoncello, Double Bass, Flute, Oboe, Clarionet, Harp, Horn, Orchestral Class, Musical History, Sight Singing, Choral Class, Vocal and Aural Physiology (lectures), and Voice Production Class (lectures), and Elocution.

Professors—Higgs, Saunders, Turpin, and Turner; MM. Bambridge, Barrett, Bentlim, Bolton, Carrodus, Cole, Corder, Dubrueq, Fry, Gibson, Goodworth, Lazarus, Lockwood, Malsch, Mann, Mount, Nappi, Ogbourne, Pumej, Radcliff, Reynolds, Semple, Stone, Szczepanowski, Visetti, Wells, Willing, Woolhouse; and Miss Kate Steel.

There are evening as well as day classes, and Harmony, Counterpoint, &c., are also taught by correspondence.

The full prospectus, and all particulars can be obtained by addressing the Secretary.

By Order of the Academical Board.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, W.

GUILD OF ORGANISTS, 35, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C.

Patron—The Right Rev. THE LORD BISHOP OF LONDON.
PRESIDENTS.
The REV. CANON SIR F. H. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., Mus. Doc.
Sir HERBERT OAKELEY, Bart., Mus. Doc.
Sir ROBERT STEWART, Mus. Doc.
Vice-President—WILLIAM PINNEY, Mus. Bac., Oxon.
Warden—CHARLES VINCENT, Mus. Doc., Oxon.

On Monday, Feb. 27th, Lecture on "Organ Voluntaries," by Mr. W. S. Vinning, Mus. Bac., Cantab.

Established to advance the cause of Church music and the truest interests of its Professors, etc.

Members of the Church of England and Ireland, and the Episcopal Church of Scotland, are eligible for election. Subscription: Professional Organists (Associates) 10s. 6d. per annum; Amateurs (Members) 15s. per annum; Life subscription, 5 guineas.

Next Fellowship examination in Easter Week.

Prospectus and further particulars may be obtained from the Hon. Sec., Dr. J. H. Lewis, Staines, Middlesex.

London Organ School and International College of Music.

Established 1865, by the Rev. SCOTSON CLARK, Mus. B.
Patron—His Grace The ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY.
Principal—HENRY CLARK.

THE NEXT STUDENTS' MATINEE MUSICALE will take place on SATURDAY, February 25th.

Piano, Singing, Violin, 'Cello, Flute, Harp, Organ Lessons, with Practice, and Harmony. Private Lessons and Classes.

Candidates for Musical Degrees at any of the English Universities are expressly prepared for the Matriculation Examinations by Oxford and Cambridge graduates (in honours). Branches at Kensington and St. John's Wood.

—Apply to the Director of Classes, T. H. Y. TROTTER, M.A., Mus.Bac., Oxon., 3, Princes Street, Cavendish Square, W. (close to Oxford Circus).

Publishers' Announcements.

NEW WORK FOR EASTER AND WHITSUNTIDE.

DR. SPARK'S "IMMANUEL" (one hour's performance)

Is admirably suited for the chief Christian Festivals, Easter, Whitsuntide, and Christmas, and its enthusiastic reception wherever it has been performed, in churches, chapels, schools, etc., has necessitated the issue of a Third Edition of five thousand, Revised and Enlarged. Vocal Score, 2s.; bound, 3s.; chorus parts, 6d.; Tonic Sol-fa, 6d.

"Lovely, melodious, and expressive part-writing; songs and duets of admirable and refined melody, with introductory and effective symphonies and accompaniments."—Huddersfield Examiner.

John Heywood, Deansgate, Manchester; and London.

"BIRD RAPTURES,"

Song (for Soprano).
WORDS BY CHRISTINA G. ROSSETTI.
Music by MOIR CLARK.

PRESS OPINIONS.

"'Bird Raptures' is a song of exceptional merit. The accompaniment plays an important part, and contains several original and charming effects."—THE MUSICAL WORLD, June 11, 1887.

"One of the most earnest and beautiful songs that has appeared for many a long day."—Musical Standard, Dec. 23, 1887.

"When the public can appreciate a song like this, the trade of the vulgar ballad-monger will be gone."—Musical Review, December, 1887.

BY THE SAME COMPOSER,
"BANVA,"
Four Sketches for Pianoforte Duet.

"Admirably written, and marked by an originality which will recommend them to pianists of culture."—THE MUSICAL WORLD, June 11, 1887.

STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER, AND Co., 84, New Bond Street, W.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE "JOLLY BRICK" POLKA.

By M. S. BARRON.

PRICE 3s.

"Is bright and danceable."—News of the World.

"This is a cheerful and sprightly piece, with well marked accentuation. It presents no difficulties of execution even to the young player."—Dundee Advertiser.

"One of the brighest and most sprightly polkas we have met with for a long time. The key is E flat, changing to B flat. The piece is quite above the common run of dance music."—Musical Standard.

ALSO,

A TWILIGHT DREAM.

FOR PIANO.

By M. S. BARRON.

PRICE 3s.

"An interesting piece, with a melody for the left hand."—Musical Standard.

LONDON: SWAN & CO., 4, GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, W.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised & Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR THE VOICE,

By T. A. Wallworth.

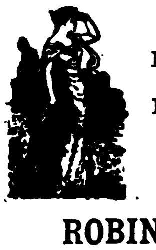
A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Madame Alwina Valleria, Mr. Iver M'Kay, and other successful Vocalists:

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & CO. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER'S

ROYAL IRISH CAMBRIC POCKET-HANDKERCHIEFS.



Samples and Price Lists Post Free.

Per doz.—Children's, 1s. 2d.; Ladies', 2s. 4½d.; Gents' 3s. 6d.

Hemstitched—Ladies', 2s. 11½d.; Gents', 4s. 11d.

——:0:——

BY APPOINTMENTS TO THE QUEEN AND THE CROWN PRINCESS OF GERMANY.

ROBINSON AND CLEAVER, BELFAST.

Professional Cards.

The subscription for a "card" space in these columns is £1 10s. for six months, and £1 per quarter—payable in advance, including copy of the paper each week. Subscriptions should be sent to the office of The Musical World 12, Catherine Street, Strand, London, W.C.

Conductors and Composers.

Mr. FREDERIC H. COWEN,
73, Hamilton Terrace,
St. John's Wood, N.W.

Mr. F. KILVINGTON HATTERSLEY,
A.R.A.M.
(Professor of the Pianoforte, Composer, and Conductor),
17, Finsbury Park Villas,
Green Lanes, N.

Mr. ALBERT VISETTI
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Conductor),
12, Westbourne Park Terrace, W.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN
(Guitar, Concertina, and Gigelira. Wood and Straw Instrument),
22a, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W.

Mr. F. St. JOHN LACY
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Vocalist) (baritone).
Fitzroy Mansion, Charlotte Street,
Fitzroy Square, W.

Mr. H. MARTYN VAN LENNEP
(Teacher of Singing, Composer, and Conductor),
Address—7, Wimpole Street,
Cavendish Square, W.

Mr. G. ARTHUR HIGGS, F.C.O.
L. Mus. and Tallis Gold Medallist. T.C.L. Pupil of Mr. Albert Visetti. Teacher of Singing, Harmony, Conductor, and Vocalist. (Baritone.)
Address—Trinity College, London, W.

Vocalists—Sopranos.

Madame VALLERIA
(Opera and Concerts),
Bosworth House, Husband's Bosworth,
Rugby.

Miss EDITH DESMOND
(Opera and Concerts),
c/o Nolan & Jackson.

Miss KATE FLINN
(Concerts and Oratorios),
41, Welbeck Street,
Cavendish Square, W.

Mdlle. VELMI
(Opera and Concerts),
7, Chesilton Road, Munster Park,
Fulham, S.W.

Miss AGNES LARKCOM
Has removed to
158, Portsdown Road, W.

Madame ISABEL GEORGE, L.R.A.M.
(Concert and Oratorio),
29, Albany Street, Regent's Park, N.W.

Contraltos.

Miss JOSEPHINE CRAVINO
(Concerts and Oratorio),
2, Sedgmoor Villas,
Private Lessons given. Camberwell, S.E.

Miss MARY E. DAKIN, R.A.M.
(Mez. Sop.),
(Ballads, Oratorio, &c.)
31, Monmouth Road,
Bayswater, London, W.

Miss LENA LITTLE
(Concerts),
42, Norfolk Square, Hyde Park, W.

Contraltos.—Continued.

Miss PATTIE MICHIE,
68, Park Walk, Fulham Road,
London, S.W.

Madame OSCAR POLLACK
(Concerts).
56, Duchess Road,
Edgbaston, Birmingham.

Tenors.

Mr. BARTON McGUCKIN
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. Alfred Moul,
26, Old Bond Street, W.,
Or, 270, Elgin Avenue, Maida Vale, W.

Mr. ARNOLD BREEDEN
(Concerts, Oratorio, and Opera),
Address—N. Vert, Esq.,
6, Cork Street, W.

Mr. SEYMOUR JACKSON
(Concerts and Oratorio).
Old Trafford, Manchester.

Mr. PAYNE CLARKE
(Concerts and Oratorio).
28, Devonshire Street, Islington, N.

Mr. J. DALGETY HENDERSON,
Gothic Lodge,
Lordship Lane, S.E.

Mr. REDFERN HOLLINS,
30, St. Stephen's Avenue,
Shepherd's Bush, W.

Mr. BERNARD LANE,
60, Westbourne Park Villas, W.

Chevalier EDWARD SCOVEL
(Opera, Concerts, and Oratorio),
Hotel de L'Europe,
Milan, Italy.

Mr. W. ESMOND,
24, Upper Mount Street, Dublin.

Baritones.

Mr. WALTER CLIFFORD
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concerts),
c/o N. Vert, Esq.,
6, Cork Street, W.

Mr. FREDERIC KING
(Concerts and Oratorio).
19, Canfield Gardens, S. Hampstead.

Mr. NORRIS CROKER,
Egremont, Croxted Road,
West Dulwich, S.E.

Mr. JOSEPH LYNDE
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concert
63, Stafford Pl
Buckingham Gate, S.W.

Mr. ALBERT REAKES
(Bass-Baritone, of the "London Ballad Singers," Oratorios, Concerts, &c.),
30, Lancaster Road,
Notting Hill, W.

Herr RAGNAR GREVILLIUS
(Concerts, Oratorio, and Opera),
70, Portsdown Road, Maida Vale, W.

Bass.

Mr. WATKIN MILLS requests that in future all communications respecting Concerts, &c., be addressed to his residence, Huntcliffe, Bexley, Kent.

Mr. FRANK CELLI
(Concerts and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. N. Vert, 6, Cork St.,
Burlington Gardens, W.

Trumpet and Cornet.

Mr. THOMAS HARPER,
185, King's Road, N.W.

Guitar.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN, Guitariste, Instructress to H.R.H. the Princess Louise, has returned to town, 22a, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W., where may be had her celebrated book, "Learning the Guitar Simplified," 10s. 6d.

Violin.

Mr. ALLAN CAMPBELL
(Formerly Pupil of Mr. Henry Holmes and Dr. S. S. Wesley),
23, Thicket Road,
Pupils visited and received. Anerley, S.E.

Mr. LESLIE CROTTY and
Madame GEORGINA BURNS,
c/o Mr. Alfred Moul (sole agent),
26, Old Bond Street, W.

Miss AGNES JANSON requests that all communications respecting engagements may be sent to her new address, 34a, Gloucester Place, Portman Square, W.; or to Mr. N. Vert, 6, Cork Street, W.

MR. HEALEY'S SPECIAL LIST.

Madame LILIAN NORDICA (Soprano)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert),
Address to
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mdlle. LOUISE LABLACHE (Mez. Sop.)
(Opera and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W

Mdlle. HELENE HASTREITER (Contr.)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert)
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Madame BELLE COLE (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. WILLIAM NICHOLL (Tenor)
28, Belsize Road, N.W.,
Or, Sole Agent, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Miss MARGUERITE HALL (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. JOHN PROBERT (Tenor)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W

Mr. VAUGHAN EDWARDES (Baritone)
(Concerts and Oratorio),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. MULES BROWN (Baritone)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. HENRY POPE (Bass)
(Opera, Concerts, and Oratorio),
Business Manager. W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. T. L. CAMPION (Bass)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

The FRASER QUINTET. Misses Violet (Vocalist), Ida, and Ethel (Pianist, Violoncello, and Viola), Mabel and Stella Violinists), play Quartets, Solos, Duets, two Pianofortes, &c. For Engagements, for Concerts, "At Homes," Dinner and Garden Parties.—Address: 121, Adelaide Road, N.W.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES.

Public Speakers and Singers

Can use "Brown's Bronchial Troches" as freely as requisite, containing nothing that can injure the system. They are invaluable in allaying the hoarseness and irritation incident to vocal exertion, effectually Clearing and Strengthening the Voice.

"They seem to act specially on the organs of the voice, and produce a clear enunciation."—MARIE ROZE-MAPLESON.

Ask for and obtain only "Brown's Bronchial Troches." Sold everywhere at 1s. 1½d a box.

ORGANISTS AND ORGAN STUDENTS.

You are kindly requested to write for Ainsworth's "New Patent Organ Pedal Combination List." Ainsworth's "New Patent" is perfectly unique and may be combined easily with any Piano. It is the only one which may be safely combined with any Piano without deteriorating the instrument. Having put down at my works two engines and machinery of the most desirable kind, I am now supplying my goods at a price which enables every organist and organ student to have always ready for use in his Studio an

ORGAN PEDAL PIANO,

AFFORDING PERFECTLY UNIQUE PEDAL PRACTICE.

34, Sheen Park, Richmond.

DEAR SIR,—I have deferred writing to comment upon your Pedals and Action now attached to my pianoforte until I could satisfy myself of their utility and efficiency. I can now conscientiously say that they more than fulfil all my anticipations. Although I am no carpenter, aided by your lucid diagram I had little difficulty in attaching them myself, and it is impossible to over-estimate the comfort they give to me or to conceive the saving of time one experiences in one's own room.—Believe me, yours truly,

BURNHAM HORNER, F.R. Hist.S.

To Mr. Mr. Ainsworth.

DEAR SIR,—It gives me great pleasure to bear testimony to the perfection of your Invention. I am more than satisfied with your Patent Action and Organ Pedals, and consider them worth double the money. Organists and organ students who desire to improve in the Art of Pedalling, which is so essential to a good organist, will do well to procure a set. I have seen no Action half so effective, and one can sit at the Piano and play, "Fixed in his everlasting seat," or any other organ music, or organ arrangement with the greatest pleasure. The touch of pedals could not be better, and the action is as you say, "Absolutely free from annoyances." They cannot be too highly recommended, as by their use, rapid progress is certain.—Believe me, sincerely yours,

I. B. Thornton,
Organist, Birstall, Leeds.

Cologne, July 16th, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have much pleasure in informing you that your Pedals have given the fullest satisfaction. I have them combined with my practice Piano. Many of my musical friends who have seen them, as well as my organ pupils, are quite delighted with them; and I must acknowledge that I have never met with any Pedals so noiseless and pleasant to play upon as yours. The Action I consider durable, and of very good workmanship. Every organist who desires to perfect his playing will welcome your invention. I can recommend your goods in every respect.—Yours truly.

HERR J. RODENKIRCHEN.
To John Ainsworth, Esq. Organist, The Cathedral, Cologne, Germany.

TOOLS.—In order to facilite the attachment, a complete set of tools are sent (four in number) each one marked for its particular use. By the use of these tools, and following carefully the directions, ANY ONE can make a really good attachment.

On Receipt of Trade or Professional Card, you will receive List, with Liberal Terms.

AINSWORTH'S PATENT ORGAN COMBINATION WORKS
BRINSCALL, CHORLEY.

Facts and Comments.

Mr. Mackenzie was elected Principal of the Royal Academy, on Wednesday afternoon.

The decadence of private concerts is a grievance of long standing among professionals, who, in times gone by, were accustomed to find a happy hunting ground in West End drawing rooms. Sir Julius Benedict was fond of recounting to his friends that, whereas, at one period of his career, he made £300 to £400 a-year by organising entertainments of the kind, latterly the profits accruing from this source rapidly diminished till they fell to nil. Possibly the sudden awakening of society to the attractions of reciters and comic singers of refined type, may have had something to do with the change. It seems not improbable, however, that these, in their turn, will have to yield place to new comers, if there be truth in the report that Mrs. John Wood and Mr. Arthur Cecil, mean, this season, to regale the upper classes with dramatic entertainments in their own drawing rooms.

So far as art is concerned, these changes and shiftings of fashionable taste have little or no significance except inasmuch as they show that, whatever owes its existence to a whim of society, must expect, in due time, to be supplanted by some newer whim. The cause of music has owed little, in these latter days, to private concerts or to private patrons. No heaven-born genius, no hitherto neglected singer or player has been revealed to the world by their means, and if any such exist, it is to their new patron, the public, that they must appeal for recognition and support.

We have been asked to insert the following report of a recent action at law:—On the 3rd instant, in an action before Mr. Justice Kay, brought by Messrs. Stanley Lucas, Weber, and Co. against Messrs. Pitt and Hatzfeld, Mr. Vernon Smith applied on behalf of the plaintiffs for an injunction against the defendants to restrain them from infringing the copyright in a song belonging to the plaintiffs. The defendants appeared in person, and submitted to the injunction, which was made in the following terms: "That the defendants, their servants, workmen, and agents should be perpetually restrained from publishing, printing, selling, delivering, or otherwise disposing of, or distributing, whether gratuitously or otherwise, a song called 'My darling was so fair'; or, 'In a distant land' (In der Fremde) English version by Mrs. Malcolm Lawson, or any copy or copies thereof, or any other publication containing a colourable imitation of the name, title, or title-page, or composition of the plaintiff's song of that name 'English version by Constance Bache,' and from copying or printing from the plaintiff's said song." The defendants were further ordered to deliver up all unsold copies in their possession of their song, and to pay the costs of the action.

The programmes of the forthcoming Richter Concerts, will, in addition to the familiar Wagner excerpts, include the closing scene and "Hagen's Wacht" from "Götterdämmerung," and the "Schmiedelieder" from "Siegfried." Mr. Stanford's Irish Symphony, originally produced at these concerts, and since then given with great success in Hamburg and Berlin, will be repeated.

Dr. Joachim received the degree of Mus. Doc. Oxon., last week. The sister University, it will be remembered, conferred the same honour on the great violinist eleven years ago, when an interesting concert, including an overture by the new graduate, was given. There was no kind of musical pomp and circumstance at Oxford, a fact which throws a curious light on the comparative artistic capabilities of our two centres of learning.

Mr. Armbruster, at the London Institution, Finsbury Circus, E.C., delivered a lecture on "The Historical Development of Pianoforte Music from Bach to Liszt," last Thursday. It was amply illustrated by performances.

Mr. Justice Kekewich had before him in the Chancery Division lately a patent case about organs turned by handles. An amusing scene happened during the afternoon. The rival organs were placed on each side of the judge on the bench, and Mr. Moulton, Q.C., and Mr. Aston, Q.C., the counsel, were invited by Mr. Justice Kekewich to display the excellences of their clients' musical instruments. The counsel ascended the steps to the bench, and Mr. Moulton, Q.C., treated the Court to an operatic air on his client's organ. The novelty of music in the dull atmosphere of a Chancery Court caused great amusement among the spectators. When Mr. Moulton attempted to play a tune on the rival organ he was unable to extract any sound. His lordship advised him to discontinue the task, with the jocular remark, "I am afraid you are a bad organ-grinder, Mr. Moulton."

We are informed that the famous publishing firm of "Tito di Gio. Ricordi," of Milan, has been turned into a limited company, of which Signor Giulio Ricordi will be the sole responsible manager. Signor Lisei will be, as heretofore, the representative for Great Britain, Ireland, and the Colonies.

Signor Giulio Ricordi, as everyone knows, besides being an excellent man of business, is also a composer of distinguished merit.

On Saturday afternoon, February 18, a meeting was held at the Whitehall Rooms, Hotel Métropole, under the Presidency of Mr. Joseph Barnby, for the purpose of presenting to Mr. A. Pollitzer a testimonial signed by his past and present pupils, amongst whom we notice the names of Lady Kemball, Lady Adela Larking, Mrs. Dunbar Perkins, The Hon. Audrey St. Aubyn, Miss Kate Chaplin, Miss Adelina Dinelli, Lt.-Col. Farquhar Glennie, Mr. Louis Hervé d'Egville, Mr. F. M. Gye, etc., etc.

The proceedings were opened by the Chairman, who, with feeling, referred to his long friendship with Mr. Pollitzer, and testified to the pleasure that it afforded the signatories to be enabled to give expression to their admiration of the genius of their master and friend. Mr. Barnby then, amidst loud and enthusiastic applause, handed to Mr. Pollitzer an illuminated address, accompanied by a gold repeater watch, by Messrs. Hunt & Roskell.

Mr. Pollitzer, in reply, thanked the chairman and his pupils for the exceedingly beautiful testimonial they had presented to him; it would ever be cherished and valued by him as a tribute of esteem and affection on the part of his friends, which was as unexpected as it was appreciated. A vote of thanks was accorded to Mr. Chas. Davis, the honorary secretary, who suitably replied. A vote of thanks was also carried, by acclamation, to the chairman, proposed by Mr. Fanning Gye. Mr. Barnby, in reply, said that had he, instead of Mr. Pollitzer, been the recipient of this testimonial, he could not have experienced a more lively pleasure than he did, in being chosen to hand it to his old friend. The company, which numbered upwards of 300, then separated. A telegram was received from New York, from B. J. Fuller, Esq., saying—"With you in spirit," and a letter was read from Dr. Wylde, expressing his regret at not being able to be present, and his admiration for Mr. A. Pollitzer, as a professor, and his personal friendship for him.

The watch is inscribed: "To A. Pollitzer, Esq., as a mark of affectionate regard and esteem, from his grateful past and present pupils. Feb. 18, 1888."

The first of the customary Lenten performances of Bach's Passion Music (St. John) was given at St. Anne's Church, Soho, on Friday, the 17th, and was fully up to the now well-established standard of merit of these services. The Rev. W. Batson, Mus. Bac. Oxon., conducted efficiently, and Mr. Ould displayed much judgment in the management of the organ, in conjunction with an excellent orchestra. The quality of the boys' voices in this choir is as exceptionally pure and good as their training is correct and thorough. In fact, considering that the material is selected exclusively from the National Schools of the parish, the results obtained are really marvellous. The Passion Music was preceded by a short service, including Barnby's Magnificat in E flat, and followed by the hymn, "Jesu, my Lord, my God, my All," also to music by Barnby.

At the concert given at St. James's Hall, on Thursday evening last week, by the Stock Exchange Orchestral Society, a decidedly optimist feeling prevailed; and the tendency was firm all round, with the exception of some slight fluctuation in "Paradise-and-Peris," which, however, recovered towards the close; "Haydns" and "Cherubinis" were buoyant. The vocal market was undisturbed by either bull or bear operations, Miss Esmée Woodford being at a decided premium. Not a single defaulter was declared, and the hammer was laid aside for the bâton, which the intelligent conductor, Mr. George Kitchin, wielded with skill and success.

We have been asked to publish the following circular, the purport of which we cordially endorse:—"We venture to make an urgent appeal on behalf of the widow of a violinist who for some years was engaged at the Philharmonic, Crystal Palace, and other concerts, and who died of consumption after a long illness, during which his small savings were entirely exhausted. His widow was left, in delicate health, with nine children, whose ages range from 4 to 16. One of them has since died. Two only are earning anything, the oldest son, who is in an office, and one, eight years old, temporarily engaged at a theatre. The mother is now living in one room with six of her little ones, who need food, clothing, and education. Any help will be carefully administered to meet their present need and provide for their education. This sad and deserving case is strongly recommended by the undersigned, and those whose names are marked with an asterisk will thankfully receive donations: *Lady Thompson, 35, Wimpole Street, W.; Sir Arthur Sullivan, 2, Queen's Mansions, S.W.; *W. G. Cusins, Esq., 40, Montagu Square, W.; August Manns, Esq., Crystal Palace."

Amongst the latest engagements for Mr. Harris's Italian Season are Madame Trebelli and Madame Helène Crosmond.

Her Majesty the Queen has been graciously pleased to forward a Jubilee medal to Mr. George Millen, bandmaster of the Royal Marines, at Portsmouth. This is the second mark of Royal favour possessed by this band, as its members already wear the Prince of Wales's crest as a decoration (by His Royal Highness's command), in commemoration of the band's services when it accompanied His Royal Highness to India, in the "Serapis," in 1876.

Miss Bertha Moore has been engaged to sing in the Trebelli concert troupe, in the place of Miss Alice Whitacre, who is seriously ill.

Madame Burns's jewels, represented as worth £500, lost a week since, were restored to her by three boys who found them, they state, in the satchel, in Rodney-street, Liverpool, but were afraid to hand them over to the prima donna at an earlier period. Meanwhile a reward of £50 had been offered for recovery of the jewels, and this will be paid by Madame Burns's husband (Mr. Leslie Crotty) to the boys.

An autobiography of Sims Reeves, with plenty of personal reminiscences, is in the press. A further batch of correspondence between Goethe and Rochlitz, at one time the leading musical critic of his day, is also announced.

The following statements with regard to the withdrawal of Josef Hofmann from public life are culled from the American correspondence of the "Daily News," and should be taken cum grano, as the saying is.

"Josef Hofmann has been withdrawn from the concert stage by his father, who says he is overworked and will not play any more for many years, but return to Europe in a few weeks. The mother says it is a question of the boy's life.

He is worn out with the work he has been doing, and his parents are determined to stop it before it is too late. She says: 'Time after time Josef came home from a concert unable to sleep. He would toss and tumble about until nearly the morning, and appeared to be utterly exhausted. After every concert he complained, and wanted to know why he had to do it. When he first came to the hotel he was bright and strong, but now his nerves are unstrung, and he is unfit to play. He said a short time ago, when first he lived in the hotel, that he could push the big door open with one hand, and now he could not open it with his whole body. After a concert his little arms are all tired out, and he wants to give it up. Josef will positively not play again either this season or next. We are going to give him a long rest, and while he stays in this country he will not touch the piano again even for practice. He will not be seen in public again for at least five or six years. While we are resting we are going to take the boy around to amuse him and try to get him back to his usual health. The manager wants him to go to San Francisco, but I feel sure it would only be a question of a very few days before he would be sick in bed if such a thing were done.'"

"During the conversation, Josef was at work, painting a bunch of forget-me-nots, and showing a surprising amount of knowledge of painting, for a boy who has never taken a lesson. He moves in a restless, nervous way, and seems to be completely tired out. His eyes are heavy, and have dark shadows around them. He looks as if he had been taxed beyond his strength. He constantly broke in to express his opinion on the concerts. He said: 'I am not a machine to be played at fifty-two concerts, and am too tired to do any more. It is too much work for a boy like me. I am very glad I have not got to play any more, and hope it will be for many, many years. Let them wait until I am thirty, and then I will play some more for them. I want to study and learn some more. I do not want to go on playing until I am sick in bed, and I am going to stop now. They want me to go to San Francisco, and I tell Mr. Abbey, the manager, I will not go. If Mr. Abbey says I have got to play to-morrow night, tell him I am dead. I cannot play. I cannot concertise any more. I am tired. I am going to live here, and have a good time. What do they want to make a little boy like me work so hard for? I cannot do it. I am not idle. The manager is indignant, and says there is a breach of contract. He denies that the boy is overworked. It is hinted that the real cause of the parents' action is that 100,000 dols. have been contributed for the boy's education, on condition that he leaves the stage."

Betting is not supposed to be lawful in this country, or else we should be prepared to take heavy odds that young Hofmann will appear in London during the autumn, as originally announced. We should, indeed, not be surprised if the ingenious advertiser were not at the bottom of the whole story.

A reporter of "Galignani" has interviewed M. Gounod, and has elicited the following amongst other remarks: "You ask," said M. Gounod, "if Germany is better than France as a music centre for students. My honest opinion is that Paris is far superior to any German city in its musical advantages. Why, where could be found abler teachers than those at our Conservatory? Just look at Ambroise Thomas, Jules Massenet, Léo Delibes, Saint-Saëns, Théodore Dubois—our best composers, in a word, are all to be found in the Rue Bergère. And then I dislike all this nonsense about German music, Italian music, French music, and so on. Geographical boundaries cannot hedge in harmony. There can be no secrets about this art. The laws that govern thorough-bass, counter-point, fugue, are the same all the world over. Rossini once said to me: 'I know but two kinds of music—good and bad.' Music is universal, it is humanity, it is love."

This is all very good talk in its way, but it amounts really to very little more than Hamlet's "Words, words, words." The distinction between good music and bad music is, after all, only begging the question. What is good music, and what bad, and why? This is what M. Gounod and others would find it difficult to answer, except on personal, or, as the Germans call it, subjective ground. Neither is Gounod right in denying the national principle in music. Apart from the characteristics of Folksong, in which such men as Grieg and Dvorak may be said to exist, there is a distinct national, as well as individual cachet on a great man's work. If Beethoven had been a Frenchman he would probably have written as Berlioz wrote; and if Gounod had been a German, he would be somewhere on the level of Spohr. Fortunately, he is not.

Herr Professor Hans Wessely, a distinguished violinist, from Vienna, has just arrived here with the intention of settling in London. He is an excellent virtuoso, and well known on the Continent, where he has been performing at all the principal cities with great success. We shall have the pleasure of hearing him play at the Crystal Palace Concert, on April 7, when he will perform Spohr's cantata, in E minor, and Wieniawsky's "Faust" fantasia.

Widor's lovely ballet, "La Korrigane" has been revived at the Paris Grand Opéra.

The other day, at Genoa, in the presence of the special and Royal delegate, Pavesi, the chest was opened in which was preserved the celebrated violin of Nicolo Paganini. The instrument is in admirable preservation, and the veteran Italian violinist, Camillo Sivori, after having tuned it, played several pieces of music, arousing the admiration of all present. Afterwards Paganini's violin was deposited in a case covered by a glass shade.

A clever managerial move is reported from Naples. While Verdi's "Otello," was drawing crowded houses at the San Carlo, another impresario hired the Teatro Nuovo, for the exclusive purpose of giving Rossini's opera on the same subject. Everyone, of course, wanted to make comparisons between the old style and the new style, and Verdi accordingly served as an excellent and gratuitous advertisement for Rossini. If Mr. Harris succeeds in obtaining Verdi's Opera, some rival manager might do worse than take a leaf out of the book of his Italian colleague.

A new opera, "Asrael," by Baron Alberto Franchetti, was recently performed at the Reggio Theatre. The composer is said to be allied to the Rothschild family, and his father, a wealthy banker, had supplied the funds for a gorgeous mise-en-scène. The public, accordingly hit upon the bright idea of calling, not only the composer and the librettist and the scene painter and the artists, but also the paternal banker before the curtain, thus furnishing an instance of "almighty dollar"-worship, of which the Yankees themselves might be proud.

It never rains but it pours. Last week we noticed the unearthing of two unpublished letters by Beethoven; this time it is Mozart who supplies a previously unknown letter, addressed to his cousin, Marieanne Mozart. The contents are no more interesting than were those of Beethoven's epistles, and the spelling is, if possible, even more extraordinary.

The extraordinary statement of Richard Pohl, in the "Musikalisches Wochenblatt," according to which Madame

Wagner told him that no letters between Wagner and Liszt were in existence after those published in the two volumes of "Briefwechsel," and extending to the year 1861, has naturally caused a great sensation in Germany. In the latest issue of the same paper, Herr Pohl now declares that his reproduction of Madame Wagner's words was only approximate, not literal. There must be, as we stated last week, some misunderstanding somewhere.

BERLIOZ'S "LES TROYENS."

(Concluded from page 128.)

The third act takes place in the garden of the Queen's palace, which is near the sea-shore. The time is at sunset. Courtiers, warriors, and ladies are seen reposing in groups. Soon after a march, founded on the national hymn "Gloire à Didon," is played behind the scenes, and during its progress Dido, Æneas, and other personages enter. Dido seats herself on the throne, and Æneas remains by her side. In the score there are two songs, sung by Anna and Narbal, which, although not devoid of merit, considerably interfered with the action, and therefore were suppressed after the second performance at the Théâtre-Lyrique. The festivities commence with the arrival of the ballet dancers. The ballet consists of three movements, and the last, a "Pas d'Esclaves Nubiennes," has a peculiar charm, and is thoroughly Oriental in character. Four slaves (contraltos) are seated on the ground in the Oriental fashion, and sing vocal phrases to these words: "Ha! ha! Anna pove! midon aé, ieroismè. Dei beraimbé!" during the progress of the dance. At the conclusion of the ballet, Dido descends from the throne, and says to her sister:

Assez, ma sœur, je ne souffre qu' à peine
Cette fête importune . . .

The ballet dancers then depart at a sign from Anna, and Dido asks the court poet for a song, to the accompaniment of a Theban harpist.

The song, however, has no more effect on Dido's mind than the merry dancers have had, and as Jopas is becoming more and more inspired, he is suddenly interrupted. Dido, now turning her attention towards Æneas, asks him to continue his tale of the fall of Troy.

Æneas tells her that Andromache, after the siege of Troy, fell to the share of Pyrrhus, and how, after repeated refusals, at length consented to marry him.

This is followed by a quintet, in which Æneas, Panthée, and Narbal take part. The night now comes on, and Æneas, looking towards the heavens, says "Nuit splendide et charmante," which leads to a septet and chorus. When it is finished, every one, with the exception of Æneas and Dido, retires. The two lovers now being alone, we are of course treated to a love duet. Berlioz, like Wagner, could write inspired love-scenes without being shackled by the trammels of the stereotyped forms of the old Italian opera. Of Wagner it is sufficient to point to Lohengrin and Elsa's duet in the nuptial chamber, the famous one between Tristan and Isolde, and Siegfried's and Brunhilda's in the "Götterdämmerung." But what can exceed in beauty the strains which Berlioz has here placed in the mouths of the pair? The accompaniment is chiefly for string quartet con sordini una corda.

This beautiful phrase "Par une telle nuit," is further enhanced by the introduction of the cor anglais in the bar (where the voices are silent) previous to the words—"Aux bosquets de l'Ida" (Dido), and "La belle Cressida" (Æneas). We have the "Nuit d'ivresse" over again, and this is followed by another dialogue between the lovers, even more animated than before. Dido leads the way with*—

Par une telle nuit, le fils de Cythérée
Accueillit froidement la tendresse enivrée
De la reine Didon.

And Æneas says:—

Et dans la même nuit, hélas! l'injuste reine,
Accusant son amant, obtint de lui, sans peine,
Le plus tendre pardon.

Very soon after, the stage is enveloped in darkness, and Mercury appears. He strikes with his wand the armour of Æneas, and repeats the significant cry of "Italy."

In the fourth act, the scene lies on the sea-shore, where the Trojan camp is stationed. Their ships are to be seen in the harbour. The time is night, and the song of a young sailor is heard.* This episode will, no doubt, remind many opera goers of the sailor's song in the first act of Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde," although, in the music, there is no resemblance whatever. But it is interesting to note how the two greatest musical colourists of modern times have treated their respective little tone pictures. Instead of being under the influence of romanticism as in Wagner's song, it is impossible for anyone when hearing Berlioz's song not to feel entirely on classic grounds, and Berlioz has further enhanced that impression by writing it in the Hypermixolydian mode. The first verse is accompanied by string quartet con sordini, and the clarinet and cor anglais are occasionally introduced.

Panthée, followed by some Trojan chiefs, now returns to the camp and says to his companions:—

Préparez tout, il faut partir enfin.
Enée en vain
Voit avec désespoir l'angoisse de la reine,
La gloire et le dévoir sauront briser sa chaine.
Et son cœur sera fort au moment des adieux.

The chiefs re-enter their tents, and two sentinels sing a common-place duet, which is certainly out of place in a grand opera, founded on an epic poem. Æneas then comes in, overpowered with grief, and in a love monologue expresses his despair at having to leave Dido.

Four veiled spectres then appear one after another, and above the heads of each is seen a flame-coloured crown. Æneas, noticing the first, says to him:—

De ta sombre demeure,
Messager menaçant, qui donc t'a fait sortir?

The spectre replies:—

Ta faiblesse et ta gloire.

Æneas, more despondent than ever, says:—

Ah! Je voudrais mourir!

But the spectre will not hear of it:

Plus de retards.

The second spectre comes forward and says:—

Pas un jour.

And the other two together exclaim:—

Pas une heure!

The first spectre then takes off his veil, and discovers himself as Priam.

The three others are the ghosts of Chorèbe, Cassandra, and Hector. Æneas is at last resolved to depart, and, going to the tents, he calls upon his followers to prepare the ships.

At this instant Dido enters, and, on noticing the preparations for the departure, she furiously says to Æneas:—

Tu pars? . . . sans remords! . . . tu cours en Italie?

Æneas gives as an excuse the judgment of the gods. But this does not satisfy Dido, who, distracted with rage and despair, first furiously upbraids him, and then disdainfully turns from him.

Æneas protests against the unkind words which have fallen from her lips, and earnestly assures her of his continued love.

Je vous aime, Didon! . . . grâce! . . . grâce! . . . l'ordre
Divin pouvait seul remporter la cruelle victoire . . .

As these words fall from his lips, the theme of the triumphal march is heard in the distance. Æneas at once accepts the omen, and Dido, although hot with rage, understands its meaning.

---

*It will be seen that these words are simply pharaphrased from the dialogue between Lorenzo and Jessica, which commences the last act of the "Merchant of Venice."

*When Berlioz was writing this song, he was thinking all the while of his only son, who was then a captain in the merchant service, as will be seen in a letter to him, dated the 9th of February 1858. "I am more pleased with what I have just written than with all my former works. I believe the terrible scenes in the fourth act will be conveyed in music of heart-rending reality. I have made another alteration in this act; I have cut out a long piece, and substituted a characteristic movement contrasting with the epical and passionate style of the remainder. It is a sailor's song. I thought of you, dear Louis, when I was writing it, and I send you the words."

She then departs quickly. A thick cloud passes over the stage, and there is lightning and thunder. Æneas for a moment is lost in contemplation. But on hearing the sailors shout "Italie,! Italie,!" he quickly enters one of the ships. The triumphal march is now heard in all its glory. Ascanius, accompanied by a Trojan chief, arrives and joins his father. The cry of "Italie! Italie!" is renewed with enthusiasm, while the ships slowly move away. When they are out of sight, the sun rises and the curtain falls.

The first scene of the last act is a hall in Queen Dido's palace. The Queen is resting on a couch, and her sister, Anna, and her faithful minister, Narbal, are in attendance. Dido, overcome with grief at Æneas's sudden departure, is trying to persuade her sister to go and find out her lover, and implore him to come back and stay a little longer.

As Anna and Narbal are about to leave to fulfil the wishes of the distressed Queen, Jopas, the poet, runs in, and informs her that Æneas and his men are gone.

After a long soliloquy, Dido comes to the resolution, like most of the heroines of antiquity, of ending her life on the funeral pyre. Bidding Anna to give orders to the men to build it, she remains alone on the stage and gives way to the lamentations of grief.

She then goes towards the window, and looks for the last time at the place where she and Æneas passed so many happy hours together. The theme of the love duet, "Nuit d'Ivresse," is heard during this sad and touching episode. The last scene* takes place in the palace garden. A funeral pile is erected, and in it are deposited all the presents Æneas had given to Dido. The proceedings commence with a funeral chant sung by the priests. After this, Anna and Narbal prophetically predict the death of Æneas.

Dido then speaks as if in a dream :—

Pluton . . . semble m'être propice . . .
En ce cruel instant . . . Narbal . . . ma sœur . . .
C'en est fait . . . achevons le pieux sacrifice . . .
Je sens rentrer le calme . . . dans mon cœur.

Four priests then come forward, and with solemn steps walk round the funeral pyre. Dido, after she has deposited her crown on the pyre, follows the priests with unconcealed emotion. During this ceremony, Anna and Narbal are on their knees praying, and the high priest, with uplifted hands, is blessing the funeral pyre. When this is over, Dido quickly mounts it, and bids the men light the pyre. Anna and some of the crowd try to drag her away, but she repulses them. Soon after, a scene opens at the back of the stage, and discloses as if in a vision—Rome in all its glory. On seeing this, Dido cries—and falls down dead. The triumphal march is heard soon after, and the curtain descends for the last time.

Rome! . . . Rome! . . . immortelle! . . .

Reviews.

VOCAL.

Two interesting pieces, by composers celebrated in the last generation, have been issued, presumably for the first time, by Hutchings and Co. The one, a song by M. W. Balfe, entitled "The Dove and the Raven," shows that prolific writer in a decidedly happy vein. That it is vocal will be taken for granted. What is not so much a matter of course, is that the voice part here is something more than a tune written exclusively for popular purposes, while the accompaniment goes beyond familiar conventional methods, and has a relevancy of its own. The other, entitled "Farewell to the Swallow," is a pleasing duet for female voices by Henry Smart, flowing in character, which ought to find favour in many a drawing-room. In six songs for baritone or mezzo-soprano (E. Ascherberg and Co.), Mr. Arthur W. Marchant appeals, and often with success, to singers of some culture. Without attempting high flights, this collection in many parts shows both skill and feeling; the accompaniments being throughout interesting, and the words, which are well chosen, united to music of a fluent and agreeably melodious character. Of these, "While she lies sleeping" will be found a pretty lullaby, while a setting of Tom Hood's well-known ballad, "The Stars are with the Voyager," is perhaps rather more conventional. The four other songs, entitled respectively "Music of the Sea," "After," "I will not follow the swallow," and "Bereft," contain in each case some features of merit. The spirit of an English ballad has been admirably seized in "A Woman's Heart," by Charles Salaman (Stanley Lucas), a simple little effusion, but nevertheless, far removed from commonplace. Let us, in passing, express satisfaction at the adoption by the veteran song-writer of the sensible practice, long neglected, for some mysterious reason, by composers and publishers, of adding a date to his title-page. Had this been generally done in times gone by, many a question of sore perplexity for musical biographers would be set at rest, or, rather, would never have arisen. "The morning smiled, the evening wept," by Ciro Pinsuti (Hutchings and Co.), is a favourable specimen of this fertile and popular composer's work. "He loves but me," an English version of Carl Eckert's "Er liebt nur mich," is a tripping Swiss ditty sure to obtain additional popularity from the fact that it has been sung by Madame Adelina Patti. There is something decidedly taking in a little narrative song, "Oak-tree Farm," by Annie E. Armstrong (same publisher). "In Dock," by F. Novara, in spite of its seemingly invidious title, turns out to be nothing more alarming than a cheery nautical song. "Soul Music," by Alfred Scott Gatty, is a rather conventional setting of some words by Alfred Scott Gatty (both Hutchings and Co.). From Weekes and Co. we receive three songs of the popular type, which may be classed together as more or less spirited :—"Song of the Lighthouse," by T. H. Greenhill; "The Rover," by Lawford Huxtable; and "Prove your Mettle, Boys," by Franco Novara. "Come Back," by H. Martyn Van Lennep, a somewhat featureless drawing-room ditty, will no doubt have its admirers. "Molly's Picture," by Franco Novara, is another sentimental song of the same calibre. Evidences of musical feeling and melodic gift are discernible in "King Louis' Orchard Close," a song by T. S. Wotton (all the above Weekes and Co.).

From Joseph Williams we receive a set of six vocal duets, pleasing and musicianly in tone, by Wilfred Bendall. There is a spontaneity and unaffected charm in "The Sun and the Brook," and in a treatment of Shakespeare's words, "How Sweet the Moonlight," and similar qualities are more or less noticeable in "Weep no More," "Snowbloom," "Song of the Minnesingers," and "A Song of the Season."

The pianoforte score is to hand of Dr. Jacob Bradford's oratorio in two parts, "Judith" (Stanley Lucas & Co.), the production of which at St. James's Hall has been announced for the 28th of this month. The libretto, dealing with familiar incidents in the career of that formidable heroine of Jewish history, has been constructed out of appropriate texts from the Scriptures, authentic and apochryphal. As usual, we postpone consideration of the music until after the first public performance, and this plan becomes especially desirable in the case of a work of such extent and solidity. "Elinore; or the Border's Bride," a pastoral operetta of the lightest kind, the words by John Oxenford, and the music by Edmund Rogers (Weekes and Co.), contains some tuneful numbers, and should find acceptance with choral societies. "Cock Robin's Wedding," a children's cantata by Edward Dorn, words by Mrs. Alexander Roberts (Hutchings and Co.), ought to be a great favourite with young folks. The soli and choruses for treble voices are short and lively, and the accompaniment appropriately easy, the whole being evidently designed with careful regard for the requirements of juvenile performers.

---

* This scene seems to have given Berlioz considerable trouble, because in a letter (dated the 20th of January, 1858) to Dr. von Bülow, he writes :—"You ask me what I am doing. I am finishing the 'Troyens.' I have been unable to work at it during the last fortnight. I am at the final catastrophe. Æneas has gone, . . . How am I to express the anguish of heart, the cries of lamentation? They frighten me. I am especially anxious about the accentuation of the passage allotted to Anna and Narbal in the midst of the religious ceremony of the priests of Pluto. Is it a violent imprecation, or dull, concentrated fury? If poor Rachel were not dead, I should have asked her. You think, no doubt, that I am too good natured in paying so much attention to truth of expression, and that anything would be true enough for the public. But how about ourselves? Well, I daresay I shall hit upon the right idea."

The Organ World.

ON CERTAIN EAST END RECITALS.

Though the West End of London is, at present, entirely unprovided with organ recitals of the concert room type, there seems actually to be a sort of plethora at the East End of the great Metropolis; at any rate, a competition, so to speak, seems to be in progress, which is interesting enough to demand attention. For a good many years the famous, indeed the most famous of all the various series of organ recitals have been continued at the Bow and Bromley Institute, with much spirit and conducted with sound judgment. By the liberality of the public, a new, great, and valuable institution, the People's Palace, has been erected on the same line of road, about a mile west of the well-known Bow and Bromley concert room; and in the fine concert room of the new Palace—standing much upon the site of the Beaumont Institution, one of the earliest homes of the organ recital—another fine organ has been added to the now rather numerous concert organs of the East End. This desirable addition to the musical advantages of the eastern side of London, has, however, opened a curious question of competition. Before proceeding to discuss this matter, it will be well to state that no formal complaint is being laid before the public in the interests of either of the excellent institutions whose competitive juxtaposition is being considered; the matter is merely being stated by an independent writer, as involving a curious instance of the desirability of mutual arrangement in connection with public interests. And, certainly, it will be granted that just as perfect freedom as regards walking in the public streets does not bestow any license permitting passengers to jostle each other; so free trade in art should be conducted upon lines which permit public bodies to work in harmony for the public good with a due regard for mutual interests whenever possible. Of course, it must at the same time be conceded that there is a possibility of even rightly conducting a form of competition in which one side has the advantages of State or private aid not necessarily possessed by the other side. Public interests may even call for some form of public monopoly, as in the State possession of postal and telegraph work. However, such forms of monopoly are rare in free and energetic nations, and in England but little known in the world of literature and art. In the present instance public benevolence has supplied the subvention which has enabled the People's Palace to enter into organ-recital-giving competition at a decided advantage with the Bow and Bromley Institute, an equally deserving, but an almost entirely self-supporting, institution. This public benevolence also takes a very practical form in another direction in favour of the new Palace, the kindly aid of the artistic world. Thus, the organists who, and rightly too, look upon engagements to play recitals at the Bow and Bromley Institute as professional matters will, in a charitable spirit not to be criticised in any way, give their voluntary services at the People's Palace. The same remark holds good regarding our popular vocalists, who are ever ready "at the call of charity" to aid any good cause. Then it is said this, one would not say unfair, but rather exceptional and uncalculated-upon, competition is to be seen in, perhaps, a still stronger light as regards performances given by leading military bands in the two institutions. One of the Guards bands may, says rumour, be required by the regimental authorities to play at the People's Palace for the benevolently-thought-of sum of two or three pounds; whereas, the same band might, by the technical courtesy of the commanding officer, be permitted to accept an engagement at the Bow and Bromley Institute or, perhaps, something between £30 to £50—this being tated approximately and without positive knowledge. Of course, the self-supporting character of the institution just named, has naturally secured a more dignified artistic position; not only by reason of the experience and artistic earnestness of its managers, but by force of the simple reason that that which must be paid for is commonly of a higher quality than that which is given away. This remark is applicable, according to rumour, to the character of the different organ recitals. For although some of our best performers have kindly aided the People's Palace, complaints are now being made that some of the volunteer organ recitals given there are by no means of a high standard, or even of a fairly satisfactory character. An esteemed correspondent reports of one of the free Sunday recitals at the Palace, that the playing was not calculated in any way to advance public taste; and, truly, one of Mendelssohn's devotional airs thrown out on a powerful reed stop, with a very free accompaniment, and distorted by the eccentric accentuations of a diligently pumped swell-pedal, cannot be regarded as conducive to the advance of public taste. This statement brings forward the question, how far benevolent intentions are compatible with gifts of an inferior type. The "benevolent" individual who gave bad and adulterated food to the poor, would be in danger of sharp criticism; and, similarly, he who is concerned in purveying injurious mental food should be duly judged, however "benevolent" his original intentions may have been. My esteemed correspondent has a remedy, in a proposal that the College of Organists, through its members, should help forward the good cause, by furnishing high-class organ music to the frequenters of the People's Palace. It is timely also to express a hope that the members of the College of Organists, and all other lovers of organ music, will likewise do all they can in every direction to support the valuable recitals at the Bow and Bromley Institute, which not only, like the People's Palace concerts, do much for a large and deserving class, but furnish a high standard of performance, and have greatly assisted in developing organ music in our midst. As leaders in this last-named direction, the Managers of the Bow and Bromley Institute deserve the warm and faithful support of the concert-going public.

E. H. TURPIN.

MUSICAL ELOCUTION.

BY G. E. LAKE.

First of all he must realise that the nose is given for resonance. When a man is said to "sing through his nose," he, as a matter of fact, does just the reverse; and if any doubt this, let them close their nostrils and try the effect! It is, therefore, necessary not only to employ the chest cavity as a sound-board, but also to take advantage of the natural substitutes for organ tubes. This is best effected by economising the breath, expanding the chest, and directing the sound towards the front of the mouth, endeavouring to make it strike agains the teeth, which are kept clear of the lips to avoid "damping" of vibration by the latter. Signor Lamperti advocates the us of the vowel I (ee) for vowel exercises, and its resonant quality is easily tested, especially if prefaced by the compound vowel "oo," the most travelling sounds known being that of the Australian koo-ee and the English soo-eep, which latter cry softly uttered reaches almost as far as the yell of the most blatant costermonger. All vocalists know well the difficulty of enunciating the vowel ee upon a high note, when the sound is thrown to the back of the soft palate; but by familiarising the lower intonation to this vowel the difficulty is greatly mitigated, and the effect of the voice ringing against the teeth produces a trumpet-like quality of tone, and an ease in effect which are indescribable, but eminently gratifying. Of all the six vowels, the broad Italian A (aa) stands alone for imparting a pure and open quality of tone; and when once it can be brought well to the front of the mouth, the quality is in its greatest perfection, of which more anon, Meanwhile, the claims of the others to similar treatment by means of this throwing forward of the tone cannot be too strongly urged, because the resonant or travelling quality of each vowel should be as nearly as possible equalised by incessant practice, in order that the vocal tone may be enabled to waft each syllable to an equal distance. Having thus briefly touched upon the relationship of elocution with legitimate vocal production (itself the offspring of the union of respiration and resonance), let us pass on to the consideration of the principal faults in the vocal elocution of the day, and of the reason why (apart from the dogma of original sin) these faults should so greatly abound, not only amongst English, but also amongst many English scholars, or at least artists. Why is it that our ears are so constantly offended, even in some of the best concert-rooms, by the most horrible imitations of an expressive, if difficult, language? Gentlemen, one could almost say, why is the evil not greater than it is, seeing that we are never taught to speak our words properly in ordinary conversation? Of all the utterers of words, the average Englishman is one of the worst, for the simple reason that his cosmopolitan language requires more careful study than other and more indigenous ones, and generally receives less, because, as a nation, the English are most prone to consider every useful faculty rather as a "gift" than an accomplishment. When found fault with, the English student of vocal speech takes triumphant refuge in affirming the unvocal nature of our tongue. Well, in some respects it is less vocal than other languages, but its sound is, de facto, much less faulty than is generally asserted. I would even go so far as to assert that English is better to sing than some other languages, in respect, at least, of its requiring greater intelligence, and a more careful study for its proper rendition. Briefly stated, our difficulties are mainly as follows:—whereas, in Continental languages, the all-important vowel almost invariably governs the word or syllable in which it is contained, in English, the vowel is governed by something which precedes or follows it. The vowel "a" has some different sounds, "i" some, and the combination "ou" some. If we say the word "draft," we do not know, until the context is supplied, whether we speak of an air, or utter a cheque. In the words of the old song—

I know a bank
Whose scents are cent per cents,
Whose airs are drafts!

etc. Now, even if we spell this last word as draughts, we are still at the mercy of the context in order to know whether we imply a current of air or of liquid, or the occasion of thirst and the means for alleviation thereof. The effect of this confusion upon unstudied vocalism is obvious. The singer, whilst he is articulating his vowel, thinks of the consonant to follow, and alters too soon the position of his resonance productors, to the entire detriment of his vocal tone. Next, our consonants frequently occur en masse, and, like the Teutonic, awkwardly in the extreme, as when the sybillant is followed by sybillant or by "sch," percussive by percussive, labial by labial, etc. How often do we laugh at the Scottish dialect; yet, whilst the educated Scotsman speaks far better English than we Sassenachs, the most uneducated "Glesga" shipwright would scorn to say "wen," "were," and "wye," as if he meant when, where, and why, or to say "weal" if he meant wheel. I say, therefore, that spontaneous utterance is not for our language. English must be studied until its correct pronunciation becomes, in a manner, hereditary.

(To be continued.)

"The Year Book of the Church of England" states that the Church has 154,000 unpaid, and 19,000 paid men singers, and of female singers about 57,000 unpaid and 2,100 paid.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH MUSIC.

A paper on this subject was read before the Sidcup Christian Literature Society, at a recent meeting, by Mr. E. Griffith F.C.O., of Chislehurst.

Defining his sense of the term "reform," Mr. Griffith said he advocated nothing more nor less than is plainly and distinctly directed throughout the liturgy. All would agree that the ideal employment of music in public worship was that the whole congregation should sing in all those musical portions of the liturgy assigned to them. But from a very long and varied experience as an organist in the village, country town, and London churches, he could say that nine-tenths of the congregations did not sing at all, unless in a very simple hymn or chant. It was his conviction that the rapid advancement of musical knowledge, and the greater efficacy of church choirs, did nothing to interpret the real spirit of the liturgy. Considering the power and influence of music as an aid to worship and a source of strength to the Church, it augured ill of the vitality of that Church which could not enlist the voices of its congregations in the musical service, the right and the duty of the people at large, which could, or ought to be effected in every parish by care and judgment. Why was hearty good congregational singing so rare in our churches? Church music was constantly becoming more elaborate and ornate, not only silencing the congregations, but taxing the powers even of our highly-trained choirs. The voluntary choir was consequently becoming a thing of the past, and every man, woman, and boy possessed of the requisite musical ability were demanding payment for their services in praising God by deputy in our churches. Simple, solid, and ecclesiastical music was fast becoming banished from our services. Archdeacon Farrar had written to him on the subject: "The spirit of professionalism in a choir is the ruin of the spirit of devotion in a congregation." The people were not wholly blameless. Dr. Hullah said of them, forty years ago:—"To the shame of our upper and middle classes of society, be it spoken, congregations do not sing. The voice which on Saturday night has held entranced admiring crowds, is on the Sunday morning tuneless. The amusement of a crowd is an object worth years of study; but the praise of God is left to the school children; it is not genteel to sing in church." Certainly there was plenty of music heard in the majority of the churches—music most artistic, most beautiful; but for the choir only. The great congregation was voiceless. He did not desire to do away with church choirs; but to show how they could be made most valuable in leading and assisting the congregation in all the music intended for the people—the original object of the institution of choirs. He depended in a great measure upon musical illustrations to prove that congregations might be relied upon for taking an effective part when all such music was adapted to their wants.

With regard to the different divisions of the liturgy, the Confession should be spoken on a low note common to all voices Supplications for mercy and pardon should be in the natural and simple monotone; the one voice, without confusion and jumble. A note common to the generality of mankind should be used. Congregations would not even attempt to respond on a higher note than E. Why, then, should they sacrifice the duties and the desires of the people to the ambition of choirs? In coming to the canticles and psalms, a grand opportunity for chanting is given, assuming suitable music for the burst of praise from a congregation. But here, again, people were compelled to stand as listeners, simply from the ornate character of the music chosen, to the exclusion of grand, solid, and simple melodies. More frequently than not the chants were set so high, even in the recitation notes, that very few could attempt them. Too often the composer was exercised with the exigencies of harmony for the chancel choir rather than the needs of the congregation, and a desire to display his scientific acquirements rather than solidity, massiveness, and simplicity. No part of the service required more care and discretion in the organist's duties than the chanting. They had only to observe the effect in the congregations when a very simple, melodious, and solemn chant was sung. The interest and heartiness shown ought to be sufficiently convincing as to what should be generally adopted. Gregory, in the year 590, endeavoured to meet the need of the people by arranging music, the main characteristics of which should be "simplicity and gravity." Very probably, if Church composers, with all the resources of modern harmony, had in some degree worked more upon the spirit and devotional character of these old melodies or tones, and had not introduced the lighter style of chant known as the Anglican, the voice of the congregation would never have been silenced. But immediately the sensuous appetite for prettiness was pandered to, as opposed to appropriate and devotional effect, all thoughts for the wants of worshippers were banished. He did not advocate the exclusive use of Gregorian chants, though they had the great charm of reverence and devotion when sung in unison with appropriate accompaniment. The great majority of Church people could not be induced to sing and enjoy them, but this was no reason for filling our modern chant-book with that which was totally unfit for congregational use. The music and pointing, and those who arranged or composed it, were to blame for the bad chanting of the people. Even in many churches where Gregorian chants were used to the psalms, the irreverent gabbling of choirs at the utmost possible speed, often at variance with the organist, effectually destroyed all efforts of the congregation to join in the chanting. Frequently, again, where Anglican chants were in favour they were injudiciously chosen, as regards their pitch and florid character. It was desirable to return to that ancient usage of singing the psalms in unison to grave and solid melodies. These melodies need not be so severe as some of the ancient tones, for it was quite possible for composers to produce good ecclesiastical chants, truly devotional and expressive of the words.

The pointing of the Psalters was another difficulty to be removed. All difficulties in the matter of pointing would vanish by pointing the music to every verse. In his illustrations he endeavoured to show the simplicity of this arrangement; and, as before stated, this was convincingly proved on seven different occasions lately by the vigorous and efficient singing of the audiences and congregations at first sight. Only the ignorant would attempt to defend the reading of Psalms.' We need to restore music to its original connexion with the Psalms, and to acknowledge it here, as elsewhere, the natural expression of our deeper and united emotions. Nothing could justify the prevailing custom in parish churches of singing the canticles to elaborate and anthem-like music called services. Surely these canticles were the special property of the people, and should in no case be made select performances in the chancel. That was a grave mistake, and should never be countenanced or encouraged by the clergy. He especially referred to those very ornate compositions which many organists selected for exhibiting their own mechanical dexterity and the efficiency of their choirs. Why should assembled worshippers be denied their undoubted privilege of singing the grand old Te Deum? The service lists of London church choirs would show that possibly, with the exception of the Venite—which, fortunately, had not yet been set to a service—every canticle for morning and evening service was sung to a composition taxing the best choirs and organists to execute. Was this edifying to the people, or tending to strengthen the Church's hold on the masses?

Among the clergy who had answered his inquiries, the Rector of St. James's, Exeter, Prebendary Dumbleton (a former curate of Chislehurst) wrote thus:—"But what needs to be done is, I think, that someone should set himself to compose or compile such plain and sound music as you would have. Many would be glad to use it. I have been looking about for such all my life. All you say about the unhealthy advance of choirs as musicians I quite appreciate. Have you ever heard of the choir singing alternately with the congregation? This I have accomplished now in three churches, and it works admirably. I mean in psalms and canticles, when the latter are plain." However, he found it almost impossible to get even an attempt at this from clergy who heartily concurred in his suggestions.

Mr. Griffith said the anthem was the only part of the service where the separation of the duties of choir and congregation was a gain to both. Listening to a good and suitable anthem, well sung, could fill the heart with devotion and prove a spiritual blessing. A well-known rector of a London parish wrote thus:—"The most elaborate music of which the choir is capable should be used in the anthems as a special offering to God, in which the congregation are only expected to join in spirit." It was infinitely better, however, to substitute for the anthem a good hymn, when the former was not calculated, through imperfect execution, to prove an effective musical sermon. For the greatest service of adoration and praise—Holy Communion—simple, grand, and solemn music was required, and not adaptations from Mozart's Masses, and other works, which some of the musical clergy were injudiciously introducing into their churches. Reform was urgently called for here; and the Eucharist service should be guarded from all that pertained to sensationalism, and adapted in its music to aid devotion rather than lead to distraction.

As to hymn singing, all would agree that this portion of Church praise-worship was the most satisfactory, and that here, if anywhere, the voice was occasionally heard of the congregation. Improvement might be effected by the abolition of all flimsy, light, and sickly tunes, the lowering of the general pitch to suit the voices in a congregation, especially desirable for male voices, and by varying the music in some of our hymns according to the change of sentiment; pointing the words of every verse under the music, thus giving greater confidence to the congregation, and opportunity to the clever organist for more variety of expression and execution. His conviction was that a full and hearty interpretation of the liturgy would never be heard until serious efforts were made to adapt its music and responses more to the level of general worshippers. The Church would then gain the enthusiasm and hearty support of the people generally, more by giving them an opportunity to perform their own sacred duties than by the most perfect rendering of a select choir. Responses were being set to suit a choir only; psalms were often sung to chants which few could reach, and the canticles were made into elaborate anthems. Even the creeds—our common acts of faith—were made occasions of display for the choir and organist, leaving nothing to the people, unless, indeed, they muttered or whispered the Amens.

As an organist and musician, he was not really taking an antagonistic course in opposing the introduction of high-class music into our service. He would—in the anthem only—employ the whole resources of modern art, which, if properly prepared, would tax the time and abilities of all engaged in a choir. Moreover, he believed that our organists would improve their positions and gain the support and countenance of congregations by thinking of, and working more for, those congregations. Dr. Allon, of Union Chapel, Islington, had explained to him the system which had been so successful there. Regular practices for the congregation, a choir of about sixty, which led but did not sing for the congregation, and a distinct Psalmody class directed by the organist. Every member should be supplied with the music of a simple, effective sort. Only let the clergy show a willingness and determination to get such music, and without the least doubt the people would make it a second duty and deem it a great privilege, both for the home circle and Church, to provide themselves with it. Here was an extended field of operations for an enthusiastic and clever organist (who should always reside in the parish), and he would become the guide and teacher in matters musical to the whole parish. Many clergy had expressed sympathy with the object, but had not gone further. He suggested the establishment of an association for promoting a correct rendering of the liturgy by all congregations. That it would succed was, in his humble opinion, beyond doubt. If such a service were once gained, chilling restraint, stamped by worldly custom in all our churches, would be banished for ever. Music would be restored to its original connexion with the liturgy, and acknowledged here, as elsewhere, as the natural expression of our deeper and united emotions. By dispersing the whole or part of a choir for a time amongst the congregation—all being provided with easy, effective, and solid music—every assistance would be rendered and confidence given to the people in their first attempts to do their duty. A choir in this sense was the very life of congregational singing; "and the life of the choir is the elementary music class," which should also include the whole congregation. It was difficult to dispute the assertion of Dr. Monk that the larger the organ and the better the choir-singing in any parish, the worse would be the congregational singing. What a brightness, a reality, a soul-stirring, heart-lifting effect if all this could be made to promote the singing of the people instead of superseding it.

The paper concluded with the opinions of a few out of the numerous clergy and laity who had written to Mr. Griffith, including the Archbishop of Canterbury, Mr. Spottiswoode, the Hon. and Rev. E. V. Bligh, and the Rev. E. L. Langdon, who said:—"I entirely coincide in your sentiments on the present style and fashion of Church music, much of which is only suitable to a concert room;" the Vicars of Buckingham and Croydon, Mr. George Hulburd, an old and esteemed resident of Maidstone, and a quotation from a letter of Mr. Gladstone to the editor of the Nonconformist Musical Journal, which expressed the hope that skill and science might always continue to be the handmaids of devotion, and might never be used to overshadow it.

A spirited discussion followed, in which the Rev. Dr. Gritton, Dr. Poole, Mr. W. H. Gill, and the Rev. G. Simmons, the president, took part, and the heartiest thanks of the Society were accorded to Mr. Griffith.

RECITAL NEWS.

The Dome, Royal Pavilion, Brighton.—Organ recital by Mr. Alfred King, Mus. Bac., F.C.O. (hon. organist to the Corporation), February 11th. Programme:—

Overture Adagio } "Occasional" March	Handel.
Pastorale	Best-Kullak.
Prelude and Fugue in E	Bach.
Andante (Quintett in C minor)	Mozart.
March "Cornelius"	Mendelssohn.
Serenade "Ave Maria"	Schubert.
Gavotte "Louis XV."	Gladstone-Lee.
Serenata	Boyse-Moszkowski.
Overture in E	Morandi.

St. Luke's, Canterbury-road, Kilburn.—An organ recital was given on February 12th, by Mr. F. H. Stokes, Organist of St. Luke's. Programme:—

Toccata and Fugue, in D minor	Bach.
Allegretto in B minor	Guilmant.
Anthem "O Taste and See"	Goss.
The Choir.
March in E flat	L. Wély.

St. Marks, Lewisham.—The fourth of a series of special services, with organ recital and vocal music, was given on Wednesday 8th inst., at 8 p.m., the organist being Mr. T. Carleton Bates, M.A. (organist of St. Mildred's, Lee); and the vocalist Mr. Frederic Leeds, Mus. Bac., Cantab, F.C.O. (organist of the church.) The programme included works of Wely, Henselt Bach, Handel, (water music) Hoyte and Wagner, and the songs, "Come unto me" by Coenen, and "Blessed is the man" (Extract from Ps. 65, for voices, string band, and organ) by F. Leeds, who also gave a third recital on Wednesday, Jan. 11th, when the programme was as follows:—

Concert Stück	Topfer.
Andante in F sharp minor	Wesley.
Rejoice Greatly (treble solo)	Handel.
Caprice in B flat	Guilmant.
Toccata in F (with pedal solo)	Bach.
Duet, "Love Divine"	Stainer.
Andante from fourth symphony (known as the "Clock-movement")	Haydn.
"He shall feed" (treble solo)	Handel.
Allegro pomposo in D (concluding voluntary)	Smart.
Andante and Allegro	Bach.

Dublin.—Mr. Wm. H. Vipond Barry, A.Mus., T.C.L., gave a recital at St. Bartholomew's Church, on February 3rd, to a large and attentive auditory, who were unanimous in their praises of Messrs. Gray and Davison's splendid new instrument. The programme included:—

Toccata in the Dorian Mode	Bach.
Andante (Violin Concerto)	Mendelssohn.
March from a Church Festival	Best.
Solo and Chorus, "Nazareth"	Gounod.
Offertoire, E flat major	Morandi.
Prelude and Fugue	Eberlin.
Grand Chœur	Guilmant.

CASALPUSTERLENGO, ITALY.

A new organ has been built in the parish church here by Signor Luigi Riccardi. This builder has studied the best features of the German, French, and English organs, and has, says report, produced a remarkably fine instrument. It is built upon the pneumatic system, whether tubular or ordinary is not stated. The organ has about 70 stops. At the inauguration of the organ, on January 30th, Signor Petrali gave a fine performance. His extemporisation is stated to have been full of inspiration, character, and musical science, and a large number of the lovers of organ music assembled to hear his masterly exposition of the beauties of the new instrument.

Notes.

Canon Shuttleworth writes from St. Nicholas Cole-Abbey Rectory, Lambeth-hill:—"I should be grateful if you would allow me to say, in order to prevent disappointment, that there is no foundation for the statement circulated by some of your contemporaries to the effect that Mesdames Albani and Nordica are to sing the solo parts in 'Gallia' and the 'Ninety-fifth Psalm' at St. Nicholas Cole-Abbey. The music will be rendered entirely by our own choir." The statement in question was seemingly a silly hoax."

The following is stated by an American Church paper:—"Inquiry having been recently made in certain quarters as to the date of the introduction of choral service statedly in our churches, it is but graceful as well as grateful justice to mention that the Rev. John Ireland Tucker, S.T.D., rector of the Church of the Holy Cross, was the pioneer in the movement, nearly forty years ago. The constitution of the choir, however, differed in the substitution of women trebles and altos in place of boys. This was a measure greatly facilitated by the foundation of the Warren Home, where a goodly number of girls and young women are provided for, trained and educated under the generous provision of the founders. An excellent musical education enters constantly in the routine. Dr. Tucker, therefore, has at command all desirable accessions to his choir. Mr. W. W. Rousseau has officiated as organist and choir-master for a long term of years, and not a little of the large degree of success realised is due to his professional efficiency and devotion. Dr. Tucker is also identified with the history of our musical development by his production of the widely-used hymnal associated with his name."

At a recent conversazione in Liverpool, Messrs. Gray and Davison (who have a local establishment), exhibited a voicing machine with various organ pipes of different stops, all vibrating at one pitch. Members of the staff also contributed excellent musical performances.

Organ-grinding in a Chancery Court.—Mr. Justice Kekewich had before him in the Chancery Division the other day, a patent case about organs turned by handles. An amusing scene happened during the afternoon. The rival organs were placed on each side of the judge on the bench, and Mr. Moulton, Q.C., and Mr. Aston, Q.C., the counsel, were invited by Mr. Justice Kekewich to display the excellencies of their clients' musical instruments. The counsel ascended the steps to the bench, and Mr. Moulton, Q.C., treated the Court to an operatic air on his client's organ. The novelty of music in the dull atmosphere of a Chancery Court caused great amusement among the spectators. When Mr. Moulton attempted to play a tune on the rival organ he was unable to extract any sound. His lordship advised him to discontinue the task, with the jocular remark, "I am afraid you are a bad organ-grinder, Mr. Moulton."

An American journal observes: "Singing flat or falling in pitch is unhappily not infrequently heard among vested choirs. This is not confined to new and inexperienced choirs. It may be attributed at first to the inattention and indifference of the children to the pitch, and again a defective intonation among the tenors or basses will pull the whole choir down, and yet more frequently it s owing to an unconscious reliance upon the organ accompaniment, thus sacrificing the absolute dependence of the choir upon independent truthfulness of tone. Even in the most thoroughly trained choir, sometimes the processional enters the church singing half a tone or more below pitch, the interval having been lost in transitu from the choir room. Still more common is the loss of pitch in the recessional, the concluding stanzas sung in the choir-room, with the collect and amen, falling miserably off from the true pitch. The remedies are simple enough. No untrue voice should be tolerated, as the defect is generally inveterate and incurable. Then there should be such thorough and persistent choir practice without accompaniment that the choir will become absolutely independent of the accompaniment, self-reliant, and using the accompaniment as a help, and not as an indispensable support. Practical attention to these suggestions will relieve our musical services of very painful blemishes."

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS' CALENDAR.

On Tuesday next, February 28th, the library will be open from 7 till 8; a lecture will be given by Mr. T. L. Southgate on "The Physiology of Pianoforte Playing, etc." All students interested in the subject will be admitted. The lecture will be delivered in the Bloomsbury Hall, Hart Street, at 8. April 9th, Annual College Dinner; April 10th, Lecture by Dr. E. J. Hopkins; April 24th, Lecture, by Dr. F. J. Sawyer, on "The Primary Rules of Organ and Pianoforte Fingering"; May 22nd, Lecture; June 26th, Lecture; July 17th, 18th, and 19th, Examination for F.C.O. Diploma; July 20th, Diploma Distribution; July 24th, 25th, 26th, A.C.O. Examination; July 27th, Diploma Distribution. Other arrangements and particulars will be duly announced.

E. H. TURPIN, Hon. Sec.

95, Great Russell street, Bloomsbury, W.C.

NOW READY. PRICE ONE SHILLING.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE,

MARCH, 1888,

Containing the Second and Concluding Paper on

MENDELSSOHN'S

LETTERS

TO MOSCHELES.

This instalment is made up almost entirely of letters, and is illustrated with some unusually interesting portraits and fac-similes; among the latter the first page of the "Song without Words," as originally written by Mendelssohn, and the first page of the original score of his overture to the "Isles of Fingal," with a comment written on it by Gounod.

FREDERICK WARNE & Co.,
15, Bedford Street, Strand.

CASSON'S
PATENT
Organ - Building System

SEPARATE Pedal Organs for each Manual. Expressive and Controllable Pedal Basses. Perfect control of all Couplers. Reduction of number of Claviers without loss of efficiency, &c., &c. See testimonials from

Mr. W. T. BEST.
Rev. Sir F. A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart.
Dr. SPARK.
Dr. J. C. BRIDGE, M.A.
Dr. E. W. TAYLOR, F.C.O.
The late Mr. J. STIMPSON.
Mr. R. BARTHOLOMEW.
Mr. J. HEYWOOD, Birmingham.
Mr. G. A. AUDSLEY, F.R.I.B.A.
M. A. J. HIPKINS, F.S.A.
&c., &c.

Apply to the Secretary—
CASSON'S PATENT ORGAN CO., LIMITED
DENBIGH.

The Musical World.
LONDON: SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 1888

CHURCH CHOIRS.—I. ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.

In selecting the metropolitan cathedral as the first of our series of short papers on the representative Church choirs, we may openly declare that the very best form of Anglican music, as it is to be found only in our great cathedrals, is our ideal, and the standpoint from which we shall judge those churches which from time to time will come under discussion. It is not our purpose to express ourselves definitely as to the best form of Church music, nor to thrust ourselves into the quagmire of controversy respecting the opposing merits of Anglican and Gregorian forms. There are advantages on either hand not lightly to be put aside; but it is our intention rather to judge what is, than to determine what should be, leaving the remedy to suggest itself, except in such slight measure as the space at our command may permit.

In the case, moreover, of St. Paul's Cathedral, the critical faculty is considerably disarmed, both by the excellence of the service and by the evident intention which has been manifest of recent years to make that service an example of what should be. Not that its conduct is yet without flaw or blemish, but it is a good way on the high road to complete artistic success. It will therefore be more to our purpose in this paper if we discuss rather the conditions of the existence of the choir, than the merits or demerits of the performance.

The music of the services is presided over by the Precentor, and the Succentor, as his deputy, selects and arranges the works for each day, always in consultation with the organist, Dr. John Stainer. It will thus be seen that the Succentor must be a musician, having much acquaintance with English Church music. At the present time St. Paul's is particularly fortunate in having the Rev. Wm. Russell as succentor, for in him they have secured at once a learned musician and a thorough churchman. With what complete accord this authority and the organist work is well exemplified in the musical excellence of the services. Next in order comes the organist, Dr. Stainer, and the mere mention of his name is a guarantee that the most sacred traditions of the English school will be revered. Under him is Dr. Martin, to whose lot falls the care of the choristers, and who will succeed Dr. Stainer, when the present organist retires from his post.

The choir is composed of six Vicars Choral, and twelve assistants. Whether under the old régime the minor canons were included in this latter class is not certain, but that they took an active part in the musical portion of the service there can be little doubt. The Vicars Choral are appointed solely on account of their musical ability, vacancies in their number being usually filled up from the ranks of the supernumeraries. They are paid out of funds specially set apart for the purpose, the assistants being paid out of the general fund.

The number of choristers at present stands at forty, eight of whom are probationers. They are boarded and educated in a choir-house specially built to accommodate forty boys, and are under the care of the Rev. Wm. Russell, Rev. H. D. Macnamara, and Mr. Green, their musical education being in the hands of Dr. Martin, the deputy organist. They are admitted between the ages of eight and ten, by examination. Any parent may have his boys placed upon the list of candidates, and these are examined at such times as Mr. Russell may appoint and as vacancies may occur. There are generally about three examinations a year, candidates being required to possess a good voice, a slight knowledge of music, and of Latin. The education of the boys is such as any parent can desire to fit the child to occupy a good position in a public school when he leaves the choir-house. The excellence of the board is of a high order, and every effort is made, and with signal success, to make the choir-school as home-like as is compatible with school discipline. The musical duties of the boys occupy them on an average for about an hour-and-a-half daily, besides the services. On one day in the week, on Thursdays at present, the choir boys are exempt from afternoon duty, the service being performed entirely by the men.

The services are, as we have already hinted, entirely Anglican.

In this, admirers of Gregorian music may recognise a weakness. The responses are the traditional arrangement given entirely without organ, the last response being sung more slowly and with a whispered intonation almost poetical. There are some minor points about the conduct of the service which would be the better for revision, the selection of the precentor, for instance, not being always sufficiently considered with a view to the musical excellence of the service, but, as a whole, the music at St. Paul's is sufficiently near to complete success to disarm criticism.

THE CLAVI-HARP.

On the afternoon of Friday in last week, a small party of musicians and musical experts assembled in the sumptuous drawing room of the Royal Hotel, at Eastbourne, to inspect a new and wonderful instrument.

The clavi-harp is the invention of M. Dietz, of Brussels, whose family name has been long and honourably connected with musical inventions and mechanism. His grandfather, the first manufacturer of "upright" pianos, being struck with the difficulties and defects of the harp, constructed in the year 1810, an instrument à cordes pincées à clavier, the strings being connected with a key board. This instrument, in the form of a lyre, had copper strings and a compass of six octaves. Only one specimen of it is now in existence. A few years later, M. Dietz made improvements on this model, and in 1814 obtained a patent for a clavier-harpe, which may be regarded as the parent of the new clavi-harp, but it had many defects, and was soon forgotten by the musical public.

The original idea was adopted by the son and grandson of M. Dietz, and after the labour of many years, spent in countless experiments, the transformed clavier-harpe arrived at the perfection exhibited in the newly-patented Clavi-harp, which has been accepted by many eminent musicians, as not merely equal in all respects, but superior in many, to the harps now existing.

It is to Mr. William Webster, of Blackheath, that the introduction of the clavi-harp to the English musical public is due. Mr. Webster is highly esteemed in musical circles, as a thorough musician, a skilful vocalist, and performer on several instruments. Often taking part in orchestral performances, he was struck with the difficulty of finding good harpists, and the unsatisfactory quality of the pizzicati played by the string-band in substitution of the peculiar effects produced by the harp. On hearing the clavi-harp, he was so delighted to find in it the best qualities of the harp, combined with qualities of a superior kind—above all, the keyboard, which enables a pianist to produce harp effects, such as chromatic passages, beyond the reach of any but highly-trained harpists—that he resolved to do his best to secure the utilisation of the instrument in England.

The clavi-harp is not a piano which imitates more or less the sounds of the harp; it is a harp which is played by means of keys, as its name indicates.

The pinching of the harp is perfectly rendered in a regular manner, being at once delicate and soft without losing power. The touch is so sensible, so easily affected, that the performer can at will pass through all the degrees from ff. to pp. without the aid of the pedals. The instrument is tuned by temperament like the piano, but with much greater facility, the clavi-harp having 73 strings, only one to each note, while the piano has from 200 to 300, two or three strings to each note. The strings are metallic, and covered with silk, therefore the instrument keeps in tune better even than the piano, and the strings scarcely ever break.

Anyone able to play on the piano can also play the clavi-harp. It has the same manner of execution; of playing arpeggio chords, and facilities for putting expression into the song or melody. The attack of the touch only differs in this way: In the piano the hammer strikes against the string when the key has obtained its lowest depth. In the clavi-harp, on the contrary, the hook which plucks the string attacks it just as the note or touch is raised—keeping it down simply has the effect of placing the hook behind the string. To play the instrument loudly one must attack the note sharply at the departure, and play it softly. It is exactly the reverse on the piano. This manner of playing reproduces well the movements of the harpist when he lets go the string and puts his finger back.

The touch of the clavi-harp may be compared with that of the clavecin, in which the strings are plucked by means of a quill, but the clavi-harp differs essentially from that instrument, because it is so susceptible of expression; that is to say, the artist can at pleasure pinch the strings more or less, an impossibility on the clavecin.

The instrument is provided with two pedals. The seven pedals which are used in the harp for making half-tones, are suppressed in the clavi-harp, as every half-tone has its special string. In the clavi-harp the pedal on the right is used in playing loud. When putting down the pedal, the character of the harp is shown; that is to say, all the strings vibrate freely through the influence. But to change the tone you raise (or leave) the pedal, and stifle the strings without leaving off playing, that which the harpist cannot do, since he must use both hands to stifle the vibration of the strings. This loud pedal in the clavi-harp aids also in producing an effect which the harpist would never make. In playing the instrument without the pedal, you obtain a dry tone without echo, and you can, besides that, let several notes vibrate by holding the keys down. In this case those strings only corresponding to the notes held down will vibrate, you can, therefore, play a sustained melody accompanied by chords without echo. The left pedal is used for producing harmonic sounds in the octave, as one does in the harp, with this difference, that the most clever harpist can only make four notes in harmony at a time, and on the clavi-harp you can play ten. Finally, very often the harmonic sounds are missed by the harpist, who does not take the middle of the strings strictly. This never occurs in the clavi-harp, because the pedal mathematically divides in two the three octaves of the bass strings. The touch remains the same if one puts down the harmonic pedal or not.

When it is added that the clavi-harp is much lighter than the piano—so that it can easily be moved from room to room, or taken into an orchestra—and is of an elegant form, favourable to artistic decoration, sufficient will have been said to give a general idea of the new instrument. Minuter details would scarcely be intelligible without inspection of the mechanism.

It is undeniable that at the present day, that beautiful instrument, the harp, is seldom played; still seldomer well played. This is attributable to the difficulties it presents to pupils. Its seven pedals must be employed in different ways when notes are to be raised or lowered a semitone; chromatic passages easy of execution on the piano, are almost impracticable on the harp; the same may be said of the shake, and is only after long and exclusive devotion to its study that the harp can become endurable in the hands of an amateur, or the means of furnishing a professional harpist with a moderate income. It is needless to point out how far, in these respects, the harp is surpassed by the clavi-harp.

The superiority of the new instrument over the harp is so immediately obvious to the impartial examiner; it affords such advantages to lovers of harp-music, in facilitating, by means of a keyboard, the execution of passages which experienced harpists find it diffiult to play, and also in rendering frequent tunings unnecessary; it is so likely to exercise a beneficial influence on orchestral performances and on instrumental compositions, and so calculated to add to the employment of the harp where it cannot now be used, that it will hardly fail to become widely popular in this country, as soon as its merits become known.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

At last Saturday's concert two new works by young English composers were performed. The first of these was a setting, by Mr. C. T. Speer, of certain portions of Tennyson's "The Day Dream," viz., those having reference to the old fairy tale of the Sleeping Beauty. Mr. Speer, unlike Mr. Cowen, who, as our readers will remember, has treated the same subject dramatically, has approached his task in a contemplative spirit, and has in consequence written a sequence of melodies more or less tuneful, and more or less reminiscent, without in the least musically elucidating the story. The music is indeed monotonous to a degree, for, in addition to the sameness which is the inevitable result of the method of treatment adopted by the composer, Mr. Speer seems to have little or no sense of rhythm and phrasing; his melodies seem to be all cut to the same length, and the words fitted in afterwards. Some of these melodies are, however, pleasing, the second subject of the prelude being happy; but much of the possible effect of the melodies is destroyed by crude instrumentation. Very different was Mr. Hamish McCunn's setting of "Lord Ullin's Daughter," in the form of the choral ballad, so successfully employed by Dr. Stanford in "The Revenge." Starting with a bold and eminently Scotch theme, and as the dramatic interest of the scene rises using his voices in declamatory passages against a vividly coloured orchestral storm, Mr. McCunn has produced an excellent musical interpretation of the old ballad, and shown that he has already made great strides in the right direction, for in addition to having something to say, he knows how to say it. Mr. Harper Kearton sang very well in "The Day Dream," while Miss Thudichum, who was apologised for, was nevertheless quite equal to the interpretation of the very little soprano music in the same work. A feature of the concert was the performance of Schubert's Unfinished Symphony in B minor, which was exquisitely played, Weber's Overture to "Der Freischütz" and Delibes's "Sylvia" suite beginning and concluding the concert. The chorus might have been better, there being a distinct tendency to drop in the pitch, but the orchestra, under Mr. Manns's direction, he conducting throughout, left nothing to be desired.

LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

At last Tuesday's concert the principal item in the programme was again the new Brahms concerto. At a second hearing much of what at first seemed obscure becomes clearer, and the beauty of the andante has seldom been surpassed by Brahms. Herren Joachim and Hausmann, as before, played the enormously difficult solo passages superbly, while in solos by Spohr and Boccherini they each obtained enthusiastic recalls. The remainder of the programme consisted of Beethoven's overture, "Zur Weihe des Hauses," Volkmann's "Serenade in F," for strings, op. 63, both well played by the orchestra, and a new orchestral ballad, "The Ship o' the Fiend," by Mr. Hamish McCunn. This latter work is an orchestral illustration of the Scottish ballad of the same name, and which bears a close affinity to Bürger's "Lenore," with the difference that a voyage in the demon ship is substituted for the ride which Dvorak has illustrated with such realistic fidelity in his "Spectre's Bride." If Mr. McCunn has not succeeded to the full in his treatment of this difficult subject, he has at least shown a very creditable ambition and a very considerable amount of technical skill. Nevertheless, this work cannot be said to show much more than cleverness, although there are considerable evidences of this quality. The composer conducted, and obtained a flattering reception.

POPULAR CONCERTS.

The popular concert on Saturday, as the occasion of Herr Joachim's first appearance this season in the afternoon, was crowded and animated. The programme opened with Beethoven's quartet in E flat, op. 74, played by MM. Joachim, Ries, Hollander, and Piatti; Mr. Max Pauer was the pianist, and was first heard in the suite "Aus Holberg's Zeit" (Grieg). Being compelled by the applause to give an encore, he added another example of the same master. Herr Joachim followed with a truly wonderful rendering of Bach's Chaconne for violin alone, which caused an insatiable desire for more, and Herr Joachim kindly gratified this desire by again playing an unaccompanied solo (Bach). Schumann's trio in D minor, in which MM. Max Pauer, Joachim, and Piatti were associated, closed the concert. The vocalist was Mdlle. Hermine Kopp. She had some difficulties to surmount, as, just before her first song, the electric light collapsed, and had to be replaced by the gas, and for an unexplained reason the words of her second song were not printed, which naturally diminished its interest. Her nervousness must partly account for a not very successful rendering of Schumann's "Widmung" and Grieg's "What I saw." Mdlle. Cäcilie Kopp acted as accompanist.

Beethoven's Quintet in C major, op. 29, was the chief item in Monday's programme, and received a very fine interpretation at the hands of MM. Joachim, Ries, Hollander, Gibson, and Piatti. Herr Joachim is always at his best when playing Beethoven, and no less in the impulsive finale than in the beautiful adagio molto espressivo was his masterful influence made apparent. His solo, Leclair's Sarabande and Tambourin produced such an encore that he was obliged to appear again, playing Spohr's Barcarolle in G major. The pianist, Miss Mathilde Wurm, possesses a delicate touch and refined and expressive style, and in Schumann's "Papillons" she was enabled to display these qualities to advantage. Miss Marguerite Hall was again the vocalist, and was very successful in Brahms's fine song "Geistliches Wiegenlied," the effect of which was enhanced by the viola obbligato, founded on an old Catholic hymn, and well played by Mr. Hollander, and Schumann's "The Soldier's Bride." Mendelssohn's Pianoforte Trio in C minor concluded the concert.

MR. HENSCHEL'S VOCAL RECITAL.

The third and last of Mr. Henschel's Vocal Recitals was given on Wednesday afternoon, at the Princes' Hall, and attracted a numerous and highly appreciative audience. The merits of these excellent performances can, indeed, scarcely be overrated; they have ranged over a wide field of vocal music, taking in the old Italian, the French, and the German schools, and in no instance descending below the level of high art. More intelligent and, in their way, accomplished singers than Mr. and Mrs. Henschel it would also be difficult to find, and as a mere education these concerts must have been invaluable to vocal students. The programme of last Wednesday commenced with Cimarosa's graceful duet, "Che bel piacere," followed by a sacred song, "Sei nur still," sung with due emphasis by Mr. Henschel. That artist also gave one of those ballads of Loewe, which he has made specially his own, and which, but for him, would scarcely be known in England, although in the way of narrative music they have few equals, always excepting the standard setting by Schumann of Heine's "Die beiden Grenadiere," in which also Mr. Henschel excels. The lady was heard to perhaps greatest advantage in Liszt's "Die Lorelei," the most poetic, if not the most popular, of the innumerable treatments of that poem. This was indeed a perfect rendering, marked at once by the subtlest refinement of feeling, and by considerable power of expression.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The concert of Herr Ragnar Grevillius took place at 49, Eaton-square, on the 14th inst., and not, as mis-stated in our last issue, at a house in Euston-square. The fashionable audience included a number of Swedes, who were interested in witnessing the début of their compatriot.

Mdlles. Marianne and Clara Eissler announced a violin and harp recital at the Princes' Hall for last Tuesday afternoon. Mr. John Thomas's co-operation with Miss Clara Eissler was promised in his duet for two harps, in E minor.

The members of the Lyric Club gave their second soirée of this season at the Institute of Painters in Oil Colours, Piccadilly, on Thursday evening, the 16th inst., when upwards of five hundred visitors were entertained. Amongst others, the following artists contributed to the success of the evening:—Miss Belle Cole, Miss Lucille Saunders, Miss Carlotta Elliott, Miss A. Gomes, Miss Agnes Jansen, Miss Rosa Leo, Mrs. M. A. Carlisle, Mr. H. Thorndike, Mr. W. Nicholl, Mr. Franklin Clive, Mr. Jack Robertson, and Mr. Luther Munday, as vocalists; MM. Theo. Werner and René Ortman each gave a violin solo, Mr. A. J. Hall, a musical sketch, while recitations were given by Miss Alexes Leighton and Mr. George Giddens. During the evening three new songs, by Miss Carmichael, Miss Hope Temple, and Mr. Wilfrid Bendall, were sung, accompanied by the composers.

The fourteenth annual ballad concert given by the East End Society, in aid of the City of London Hospital for Diseases of the Chest, Victoria-park, was held at the Town Hall, Shoreditch, on Feb. 14, under the direction of Mr. Wilhelm Ganz. Among the vocalists were Miss Agnes Larkcom, Miss Frances Hipwell, and Madame Patey; Mr. A. Lawrence Fryer, Mr. Charles Ganz, and Mr. Frederick Bevan. The instrumentalists were Mr. Philip Paque, solo cornet, and Mr. Wilhelm Ganz, solo pianoforte.

SAVOY THEATRE.

"H.M.S. Pinafore" is now preceded at the Savoy by a decidedly ingenious trifle, from the pen of Frank Desprez, entitled "Mrs. Jarramie's Genie." Both the music, which is the joint production of Messrs. Alfred and Francis Cellier, and the humour of the piece itself are of a kind that is very familiar to frequenters of the temple devoted to Sullivanesque and Gilbertian art. In this case the accustomed element of incongruity is obtained by the introduction of Oriental necromancy into modern life, a notion cleverly utilised already in one of Anstey's novels. The veritable Aladdin's lamp, by a curious series of accidents, comes into the possession of a retired upholsterer's wife. From the hands of that lady, after she has enlisted the Genie's services as butler and man cook, at a critical junction of domestic affairs, it passes into those of her husband, a fervid politician, eager for social and parliamentary distinction, in obedience to whose counter orders the Genie, in turn, is compelled to assume the form of an election agent. This, and several other complications, keep the piece going with considerable liveliness, the chief burden falling upon Mr. John Wilkinson, as the slave of the lamp, who not only effects several dexterous transformations, à la Cascabel, but displays no small humour in his various impersonations. The other parts were fairly well acted, and the music contains some pleasing numbers. The good ship "Pinafore," with her good captain, is as funny as ever, but the public cannot be expected to laugh for ever. After many a propitious cruise, and a career of exceptional prosperity, the time seems at hand when this unique man-of-war, too, will have to yield to those inexorable laws from which neither ships nor human beings can claim exemption, and no doubt we shall hear presently that "The Pinafore" has been brought into dry dock. Meanwhile, if there still exist any playgoing man, woman, or child, to whom this piece is not familiar, the chance of seeing it as well rendered, and better mounted, than ever before, ought not to be allowed to pass.

Next Week's Music.

THIS DAY (SATURDAY).

Afternoon Concert	Crystal Palace.	3
Popular Concert	St. James's Hall.	3
Strolling Players' Orchestra	St. James's Hall.	8.30

MONDAY, 27.

Popular Concert	St. James's Hall.	8.30
Madame Emily Tate	Brixton Hall.	8

TUESDAY, 28.

Mr. Wade's Chamber Music Concert	Princes' Hall.	8.30

WEDNESDAY, 29.

London Symphony Concert	St. James's Hall.	3
Ballad Concert	St. James's Hall.	8

THURSDAY, MARCH 1.

Purcell's "Dido and Æneas," Stanford's "Elegiac Ode" (Bach Choir)	St. James's Hall.	8.30

Music Publishers' Weekly List.

SONGS.

Away to the Battlefield	M. Soale	J. Williams.
Picture, A (D to E)	L. Grant	Grant, Edinburgh.

CONCERTED VOCAL.

Day-dream, The (Cantata)	C. T. Speer	Novello.
Hear my Prayer	J. H. Pope	"
Jesu, the very thought is sweet (ad lib. chorus)	T. C. Grounds	"
Lord Ullin's Daughter, Ballad for choir and orchestra	Hamish McCunn	"

BOOKS.

The Musical Year Book of the United States	G. H. Wilson	Mudge, Boston.

INSTRUMENTAL.

Angioletta (pianoforte)	F. Leideritz	J. Williams.
Daphne "	H. Klussmann	"
Gavotte (violin and pianoforte)	B. Godard	"
Go it Galop (pianoforte)	H. Klussmann	"
Les Cloches de Corneville (harp)	J. W. Glover	"
Midnight Dreams Waltz (pianoforte)	H. Klussmann	"
Nadia "	Roubier	"
Pelican Polka "	H. Klussmann	"

MUSIC IN ITALY.

MILAN, Feb. 18.—Plenty of news, in and out of the capital of Lombardy. Ab Jove principium—Verdi's "Otello" has created a new furore in Modena with Signora Mayer, and Signori Durot and Sparapani, as interpreters; all three very good. The same work met with another success at S. Carlo in Naples, with Tamagno, Kaschmann, and Signora Gabbi. The tenore robusto (who, by the way, has become a very effective actor, too) made a sensation, as did Kaschmann also, who proved a marvellous Iago. Both these artists, and Signora Gabbi—a beautiful Desdemona—had to repeat respectively, the Addio, Sante memorie (three times), the Credo, and the Ave Maria. Both at Modena and Naples, the work has made the same impression as it did at Milan, the enjoyment growing by degrees on every successive night. The illustrious author received telegrams of sympathy and admiration, to which Signor Verdi replied with heartful thanks, announcing at the same time that "Otello" will be his last work. At our La Scala, Goldmark's "Queen of Sheba," too thinly attended (because of the performers), has been supplanted by Meyerbeer's "Africana," the great and only attraction being Señor Gayarre, who was engaged for six nights at the handsome figure of 5,000 francs per night. Gayarre took many liberties with his text, but nevertheless roused great enthusiasm, and attracted enormous crowds. At the Carcano we had Ponchielli's "Roderigo, Re dei Goti" revived, one of the very first works of the Maestro, written some thirty years ago, in the style of that epoch. Critics have taken a very hostile position towards this old opera, without consideration of the many beauties it contains, and the decided mark of genius revealed by its author who, in later years wrote "I Lituani" and "Gioconda." Signora Brambilla Ponchielli, the widow of the Maestro sang and sings her part in "Roderigo" with love and with the bravura of a distinguished artist. However, despite the critics, "Roderigo" won much favour and applause among the audience, who know less of theory, but feel more. I take this opportunity of stating that "Gioconda," by the same author, met with a great success at Carlo Felice, Genoa, the first performance being attended by a select audience, which crowded the house, and heartily applauded the artists, Signore Pantaleoni, who created Gioconda at La Scala, years ago, Felicita Angeli, Signori Lhérie and Sillich, baritone and basso; the tenor Gabrielesco being the least efficient member of the cast. Meyerbeer's opera was followed by "La Favorita," in which Gayarre also appeared, the general performance being an excellent one. Signor Battistini, the baritone, a young artist, a handsome man, and a refined singer, specially distinguished himself. At the Teatro Argentine in Rome, "Amleto" by Ambroise Thomas, and Boito's "Mefistofele" have been well received. The French Maestro, who was present at the first performance last week, has been the object of a warm demonstration.

PROVINCIAL.

BRADFORD.—Friday and Saturday were given up to forlorn attempts to keep afloat "popular" concerts in the great music hall. On Friday the series was extended by Mr. W. B. Sewell, who has deserted the classics for operatic selections, which do not, however, make his concerts pay their way, although he brings a very good orchestra of seventy men together. On the Saturday night, the local artillery band, a small and hardly efficient string band, with sentimental and comic vocalists were engaged, but this affair was not more successful than the other. The artillery band played very well, and the Creole singer, Mdlle. Young, had uncommon success in ballad airs. She has a fine mezzo-soprano voice, which shows a little want of cultivation in the low register, but is very telling when unforced. The Festival Choral Society is getting into deep water. The reforms noted twelve months ago have not been thoroughly efficacious, as the funds are rapidly lowering, and members are called upon for a substantial subscription. This is demurred to; and while the matter is in abeyance Dr. J. C. Bridge (Chester) has resigned his conductorship, probably to free the committee in considering ways and means. It is to be hoped, however, he will be induced to withdraw the resignation, as the society never had so able, nor so popular a conductor.

STAFFORD.—The Stafford Choral Union gave an excellent performance of Gaul's "Holy City," in the Borough Hall, on Monday, Feb. 6, under the conductorship of Dr. E. W. Taylor. The band and chorus number over 200 performers, and so regular has been their attendance at rehearsal, and so thorough their training, that it would be difficult to conceive a much finer interpretation of the work. This is very satisfactory, considering that the society has been in existence only three months. The solo portions were in the competent hands of Miss Mills, Miss Atkins, Mr. Briton, Mr Horrey, and Mr. Cockerill, of the Birmingham Festival Band, solo harp.

BATH.—The second of the English Ballad Popular Concerts, under the direction of Mr. Albert Visetti, took place at the Assembly Rooms, on Saturday evening. The first part of the programme was devoted to sacred music, the opening number being a duet for two pianofortes, Rossini's "Stabat Mater," admirably played by Miss Lucy King and

Mr. Visetti. Miss King was also associated with Mr. W. N. Squire in Mendelssohn's Variations for piano and violoncello. Miss Emily Squire, a mezzo-soprano of good quality, was recalled for her rendering of Gounod's "There is a Green Hill." Madame Amy Sandon, who possesses a strong contralto voice, sang "The Chorister" (Sullivan), with taste and expression. Mr. O. Yearsley, a well-trained tenor, chose for his song "How many Hired Servants," from the "Prodigal Son." Madame Rose Hersee gained great applause for her solo from "The Creation," "On Mighty Pens," returning to bow her acknowledgment. Mdlle. Anita Alameda possesses a soprano voice of good quality and compass, her high notes being particularly clear and strong. She obtained a recall for her interpretation of Gounod's "My Beloved Spake," the 'cello obbligato being played by Mr. Squire, of the Royal College of Music. Mr. Dan Price (bass), was encored for his song, Gounod's "Nazareth," with chorus of male voices. The second part of the concert commenced with Reichardt's "Image of the Rose," nicely sung by Mr. Yearsley, with vocal accompaniment. Miss Emily Squire gave the "Habanera" from "Carmen," and in response to the applause sang "Robin Adair." Mr. Yearsley gave a pretty song by Hope Temple, "Fond Heart, Farewell." Madame Amy Sandon wa recalled after Tennant's "Song of the Heart," but declined to repeat it. A pianofore solo "La Regata Veneziani" (Liszt), beautifully played by Miss King, was much appreciated. A capital concert concluded with another duet for two pianofortes, Raff's "Tarantella," played by Miss King and Mr. Visetti.

Birmingham, Feb. 20.—Madame Agnes Miller's second popular chamber concert at the Masonic Hall, on Feb. 16, was even better attended than the first, and the bénéficiaire must have been gratified with the success she has achieved. The Shinner ladies' string quartet, composed of Miss Emily Shinner (first violin), Miss Lucy Riley (second violin), Miss Cecilia Gates (viola), Miss Florence Hemmings (violoncello), proved again a great attraction, their delightful ensemble-playing being of the highest order. Moreover, each lady is a soloist of great merit, who has mastered every technical impediment, which was amply shown in Schubert's beautiful quartet in A minor, op. 29, and Brahms's quintet in F minor, op. 34. Miss Shinner, as a leader, may be classed high in the rank of our native violinists; her tone is absolutely pure and refined, her technique unerring. Miss Lucy Riley also met with a cordial welcome; her playing in some duos for two violins by Benjamin Godard, in which Miss Shinner joined, showed great talent. Miss Hemmings gave an uninteresting sonata in A by Boccherini, on the violoncello, with masterly skill and perfect finish. Madame Agnes Miller chose for her pianoforte solo Beethoven's fantasia in G minor, op. 77, and Chopin's study in G flat, op. 25, No. 9, also his impromptu in A flat, op. 29, besides playing in Brahms's wonderful quintet. Madame Miller, who is endowed with a firm touch and a good memory, may strictly be considered a classical exponent of the higher art of pianoforte playing. The Brahms quintet displays the powerful character of the great German composer, and necessarily demands higher executive skill. We specially wish to single out the marvellous scherzo in C minor, with trio in C major, which justly might be named un banquet infernal; it was played with an amount of vigour and character quite electrifying. The audience applauded every item, and the artists may be proud of the reception accorded to them.—The programme for Mr. Stockley's third orchestral subscription concert, which was announced for Thursday at the Town-hall, is of unusual interest, and includes the following works:—Beethoven's Symphony, No. 2; overture, "Tannhäuser" (Wagner); suite—mazurka, intermezzo, gavotte, fantasia, and march for full orchestra (Edward Elgar, of Worcester); Mendelssohn's pianoforte concerto in D minor; Schumann's novelette in F major; Rubinstein's staccato etude in C, the last three-named to be played by Miss Fanny Davies. The vocalists are Mdlle. Antoinette Trebelli and Mr. Henry Pope. Mr. Gilmer's military band concerts still attract a vast audience, giving delight to thousands. The Clef Club monthly chamber concerts, given in their own rooms, are now well established, and deserve a word of high praise for their excellence, and may be named as the best concerts of the kind given in private circles.

High Wycombbe.—The choral association gave their second concert of the season in the Town-hall on the 13th. The programme included Mendelssohn's "Ninety-fifth Psalm;" part songs, "The Dawn of Day," "Oh! my Love is like a red, red rose;" songs by Mozart, Cowen, and Sullivan; Chopin's nocturne in G, and Albanesi's menuetto. The performance was excellent, and greatly enjoyed by a large audience. Mr. J. G. Wrigley, F.C.O., Mus. Bac., Oxon., conducted. Bennett's "May Queen" is announced for the final concert in April.

Maidenhead.—The philharmonic society gave their second concert of the season on the 14th, in the Town-hall, when Bennett's "Woman of Samaria" was performed for the first time by this society. The principals were Miss Katherine James, Madame Annie Chappell, Mr. Ralph Dawes, and Mr. David Hughes. The performance was excellent, and greatly enjoyed by a large and enthusiastic audience. Mr. J. G. Wrigley, Mus. Bac., Oxon, conducted.

Manchester, Feb. 20.—The Committee of the Schiller-anstalt were fortunate in being able to secure the services of Mr. and Mrs. Henschel for their third concert, Feb. 11. The vocal recitals of this talented couple could not fail to be interesting, were it only for the opportunity it gives one of hearing good songs, too rarely met with in concert programmes. But in addition to the admirable selective taste displayed, the interpretation which they give of the songs chosen is so thoroughly worthy, that an evening spent in their company becomes a thing to be remembered with delight. In order to appreciate fully the comprehensiveness of Mr. Henschel's artistic education, it is necessary to see him at one of these recitals. His singing we all know; but here we learn also that he has raised the difficult art of accompanying to as near perfection as we can well imagine. And those of his songs that were included in the programme: "Sing Heigho!" "Gondoliera" duet, and two songs from the Cyclus Werner's "Lieder aus Welschland," all showed that as a composer he ranks far above the average, and that his work is refined and musicianly. We have been fortunate enough to have heard Mrs. Henschel several times this season, and on each occasion it has been a pleasure to record our admiration of her sweet singing. She fully realised the high standard we expect of her, and was especially successful in Liszt's "Loreley," and Grieg's "Solveig's song." It is hard to say which of the many songs sung by Mr. Henschel could claim the palm, but, personally, we preferred his rendering of Schubert's "Gruppe aus dem Tartarus," Beethoven's Air from "Claudine von Villa Bella" and Loewe's "Erlkönig,"—the last a good song, but vastly inferior to the superb musical drama which Schubert has given to us. The duets, which included a quaint buffo duet by Paisello, were admirably given. The great master of the violin made his first appearance amongst us this season at Mr. Hallé's seventeenth concert, Feb. 16, and it is needless to add that the welcome he received was wide-spread and enthusiastic. Herr Joachim stands alone amongst virtuosi. Here and there, an occasional player may, perhaps, excel him in this or that technical speciality; but with Herr Joachim technique is reduced to its proper level of a means and not an end, and is always made subservient to an artistic interpretation of the composer's meaning. What that meaning is no one can tell us so well as Herr Joachim, for when he is playing, we feel, to an extent which no other player can make us feel, that we are in the presence of a great and earnest mind, to whom music is a religion. His rendering of Brahms's Concerto in D was simply perfect, and at the conclusion of his second solo, which consisted of a selection from the Hungarian dances (Brahms and Joachim), the audience eagerly availed themselves of the opportunity afforded of securing an encore. The vocalist should have been Miss Lily Crabtree, but she was unfortunately prevented by indisposition from appearing, and Mr. Seymour Jackson was engaged in her place. The short notice he received, no doubt influenced his selection considerably, otherwise we should have been disposed to grumble at the introduction of "When other lips" at a concert of this class. His first song, "Deeper and deeper still," was carefully given, and showed that Mr. Jackson is still progressing in his art, though, perhaps, not so rapidly as we could wish. The orchestral selections included Mozart's perennially delightful symphony in E flat, and, amongst other things, two novelties. The first of these, Hiller's overture "Ein Traum in der Christnacht," seemed to be a pleasing and musicianly work, but, unfortunately, it was placed first on the programme, and our jewelled, "oiled, and curled" plutocracy invariably time their advent to these concerts so nicely as to render the first piece almost entirely inaudible to those already assembled. The second, Grieg's "Spring" melody for stringed orchestra, was heard under more favourable circumstances, and is a most charming work, marked by the Scandinavian originality which Grieg's music has done so much to popularise. It is, we believe, an adaptation of one of his pianoforte pieces to be found amongst the "Morceaux Lyriques."

NOTES FROM PARIS.

The recent performances in Germany of Weber's opera "The Three Pintos," has attracted considerable attention in musical circles in Paris and the provinces, and it is reported that some of the provincial managers will undertake to introduce the work into France next winter.

The receipts of the Carnival ball of last week at the Grand opera were 32,000 francs.

Madame Essipoff during the last few weeks has performed at many classical concerts in Paris.

The first concert this season of the Society of Wind Instrument Chamber Music took place on the 16th of this month, at the Falle Pleyel. Amongst the works performed by MM. Faffanel, Gillet, Turban, Diemer, etc., were a "Caprice sur des airs russett," (first time of performance in public), by M. Saint Saëns; and compositions by Ch. Lefebvre, Gouvry, and others.

DEFRIES' Safety Water White Oil.

The Purest, Whitest, and Best Burning Mineral Oil in England.

EQUAL IN QUALITY TO OILS SOLD UNDER FANCY NAMES, at from 1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d. per gall
FOR USE IN ALL LAMPS AND STOVES.

PRICE 1s. PER GALLON.

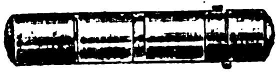
FREE DELIVERED IN LONDON AND ALL SUBURBS.

Minimum, 2 gallons. The 5 and 10 gallon drums are fitted with taps. Drums charged, and full price allowed when returned.

Terms: Cash on or before delivery. Deposit Accounts opened for Oil.

DEFRIES' SAFETY LAMP & OIL CO., LIMITED,
43 and 44, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON, E.C.

THORNHILL'S
NEW "GLOVE" BOTTLE.



FOR PERFUME & SMELLING SALTS.

Large Variety of Patterns at Various Prices

THORNHILL'S ARTISTIC FANS.
A LARGE and VARIED STOCK of the BEST QUALITY.

THORNHILL'S
TOILET CASES
FOR LADIES AND GENTLEMEN

PRESENTS.

THORNHILL'S
Fully Illustrated
LIST
OF
LATEST
NOVELTIES

POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

THORNHILL'S
OPERA GLASSES.

IN GREAT VARIETY.

THORNHILL'S
Guaranteed Razors Singly or in Sets.

W. THORNHILL & CO., TO THE QUEEN & ROYAL FAMILY. 144, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON. ESTABLISHED 1734.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER'S
LINEN COLLARS, CUFFS, AND SHIRTS.
Samples and Price Lists Post Free.

COLLARS—LADIES' 3-fold, from 3s. 6d. per doz. GENTS' 4-fold, 4s. 11d. to 5s. 11d. per doz.

CUFFS—For Ladies or Gentlemen, 5s. 11d. to 10s. 6d. per doz.

SHIRTS—Best quality Long Cloth, with 4-fold Linen Fronts 35s. 6d. per half-doz. (To measure, 2s. extra.)

N.B.—OLD SHIRTS made as good as new with best materials in Neckbands, Cuffs, and Fronts, for 14s. the half-doz.

ROBINSON AND CLEAVER, BELFAST.

Dr. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For sore throat, hoarseness, and relaxed throat, also for improving the voice

FOR SINGING AND SPEAKING

without fatiguing the voice. Celebrated in every town in Europe, India, America, and the Colonies. Testimonials from Patti, Trebelli, Patey, Santley, and the most eminent medical men.

Sold in boxes; 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d.; also in bottles for abroad.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE & RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & Co.,
Manufacturers and Importers of all kinds of Strings
FOR
VIOLIN, VIOLA, CELLO, DOUBLE BASS, HARP,
ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO,
Have always in STOCK the Largest ASSORTMENT of any House in the World.

6, GOLDEN SQUARE, W.

A BLESSING IN EVERY FAMILY.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.

These Remedies have stood the test of FIFTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE and are pronounced the best medicines for family use. Tens of thousands of written testimonials bear witness to their marvellous curative properties. They are acknowledged by the whole civilised world to be the greatest efficacy in every form of disease. Sold by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors.

Manufactured only at THOMAS HOLLOWAY'S ESTABLISHMENT
78, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.
N.B.—Advice gratis at the above address, daily, between the hours of 11 and 4 or by letter

ASCHERBERG PIANOS.

"I only perform an act of justice when I ascribe my successes to a great extent to the excellent Instruments from your factory, on which I was favoured to play before the public. Remain convinced that I shall at all times and everywhere give preference to your Pianos over all others, and accept the assurance of my unbounded esteem.

Respectfully,

VLADIMIR VON PACHMANN."

ASCHERBERG PIANO DEPOT,

211, REGENT STREET, W.

CADBURY'S

GUARANTEED PURE. COCOA GUARANTEED SOLUBLE.

(Registered.)

A FEW GOOD REASONS WHY IT ENJOYS SUCH WORLD-WIDE POPULARITY.

It is guaranteed to be Pure Cocoa.
It is Soluble in boiling Milk or Water.
It is not reduced in value by the addition of Starch, Sugar, &c.
It is especially rich in flesh-forming and strength-sustaining principles.
It contains all the delicious aroma of the natural article, without the excessive proportions of fat.
It is delicious, nutritious, digestible, comforting, and a refined beverage suitable for all seasons of the year.
It is a gentle stimulant, and sustains against hunger and bodily fatigue.
In the whole process of manufacturing Cadbury's Pure Cocoa, the automatic machinery employed obviates the necessity for its being once touched by the human hand.

PRECAUTION AND WARNING.

CADBURY BROS. warn the public of those Dutch Cocoas and their English imitations, sold as pure Cocoa, to which about 4 per cent. of Alkali and other agents are added, to give apparent strength to the liquor, by making it a dark colour. This addition may be detected by the scent when a tin is freshly opened. No Cocoa can be stronger than Cadbury's, which is guaranteed ABSOLUTELY PURE.

Always ask for Cadbury's Cocoa. Always examine your purchase. See that you have not been induced to accept an imitation, and be wary of highly-coloured and drugged preparations offered as pure Cocoa. Anything of a medicated character associated with Cocoa proclaims it at once to be an imposture.

PARIS DEPÔT: 90, FAUBOURG ST. HONORÉ.

Printed and Published by MacRae, Curtice & Co. (Limited), 12, Catherine Street, Strand, W.C.

WEEKLY.]

The Musical World.

ESTABLISHED 1822.
REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED; IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST WEEKLY, 17/6 PER ANNUM (Payable in advance).

VOL. 67.—No. 9. SATURDAY, MARCH 3, 1888. PRICE {3D. Unstamped. 4D. By Post.

THE
KARN AMERICAN ORGANS,

Manufactured by D. W. KARN & CO.,

WOODSTOCK, ONTARIO, CANADA.

The Karn Organ is a reproduction of the Pipe Organ in miniature, of pre-eminent value as an effective music exponent for the Home.

OUR AIM has not been to see how cheaply an organ can be built, BUT HOW CHEAPLY A FIRST-CLASS ORGAN can be made.

OUR CLAIM is that we are building organs equal to, if not surpassing, all others, at the very lowest reasonable prices.

COMPARISON CHEERFULLY INVITED.

New Illustrated Catalogue & Price Lists Free of the
SOLE EUROPEAN AGENTS:

THE SCHREIBER PIANO CO.,
18, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W.

OLD VIOLINS.

MESSRS. BEARE AND SON, Manufacturers and Importers of every Description of Musical Instruments, Strings, Fittings, &c.,
34, Rathbone Place, London, W.,
Invite an inspection of their collection of old Violins,
All genuine examples of the celebrated old Masters.
Over 300 old instruments from which to select.

Old Violins from £5.
Old Tenors from £5.
Old Violoncellos from £10.
Old Double Basses from £15.

Sole Wholesale Agents for James Tublo's celebrated Bows.
Bows by the old makers also frequently in stock.
Tested strings unequalled for durability and equality of tone.
Repairs of every kind of Musical Instrument executed promptly by experienced workmen.

SPECIAL TERMS TO TRADE AND PROFESSION.

BEARE AND SON,
34, RATHBONE PLACE, LONDON, W.

Special Notices.

RAFF CONSERVATOIRE, at FRANKFORT-ON-THE-MAIN, for all departments of music. Opening of the summer half year on the 9th of April, with new courses in all departments of instruction. Terms 180 marks to 360 marks per annum. All inquiries and applications to be addressed to DIE DIRECTION, Bleich-strasse, 13.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL CHORAL SOCIETY.
Patron—Her Majesty the QUEEN.
President—H.R.H. the Duke of EDINBURGH, K.G.
Conductor—Mr. BARNBY.

Verdi's REQUIEM on THURSDAY, March 8, at 8. Artists:—Madame Nordica, Madame Belle Cole, Mr. E. Lloyd, and Mr. Bridson. Prices:—7s. 6d., 5s., 4s., 3s., and Gallery Promenade, 1s.

UNIVERSITY OF MELBOURNE.

The Council of the University having decided to create a professorship of Music, Candidates for the appointment are requested to forward their applications, with testimonials, to the Agent General for Victoria not later than the 10th of March, to which date the period for receiving applications has now been prolonged. The Candidate chosen, besides delivering Lectures on the History, Science, and Teaching of Vocal and Instrumental Music, will be required to conduct examinations of Candidates for Musical Degrees, to act as Organist to the University, to periodically report upon the progress of Scholars in Music, and to conduct examinations of candidates for certificated Teachers. The commencing salary will be £750 per annum, rising by quinquennial increments, should the funds of the endowment allow it, to an ultimate maximum of £1,200, with an allowance for House Rent of £100 per annum, and £150 for passage money.

Further particulars may be obtained on application to the Agent General for Victoria, Victoria Office, 8, Victoria Chambers, Westminster, S.W.
16th February, 1888.

THE LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERTS. — Mr. HENSCHEL, Conductor. — Programme of the Fifteenth and last concert of the season, TUESDAY EVENING Next, ST. JAMES'S HALL, at 8.30.—Symphony in F, No. 5 (MS.) (F. H. Cowen), conducted by the composer; "Tasso" (Lamento e Trionfo) (Symphonic Poem) (Liszt); Siegfried's Death March, from the "Gotterdammerung" (Wagner); "The Ride of the Walkyrics" (Wagner). Reserved Seats, 10s. 6d., 7s. 6d., and 4s.; admission, 1s.; at Austin's Office, St. James's Hall, and usual agents.—N. Vert, 6, Cork Street, W.

A MUSIC PUBLISHING FIRM REQUIRE immediately AGENTS and TRAVELLERS already working the ground to push the sale of first class publications, upon commission, throughout the United Kingdom. Apply "ALLEGRO," Post Office, Grimsby.

TO ORGANISTS.—For Professional Practice, Teaching, or Concert purpose, and Home use, the "Bach Model" Pedal Instrument is only reliable substitute for a pipe organ. For design, improved action, connections, and tone, it embraces the merits of the highest class instruments; and without paying an exorbitant price you may have an instrument with organ measurements that removes the deficiencies hitherto experienced in pedal instruments.—Apply for illustrated lists, terms, and prices, to J. L. Scholefield, Musical Instrument Manufacturer, Huddersfield.

DRURY LANE.—AUGUSTUS HARRIS, Lessee and Manager.—EVERY EVENING, at 7.30. MORNING PERFORMANCES EVERY MONDAY, WEDNESDAY, and SATURDAY, at 1.30. Augustus Harris's NINTH ANNUAL PANTOMIME, PUSS IN BOOTS. Children half-price on payment at the doors, Morning Performances only. The Evening Performances commence with the Harlequinade. Box-office open daily from 10.0 to 6.0.

THE GENUINE PANTOMIME SUCCESS of the SEASON is PUSS IN BOOTS, AT DRURY LANE, where the receipts are more than three times those of any other pantomime.

Institutes and Colleges.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, KENSINGTON GORE, LONDON, S.W.

Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.

President - - H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES, K.G.
Director - - Sir GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L., LL.D.

Next College Concert, March 1st, at 7.30 p.m.

Associate Examination—

The Examination for 1888 is fixed for April 16th. Last day for receiving applications, March 6th.

Forms and particulars may be obtained from the Registrar, Mr. GEORGE WATSON, at the College.

CHARLES MORLEY, Honorary Secretary.

UNIVERSITY OF TRINITY COLLEGE, TORONTO. (The Church of England University of Upper Canada.)

FACULTY OF MUSIC.

The next Examinations for the degree of Bachelor of Music will be held simultaneously in Toronto and London in Easter week, 1888. Women are admissable to these examinations. For particulars apply to Rev. E. K. Kendal, D.C.L., Registrar for England, Southsea.

TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON. For MUSICAL EDUCATION and EXAMINATION, &c., and for the Granting of Certificates and Diplomas in Music. Inst. 1872.

President - - The Earl of Aberdeen.

LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN PIANOFORTE-PLAYING, ORGAN, SOLO-SINGING, &c. Arrangaments are being made for holding Examinations in Instrumental and Vocal Music at the following, amongst other, centres:--March 26 to 31, Truro, Redruth, Alton, Bedford, Margate; April 9 to 14, Redhill; April 16 to 21, Jersey; May 14 to 19, Brentwood, Peterborough, Portsmouth, Midhurst, Ware, Maidstone; May 21 to 26, London, S.E., Belfast, Edinburgh, Dumfries; May 28 to June 2, Swansea, Carmarthen, Haverfordwest, Stroud, Worcester; June 4 to 9, Southport, Preston, Newcastle, Malton, Glasgow, Ayr; June 11 to 16, Bristol, Exeter, Salisbury, Taunton, Weymouth, Southampton, Cheltenham; June 18 to 23, Liverpool, Swindon, Newport, Brighton, Surbiton; June 25 to 30, Manchester, Eccles, Stockport, Colchester, Bury St. Edmunds, Yarmouth; July 2 to 7, Leeds, Lancaster, Bradford, Cleator Moor, Lancaster, Harrogate, Keighley, Keswick; July 9 to 14, London; July 16 to 21, Birmingham, Leicester, Bedford, Leamington, Shrewsbury; July 23 to 28, Wolverhampton, Walsall, Blackburn, Halstead, Croydon. These dates are subject to alteration.

Applications for particulars and regulations should be made to the Secretary, Trinity College, London, or to the Local Secretary of the centre. A complete list of the latter can be had from the College.

By Order of the Academical Board.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, W.

GUILD OF ORGANISTS, 35, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C.

Patron—The Right Rev. THE LORD BISHOP OF LONDON.

PRESIDENTS.

The REV. CANON SIR F. H. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., Mus. Doc.
Sir HERBERT OAKELEY, Bart., Mus. Doc.
Sir ROBERT STEWART, Mus. Doc.

Vice-President—WILLIAM PINNEY, Mus. Bac., Oxon.
Warden—CHARLES VINCENT, Mus. Doc., Oxon.

On Monday, Feb. 27th, Lecture on "Organ Voluntaries," by Mr. W. S. Vinning, Mus. Bac., Cantab.

Established to advance the cause of Church music and the truest interests of its Professors, etc.

Members of the Church of England and Ireland, and the Episcopal Church of Scotland, are eligible for election. Subscription: Professional Organists (Associates) 10s. 6d. per annum; Amateurs (Members) 15s. per annum; Life subscription, 5 guineas.

Next Fellowship examination in Easter Week.

Prospectus and further particulars may be obtained from the Hon. Sec., Dr. J. H. Lewis, Staines, Middlesex.

London Organ School and International College of Music.

Established 1865, by the Rev. SCOTSON CLARK, Mus.B.
Patron—His Grace The ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY.
Principal—HENRY CLARK.

THE NEXT STUDENTS' MATINEE MUSICALE will take place on SATURDAY, February 25th.

Piano, Singing, Violin, 'Cello, Flute, Harp, Organ Lessons, with Practice, and Harmony. Private Lessons and Classes.

Candidates for Musical Degrees at any of the English Universities are expressly prepared for the Matriculation Examinations by Oxford and Cambridge graduates (in honours). Branches at Kensington and St. John's Wood.

Apply to the Director of Classes, T. H. Y. TROTTER, M.A., Mus.Bac., Oxon., 3, Princes Street, Cavendish Square, W. (close to Oxford Circus).

Publishers' Announcements.

NEW WORK FOR EASTER AND WHITSUNTIDE.

DR. SPARK'S "IMMANUEL" (one hour's performance) Is admirably suited for the chief Christian Festivals, Easter, Whitsuntide, and Christmas, and its enthusiastic reception wherever it has been performed, in churches, chapels, schools, etc., has necessitated the issue of a Third Edition of five thousand, Revised and Enlarged. Vocal Score, 2s.; bound, 3s.; chorus parts, 6d.; Tonic Sol-fa, 6d.

"Lovely, melodious, and expressive part-writing; songs and duets of admirable and refined melody, with introductory and effective symphonies and accompaniments."—Huddersfield Examiner.

John Heywood, Deansgate, Manchester; and London.

"BIRD RAPTURES,"

Song (for Soprano).

WORDS BY CHRISTINA G. ROSSETTI.

Music by MOIR CLARK.

PRESS OPINIONS.

"'Bird Raptures' is a song of exceptional merit. The accompaniment plays an important part, and contains several original and charming effects."—THE MUSICAL WORLD, June 11, 1887.

"One of the most earnest and beautiful songs that has appeared for many a long day."—Musical Standard, Dec. 23, 1887.

"When the public can appreciate a song like this, the trade of the vulgar ballad-monger will be gone."—Musical Review, December, 1887.

BY THE SAME COMPOSER,
"BANVA,"
Four Sketches for Pianoforte Duet.

"Admirably written, and marked by an originality which will recommend them to pianists of culture."—THE MUSICAL WORLD, June 11, 1887.

STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER, AND Co., 84, New Bond Street, W.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE "JOLLY BRICK" POLKA.

By M. S. BARRON.

PRICE 3s.

"Is bright and danceable."—News of the World.

"This is a cheerful and sprightly piece, with well marked accentuation. It presents no difficulties of execution even to the young player."—Dundee Advertiser.

"One of the brighest and most sprightly polkas we have met with for a long time. The key is E flat, changing to B flat. The piece is quite above the common run of dance music." —Musical Standard.

ALSO,

A TWILIGHT DREAM.

FOR PIANO.

By M. S. BARRON.

PRICE 3s.

"An interesting piece, with a melody for the left hand."—Musical Standard.

LONDON: SWAN & CO., 4, GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, W.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised & Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR

THE VOICE,

By T. A. Wallworth.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Madame Alwina Valleria, Mr. Iver M'Kay, and other successful Vocalists:

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & CO. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER'S

ROYAL IRISH CAMBRIC POCKET-HANDKERCHIEFS.

Samples and Price Lists Post Free.

Per doz.—Children's, 1s. 2d.; Ladies', 2s. 4½d.; Gents' 3s. 6d.

Hemstitched—Ladies', 2s. 11½d.; Gents', 4s. 11d.

——:o:——

BY APPOINTMENTS TO THE QUEEN AND THE CROWN PRINCESS OF GERMANY.

ROBINSON AND CLEAVER, BELFAST.

Professional Cards.

The subscription for a "card" space in these columns is £1 10s. for six months, and £1 per quarter—payable in advance, including copy of the paper each week. Subscriptions should be sent to the office of THE MUSICAL WORLD 12, Catherine Street, Strand, London, W.C.

Conductors and Composers.

Mr. FREDERIC H. COWEN,
73, HAMILTON TERRACE,
ST. JOHN'S WOOD, N.W.

Mr. F. KILVINGTON HATTERSLEY,
A.R.A.M.
(Professor of the Pianoforte, Composer, and Conductor),
17, FINSBURY PARK VILLAS,
GREEN LANES, N.

Mr. ALBERT VISETTI
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Conductor),
12, WESTBOURNE PARK TERRACE, W.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN
(Guitar, Concertina, and Gigelira. Wood and Straw Instrument),
22A, DORSET STREET, PORTMAN SQUARE, W.

Mr. F. ST. JOHN LACY
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Vocalist, (baritone),
FITZROY MANSION, CHARLOTTE STREET,
FITZROY SQUARE, W.

Mr. H. MARTYN VAN LENNEP
(Teacher of Singing, Composer, and Conductor),
Address—7, WIMPOLE STREET,
CAVENDISH SQUARE, W.

Mr. G. ARTHUR HIGGS, F.C.O.
L. Mus. and Tallis Gold Medallist. T.C.L. Pupil of Mr. Albert Visetti. Teacher of Singing, Harmony, Conductor, and Vocalist. (Baritone.)
Address—TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON, W.

Vocalists—Sopranos.

Madame VALLERIA
(Opera and Concerts),
BOSWORTH HOUSE, HUSBAND'S BOSWORTH,
RUGBY.

Miss EDITH DESMOND
(Opera and Concerts),
c/o NOLAN & JACKSON.

Miss KATE FLINN
(Concerts and Oratorios),
41, WELBECK STREET,
CAVENDISH SQUARE, W.

Mdlle. VELMI
(Opera and Concerts),
7, CHESILTON ROAD, MUNSTER PARK,
FULHAM, S.W.

Miss AGNES LARKCOM
Has removed to
158, PORTSDOWN ROAD, W.

Madame ISABEL GEORGE, L.R.A.M.
(Concert and Oratorio),
29, ALBANY STREET, REGENT'S PARK, N.W.

Contraltos.

Miss JOSEPHINE CRAVINO
(Concerts and Oratorio),
2, SEDGMOOR VILLAS,
Private Lessons given. CAMBERWELL, S.E.

Miss MARY E. DAKIN, R.A.M.
(Mez. Sop.),
(Ballads, Oratorio, &c.
31, MONMOUTH ROAD,
BAYSWATER, LONDON, W.

Miss LENA LITTLE
(Concerts),
42, NORFOLK SQUARE, HYDE PARK, W.

Contraltos.—Continued.

Miss PATTIE MICHIE,
68, PARK WALK, FULHAM ROAD,
LONDON, S.W.

Madame OSCAR POLLACK
(Concerts).
56, DUCHESS ROAD,
EDGBASTON, BIRMINGHAM.

Tenors.

Mr. BARTON McGUCKIN
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
c/o MR. ALFRED MOUL,
26, OLD BOND STREET, W.,
Or, 270, ELGIN AVENUE, MAIDA VALE, W.

Mr. ARNOLD BREEDEN
(Concerts, Oratorio, and Opera),
Address—N. VERT, Esq.,
6, CORK STREET, W.

Mr. SEYMOUR JACKSON
(Concerts and Oratorio).
OLD TRAFFORD, MANCHESTER.

Mr. PAYNE CLARKE
(Concerts and Oratorio),
28, DEVONSHIRE STREET, ISLINGTON, N.

Mr. J. DALGETY HENDERSON,
GOTHIC LODGE,
LORDSHIP LANE, S.E.

Mr. REDFERN HOLLINS,
30, ST. STEPHEN'S AVENUE,
SHEPHERD'S BUSH, W.

Mr. BERNARD LANE,
60, WESTBOURNE PARK VILLAS, W.

Chevalier EDWARD SCOVEL
(Opera, Concerts, and Oratorio),
HOTEL DE L'EUROPE,
MILAN, ITALY.

Mr. W. ESMOND,
24, UPPER MOUNT STREET, DUBLIN.

Baritones.

Mr. WALTER CLIFFORD
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concerts),
c/o N. VERT, Esq.,
6, CORK STREET, W.

Mr. FREDERIC KING
(Concerts and Oratorio),
19, CANFIELD GARDENS, S. HAMPSTEAD.

Mr. NORRIS CROKER,
EGREMONT, CROXTED ROAD,
WEST DULWICH, S.E.

Mr. JOSEPH LYNDE
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concert
63, STAFFORD PL.
BUCKINGHAM GATE, S.W.

Mr. ALBERT REAKES
(Bass-Baritone, of the "London Ballad Singers," Oratorios, Concerts, &c.),
30, LANCASTER ROAD,
NOTTING HILL, W.

Herr RAGNAR GREVILLIUS
(Concerts, Oratorio, and Opera),
70, PORTSDOWN ROAD, MAIDA VALE, W.

Bass.

Mr. WATKIN MILLS requests that in future all communications respecting Concerts, &c., be addressed to his residence, Huntcliffe, Bexley, Kent.

Mr. FRANK CELLI
(Concerts and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. N. VERT, 6, CORK ST.,
BURLINGTON GARDENS, W.

Trumpet and Cornet.

Mr. THOMAS HARPER,
185, KING'S ROAD, N.W

Guitar.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN, Guitariste, Instructress to H.R.H. the Princess Louise, has returned to town, 22A, DORSET STREET, PORTMAN SQUARE, W., where may be had her celebrated book, "Learning the Guitar Simplified," 10s. 6d.

Violin.

Mr. ALLAN CAMPBELL
(Formerly Pupil of Mr. Henry Holmes and Dr. S. S. Wesley),
23, THICKET ROAD,
Pupils visited and received. ANERLEY, S.E.

Mr. LESLIE CROTTY and
Madame GEORGINA BURNS,
c/o Mr. ALFRED MOUL (sole agent),
26, OLD BOND STREET, W.

Miss AGNES JANSON requests that all communications respecting engagements may be sent to her new address, 34A, Gloucester Place, Portman Square, W.; or to Mr. N. VERT, 6, Cork Street, W.

The FRASER QUINTET. Misses Violet (Vocalist), Ida, and Ethel (Pianist, Violoncello, and Viola), Mabel and Stella Violinists), play Quartets, Solos, Duets, two Pianofortes, &c. For Engagements, for Concerts, "At Homes," Dinner and Garden Parties.—Address: 121, Adelaide Road, N.W.

MR. HEALEY'S SPECIAL LIST.

Madame LILIAN NORDICA (Soprano)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert),
Address to
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mdlle. LOUISE LABLACHE (Mez. Sop.)
(Opera and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W

Mdlle. HELENE HASTREITER (Contr.)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert)
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Madame BELLE COLE (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Miss MARGUERITE HALL (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. WILLIAM NICHOLL (Tenor)
28, BELSIZE ROAD, N.W.,
Or, Sole Agent, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. JOHN PROBERT (Tenor)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. VAUGHAN EDWARDES (Baritone)
(Concerts and Oratorio),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. MULES BROWN (Baritone)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. HENRY POPE (Bass)
(Opera, Concerts, and Oratorio),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. T. L. CAMPION (Bass)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES.

Public Speakers and Singers

Can use "Brown's Bronchial Troches" as freely as requisite, containing nothing that can injure the system. They are invaluable in allaying the hoarseness and irritation incident to vocal exertion, effectually Clearing and Strengthening the Voice.

"They seem to act specially on the organs of the voice, and produce a clear enunciation."—MARIE ROZE-MAPLESON.

Ask. for and obtain only "Brown's Bronchial Troches." Sold everywhere at 1s. 1½d a box.

ORGANISTS AND ORGAN STUDENTS.

You are kindly requested to write for Ainsworth's "New Patent Organ Pedal Combination List." Ainsworth's "New Patent" is perfectly unique and may be combined easily with any Piano. It is the only one which may be safely combined with any Piano without deteriorating the instrument. Having put down at my works two engines and machinery of the most desirable kind, I am now supplying my goods at a price which enables every organist and organ student to have always ready for use in his Studio an

ORGAN PEDAL PIANO,

AFFORDING PERFECTLY UNIQUE PEDAL PRACTICE.

34, Sheen Park, Richmond.

DEAR SIR,—I have deferred writing to comment upon your Pedals and Action now attached to my pianoforte until I could satisfy myself of their utility and efficiency. I can now conscientiously say that they more than fulfil all my anticipations. Although I am no carpenter, aided by your lucid diagram I had little difficulty in attaching them myself, and it is impossible to over-estimate the comfort they give to me or to conceive the saving of time one experiences in one's own room.—Believe me, yours truly,

BURNHAM HORNER, F.R. Hist.S.

To Mr. Mr. Ainsworth.

DEAR SIR,—It gives me great pleasure to bear testimony to the perfection of your Invention. I am more than satisfied with your Patent Action and Organ Pedals, and consider them worth double the money. Organists and organ students who desire to improve in the Art of Pedalling, which is so essential to a good organist, will do well to procure a set. I have seen no Action half so effective, and one can sit at the Piano and play, "Fixed in his everlasting seat," or any other organ music, or organ arrangement with the greatest pleasure. The touch of pedals could not be better, and the action is as you say, "Absolutely free from annoyances." They cannot be too highly recommended, as by their use, rapid progress is certain.—Believe me, sincerely yours,

I. B. Thornton,
Organist, Birstall, Leeds.

Cologne, July 16th, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have much pleasure in informing you that your Pedals have given the fullest satisfaction. I have them combined with my practice Piano. Many of my musical friends who have seen them, as well as my organ pupils, are quite delighted with them; and I must acknowledge that I have never met with any Pedals so noiseless and pleasant to play upon as yours. The Action I consider durable, and of very good workmanship. Every organist who desires to perfect his playing will welcome your invention. I can recommend your goods in every respect.—Yours truly,

HERR J. RODENKIRCHEN.
To John Ainsworth, Esq. Organist, The Cathedral, Cologne, Germany.

TOOLS.—In order to facilite the attachment, a complete set of tools are sent (four in number) each one marked for its particular use. By the use of these tools, and following carefully the directions, ANY ONE can make a really good attachment.

On Receipt of Trade or Professional Card, you will receive List, with Liberal Terms.

AINSWORTH'S PATENT ORGAN COMBINATION WORKS
BRINSCALL, CHORLEY.

Facts and Comments.

The first number of "The Meister," a quarterly journal issued by the London branch of the Wagner Society, contains, amongst other things, a notice by Mr. Shedlock of the correspondence between Wagner and Liszt, a translation of Wagner's famous letter to Berlioz, and an article on Schopenhauer's "The World as Will and Idea," by Charles Dowdeswell. Careful and trustworthy translations of Wagner's literary work are too sparse in England, and by supplying such the new journal may do excellent work.

Mr. Cowen, on Friday last week, signed the contract with the Commissioners of the Melbourne Centennial Exhibition. During his long stay in Australia Mr. Cowen will have the opportunity of introducing many English works, and other music unfamiliar to the Colonists, at his series of concerts commencing August 1.

Mr. A. C. Mackenzie is at present engaged on some important works—namely, the music to Mr. Buchanan's ode, "The New Covenant," composed for the Glasgow International Exhibition; a popular opera in collaboration with the same author; to say nothing of his "Twelfth Night" overture, which he has to orchestrate with a view to its production at a Richter concert.

The Albert Hall Society is in difficulties, and the annual meeting of the proprietors and seat-holders last Monday was a stormy one, Mr. Peacock more especially never ceasing from troubling. It was announced among other things that the Prince of Wales had resigned the chairmanship of the committee, which had been offered to the Duke of Edinburgh instead. We care comparatively little about the Albert Hall, but we care a great deal about the Albert Hall Choral Society, which we sincerely hope will not suffer from any new arrangements that may be made.

Rumours notwithstanding, we are able to state on good authority that nothing whatever has yet been settled as to a season of Italian Opera at Her Majesty's Theatre, under the joint or separate management of Messrs. Lago and Mapleson.

Lecturing on Tuesday evening at the Highgate Literary Institute, Mr. H. C. Banister, Professor of Harmony at the Royal Academy of Music, stated that he had been entrusted with the papers of the late Sir George Macfarren, and proposed to write his life.

Madame Nilsson will sing at two farewell concerts during the forthcoming season, the one to be given at St. James's Hall, the second and last at the Albert Hall; both under the management of Mr. Kuhe. Singers have a way of saying—or singing—farewell many times, and it may be expected that Madame Nilsson will be no exception to the rule.

The "Sunday Times" announces that the Directors of the Carl Rosa Opera Company have, at their last meeting, decided to build a theatre in London, where performances of opera will be given during the greater part of the year. This is almost too good to be true.

On the adjudication of Sir Herbert Oakeley, Professor of Music at Edinburgh University, the Academical Board of the Trinity College, London, has awarded the Sir Michael Costa Prize, value ten guineas, with the gold medal of the College, to Mr. John Alsop, of Newton Abbot, for an orchestral overture in F.

Universal regret will be felt at the sudden death of Mr. John Clayton, who succumbed to erysipelas at Liverpool, on Monday afternoon last. The loss of this popular and, as the latter phases of his career served to show, very versatile actor will leave a blank in social as well as theatrical circles. Little thought the writer that the cheery greeting exchanged after a matinée a few days before he started on his provincial tour was to be the last in this world!

A very dainty and attractive programme was that of Mr. Malcolm Lawson's concert last week. It consisted of old French songs, and ranged from some specimens of the Folk-song, which cannot be pinned down to any date—such as the Chanson Béarnaise, "Roussignoulet," and the old Belgian child's song, "Compagnons de la Majolaine"—to specimens of 17th century music, attributed to Du Courroy, Lefevre, and others.

Miss Emily Lawson distinguished herself by her delivery of some of these quaint and pretty songs, and those that were given by Mr. Malcolm Lawson himself lost none of their poetic significance, though his style of singing is rather heavy for this genre of the art. We observe that a concert of Venetian music of the 18th century is announced by Mr. Lawson for March 5.

The St. James's Theatre will, in the autumn, pass into the hands of Mr. Rutland Barrington.

The first public concert of exclusively English music which has probably ever been given in Vienna, took place last week, under the Patronage of the British Ambassador, Sir Augustus Paget, and Lady Paget, in aid of the funds of the Victoria Home for British Governesses in this city. Eduard Straus's famous orchestra performed a selection from Sullivan, D. Godfrey, and other British composers, and English songs were effectively rendered by Fräulein Anna Holzer and M. Z. Dome. One of the attractions of the concert was the excellent performance of a young English composer and pianist, Mr. Louis Ree. The room was crowded, more than 500 reserved seats having been disposed of. At the close of the performance Sir Augustus Paget warmly thanked Eduard Straus for having contributed so much to the success of the concert.

Mr. Frederick Lamond, the Scotch pianist, recently gave a very successful recital at Frankfort-on the-Maine. Beethoven's A flat sonata, opus 110, Brahms's Paganini variations, and Chopin's "Etudes Symphoniques" were his principal pieces. The local press is highly complimentary.

A testimonial was to be presented to Madame Marie Roze previous to her departure for the Antipodes, yesterday (Friday) afternoon, at the Grand Hotel, Liverpool. The Earl of Lathom acted on behalf of the subscribers to the testimonial fund

It is said that Bizet's "Carmen" has not been received with favour by Madrid audiences. The critics assert that though Spanish names and Spanish costumes are worn by the characters, the work possesses nothing further in common with Spanish ideas.

Yet another musical autobiography in sight! Madame Patti, at a recent audience with Queen Christina of Spain, disclosed to that distinguished person that she is about to publish her memoirs.

The prima donna left Madrid on Monday, after having made her farewell appearance at the Royal Opera House, where a large audience had crowded to hear her in a selection of operatic scenes. Flattering demonstrations were made, and the sparkling "Il Bacio," which takes the place of "Home, Sweet Home" with Continental audiences, rewarded the enthusiasm of the public.

The Brussels correspondent of a morning paper telegraphs, Feb. 26, "The Opera 'Liederik,' by the Belgian composer, Mertens, has just been produced in French at the Antwerp Opera, and secured complete success. The plot is simple enough. The steward, Liederik, who loves the betrothed of the armourer, Stephan, accuses his rival of theft. The lord of the country, in order to discover the truth, adopts the disguise of a vagrant, and making himself known at the end of the piece, recompenses virtue and punishes vice. The music is pleasing throughout, and elicited much applause. The composer was enthusiastically greeted, and the Ministers of Finance and Foreign Affairs showed their interest in the new production by being present."

The performances announced to take place shortly at the Paris Grand Opéra of "Henry VIII." and "Sigurd" will give general satisfaction, and this is decidedly a move in the right direction. At the same house, simultaneously with Gluck's "Orphée," will be given the new ballet "La Tempête," upon which M. Ambroise Thomas is now occupied at his Villa d' Hyères.

With regard to "Hamlet," it became speedily apparent at rehearsal that the delicate art and comparatively small voice of Mdlle. Moor were altogether inadequate for the vast area of the Paris Opera house, and an Ophelia of calibre better suited to the surroundings has already been found in Mme. Lureau-Escalaïs. Meanwhile there are rumours that the supplanted soprano has been engaged at the Opéra Comique.

A little town in Sicily, according to local papers, lately witnessed one of those comical scenes for which the greater familiarity existing in some of the smaller theatres between actor and audience offers more favourable conditions than is fortunately the case here. The exertions of a baritone named Bertoli, during a performance of the "Huguenots," in which he sustained the part of Saint-Bris, seemed to have found so little favour with his hearers that he was roundly hissed after the benediction of the poignards. Nothing daunted, Saint-Bris advanced calmly to the footlights and gave a new feature to the celebrated scene by the following little speech: "Gentlemen, do me the favour to look at my co-conspirators"—and here he waved his hand majestically in the direction of the chorus—"and when you have done so, just say whether it is at all possible to get up a successful insurrection with such a miserable lot as these. Far from making me their scapegoat, you ought to pity me." The sequel to the story, as it runs, bids fair to assume even tragic proportions, for after the performance, as we are informed, the audacious singer was chased through the town by an infuriated mob, and at one time there seemed to be a chance of another massacre of St. Bartholomew.

There was quite as much effrontery, and more wit, in the following address once delivered to an unruly audience in the country, by a well-known actor of his time, and the father of the present Edmund Yates, who has recounted the incident: "If quiet is not immediately restored, all orders shall be returned at the doors."

A curiosity of unique interest has lately been added to the collection of ancient musical instruments at Leipsic. This is a specimen of the "bible-régale," or Royal Bible. Externally it resembles an enormously bulky bible of the Middle Ages; but on closer inspection will be found to consist of a wooden box, containing a row of keys, some small pipes, and a miniature pair of bellows. The instrument, which emits sounds powerful for its size and of a guttural quality, was used in village churches during the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries for accompanying the choirs.

It will be news to many people to hear that the Stratford Musical Festival has been an annual established fact for the past five years. It consists of public competitions for choral societies, choirs, solo and sight singing, musical theory, pianoforte, organ, violin, and cornet solos, string quartet playing, and musical compositions, open to residents in the district surrounding Stratford. The competitions will take place in the Stratford Town Hall, on Saturday, March 10th, and on Monday, March 12th. Certificates signed by the adjudicators (J. F. Bridge, Esq., Mus. Doc., Alberto Randegger, Esq., John Francis Barnett, Esq., and Berthold Tours, Esq.) will be awarded to prize-winners, and to other candidates who specially distinguish themselves in any class. The public have in past years attended in large numbers to hear the selection of music, and it is hoped that the forthcoming Festival will be as interesting and attractive to them as previously. The plan of giving a concert by the prize-winners, which was successful when initiated last year, will again be adopted, the date being Tuesday, March 13th. The distribution of Prizes and Certificates will take place on the same evening. The secretary is J. Graham, Esq., 23, Boleyn-road, Upton, E.

THE REID FESTIVAL.

Edinburgh, 22nd Feb., 1888.

The Reid Festival, this year, has fully maintained its high reputation as an important musical event, and has enjoyed all the enthusiastic support which a critical and music-loving public is wont to bestow upon it.

The festival has happily this year, moreover, been restored to its former dimensions. The lapsed performance of last year was reinstated, and, as heretofore, the concerts were three instead of only two in number. Nor was this all. A really sensible and valuable innovation as regards the character of the music performed was also introduced. Formerly the practice was to employ a full band at each of the three concerts, to the entire exclusion of chamber music; so that, as an educational institution—the primary object for which the whole Reid bequest is supposed to have been made—the Festival was thus made to miss altogether one, at least, of its obvious possibilities. This year the closing concert of the series was entirely devoted to music of the so-called "chamber" character. Although none of the programmes contained any startling novelty, they each, as will be seen from what follows, included, however, works of undoubted interest alike to the student and the amateur.

The Festival commenced with an afternoon orchestral concert, on Saturday the 11th inst.; was continued on Monday, the 13th, on the evening of which day the Reid concert proper took place, and was brought to a close on the following day, with the concert of chamber music to which reference has been made.

Dr. Hallé's band, as it has done for the last 20 years, again occupied the orchestra; Dr. Hallé himself was the solo pianist, Madame Neruda, the violinist, and Madame Nordica and Mr. Watkin Mills, the vocalists; and it is needless to say that, from first to last, each and all concerned in the rendering of the works selected for performance did their very utmost to secure the most satisfactory results.

The Saturday's concert opened with Spontini's "La Vestale" overture, and was followed, at the commencement of the second part, by Sterndale Bennett's "Wood Nymphs." These works, with two movements from Schubert's "Rosamunde" music, the Entr'acte in B flat, and the Air de Ballet; and Wagner's "Kaisermarsch," supplied what may be regarded as the minor orchestral incidents of the programme, while the major consisted of a MS. symphony by Haydn, in D minor, op. 49, and of Beethoven's Violin Concerto in D. Besides these Dr. Hallé contributed two pieces by Chopin, a prelude in A, and the Grand Polonaise in F minor; Madame Nordica sang Mozart's "Gi argui," and Paccini's "Il soave ben contento," and Mr. Mills, Handel's aria from "Egio," "Già resuonar," and Verdi's "O tu Palermo."

A day's rest after the fatigue inseparable from a week of almost incessant travelling between, and performances in, Leeds, Manchester, and Carlisle, had a most perceptible effect upon the orchestra. They returned to their desks on Monday evening manifestly refreshed and invigorated thereby for the due fulfilment of the more exacting calls which the chief event of the Festival—the Reid concert itself—was calculated to make upon their endurance. The music-hall on the occasion was early and completely filled with a fashionable and appreciative audience, composed for most part of the members of the teaching staff and governing bodies of the University and their friends, together with a large contingent of the senior students. For some days previously, tickets were practically unobtainable. Those, however, who were so fortunate as to possess them had ample reason to congratulate themselves in view of the rich musical treat at which they were thus enabled to assist. One noticeable feature of the preliminary proceedings this year, was the omission, on the part of the students, to cheer the several members of the official bodies according to their varying degrees of popularity or otherwise, as they entered the room. Why this old custom should have been disregarded it is difficult to tell; but its abandonment did not certainly add to the interest of the occasion.

On appearing at the conductor's desk, and wearing the LL.D. hood, in recognition of the hon. degree conferred upon him by the University on the occasion of its Tercentenary, in 1885, Dr. Hallé was received with several hearty rounds of applause, to which his long and valuable services to musical art in Edinburgh fully entitled him. After these had been gracefully acknowledged by the recipient, and had fully subsided, the more formal part of the concert was gone through. This, it may be well to state, consists, as the quaint terms of the founder's bequest express it, of the performance of "one solo for the German flute, hautboie, or clarinet; also one march and one minuet with accompaniments by a select band, in order to show the taste of music about the middle of the last century when they were by me composed, and with a view of keeping my memory in remembrance." In their present form, it may be added, these curious productions of General Reid owe a good deal to the subsequent scoring of Auschütz; and it is customary to honour them on these occasions by the whole audience rising and standing during the playing of the march.

The details of the programme proper of the concert were as follows:—Three overtures—Cherubini's "Anacreon," Mendelssohn's "Hebrides," and Smetana's "Lustspiel," Weber's romantic "Concertstück," Boccherini's well-known "Minuetto and Trio;" a brace of songs, with orchestral accompaniments, by the Professor of music, Handel's "Let the Bright Seraphim," Rossini's "Una Voce," and Gounod's recit and aria from "Irene," "She alone claimeth;" two violin solos, Beethoven's Romance in F, and Paganini's "Mouvement Perpetuel, and lastly, as "the roof and crown of things," Beethoven's immortal "Eroica" symphony.

Of the less important orchestral numbers, with the exception of Smetana's overture, it will suffice to say that they were played in a quite admirable and satisfying manner; that the severely symmetrical, though melodious, measures of Cherubini, and the delicious whispers of Boccherini's dying cadences, were on the one hand made to contrast forcibly with the rugged and well-nigh forbidding grandeur of the effect of Mendelssohn's great tone-picture of the solitary and storm-driven waters of our western seas, on the other.

At this concert, it was Dr. Hallé's turn to carry off the chief honours as soloist. His magnificent playing of Weber's Concertstück lacked none of its old beauty and power, and quite took the audience by storm. He was recalled no less than three times at its conclusion.

The supreme event of the concert was, of course, the performance of the "Eroica," which proved to be such as to evoke the utmost enthusiasm among those who were fortunate enough to hear it. From the passionate and heart-stirring allegro to the triumphant and majestic finale, it was simply a noble interpretation of a sublime conception. And it is only right to say that the result achieved was equally due to the conscientious care and steadiness of the individual executants, and to the masterly manner in which Dr. Hallé not only guided but inspired them from the conductor's desk.

On both occasions on which they appeared, the singing of Madame Nordica and Mr. Mills was greatly appreciated, and went far to enhance the general success of the concerts. Madame Nordica gained her chief triumphs in the rendering of Mozart's "Gli Angui," and of Handel's "Let the bright Seraphim," in which she was ably supported by Mr. G. Jaeger, who played the trumpet obbligato in a highly efficient manner Mr. Mills appeared to greatest advantage, if we may take the popular applause as a criterion, in his singing of Professor Oakley's songs. Both Madame Nordica and Mr. Mills each received more than one hearty recall during the Festival in recognition of their services.

But little space remains for comment on the events of the Chamber Concert, which was certainly not the least enjoyable part of the Festival. The chief works rendered were Schumann's Quartet in E flat, the executants being Dr. Hallé, Madame Neruda, Signor Risegari, Herr Straus, and M. Vieuxtemps; and Beethoven's Septuor, which was played by Madame Neruda, Herren Straus, J. Hoffmann, G. Hoffmann, and F. Paersch, and MM. Vieuxtemps and Lalande. Besides these larger works, Dr. Hallé and Madame Neurda gave together Bach's Sonata in A, and each also contributed solos, those for the violin being Spohr's Barcarole in G minor, and Scherzo in D, and for the piano, Mendelssohn's Caprice Brillant in E, and Prelude and Fugue in E minor. The quartet on the whole, if we may judge from the manner of its reception, may be said to have carried off the palm, while the Septuor, although it received, for the most part, a magnificent exposition, did certainly suffer, in one or two minor respects, from defects in some of the wind parts.

At the close of the concert a very interesting réunion of the members of the Edinburgh Society of Musicians was held at the Windsor Hotel. Dr. Hallé and the principal members of his orchestra were invited to sup with the society, and the compliment of electing Dr. Hallé its first hon. member was afterwards gracefully paid him.

Reviews.

THE HISTORY OF THE "PRIMA DONNA."

Some time ago, readers of THE MUSICAL WORLD obtained a foretaste of the inexhaustible fund of anecdote and graceful chat which Mr. Sutherland Edwards has ever at command when discoursing upon a subject which has come to be regarded as in some sort his specialty—"The Prima Donna;" and they will be prepared to receive with hearty welcome the two attractive volumes he has lately contributed* to the history of that favoured and fascinating product of art and civilization—regarding her in the collective sense adopted in the title—from her early girlhood in the seventeenth, to the fuller development of her still youthful charms in the present century. The appearance of such a history seems to be especially opportune at a time when, owing to various causes, she has manifestly entered upon a somewhat critical phase of her career; though still with every prospect of long life before her, and of many triumphs in the future equal in brilliancy to those she has enjoyed in the past, obtained though they may be under somewhat altered conditions. Fortunate in most things, the "Prima Donna" must be accounted emphatically fortunate in having for her chronicler the chivalrous admirer, at times the kindly monitor, who has here limned her portrait with so loving and skilful a hand. With what sympathetic industry odd corners of operatic history have been ransacked for the apt anecdotes and characteristic touches that here give life to the portrait, and how brightly and pleasantly the information contained in the work before us has been set forth, readers already acquainted with the author's genial and appetising style will take for granted. Varied and romantic as these stories of eminent singers will without exception be found, there is one element of monotony running through them all, in that indispensable condition of the Prima Donna's existence—professional rivalry. From this not even the greatest among them, at any rate in their early careers, have, or could have, been exempt; and even when some pre-eminent queen of song may appear to have risen above the fray to the serener atmosphere of undisputed dominion, her position is at best one of armed neutrality. In these chronicles, therefore, embracing as they do the history of opera from its early beginnings in England down to modern times, and including much interesting talk about artists whose names are still fresh in the memory of the present generation, as well as about others still living, we may expect to find many a spirited professional battle piece. The wars of Cuzzoni and Faustina, of Sophie Arnould and Mdlle. Laguerre, of Mara and Todi, of Malibran and Sontag, and others, are sung by one well qualified by sympathy and store of information to enter into the spirit of that stirring part of his subject. Many readers will turn also with special interest to the accounts given of favourites yet reigning, or whose triumphs on the lyric stage are of comparatively recent date. Jenny Lind, Adelina Patti, Nilsson, Albani, Valleria, and other artists of eminence have each a special chapter, or more or less lengthy mention. Nor is the lighter French Comic School, as represented by Mdlle. Schneider, altogether forgotten. To these are added some lively and pertinent comments upon singers and operas generally.

On the subject of operatic conventions, while admitting the absurdity of many of these, Mr. Edwards draws a sensible analogy between opera and the poetic drama, pointing out how, from the very nature of the arts, the introduction of some artificiality is as unavoidable in one case as in the other. "That the personages of a drama," he remarks, "should make their utterances in the singing voice is only a degree more unnatural than that they should do so in rhyme, or in rhythmical blank verse. One mode of delivery is just as much opposed to custom, if not nature, as the other. The declamation of trivial phrases in portentous music has, of course, a ridiculous effect; but this also has its counterpart in the rhymed comedies and dramas of France, which often contain common-place thoughts expressed in the most sonorous language. Not that in representation this causes such a shock as might be expected. The audience soon get accustomed to the verse, as in opera to the music, and accept it without criticism or inquiry." A further chapter on "The Prima Donna as a Type" brings this veritable dream of fair women to an appropriate conclusion. Her accomplishments, her aptitude for travel, her large income, her lavish generosity, her husband (the latter receiving in this chapter the especial attention his importance demands), and finally her jealousies and little foibles are all touched upon in a sprightly and good-natured vein. "At the benefit of a rival, the prima donna renews, without, perhaps, being aware of it, the policy which, in modern times, has been specially associated with the Austrian Empire, but which is as old as the art of government itself. Giulietta dislikes Chanterelle heartily, because Chanterelle, who is engaged at an opposition theatre, is a light soprano, and is always trying to eclipse her in her best parts. Paulina, however, who appears at the same theatre as Chanterelle, and divides with her the admiration of the public, is a dramatic soprano, so that her success, however much it may vex Chanterelle, will not in the least degree disturb Giulietta's peace of mind. On the contrary, every triumph gained by Paulina at Chanterelle's expense, will fill Giulietta's heart with joy. Hence, at Paulina's benefit, she applauds without reserve, and without caring what happens to her gloves." There is also an amusing initiation into secrets connected with the mode of presenting the regulation "tiara of diamonds" at the close of an engagement in certain continental capitals, for the particulars of which, we are compelled, by consideration of space, to refer readers to the work itself. It should be added that, for the purposes of reference, a copious and well arranged index greatly adds to the value of this book for those who are interested in the biography of the lyric stage.

"JOCELYN."

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Brussels, February 26.

In January last an attempt was made to call the attention of the readers of the MUSICAL WORLD to the personality and doings of Benjamin Godard, and the first performance of his new opera, "Jocelyn" (February 25, at the Théâtre de la Monnaie, of Brussels), gives us an opportunity of gaining a deeper insight into the mind of the composer. The large number of musical critics that had flocked to Brussels from all parts of Belgium and France, were not unanimous in the appreciation of the work, which fact speaks highly in favour of its author and of the opera itself. Absurd as it may appear, a long experience, especially in theatrical matters, has taught me to consider almost as an axiom that when a production is equally liked by everybody it is almost as bad as when it is liked by nobody. He that achieves a success nemine con. has at least given to the public something strictly in accordance with the tried and accepted rules of the beautiful ad usum Delphini: something within easy reach of the shortest intellectual arm; a kind of peony in full bloom in the artistic garden; whilst M. Godard, by dividing the criticism in two opposite parties, has shown that he has departed from the King's highway, and is ascending the mountain by a track not yet marked on the official maps.

The libretto of "Jocelyn," by Messrs. Silvestre and Capoul, is based on the well-known poem of the same name, by Lamartine. Jocelyn, an affectionate son and brother, overhears his mother deploring that the insufficient dowry of her daughter prevents her from marrying the man she loves. To make his sister happy, Jocelyn sacrifices himself. He announces to his mother his decision to become a priest, gives up to his sister all he possesses, bids adieu to his home and to his native mountains, and shuts himself up in a seminary to be initiated in his chosen profession. Before his studies are at an end, the French Revolution breaks out in all its fury; convents and churches are sacked, and, in the general ruin, Jocelyn is obliged to fly to avoid death, and seeks refuge on the highest Alps. A shepherd helps to conceal him; he directs him to the Eagle's Grotto, amongst rocks and glaciers almost inaccessible, and once a month he brings him a basket of food. The time passes, and Jocelyn is alone with the awful Majesty of nature, the spirit of God. One morning Jocelyn perceives a wounded man and a boy, followed by two soldiers, who are running for their lives. He hastens to their rescue. "Save my son; be a father, a brother to him," says the wounded man. "Go, fly, with my life I shall save yours." Jocelyn helps the boy over the precipice, and the father, struggling with the two soldiers, falls with them into the torrent below, and is lost for ever. Months pass away, and the affections of Jocelyn are centred in his friend Laurence, who shares the immense silence and solitude of the mountain with him, when, one day, by chance, he discovers that his young companion is not a man, but a girl. A dreadful battle takes place within himself; he has devoted himself to the Lord, and marriage is not allowed to Roman Catholic priests; yet he has not been as yet consecrated, and he is free not to pronounce the vows that will bind him for ever to the Church. Love triumphs over asceticism; the purest love for Laurence takes the place of friendship, and the day when Laurence will be able again to return unmolested to her native Brittany they are to become husband and wife. But one night, while Laurence is asleep, the shepherd who has protected Jocelyn steals up to the grotto for the first time, and hurriedly tells him that a bishop, one of Jocelyn's former teachers, has been arrested and sentenced to death, and that the old man was heard to implore from Heaven, as a last grace, to see, before dying, one of his young pupils of the seminary. Jocelyn, without waking up Laurence, follows the shepherd, promising to be back the next day, and descends with him to the village, and is admitted to the cell where the condemned man is waiting for his death at dawn of day.

---

* "The Prima Donna, Her History and Surroundings, from the Seventeenth to the Nineteenth Century," by H. Sutherland Edwards. In two volumes, Remington & Co.

Within the walls of that cell the most tragical act is accomplished; the old prelate must confess his sins to a priest before appearing before the supreme Judge, if not, the gates of heaven are shut against him for ever. Jocelyn is to be that priest, and he must, therefore, be consecrated on the spot by the hand of the martyr who is going to suffer, and whose soul will have no rest if Jocelyn does not submit to the sacrifice. This scene is as terrible as powerful, and as full of contrasting feelings as the one between the Inquisitor and Philip II., in Schiller's "Don Carlos," and the one between the old Royalist and the young peasant in Victor Hugo's "Quatrevingttreize"; the issue is that Jocelyn, overpowered, submits, and is made a priest. From this moment he sees Laurence no more; years after, he catches sight of her in Paris; she has been reinstated, has married a gentleman who died very soon, and she is said to lead an exceedingly fashionable life. The sense of his duty overcomes Jocelyn's desire to meet her, and he leaves Paris to attend to his flock in a little country place. One day he is called in to assist a dying lady who is taken ill passing through his place; on her death-bed she confesses to him that she loved once a man who had been sent her by God; that she tried everything to forget him, but in vain, and that she hoped that in Heaven she might be joined to him from whom she had been severed on earth. Jocelyn absolves her from her sin, and, breathing her last breath, Laurence recognises him, and, taking hold of his hand and gazing on him, she dies.

This is the plot of Lamartine's splendid poem, and the subject of M. Godard's opera, with the difference, however, that the poem adapted for the stage has undergone some changes, detrimental to Lamartine's meaning and high poetical intention. Some of these alterations were inevitable, some might have been avoided. The episode in the second part of the fourth act, when Jocelyn throws himself into the arms of Laurence in her garden in Paris, and only leaves her, hearing the bell tolling the "Angelus," is, though effective in a common way, a perfect slap in the face of Lamartine, and Jocelyn's revealing himself to the dying Laurence is another concession to the "bourgeois" that cannot be stigmatised enough, showing as it does in what degree of poetical intelligence audiences are supposed to be by makers of ordinary libretti d'opera.

One fault I must lay at the door of M. Godard, and that is his having accepted for writing an "opera," what might have been a fit subject only for a "musical drama," or for a "cantata." The so-called "opera" is a form of expression insufficient to the modern thought; it affords scope enough for the episode, for the little story, but it falls short of the great practical idea in its entirety. Gounod's "Faust" is very well on the stage, because it does not meddle with the philosophical conception of Goethe, and only gives us the episodical love of Heinrich and Gretchen. Schumann trying to deal with the subject in the full spirit of Goethe, never dreamt of the stage.

Jocelyn is in his way a conception as typical as Faust: it is the heart of man wrought upon by human love, passing by Theism to Pantheism, almost to Mysticism in the solitude, and returning again to Theism and Catholicism in contact with society. To bring this home in a few hours to well-fed, after-dinner opera-goers, is not easy, and no wonder that the work, as the "advanced" critics assert, remains beyond the ideal of Lamartine.

Taking, however, "Jocelyn" as it stands, that is, judging how the task was performed by what its author had proposed to himself, I must say that in my opinion "Jocelyn" is an admirable work, showing beyond any doubt that Godard has such power of dramatic expression as to be equalled only by Massenet in France and Boito in Italy.

In the general musical treatment the influence of Wagner is not more remarkable than in "Faust" or "Carmen," and considerably less than in "Mefistofele." The "leitmotive" theory does not seem to obtain with Godard: there are three or four themes which reappear here and there in the score, and that is all. Godard differs particularly from Wagner, by the way in which he deals with the orchestra; the orchestra plays throughout a part subordinate to the actors, and the interest is entirely concentrated on the stage. The singers have much to sing, and though the mere display of vocalisation is entirely done away with, yet rhythm and melody scarcely ever cease in the vocal parts, and beautiful melodic periods are to be found, even where the old Italian masters would have used recitative. In fact, M. B. Godard has a copious vein of melody, pure, new, and original, and that is the favourite pigment of his palette, occasionally he even exceeds in the use of it, for instance, in Laurence's aria in the fourth act, which recalls Meyerbeer, and might have been better in keeping with the situation if the form had made room for more dramatic freedom.

Every act contains at least one remarkable number; so, in the first act, after an introductory and very charming chorus, there is a beautiful duet between Jocelyn and his mother, followed by a romanza, in which Jocelyn bids adieu to his home. The second act contains the grand scene and love duet between Jocelyn and Laurence: and the fourth act, though objectionable as a poem, is, musically speaking, full of freshness and vigour. The "Carillon" preceding the death-scene is also a fine inspiration.

But what gives a claim to Godard to being ranked with the foremost composers is the third act. The first part of the act is the scene in the prison between Jocelyn and the bishop, and the second part is the scene in the public street, where Jocelyn accompanies the bishop to the very steps of the scaffold.

The work was magnificently performed on Saturday night, and was received with no little enthusiasm. Madame Rose Caron was extremely successful as Laurence, and M. Engel's Jocelyn was a fine impersonation. M. Seguin and the other artists did justice to the smaller parts, and M. Dupont conducted with marked ability.

NATIONALITY IN MUSIC.

To the Editor of THE MUSICAL WORLD.

SIR,—A reference in your "Notes and Comments" of last week's issue to certain utterances of Gounod raises, but in my humble opinion scarcely disposes of, a question of considerable interest to musicians of a speculative turn, and one upon which some further expression of opinion might, I think, be elicited in your columns with advantage. Is there, or is there not, such a thing as nationality in music, and, if so, to what extent may the composers of various countries be said to have been influenced by it? According to the author of "Faust," the distinction occasionally drawn between German music, Italian music, and French music is so much nonsense, based upon a misconception of the fixed character of laws pertaining to thorough bass, counterpoint, and fugue, which are manifestly as applicable in the wilds of the Steppes, as in London or Paris. And, with some limitations, I, for my part, am disposed to agree with M. Gounod, in spite of your remarks thereupon, when he says "Geographical boundaries cannot hedge in harmony." And first, for my limitation. There are unquestionably other boundaries to be considered besides the "geographical." In a certain sense it may be fairly said that educational boundaries can and do hedge in harmonies. It is one thing to say that certain laws are universally applicable, and another that they are universally applied; and no one probably will be disposed to deny that the music of different countries, as of different ages, will display different features and limitations, according to the greater or less standard of knowledge and culture existing among them. But assuming these conditions to be equal, and concerning ourselves for the nonce with civilised musicians only, I would contend that music and musical inspiration is a thing free as air, entirely independent of race, or soil, or nationality—a product, in short, of individual genius, the characteristics of which would probably have been the same, whatever country its happy possessor might happen to be born in. The argument in favour of a national, as well as an individual, cachet, seems to me to derive its plausibility from classing together the master-minds of music and those who have been influenced by them; the founders of "schools and styles," with their followers and imitators. In other words, Beethoven—who I firmly believe would have been as much Beethoven had he been born in England, as he was as a matter of fact in Germany—opening out fresh and wondrous vistas in the art of music, gave to the world eventually, but to his countrymen and intimate associates first, new thoughts, new impetus, and a sense of hitherto undreamt of possibilities. According to the power and receptivity of his followers, these thoughts struck root and fructified; for obvious reasons, in Germany first. But it may fairly be asked: is German music what it is because of Beethoven, or was Beethoven what he was because of Germany? When put that way I think there can be but one answer to the question. And as I treat this isolated case, so would I treat all. Minds of like bent will seek their congeners; commanding spirits make their impress upon their times and their surroundings, but their advent is the result (humanly speaking) of happy accident, not of geographical conditions. If, in the absence of any such accident in England, we have hitherto been unable to boast of a distinct English school, at any rate we have, heaven knows, cliques enough. But for all that, music, I contend, is a universal language; musical genius "bloweth where it listeth;" and if the mystery of its appearance is to be solved at all, it must be by the help of far other considerations than these. Until we hear of a marked French accent in the tone produced by the bow of a violinist, of a German guttural obtruding itself in the performance of a horn player, of broken Spanish or Italian on the flute, I for one, sir, shall refuse adhesion to the theory of nationality in music.—I am, your obedient servant,

COSMOPOLITAN.

The Organ World.

ORGAN RECITAL PLAYING.—XI.

The organist using Bach's organ works for recital purposes will do well to approach his task with a large sense of the nobility of the music and the greatness of the instrument, with manly resolution to control with a firm hand, not only the various mechanisms he has to deal with, but every tendency towards excitement and panic, feebleness of expression and slothfulness of finger. In no other music indeed are the grand qualities of an experienced recitalist more exactingly monopolised than they are in Bach's greater organ works. Griepenkerl, in his valuable observations on Bach's organ pieces and upon their rendering, has some remarks the student would do well to ponder over. Briefly summarised, these observations may be said to include suggestions intended to secure clearness of delivery, phrasing, registering, graces, and other mannerisms, and general characteristics of tempi. The technical features regarding clearness of musical speech are touched upon as in four divisions: a separation of melodic figures or single notes, and a careful binding together of all legato or connected sounds; an elastic touch, which prevents the wrong blending together of succeeding notes; judgment in registering, and the choice of a moderate, or at any rate, judicious tempo. Griepenkerl attaches much importance to the matter of touch. He speaks of the organ as having no crescendo, diminuendo, and sforzando powers, and adds, the great Fugues of Bach have neither forte nor piano effects, consequently touch plays an important part in their just enunciation. This dictum calls for some qualification, seeing that the modern organ, though not changed from the older type of instrument in its general principles of tone-production, has, in the hands of a skilful manipulator, some serviceable crescendo and decrescendo effects. Again, the question of changes, such as may be secured by passing from one manual to another, may be even conceded in most of the great Fugues, as has been shown by Mendelssohn and still more recent great performers. This question has already been advanced upon in the present series of articles; still, it may be well to say a few words here on the position of the modern recitalist, as an expositor of Bach's organ music. There seems no real reason why some well-judged variations of tone should be altogether banished. "Revealed religion is all-sufficient in itself, still, there is no reason against the light of science being employed in the practical elucidation of religious truth;" and, with due reverence, this observation may be said to have an application in the world of art, inasmuch as there can be no reasonable objection to the employment of modern skill and inventions, when judiciously used, in throwing light upon the highest class of musical thought, even though such music may be sufficiently satisfying in itself, and not wanting any adornment or variation of treatment to secure eloquent results. But the recitalist occupies a position which may be called educational and persuasive. He must endeavour to guide the popular ear towards the enjoyment of reflective and logical music, and his task justifies the employment of such fair, thoughtful, and honourable means of adding to the original power of the music, as will legitimately heighten its effect to those who listen to music in the days when tone-colour is inseparably associated with the definition of the divisions and features of musical objectivity. Such action calls for the exercise of an intimate acquaintance with the original text and the mode of workmanship, and a stern determination to adopt only such changes and effects as will heighten, without detracting from, the character of the original idiom, and leave undisturbed the logical, even flow of counterpoint, which, by its very nature, is accumulative rather than assertive, and reflective rather than active.

E. H. TURPIN.

COMPOSITIONS FOR THE ORGAN.

Edmund T. Chipp, Mus. Doc. (Weekes and Co., 24, Hanover Street). Only those who understand the organ know how difficult an instrument it is to write for with success; and apart from the intrinsic merits of the music by the late esteemed organist of Ely, his work is ever characterised by a complete mastery over the technical features of his task. The present volume contains what it may be hoped is only an instalment of a large number of similar posthumous compositions Those here given have been selected and very ably edited by the composer's friends, Dr. G. Garrett and Mr. James Higgs. The work opens with a fine, brilliant "Introduction" and succeeding "Fugue in C." Of slow movements in Dr. Chipp's happiest manner are several movements, entitled "Meditation," "Contemplation," "Reverie," &c. The composer's artistic skill as a writer of "variations" appears to exceptional advantage in his treatment of an air by Schumann, which is highly effective without the least straining after effect. Of the march form there are useful and effective specimens, including Postludes in D major and D minor, fine organic pieces; a bright "Festal March," and a "Processional March," with fanfare sentences for the tuba of a solo organ. The bold introduction and compact counterpoint of the Fugue in D minor show the master-hand to advantage; as does also an excellent Fugue in A minor. The pieces "In Memoriam" and "Con Moto Moderato" are very charming, and delightfully taking in character; and the graceful and simple "Minuet" is the most organic specimen one can recall. The work contains in all some fourteen pieces. These are not only uniformly good and interesting, but they are all useful and effective solo pieces and voluntaries. Organists must indeed congratulate themselves upon so valuable a publication as the present issue of Dr. E. T. Chipp's Organ Compositions, which it is hoped will meet with such a demand as may prompt the executors of the distinguished composer and the able editors to issue further selections from the remaining manuscripts. In marking the stops, an excellent plan has been adopted; various combinations are given under alphabetical letters, and these registering directions are always referred to under their respective letters. The work is printed clearly and roomily in oblong form. It cannot be doubted that the selection will prove a most acceptable addition to the organist's library.

MUSICAL ELOCUTION.

BY G. E. LAKE.

I take it that we all know the difficulties which lie in the way of our management of finals and duplicated consonants (I say "our" because I am now speaking of the English language). Of these two obstacles in our path, the finals are the largest, because intermediate consonants compel attention by their more obvious difficulty of enunciation. A well-known bishop, one of the few to recognise, or at least, to acknowledge, the influence of oratory in Church teaching, gave the following advice to a candidate for ordination:—"Before uttering a second word, be sure that you have yourself heard the first. You may be then ascertained of your auditors' apprehension of it." If this be sauce for the goose-speaker, who is not tied to time in prose speech, it is also sauce for the superior or gander-singer, who is bound down to it in rhythmical utterance, and has barely time to dispose of one final consonant before he is called upon to articulate an initial one, or a conjunctive vowel. What then is he to do? He cannot sing his terminal consonant according to its own sound, because that is governed by its preceding vowel (even as his vowels are governed, alas! by their consecutive consonants), he must, therefore, make of his terminal a labial, lingual, or palatal percussive by means of a rapid insertion of a syllable somewhat like short eh, as it-eh, sleep-eh, hard-eh, hark-eh, strong-eh, etc., and let him not hesitate to do this, because the spurious auxiliary sound, being merely an aid to a percussive, will not travel, but merely serves to terminate his percussive final by making it resonant. Anyone who has accompanied accomplished vocalists used to declamation in large buildings, will notice that their use of aids to percussive terminals, though exaggerated on the platform, are perfectly natural in the auditorium, to which the pure sound has most plainly reached. I cannot, at once, think of any song which draws more largely upon this faculty than Sir Arthur Sullivan's wonderful, if too little known, setting of Lord Tennyson's "Edward Gray," a song which is not only a model of melodic musical aid to difficult declamation, but by the way in which the composer has contrived to avoid patchiness in portraying the varied sentiments and personalities of the different implied narrators, is a triumph of art in musical illustration. Allow me to quote the opening lines :—

Sweet Emma Morland of yonder town,
Met me walking in yonder way,
"And have you lost your heart," she said,
"And are you married yet, Edward Gray?"
Sweet Emma Morland spoke to me.
Bitterly weeping I turned away,
"Sweet Emma Morland, love no more
Can touch the heart of Edward Gray."

Observe the extensive use of the linguals T.D. (as terminals occurring before anterior vowel-effects), and their consequent articulative difficulties. "Sweet Emma" (three times), "Morland-of," "lost-your," "said-and-are," "yet-Edward," "turned-away," "heart-of." Could there be a clearer illustration of this particular difficulty? I think not, and trust that everything has been said to show the necessity for very careful study of the enunciation of anterior and posterior consonants, particularly when percussive, to which end I invariably recommend any pupils to underline and to practice the dangerous conjunctions of above with vowels or vowel-effects. Moreover, it is very necessary to practice the five vowel sounds, with their labial, palatal, and lingual prefices or appendices attached, as, for instance, p-aa, aa-p, k-aa, aa-k, t aa, aa-t, etc., together with their dento-labial and lingual varieties, such as f (or ph), th and dh. The earnest student will find this classification capable of considerable sub-division, but it is enough to indicate here the direction in which he must proceed. Speaking at large, there are two more letters which claim attention, i.e., m and n, for the better securing of whose travelling qualities it will be found necessary to prefix or to addend a sound which I have already referred to as something like eh or er, without a final trill of the tongue.

Before passing to the brief consideration of vowel sounds, let me revert to this trill of the tongue as a necessary acquisition for the due articulation of the letter r, as distinct from w, especially when followed by a vowel. Take the word Moreland. Without a rapid trill of the tongue we must say Mawland, and, in fact, we do often affirm that "our sawrou" when we mean to allude to a spiritual open-wound though no one has heard Mr. Sims Reeves assert at the end of "Deeper and Deeper Still" that he "could no maw!" At the risk of touching upon controversial matter, I cannot resist alluding to the popular fallacy that the letter r must not be trilled, as being upon a par with the erroneous teaching that "the minor of C is A"; that (in England only) doh may refer to any note as well as to C (whereby the sol-fa syllables are made to refer to key and not to pitch); that "touch" is purely a gift; that an organist cannot play the pianoforte (alas! poor Mendelssohn); that a first-rate performer must be a good teacher, and vice versa; that Italian opera is dead because the star system has failed; that a man is compelled to submit to the simultaneous noise of a German band and three barrel-organs in the same street, because other people subsidise the executants; or that England is not a musical nation, because she does not make a noise about it; has no occasion to send her students and artists abroad for instruction or for fortune, and is too wealthy and generous to refuse shelter and subsistance to any long-haired, foreign ignorami, but chooses to accept them, and to repay her by subsequent abuse!

But there remains to say a few additional words about vowels. If we take up a pronouncing dictionary, we see at the head of each page a broad illustration of the different sounds taken by the letters a, e, i, o, u, y, according to their varying combination with others. In some cases the vowels remain open, and consequently vocal; in others they lose their identity, though still vocal, id est, "a," as in "hate," "psalm," and "shawm"; again, in others they lose both identity and vocality, as in "that," "what," and "shall." In the former cases the vowel (whether single or compound) is easy of musical (or sustained) articulation; in the latter, we are driven to seek a vocal substitute for the non-sustentive sounds dominated by the consonants. Before reverting to these, I would venture to suggest to the student that he should bear in mind that the success of Italian vocalisation is largely due to the purity and open nature of the vowels, which not only govern the words in which they appear, but are all sounded individually, and have not the same tendency to produce dipthongs as have English and French vowels; consequently, he who wishes to produce pure vocal tone should proceed in this manner. Read over the music and words, carefully marking the breaking places; then practise the music upon the Italian vowels, using either the sol-fa syllables (according to pitch, not key), and the open vowel "aa" (not laa). Having thus fixed the tone with the breathing and marks of expression, the unvocal English words will be less likely to govern and to spoil the purity of sound. Next, the words should be read through aloud, and slowly, a special mark being placed after difficult finals, to exhibit and prevent their leading to conjunction with following affinative vowels, etc., id est "sweet | eyes" "depths | of," "stands | a." Think how likely the last words are to form the one word "stanza," and the necessity for this methodical system will be apparent. It is not alone voice, not its cultivation, not expression, not musical taste that made Sims Reeves the artist he is, though in all these he is pre-eminent. Hear him recite "Deeper and deeper still," if you would learn the secret of his popular influence, and why his utterance of these pathetic words make him superior to an ordinary elocutionist, proving that vocal music is indeed the perfected form of speech. And now, returning to the unvocal vowel sounds, let me briefly offer a few suggestions for their sustention when they occur upon a note which requires it.

The syllable "at," as in "that," "sat," etc., contains no definite vowel sound capable of prolongation in singing; consequently it is necessary to provide one. Now, on the upper notes of the voice this syllable naturally becomes "a" (or a sound between those of "a" and "aa"). This is the correct sound. As the tongue and pitch lower, we reach, first of all, "aa" in the middle of the voice, and then "ah" in lower register. If, therefore, the student avoid this tendency to broadening, and preserve the "a" or medium sound, as in the high notes, he will obtain the true pronunciation, which is, in short, midway between "mann" and "mahn." A very common fault in vocalising "a" in deep notes is to pronounce it as "aw," or even "au," thus acquiring considerable vulgarity at the expense of some resonance!

The other most familiar imperfect vowel sounds are those of "e" as heard in when, cleft, engender; "i" as in in and insipid. "o" as in not and or; "u" as in thus, dull, fur (for example, nurture), and also bury, "y" as in truly, many, etc. This vowel being, however, almost confined to the composition of terminals is seldom required for sustention, save under the sound of "i," as in my, by, etc. For the correct sustained pronunciation of all these vowels under the various circumstances engendered by their combination with other and predominating sounds, the student is again earnestly referred to Mr. Ellis's "Speech in Song" primer as an indispensable (if not absolutely infallible) guide to correct enunciation. For our present purpose it must suffice to say that the nearest to the vocal pronunciation possible upon a high note, should be used in the other registers, and that the sounds of the ill-defined vowels should tend towards that of their true Italian prototypes, as "e" to "aa," "e" to "a," "i" to "ee," etc., but without absolutely overstepping the line of demarcation, save in the event of the impure syllable having to be sustained for several beats upon one or more notes (as in the so-called "Handelian run,") when the compulsory or medium vowel sound must more or less quickly graduate into an open tone, according to the pitch, returning at the end of the note or run to the initial sound, and by a similar process. The vocalist will then truly realise the refined characteristics of Italian pronunciation (in which there is an absence of all that is hard, coarse, or assertive), and by comparing the English word "pullet" with the French "poulet," and the English "pur" and "paw" with the Italian "pur," the distinction will be at once obvious. I, therefore, do not hesitate to say that the study of Italian pronunciation is indispensible to the education of a refined vocal elocutionist of every other nationality, and most of all of English, because, as I have said before, our language demands, in many instances, the formation of artificial vowel-sounds to replace those true ones which are dominated by more or less unvocal coadjutors.

(To be continued.)

Notes.

Here are some interesting Temple Church dates. On May 7th it will be 45 years since Dr. Hopkins played his first probationary service. On June 30th the same highly distinguished and esteemed organist will reach the age of "three-score years and ten;" and on June 20th, it will be 200 years since the Benchers purchased their famous organ of Father Smith.

At a recently given special Assize concert in the Leeds Town Hall, Dr. Spark played selections on the organ from Schubert, Lemmens, Smart, Neukomm, Boccherini, Dubois, &c.

Mr. W. T. Best, who has introduced so much continental organ music, has lately been playing compositions by Spanish and Dutch composers for the organ.

The Benchers of the Two Societies of the Temple have generously voted Dr. E. J. Hopkins the sum of "fifty guineas," for writing the fine Jubilee anthem at their request last June. This is, it may be concluded, the largest sum ever given for the composition of an anthem, and presumably the benchers of the Temple have left the copyright in the composer's hands. Dr. Hopkins is to be congratulated upon such a kindly recognition of his artistic labours. As a comparison, it may be well to remind readers that Mendelssohn received only £40 or £50 for his "St. Paul" from the publishers, who declined, it is said, to give more than £10 for his Service, ultimately purchased for £20 and published by another house,

As early as 1714 the London Welsh held a service on St. David's Day, and for more than 140 years this custom was continued. The Most Honourable and Loyal Society of Ancient Britons have made arrangements, by the permission of the Rev. Evan Jones, to restore this service, which was held on March 1st, at St. Bennett's Church (the Welsh Church), Queen Victoria-street. The choir was formed by children from the Welsh School, Ashford.

BOW AND BROMLEY INSTITUTE.—In consequence of the somewhat serious indisposition of Mr. E. H. Lemare, Mr. E. H. Turpin played the Recital on Saturday last, going through the programme set out by Mr. Lemare. The vocalists, Miss Briggs and Mr. Charles Kingsley, greatly pleased the audience, as did Miss Anna Lang, the violinist. To-night a pianoforte recital will be given by Master C. Ewart Gravely, of Brighton.

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.—On Tuesday last Mr. T. L. Southgate read an able paper on the "Physiology of Pianoforte Playing." He treated his subject in a very practical manner, and explained the use of the newly invented mechanisms of Mr. Macdonald Smith, which are ingeniously designed to strengthen the hands, wrists, and fingers away from the keyboard. Mr. Macdonald Smith has kindly presented a set of these mechanical appliances to the College of Organists, where they may be inspected by the members. Mr. T. L. Southgate remarks on the subject of the "Physiology of Pianoforte Playing," might be summarized under the following heads:—An anatomical description of the muscles and sinews of the hand and forearm, with diagrams; physiological difficulties in the way of pianoforte playing, on account of the varying strength or weakness of the different fingers and their muscular connections; the employment of gymnastic mechanism for developing the muscles of the wrists and hands, with a description of the various apparatus that has been invented for the purpose during the last two centuries, and their defects and advantages in connection with the common obstacles experienced in teaching; description and exhibition of an apparatus for attaining strength of muscle and rapidity and flexibility of movement, as well as the improvement in "touch," called the "Dactylergon," invented by Mr. W. Macdonald Smith, of Oporto. The able lecturer conclusively proved his points, that suitable mechanism was an advantage in the saving of valuable time, as its daily use was a more rapid way of overcoming various difficulties presenting themselves to students, by economising time and labour, and the apparatus he exhibited would no doubt be of very material assistance when used systematically. Some valuable observations were offered by Mr. James Higgs, who occupied the chair, by Mr. Thomas Wingham, Mr. James Turpin, and Mr. Arthur Trickett. To conclude with, Mr. Southgate read a letter from the inventor of the "Dactylergon."

America is the modern paradise of organists and Church musicians. In New York alone there are, it is said, some 2,000 organists and paid choristers, receiving annually 250,000 dollars or £45,000. In no other country indeed are Church musicians so liberally remunerated and appreciated.

VASSAR COLLEGE, U.S.—At the "School of Music," Dr. F. L. Ritter, the musical historian, gave his fourth lecture on Feb. 17th. The subject was "The Organ and its Functions in the Church," with illustrations performed by Mr. Frank Taft. Doubtless the eminent lecturer would treat his subject with much learning and ability, and it is to be hoped that the lecture will be printed. The programme of illustrative pieces ran thus:—I. Italians. 1. Trio, G. P. A. Palestrina, 1514-1594; 2. Toccato, L. Luzzaschi, 1545-1607; 3. Ricercare, G. Frescobaldi, 1580-1644. II. Germans. 4. Vorspiel, "Wir glauben all'an einen Gott," J. Ch. Bach, 1665-1703; 5. Vorspiel, "Christ lag in Todesbanden," J. Pachelbel, 1653-1706; 7. Vorspiel, "Ach Gott vom Himmel sieh darein," F. W. Zachau, 1663-1712; 8. Fugue, D. Buxtehude, 1637-1707; 9: Praeludium und Fugue, G. F. Handel, 1685-1759; 10. Toccata in F, J. S. Bach, 1685-1750. III. Modern School: 11. Adagio (German), G. Merkel, 1827-1887; 12. Sonata, (German), A. G. Ritter, 1811-1887; 13. Andante, (English), H. Smart, 1812-1879; 14. Pastorale and Finale from Sonata in G minor, (French), A. Guilmant, 1837.

With regret is announced the death of Mrs. Wesley, the widow of Dr. S. S. Wesley. The deceased lady, who died on February 18th, was the daughter of the late John Merewether, Esq., and sister of the Very Rev. Dr. Merewether, a former Dean of Hereford, and she was married to the late Dr. Wesley in 1835; some three years after he became organist of Hereford Cathedral. Dr. Wesley's family consisted of five sons, two of whom are clergymen of the Church of England, two in the medical profession, and one in Australia, and there was one daughter who died in infancy. The late Mrs. Wesley was about 80 years of age.

SPECIFICATIONS.

TUNBRIDGE.

The following is the specification of a new organ built by Mr. Alfred Monk, London.

GREAT ORGAN.

Open diapason	8 ft.	Harmonic flute	4 ft.
Claribel	8 ,,	Principal	4 ,,
Dulciana	8 ,,	Lieblich flute	4 ,,
Keraulophon	8 ,,	Cornopean	8 ,,

SWELL ORGAN.

Bourdon	16 ft.	Piccolo	2 ft.
Violin diapason	8 ,,	Mixture
Gedact	8 ,,	Trombone	8 ,,
Gamba	8 ,,	Oboe	8 ,,
Voix célestes	8 ,,	Vox humana	8 ,,
Principal	6 ,,

PEDAL ORGAN.

Open diapason	16 ft.	Violoncello	8 ft
Bourdon	16 ,,

COUPLERS.

Swell to great.
Swell to pedals.
Swell to pedals.

Six composition pedals.

This is the fourth organ built by Alfred Monk for the same gentleman. The previous organs contained 40 stops, 3 manuals; 25 stops, 2 manuals; and 15 stops, 2 manuals.

RECITAL NEWS.

Christ Church, Luton.—An Organ Recital was given by Mr. J. Walsh, F.C.O., A. Mus. T.C.L., (Organist of St. Margaret's, Uxbridge), on February 8th 1888, when the programme was as follows:—

Concerto, No. 5 in F	Handel.
Larghetto	W. Rea.
Prelude and Fugue in G	J. S. Bach.
Communion	Batiste.
Overture in F	C. Vincent.
Solo di Flauto	Capocci.
Prelude and Fugue in D minor	Mendelssohn.
Postlude in C	H. Smart.

Holy Trinity Church, Ayr, N.B.—At the dedication of the new chancel and new organ, on Sunday, February 12th, the morning preacher was the Rev. F. E. Ridgeway, Incumbent of St. Mary's Church, Glasgow, and the evening preacher, the Rev. W. T. Houldsworth, Vicar of St. Andrew's Church, Wells-street, London. Mr. Arthur Reynolds, A.C.O., the organist of the church, accompanied the services throughout, and gave a short recital after evensong, which included the following pieces:—

Sonata in C minor	Mendelssohn
Scherzino	Fumagalli.
Toccata and Fugue in D minor	J. S. Bach.
Largo in G major	Handel.

The following is the specification of the new organ, built by Messrs. T. C. Lewis and Co., London, and is the gift of Mrs. Heneage, of Ayr:—

Great Organ, CC to G.
Bourdon	16 ft.	Octave	4 ft.
Open diapason	8 ,,	Mixture (prep. for)	3 rks
Harmonic flute	8 ,,	Trumpet ,,	8 ft.
Swell Organ, CC to G.
Geigen principal	8 ft.	Geigen principal	4 ft.
Rohr flute	8 ,,	Oboe	8 ,,
Viole de gamba	8 ,,	Horn	8 ,,
Vox Célestes (prep. for)	1 ,,	Clarionet (prep. for)	8 ,,
Choir Organ, CC to G.
Dulciana	8 ft.	Salicional (prep. for)	8 ft.
Lieblich gedact (prep. for)	8 ,,	Flauto traverso (prep. for)	4 ,,
Pedal Organ, CCC to F.
Sub bass	16 ft.	Violone (prep. for)	16 ft.
Double open diapason	16 ,,	Posaune ,,	16 ,,

COUPLERS.

Swell to great.	Swell to pedal.
Swell to choir.	Choir ,,
Great to pedal.

Four pedals of combination. One double-action foot pedal to great and pedal coupler, The metal pipes are all of the finest spotted metal, and the organ is a noble example of high-class work.

Moorlands Wesleyan Chapel, Dewsbury.—The new organ, built by Messrs. T. Hopkins, and Sons, York, was opened on Tuesday, Jan. 31, by Mr. James Bottomley, A.C.O., organist of St. John's Church, Dewsbury Moor:—

PART I.

Prelude and Fugue in G	Mendelssohn.
Andante in E flat Allegretto in B flat	Henselt.
Jerusalem the Golden (with variations and finale)	Dr. Spark.

PART II.

Fugue in G minor	J. S. Bach.
Andante Con Moto (violin and organ)	Hesse.
Andante in A minor and major	Batiste.
Quasi Pastorale Finale (in the French style	Dr. J. C. Bridge.

SPECIFICATION OF ORGAN.

The organ contains two complete manuals, great organ and swell CC to G, 56 notes, and pedal organ of 30 notes. It has ten speaking stops and three couplers. The case is of pitch pine and has 29 speaking pipes of bright metal in front. The total number of pipes in the organ is 515, composed as follows:—

Great Organ.
Open diapason	metal	(Gamut)	G to G	49 pipes.
Dulciana	metal and wood	(Tenor)	C to G	56 ,,
Principal	metal		CC to G	56 ,,
Stop flute	wood		,,	56 ,,
Swell Organ.
Gamba	metal	(Tenor)	C to G	44 pipes.
Stop diapason	wood		CC to G	56 ,,
Octave	metal		,,	56 ,,
Flautina	,,		,,	56 ,,
Oboe and bassoon bass	,,		,,	56 ,,
Pedal Organ.
Bourdon	wood		CCC to F	30 pipes.

COUPLERS.

Great to pedal. Swell to great. Great to pedal.

Torrington.—An organ recital was given on January 26th, in the Wesleyan Chapel, Torrington, by Mr. Wesley J. Hammet, organist of the Temple Chapel, Taunton, whose performances were greatly appreciated. The selections made by Mr. Hammet were well calculated to display the capabilities and the beauties of the organ, and the several items on the programme were played with a manipulative skill which won general admiration. The programme was as follows:—

Organ Sonata, No. II. in C (Grave, Adagio. Allegro Maestoso e Vivace, Fuga Allegro Moderato	Mendelssohn.
Allegretto Pastorale	C. Steggall.
Prelude and Fugue in C	Bach.
Andante con Variazioni e Fuga	T. J. Dudeney.
Andante in F sharp minor	S. S. Wesley.
Poco Adagio in D	Henry Smart.
Andante in F	Lefébure Wély.
Chorus, "Heaven and the earth display," ("Atnalie")	Mendelssohn.

The organ has been constructed by Mr. J. E. Minns, of Taunton, upon his improved tubular pneumatic system. The several stops are of individual excellence, while the full organ tone is admirably balanced. The specification is as follows:—

Great Organ.
Open diapason.	Principal.
Claribel flute.	Fifteenth.
Dulciana.
Swell Organ.
Stopped diapason.	Oboe.
Viola.	Tremulant.
Gemshorn.
Pedal Organ.
Bourdon.	Bass flute.
Couplers.
Swell to great.	Swell to pedals.
Great to pedals.

Two composition pedals.

The organ is of attractive appearance, and has been much admired.

Crystal Palace.—Mr. H. W. Weston, F.C.O., gave the recitals on Saturday, February 4th, on the great organ, when the programme contained the following selection:—

March in D major (posthumous)	Mozart.
Romanza in G, op. 40	Beethoven.
Concert Fugue in G	J. L. Krebs.
Pastoral Introduction "Joan of Arc"	Gounod.
Meditation in C	C. St. Saëns.
Bourrée and Variations in B minor (from 2nd Sonata for violin alone)	J. S. Bach.
Finale to Organ Sonata in C	G. A. Macfarren.
Capriccio alla Sonata	Fumagalli.
Largo and Fugue, Finale	Handel.
Nocturne in G minor (No. 11)	Chopin.
Overture "Bohemian Girl"	Balfe.

Salem Chapel, Romford.—A recital was given by Mr. James Bryant, F.C.O., L.Mus., on February 16th. The new organ is entirely constructed on Mr. F. A. Slater's new patent tubular pneumatic system to both manuals, pedals, drawstop-action, and couplers, dispensing with the usual complicated tracker mechanism. The specification was drawn up by Mr. Bryant. The instrument has two manuals and pedal. The programme ran thus:—

Allegro Marziale	Weber.
Impromptu	J. Bryant.
Romanza (Sonata)	Spohr.
Ave Maria	Cherubini.
Largo e Mesto (Sonata)	Beethoven.
Festive March	Smart.
Andante con variazioni (Septuor)	Beethoven.
Slow Movement (Symphony)	Haydn.
Offertoire	Batiste.
Andante quasi Allegretto	Weber.
Slow Movement (Symphony)	Beethoven.
Offertoire	Lefébure Wély.

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS' CALENDAR.

On Tuesday next the library will be open to members from 7 to 10; March 13th, Council Meeting, at 5; April 9th, "Annual College Dinner;" April 10th, Special Lecture, by Dr. E. J. Hopkins; April 24th, Lecture, by Dr. F. J. Sawyer, on "The Primary Rules of Keyboard Fingering;" May 22nd, Lecture; June 26th, Lecture; July 17th, 18th, 19th, F.C.O. Examatinion; July 20th, Diploma Distribution; July 24th, 25th, 26th, A.C.O. Examination; July 27th, Diploma Distribution. Other arrangements and particulars will be duly announced.

E. H. TURPIN, Hon. Sec.

95, Great Russell street, Bloomsbury, W.C.

NOW READY. PRICE ONE SHILLING.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE,

MARCH, 1888,

Containing the Second and Concluding Paper on

MENDELSSOHN'S LETTERS

TO MOSCHELES.

This instalment is made up almost entirely of letters, and is illustrated with some unusually interesting portraits and fac-similes; among the latter the first page of the "Song without Words," as originally written by Mendelssohn, and the first page of the original score of his overture to the "Isles of Fingal," with a comment written on it by Gounod.

FREDERICK WARNE & Co.,
15, Bedford Street, Strand.

CASSON'S
PATENT
Organ - Building System

SEPARATE Pedal Organs for each Manual. Expressive and Controllable Pedal Basses. Perfect control of all Couplers. Reduction of number of Claviers without loss of efficiency, &c., &c. See testimonials from

Mr. W. T. BEST.
Rev. Sir F. A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart.
Dr. SPARK.
Dr. J. C. BRIDGE, M.A.
Dr. E. W. TAYLOR, F.C.O.
The late Mr. J. STIMPSON.
Mr. R. BARTHOLOMEW.
Mr. J. HEYWOOD, Birmingham.
Mr. G. A. AUDSLEY, F.R.I.B.A.
M. A. J. HIPKINS, F.S.A.
&c., &c.

Apply to the Secretary—
CASSON'S PATENT ORGAN CO., LIMITED
DENBIGH.

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, MARCH 3, 1888.

THE TRUTH ABOUT THE ACADEMY ELECTION.

The battle has been fought and won, and the two combatants are, although of course in a very different sense, satisfied with the result. Mr. Barnby was the first to congratulate Mr. Mackenzie on his success, and although he found it necessary to resign the appointment of conductor of the Academy, which he has successfully held for about a year, this was done in a friendly spirit, in order to leave a perfectly free hand to the new Principal; not from any feeling of pique. This dignified and proper conduct on the part of the protagonists is a matter for general congratulation; but the seconds of the principals—the ardent partisans and bottle-holders—are not so easily satisfied. We have received from many quarters, wholly unconnected with either Mr. Mackenzie or Mr. Barnby, all manner of unsolicited information as to the ins and outs of the contest, the influences brought to bear upon the various voters, and the like. Considering ourselves to be the organ and representative of the musical profession in its true interests, we have not thought it desirable to give publicity to this kind of tittle-tattle, and, following the illustrious example of King William III., who tore up a list of conspirators against his reign, we have consigned all these communications to the limbo of the waste-paper basket. On one point only it may be desirable to throw some light, were it only to show on what small causes important issues sometimes depend. Some absurd mystery has been made about the actual figures of the vote, and we may therefore state in an authoritative manner, that of the thirteen votes given, seven were for Mr. Mackenzie and six for Mr. Barnby. One voter being absent in Hanover, was prevented by illness from making the trip across the Channel. Had he been present, the division would probably have been equal, and in that case the casting vote of the Chairman would have determined the result. As it is, the Academy has every reason to congratulate itself upon having had the choice between two such men, to say nothing of other candidates who retired early in the race.

The outsider might think it strange that so much eagerness was shown in the competition for a place yielding only the moderate salary of £500 a year, for which Mr. Barnby was willing to give up at least three times that amount at Eton. But it should be remembered that the Royal Academy is the only musical institution which is supported — miserably supported, it is true—from the public funds, and that its Principal therefore is, so to speak, the only musician officially acknowledged by the State. This in itself is something, and the position, moreover, opens a wide field of beneficial action to a man of artistic spirit. To the tilling of that field, Mr. Mackenzie will now have to turn his undivided attention. There are many new crops to be sown, many tares and brambles to be rooted out. It will require a strong hand, and withal a gentle hand, to reform some of the evils which were quite lately pointed out by a correspondent in THE MUSICAL WORLD, to turn the Academy from a kind of Limited Company for the benefit of certain professors, into a truly national institution. That Mr. Mackenzie has some of the qualifications necessary for such a task may be readily acknowledged. He is an excellent musician, his knowledge of the art is both deep and wide, and his training has been cosmopolitan. As a teacher also he has had experience in Edinburgh, although this, of course, is a very different matter from being at the head of a great musical institution. The Principal of the Royal Academy should not be only a good artist, but also a man of business and a man of the world, and even a good after-dinner speaker, who could represent the body of musicians on public occasions, even as does Sir Frederic Leighton the body of painters. Will Mr. Mackenzie be able to do all this?—that is the question the future must solve. It has been said that the chances are ten to one against a composer possessing these practical and decorative qualifications, and there is little doubt that any music school over which, for instance, Beethoven had presided, would have counted its existence by weeks, if not by days. On the other hand, Mendelssohn achieved excellent results at Leipsic, and Cherubini and Auber did at least fairly well at the Paris Conservatoire. We gladly accept the omen of these names for Mr. Mackenzie. We shall watch his career with interest, and our support, as well as that of every competent writer in the press, will not fail him.

One word we should like to add. Mr. Mackenzie should remember that he has duties as a composer, as well as a principal. The author of "Colomba," and the "Rose of Sharon," should not bury his talent in the dust of practical routine. Let us hope that when once the Academy has been put in proper working order, he will devote at least part of his time to the service of the muse, even as did Sir Sterndale Bennett and Sir George Macfarren before him.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

The first and last items of last Saturday's programme formed a striking contrast, and showed how in modern times composers have cast off the old forms and taken new moulds in which to shape their ideas. For the former was Sterndale Bennett's concert overture "Parisina," and the latter Saint Saëns's symphonic poem "Le Rouct d'Omphale." Bennett's overture is always welcome; its melody appeals irresistibly to the ordinary hearer, while the skill with which its themes are treated is amply sufficient to demonstrate the scholarly resources of its composer. But while Bennett was content to deal with a poetical subject in an orthodox fashion, Saint Saëns, following the example of Liszt and other more modern composers, has chosen the more rhapsodical form of the symphonic poem, in which the themes are treated with greater freedom of key-relation and sequence. The result in this instance is, although never powerful, extremely graceful, and Mr. Manns's interpretation was perfectly sympathetic. Miss Fanny Davies was the soloist, and her rendering of Beethoven's Concerto in G was in all respects worthy of the reputation she has made, being distinguished by refinement and intelligence. We do not like her reading of Brahms's Rhapsody in G minor, but her technique was quite equal to the demands of Rubinstein's exacting "Staccato Etude," which was played with great clearness and brilliancy. The Symphony was the No. 2 in C of Schumann, which was splendidly played, save for a momentary unsteadiness in the third movement, and Madame Patey contributed arias by Handel and Sullivan, in her well-known manner.

POPULAR CONCERTS.

Schumann's quartet in A minor, op. 41, opened the concert last Saturday. It was played in most sympathetic fashion by Messrs. Joachim, Ries, Straus, and Piatti. The first-named and the two latter artists were heard later in Brahms's quartet G. minor, op. 25. Mdlle. Janotha was the pianist. The lady gave as a solo, Chopin's Barcarolle in F sharp major, with her customary force and poetry. Spohr's "Tempo di Minuetto" for two violins received excellent handling from Messrs. Joachim and Straus. The vocalist was Miss Hamlin—she sang "Rose softly blooming," and subsequently a "Frühlingslied and Reiselied" by Mendelssohn—which were very well received. Miss Carmichael rendered the accompaniments with her usual graceful delicacy.

St. James's Hall was filled to overflowing last Monday evening, as it never fails to be when Madame Schumann plays. Of all the great pianists who come to England there is certainly none more popular, and in this case we may almost say beloved, than this gifted lady, but the regard in which she is held is only too well deserved. Her natural gifts are great; she has a beautiful touch, always firm, yet of the utmost delicacy when requisite, and in addition an exquisite sense of rhythm and phrasing. But what makes Madame Schumann stand out alone in the ever-increasing ranks of great pianists is her deep conscientiousness and reverence for the composer's intentions, to which she sacrifices all the (to some artists) enticing allurements of "new readings," and the like. She is an ideal representative of pure and classical pianoforte playing, and as such is worthy of the high place which even now, in spite of advancing years, she retains. Her appearance was the signal for a perfect storm of applause, again and again renewed, at the conclusion of a superb performance of Beethoven's Fantasia Sonata, the finale in particular being rendered with a vèrve wonderful considering the artist's great age. Beethoven's noble quartet in C sharp minor, op. 131, opened the concert, and received a splendid interpretation from MM. Joachim, Ries, Straus, and Piatti, its intricacies being mastered with a clearness and breadth of style it would be hard to equal. Miss Liza Lehmann was the vocalist, singing songs by Gordigiani and Schumann with great delicacy and taste; and Mozart's Divertimento, or rather the first and last three movements of it, delightfully played by MM. Joachim, Straus, and Piatti completed the programme.

THE LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The last but one of this series of concerts took place at St. James's Hall on Wednesday afternoon, when the principal novelty, or quasi novelty, presented was a performance, for the second time this season and by special desire, of Liszt's "Todtentarz" (Danse Macabre) for pianoforte and orchestra. That the pianist of the occasion was Mr. Fritz Hartvigson will be taken as a matter of course. With a thorough mastery of its formidable technical difficulties, this artist has so completely entered into the weird spirit of the Hungarian composer's fantastic and remarkable work, that he may be fairly said to have made it his own. At the present time, at any rate, as its successful interpreter he stands alone in this country. The remaining orchestral features of the concert consisted of familiar works, and included good performances, under the conductorship of Mr. Henschel, of Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony, the overture to "The Flying Dutchman," and Mendelssohn's "Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage." The duo-nocturne from Berlioz's "Beatrice et Bénedict," was rendered with much charm and finish by Mrs. Henschel and Miss Marguerite Hall. The Princess of Wales and her daughters were present.

ALBERT HALL.

The Welsh Concert on St. David's day, given at the Albert Hall, gained some artistic interest from the appearance amongst the singers of Nikita, the American prima donna. This young lady has just returned from the Continent, where, as we had previously occasion to state, she has astonished and delighted the natives, especially the German bards very much. In other respects also her tour has been of decided advantage to her. Her voice has gained strength, as it naturally would from day to day in one so young, and she also sings with more feeling and expression. In spite of the acoustic impediments of the Albert Hall, her voice told well, and she brought down the house in "Deh Vieni," and the simple ditties which she added for the benefit of a popular audience. Madame Patey, Mr. Lloyd and Miss Mary Davies were amongst the other artists.

PRINCES' HALL.

The second of Mr. Charles Wade's Chamber Concerts was given at this Hall on Tuesday evening. Mr. Wade took upon himself the lion's share of the vocal music, and sang songs by Handel, Mendelssohn, Gounod, and Batson, with considerable taste and intelligence, but he seemed to be somewhat affected by the bitter weather that has lately prevailed. Miss Bertha Moore was the other vocalist, singing Haydn's "My mother bids me bind my hair," and Henschel's "O, hush thee my babie," which were excellently suited to her fresh and pleasing voice. The instrumental portion of the programme was in the hands of Señor Gomez (clarionet), Monsieur Ernest Gillett ('cello), and Signor Carlo Duccei (pianoforte), and consisted of a trio by Walckiers, op. 96, Beethoven's trio, op 11, some solos for 'cello, and two movements from Weber's Duo Concertante, op. 48, for clarionet and piano. Señor Gomez has a good tone and phrases well. M. Gillet's tone is somewhat harsh, but in other respects he proved himself a capable artist.

Dr. BRADFORD'S "JUDITH."

A performance of this elaborate oratorio was given at St. James's Hall on Tuesday evening, in aid of the Chapel and Organ Fund of the Royal Naval School. The performance extended ever close upon three hours, although portions of the work were omitted. Detailed analysis of the score would, in such circumstances far exceed the limits of our space. Suffice it to say that counterpoint and other scholarly devices have been the composer's chief aim, and, in that respect, his score offers much that is interesting to the student. On the other hand, the music is wanting in character, and a feeling of monotony is not always avoided. "Judith," in fact, is a specimen of a type which is now somewhat antiquated, but, in its particular sphere, occupies a creditable position. The composer conducted his own work, and was assisted by Miss Anna Williams, Miss Hope Glenn; Mr. Bernard Lane taking the place of Mr. Charles Banks at very short notice; Mr. Lawrence Fryer, Mr. Frederick King, and Mr. Brereton. An efficient band and chorus had been provided, Mr. E. H. Turpin ably presiding at the organ. Several of the numbers were warmly applauded, and the instrumental introduction to the second part had to be repeated.

MR. J. A. DYKES'S PIANOFORTE RECITAL.

At the present time, when pianoforte players are so numerous and the standard of merit is high, it is by no means easy for a young pianist to make any mark. Mr. Dykes's programme last week included Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue, Beethoven's Moonlight sonata, Mendelssohn's Variations Sérieuses, and pieces by Schumann, Chopin, Raff, and Rubinstein, from which it will be seen that Mr. Dykes did not shrink from setting himself a severe task to perform, and risking unfavourable comparison with the interpretation of well-known artists. It is, therefore, high praise to say that he performed his arduous task in a thoroughly creditable manner from beginning to end, and that without a note of music before him. It must be owned that his conception of Bach was lacking in breadth, and that the opening of that crucial test, the Moonlight sonata, was a little heavy; but as Mr. Dykes warmed to his work and his nervousness wore off, he played better and better. It was not until the slow movement of the Beethoven sonata that the peculiar singing touch which we are used to look for in pupils of Frau Schumann became apparent, but afterwards it was very striking. Perhaps Mr. Dykes was most successful in Mendelssohn, Schumann, and Raff. We understand that he has received instruction from the latter, and no doubt plays his master's compositions con amore. Taken as a whole, Mr. Dykes's playing strikes us as singularly free from exaggeration, the fault from which so many young pianists of the present day suffer. Mr. Dykes controls himself, and keeps the composer first and the executant second, as a true artist always should. At the same time, he does not lack brilliance or fire when it is needed, although he confines himself to making strictly legitimate effects. His technique is good, and as we have remarked, his touch particularly so. On this occasion Mr. Dykes claimed to take rank as a pianist, but we know him to be also a composer; and if the pianoforte trio performed a few weeks ago at a Monday Popular Concert be a fair type of his writing, we hope that the next time he appears before the public it will be in the double capacity of pianist and composer.

NOVELLO ORATORIO CONCERTS.

After a prolonged absence in Italy, Mr. Mackenzie appeared last week in the conductor's seat, at the Novello Oratorio Concert, and was greeted by the audience as well as by the chorus with the warmth due to a musician of his distinction. Although the average execution has not as yet reached the high standard which is a matter of constant co-operation at least as much as of individual merit, these concerts have a distinct function in our musical life. For while our old-established choral societies too generally limit themselves to a very few works of general popularity, the practical as well as the artistic object of the Novello Oratorio Concerts is at least partly to bring forward the composition of modern, and more especially modern English, musicians. Such a work, Sir Arthur Sullivan's "The Golden Legend," occupied the chief place in last night's programme. No special enterprise, indeed, was needed to revive this charming cantata, which, ever since its production at Leeds, has drawn large audiences and excited enthusiasm wherever it has been heard in an English concert room, although it will be remembered that the Berlin critics, showing less judgment than might have been expected, failed to recognise its merits. Those merits have been too frequently insisted upon here to require any further mention. Persons who fail to recognise the weird charm of the prologue with its novel effect of the cathedral bells become vocal, the subtle humour of the contrapuntal fiend, and the sweetness of some of the melodies, must be singularly obtuse, and the composer may well rest satisfied with the verdict of the vox populi, which, in this case, is in full accord with the opinion of competent judges. One of the advantages of the "Golden Legend" is that it presents no very great difficulties to competent singers. The music, though well written, and at times scholarly, is simple and straightforward withal, and the chorus, having evidently been trained with every care, did ample justice to the large ensembles, the unaccompanied evening hymn, "O gladsome light," being more especially sung in a refined and accurate manner. The soloists, Madame Nordica, Madame Patey, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Watkin Mills, are more or less identified with the parts undertaken by them, and it will suffice to say that one and all did their best and materially contributed to the general success of the performance. The "Golden Legend" was preceded by a concert overture from the pen of Mr. Oliver King, a promising young composer, who conducted his own work. The overture is well designed and effectively scored. It is earnest, not to say sombre, in character, and the opening theme almost suggests a funeral march, although at the end a brilliant climax in the major key is reached. Mr. King has not supplied a programme, but it may be conjectured that the struggle and final triumph of the human soul or, it may be, of a definite hero has been the subject of his as of so many other compositions.—The Times.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A pianoforte recital was given by Mr. Algernon Lindo at the Steinway Hall last Monday. Mr. Lindo opened the programme with Beethoven's sonata (appassionata) in F minor, and in the course of the evening gave several pieces by Chopin, Liszt, and others. Mr. Lawrence Kellie was the vocalist, and Mr. Frank Lindo contributed a recitation.

In spite of the bitter weather, a full and appreciative audience was attracted to St. James's Hall on Thursday night, the 23rd Feb., to hear "Elijah" once more given by the Sacred Harmonic Society. The performance of this old favourite among oratorios was in all respects satisfactory, the choruses being taken with spirit and precision, and Madame Patey and Mr. Lloyd being in particularly fine voice.

On Friday, the 24th Feb., Herr Bonawitz gave the fifth of his series of six historical recitals on organ, harpsichord, and pianoforte, at the Portman Rooms: commencing with a dismal organ composition by Conrad Paumann, 1410-1473, that will probably be permitted to return unregretted to the merited oblivion whence it has been disinterred. A relic of A. de Cabecon, 1500-1566, with some definite contrapuntal effects, was more deserving of notice; but the exceedingly poor specimen of an organ that was at Herr Bonawitz's disposal, made a pleasing reproduction of these quaint old works quite impossible. On the other hand, Herr Bonawitz displayed the almost forgotten capabilities of an old two-manual harpsichord to great advantage. For accompanying voices, this instrument, with its thin orchestral tone would be really valuable; and it would be a public benefit if it could be reintroduced for the practising of the many would-be players that persist in torturing their neighbours' ears with strumming on noisy modern pianofortes.

TOLLINGTON PARK.—The New Court Choral Society gave very good renderings of Rossini's "Stabat Mater" and Cowen's "Rose Maiden," on Friday evening, February 24th, the soloists being Madame Clara West, Miss Rose Dafforne, Mr. E. Bryant, and Mr. W. G. Forington. All went off well; but perhaps the gem of the performance was the duet "Quis est homo," which evoked hearty and prolonged applause. The accompanist was Miss A. Dearden; conductor, Mr. T. Bound. There was a full room, notwithstanding the severity of the weather.

The Strolling Players gave the 2nd concert of their sixth season on Saturday evening last, at St. James's Hall, to a large and friendly audience. The pièce de résistance was a symphony in F, by Gouvy, which was announced as being played for the first time in England. It would, perhaps, have been no great loss had the work been allowed to remain in obscurity, for its melody is trivial, and at times savours strongly of Offenbach. Of the four movements the andante con moto is perhaps the best, the themes being broader and the treatment more dignified than in the other three. The principal remaining items of a very long programme were Beethoven's overture to "Fidelio," Massenet's "Scènes pittoresques," and Handel's "Arioso," for violin, harp, and organ, the violin part being well played by Mr. H. M. Morris. The principal defect of the orchestra is the quality of the strings, which is very poor, but the members (including several ladies) play with care, and with better instruments, better results would, no doubt, be obtained. Miss Effie Clements and Miss Eleanor Rees obtained marked favour for their vocal selections, and Herr Pollitzer, in the absence from England of the hon. conductor, Mr. Norfolk Megone, conducted.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Ingenious advertisement and the reputation obtained in England by a clever Australian story, were the means of arousing some interest in the recent production at the Princess's of a play founded upon it, entitled "The Mystery of a Hansom Cab," and have probably borne no small part in the crowded state of the house during the past week. Of the piece itself little more need be said than that it emphasises once again a lesson of which several illustrations have lately been afforded, viz., that successful novels, especially those of the conundrum kind, seldom make good plays, for the simple reason that, owing to the conceived exigencies of dramatic construction, the answer has to be given first and the conundrum propounded afterwards. A detective story like this, or the Leavenworth case, or several others of the same class, when the incidents are viewed through the wrong end of a telescope, can only be saved from utter dulness by some merits over and above the interest to be derived from an inverted plot—such as well-contrived situations, smart dialogue, or clever touches of character, all which qualities are conspicuously absent in the present instance. Not that we are disposed to accept without reserve what is generally received as a cardinal rule of dramatic construction, that no secret should ever be kept from an audience. The element of surprise, of suddenness, has at any rate served the purpose of some of the most experienced dramatists of modern times for producing powerful effects; and even the favourite instance cited so often on behalf of this restriction—the screen scene in the "School for Scandal"—may, perhaps, be considered in two ways. Certainly the audience are all the time aware that Lady Teazle is behind the screen; but do they know that Charles Surface is going to throw it down? In Sardou's "Nos intimes," too, a dexterously enough constructed piece, the whole hinges upon the careful guarding of a secret from the spectators till the very end. The interpreters made the best of the small opportunities afforded them. Miss Grace Hawthorne was sympathetic and interesting as Sal Rawlins. That excellent actor, Mr. Fernandez, in an exceptionally weak heavy father's part, was constrained to disguise not only his features but his talents. Mr. J. H. Barnes enlisted sympathy as a good-natured Irishman, and Miss Eva Sothern was throughout engaging and natural. The comic business, much of which had little relevancy to the story, was well fulfilled by Miss Drummond and Miss Cicely Richards; and Mr. Frank Wright and Mr. Ernst Leicester made excellent stage detectives.

Music Publishers' Weekly List.

PIANOFORTE.

Jolly Brick Polka	M. S. Barron...	Swan & Co.
Twilight Dream, A	"	"

VOCAL.

Slave Singing at Midnight	W. H. Bentley	London Mus. Pub. Co.
Daily Exercises for mezzo-soprano, soprano, and tenor	A. B. Bach ...	Metzler.

Next Week's Music.

THIS DAY (SATURDAY).

Afternoon Concert..	Crystal Palace.	3
Popular Concert	St. James's Hall.	3

MONDAY, 5.

Popular Concert	St. James's Hall.	8.30

TUESDAY, 6.

Mr. Malcolm Lawson's Concert	Queen's Gate Hall.	8
London Symphony Concert	St. James's Hall.	8.30
Chamber Music	Princes' Hall	8.30

WEDNESDAY, 7.

Ballad Concert	St. James's Hall.

THURSDAY, MARCH 8.

Herr Max Schrattenholz	Steinway Hall.	3
Miss Low	Kensington Town Hall.	8

FOREIGN.

BERLIN, Feb. 24.—Von Bülow has arranged to add a fifth Beethoven evening to the series he gave last year. The programme will include the Sonatas F minor, op. 2; D major, op. 10; B flat major, op. 25; A flat major, op. 29; F major, op. 54; E minor, op. 90; besides the Rondo in G, op. 51, No. 2. and the Andante favori in F. At the Philharmonic Concert conducted by him a few days ago, Bazzini's overture to "King Lear" was played, and made an excellent impression. Fräulein Kleeberg has returned here, and continues to excite great admiration. Much interest was aroused in the Tschaikowsky concert. The Russian composer takes, and deserves to take, high rank among modern musicians. The programme included the following works:—Symphonic poem "Romeo and Juliet," First Pianoforte Concerto (played by Herr Siloti), Prelude and Fugue out of orchestral suite, Andante from string quartet, songs, and overture "1812." The band worked well to give effect to these masterly compositions, Tschaikowsky conducting with firmness and dignity. The beautiful songs were well sung by Fräulein Aline Friede. The Wagner memorial celebration by the united Berlin and Potsdam Wagner Society was allowed by the Emperor to take place in the Royal Opera House. The selection of music was directed by Herr Schröder, and included a poor rendering of the Symphony in C, the "Parsifal" Introduction, and a large excerpt from the "Götterdämmerung," in which the "Trauermarsch" was especially well played. The "Kaisermarsch" evoked loud demonstrations from the audience, who thereby testified their loyalty and their gratitude to the Emperor.

PROVINCIAL.

BRADFORD.—On the 17th ult. Mr. Hallé paid another flying visit to the town, his band and the chorus usually engaged for the full-dress subscription concerts giving another of these. The Verdi "Requiem" was the piece de resistance, and was not a flawless performance, probably because the singers were not quite at home with their conductor, Mr. Hallé, taking them over from Dr. Bridge's (Chester) coaching, and then the two doctors apparently differing on sundry points, as might naturally be expected where a conductor has not his own choir-master. There was, nevertheless, some fine singing during the night, notably in the Sixty-third Psalm, Mendelssohn's music showing off the choir rarely. The "Reformation" symphony, and the "Festival" overture were the other works of the night. In the Requiem Miss Annie Marriett, Madame de Fonblanque, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Gilbert Campbell were a fine quartet, singing with almost uniform accuracy, and admirable spirit. The anticipated resignation of the Festival Choral Society conductor, to which reference has been made, happily did not assume concrete form, the committee probably inducing him not to give it formal shape. This is very pleasing at the present juncture, and will give the Society time to pull itself together for a crisis in its affairs, which cannot be long staved off. Mr. F. S. Sewell, formerly of Bradford, and now at the Royal College of Music, has declined a lucrative post as organist at the Cape. Miss Emily Skinner and Mr. Charles Ould took a prominent part in a concert of English music here on Tuesday. A partita by C. H. H. Parry, trios by G. Onslow and C. E. Hornsley (the latter a well known work), and Dr. Stanford's 'cello sonato in A, were the principal pieces. The lady also gave an admirable romance by Joachim and Spohr's barcarolle. A gavotte by Dr. Anre was Mr. Ould's solo. The pianist (and entreprenneur) Mr. S. Midgley, took a rôle part in the performances, and a Miss Lummett, with a very powerful contralto voice, gave songs.

A LUXURY

A LUXURY
A LUXURY
A LUXURY
A LUXURY

NO LONGER UNKNOWN IN ENGLAND.
BARBER & COMPANY'S
FRENCH COFFEE,
As used in Paris.
In its Highest Perfection.
TENPENCE PER POUND.
("See that you have none other.")
2lb. (sample) in tins sent free per
Parcels Post for 2s. 4d.,
Or 5 lb. for 5s. 6d.
Postal Orders from 1s. 6d. to 10s. 6d.
May now be had from all Post Offices.

A LUXURY
A LUXURY
A LUXURY
A LUXURY

This is the choicest and most carefully selected Coffee, "Roasted on the French Principle," and mixed with the Finest Bruges Chicory.

2 lb. Sample Tins sent per Parcels Post to any Post Town in the United Kingdom for 2s. 4d.;
5 lb. in Tins for 5s. 6d.

ONFA CONGO

ONFA
ONFA
ONFA
ONFA

NEVER Sold in England before at the price.
The Pick of the Season's Growth.
BARBER & CO.'S
RICH SIRUPY
Onfa Congo.

ONFA
ONFA
ONFA
ONFA

ONE SHILLING & SIXPENCE PER POUND.

A TEA abounding in Strength and High Quality. Never Sold before in England at the Price.

COMPARE
It with that sold by others at Two Shillings.

6½ lb. sent by Parcels Post for 10s. 9d. to any Post Town in the United Kingdom and Channel Islands.
4½ lb. for 7s. 6d.; 2½ lb. Samples for 4s. 3d.

BARBER AND COMPANY,

274, Regent Circus, Oxford Street, W.
61, Bishopsgate Street, City.
11, Boro' High Street, S.E.
102, Westbourne Grove, W.
42, Great Titchfield Street, W.
King's Cross, N.

ALSO

BRIGHTON, HASTINGS, MANCHESTER, BRISTOL, LIVERPOOL, PRESTON, AND BIRMINGHAM

*Postal Orders, from 2s. 6d. to 10s. 6d., may now be had for One Penny from all Post Offices.
Cheques to be crossed "London and Westminster."*

DEFRIES' Safety Water White Oil.

The Purest, Whitest, and Best Burning Mineral Oil in England.

EQUAL IN QUALITY TO OILS SOLD UNDER FANCY NAMES, at from 1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d. per gall
FOR USE IN ALL LAMPS AND STOVES.

PRICE 1s. PER GALLON.

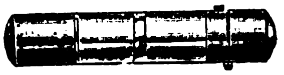
FREE DELIVERED IN LONDON AND ALL SUBURBS.

Minimum, 2 gallons. The 5 and 10 gallon drums are fitted with taps. Drums charged, and full price allowed when returned.

Terms: Cash on or before delivery. Deposit Accounts opened for Oil.

DEFRIES' SAFETY LAMP & OIL CO., LIMITED,
43 and 44, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON, E.C.

THORNHILL'S
NEW "GLOVE" BOTTLE.



FOR PERFUME & SMELLING SALTS.

Large Variety of Patterns at Various Prices

THORNHILL'S
TOILET CASES
FOR LADIES AND GENTLEMEN

THORNHILL'S ARTISTIC FANS,

A LARGE and VARIED STOCK of the BEST QUALITY.

PRESENTS.

—o—

THORNHILL'S
Fully Illustrated
LIST
OF
LATEST
NOVELTIES

POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

THORNHILL'S
OPERA GLASSES.

IN GREAT VARIETY.

THORNHILL'S
Guaranteed Razors Singly or in Sets.

W. THORNHILL & CO., TO THE QUEEN & ROYAL FAMILY. 144, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON. ESTABLISHED 1734.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER'S

LINEN COLLARS, CUFFS, AND SHIRTS.

Samples and Price Lists Post Free.

COLLARS—LADIES' 3-fold, from 3s. 6d. per doz. GENTS' 4-fold, 4s. 11d. to 5s. 11d. per doz.

CUFFS—For Ladies or Gentlemen, 5s. 11d. to 10s. 6d. per doz.

SHIRTS—Best quality Long Cloth, with 4-fold Linen Fronts 35s. 6d. per half-doz. (To measure, 2s. extra.)

N.B.—OLD SHIRTS made as good as new with best materials in Neckbands, Cuffs, and Fronts, for 14s. the half-doz.

ROBINSON AND CLEAVER, BELFAST.

Dr. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For sore throat, hoarseness, and relaxed throat, also for improving the voice

FOR SINGING AND SPEAKING

without fatiguing the voice. Celebrated in every town in Europe, India, America, and the Colonies. Testimonials from Patti, Trebelli, Patey, Santley, and the most eminent medical men.

Sold in boxes; 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d.; also in bottles for abroad.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE & RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & Co.,

Manufacturers and Importers of all kinds of Strings
FOR
VIOLIN, VIOLA, CELLO, DOUBLE BASS, HARP,
ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO,
Have always in STOCK the Largest ASSORTMENT of any House in the World.

6, GOLDEN SQUARE, W.

A BLESSING IN EVERY FAMILY.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.

These Remedies have stood the test of FIFTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE and are pronounced the best medicines for family use. Tens of thousands of written testimonials bear witness to their marvellous curative properties. They are acknowledged by the whole civilised world to be the greatest efficacy in every form of disease. Sold by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors.

Manufactured only at THOMAS HOLLOWAY'S ESTABLISHMENT
78, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.
N.B.—Advice gratis at the above address, daily, between the hours of 11 and 4 or by letter

ASCHERBERG PIANOS.

"I only perform an act of justice when I ascribe my successes to a great extent to the excellent Instruments from your factory, on which I was favoured to play before the public. Remain convinced that I shall at all times and everywhere give preference to your Pianos over all others, and accept the assurance of my unbounded esteem.

Respectfully,

VLADIMIR VON PACHMANN."

ASCHERBERG PIANO DEPOT,

211, REGENT STREET, W.

PEARS' SOAP
THE WORLD RENOWNED
A PERFECTLY PURE SOAP • IT KEEPS THE PORES OPEN, THE COMPLEXION CLEAR, AND THE HANDS AND SKIN SOFT • A VERY DURABLE SOAP
IN PRAISE OF PEARS' SOAP
I HAVE FOUND IT MATCH - LESS FOR THE HANDS AND COM - PLEX - ION.
Adelina Patti
SPECIALLY APPOINTED
ICH DIEN

ENGLISH COMPLEXION SOAP.

BY ROYAL WARRANT, MAKERS TO THE PRINCE OF WALES.

ESTABLISHED IN LONDON 100 YEARS, FIFTEEN INTERNATIONAL AWARDS

A BRIGHT HEALTHFUL SKIN AND COMPLEXION ENSURED BY USING

PEARS' SOAP.

AS RECOMMENDED BY THE GREATEST ENGLISH AUTHORITY ON THE SKIN,
PROF. SIR ERASMUS WILSON, F.R.S., PRES. OF THE ROYAL COL. OF SURGEONS, ENGLAND,
AND ALL OTHER LEADING AUTHORITIES ON THE SKIN.

COUNTLESS BEAUTEOUS LADIES, INCLUDING MRS. LILLIE LANGTRY, RECOMMEND ITS VIRTUES AND PREFER PEARS' SOAP TO ANY OTHER.

The following from the world-renowned Songstress is a sample of thousands of Testimonials:

Testimonial from Madame ADELINA PATTI.

"I HAVE FOUND IT MATCHLESS FOR THE HANDS AND COMPLEXION." Adelina Patti

PEARS' SOAP IS FOR SALE THROUGHOUT THE CIVILIZED WORLD.

Printed and Published by MACRAE, CURTICE & Co. (LIMITED), 12, Catherine Street, Strand, W.C.

WEEKLY.]

The Musical World.

ESTABLISHED 1822.
REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED; IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST WEEKLY, 17/6 PER ANNUM (Payable in advance).

VOL. 67.—NO. 10. SATURDAY, MARCH 10, 1888. PRICE 3D. Unstamped. 4D. By Post.

THE

KARN AMERICAN ORGANS,

Manufactured by D. W. KARN & CO.,

WOODSTOCK, ONTARIO, CANADA.

The Karn Organ is a reproduction of the Pipe Organ in miniature, of pre-eminent value as an effective music exponent for the Home.

OUR AIM has not been to see how cheaply an organ can be built, BUT HOW CHEAPLY A FIRST-CLASS ORGAN can be made.

OUR CLAIM is that we are building organs equal to, if not surpassing, all others, at the very lowest reasonable prices.

COMPARISON CHEERFULLY INVITED.

New Illustrated Catalogue & Price Lists Free of the

SOLE EUROPEAN AGENTS:

THE SCHREIBER PIANO CO.,
18, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W.

To the Trade and Profession.

OLD VIOLINS.

MESSRS. BEARE AND SON, Manufacturers and Importers of every Description of Musical Instruments, Strings, Fittings, &c.,
34, Rathbone Place, London, W.,
Invite an inspection of their collection of old Violins,
All genuine examples of the celebrated old Masters.
Over 300 old instruments from which to select.

Old Violins from £5.
Old Tenors from £5.
Old Violoncellos from £10.
Old Double-Basses from £15.

Sole Wholesale Agents for James Tubb's celebrated Bows.
Bows by the old makers also frequently in stock.
Tested strings unequalled for durability and equality of tone.
Repairs of every kind of Musical Instrument executed promptly by experienced workmen.

BEARE AND SON,
34, RATHBONE PLACE, LONDON, W.

Special Notices.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF SOUTH WALES AND MONMOUTHSHIRE,
CARDIFF.

The Council of the University College of South Wales and Monmouthshire, are prepared to appoint a Lecturer in Music.

The stipend of the Lecturer will be £100 per annum, with a share of the fees.

Candidates must send in their applications, with testimonials, not later than March 24th.

For further information apply to

IVOR JAMES, REGISTRAR.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—MR. CHARLES FRY will recite to-day in Mendelssohn's "Pidipus," and the "Minstrel's Curse," a Ballad for declamation, with orchestra, by F. Corder. Conductor, Mr. August Manns.

SOCIETY OF ARTS PRACTICAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.
THE NEXT EXAMINATION
will be held at the Society's house, 18, John Street, Adelphi, W.C., and will commence on THURSDAY, the 24th May.
Full particulars on application to the Secretary.
H. TRUEMAN WOOD,
Secretary.

STEINWAY HALL, LOWER SEYMOUR STREET, W.—Herr Ehrenfechter's LECTURE, WEDNESDAY, March 14th, at 3 o'clock. Subject: "The Mechanism in Pianoforte Playing, on Deppe's Principles." Tickets 2s. 6d. and 1s., to be obtained of Messrs. Weekes and Co., 14, Hanover-street, W., and at the Hall.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised & Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR

THE VOICE,

By T. A. Wallworth.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Madame Alwina Valleria, Mr. Iver M'Kay, and other successful Vocalists:

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & CO. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

TO ORGANISTS.—For Professional Practice, Teaching, or Concert purpose, and Home use, the "Bach Model" Pedal Instrument is only reliable substitute for a pipe organ. For design, improved action, connections, and tone, it embraces the merits of the highest class instruments; and without paying an exorbitant price you may have an instrument with organ measurements that removes the deficiencies hitherto experienced in pedal instruments.—Apply for illustrated lists, terms, and prices, to J. L. Scholefield, Musical Instrument Manufacturer, Huddersfield.

DRURY LANE.—AUGUSTUS HARRIS, Lessee and Manager.—EVERY EVENING, at 7.30. MORNING PERFORMANCES on SATURDAY, at 1.30. Augustus Harris's NINTH ANNUAL PANTOMIME, PUSS IN BOOTS. Children half-price on payment at the doors, Morning Performances only. The Performances now commence with the Transformation Scene and Harlequinade, followed by the Opening. Box-office open daily from 10.0 to 6.0.

DRURY LANE.—LAST NIGHTS of PUSS IN BOOTS, which will be WITHDRAWN on SATURDAY, March 24.

Institutes and Colleges.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, KENSINGTON GORE, LONDON, S.W.

Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.

President - - H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES, K.G.
Director - - Sir GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L., LL.D.

Next College Concert, March 14th, at 7.30 p.m.

Associate Examination—
The Examination for 1888 is fixed for April 16th.

Forms and particulars may be obtained from the Registrar, Mr. GEORGE WATSON, at the College.

CHARLES MORLEY, Honorary Secretary.

UNIVERSITY OF TRINITY COLLEGE, TORONTO. (The Church of England University of Upper Canada.)

FACULTY OF MUSIC.

The next Examinations for the degree of Bachelor of Music will be held simultaneously in Toronto and London in Easter week, 1888. Women are admissable to these examinations. For particulars apply to Rev. E. K. Kendal, D.C.L., Registrar for England, Southsea.

TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON. For MUSICAL EDUCATION and EXAMINATION, &c., and for the Granting of Certificates and Diplomas in Music. Inst. 1872.

President - - The EARL of ABERDEEN.

LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN PIANOFORTE-PLAYING, ORGAN, SOLO-SINGING, &c. Arrangaments are being made for holding Examinations in Instrumental and Vocal Music at the following, amongst other, centres:—March 26 to 31, Truro, Redruth, Alton, Bedford, Margate; April 9 to 14, Redhill; April 16 to 21, Jersey, May 14 to 19, Brentwood, Peterborough, Portsmouth, Midhurst, Ware, Maidstone; May 21 to 26, London, S.E., Belfast, Edinburgh, Dumfries; May 28 to June 2, Swansea, Carmarthen, Haverfordwest, Stroud, Worcester; June 4 to 9, Southport, Preston, Newcastle, Malton, Glasgow, Ayr; June 11 to 16, Bristol, Exeter, Salisbury, Taunton, Weymouth, Southampton, Cheltenham; June 18 to 23, Liverpool, Swindon, Newport, Brighton, Surbiton; June 25 to 30, Manchester, Eccles, Stockport, Colchester, Bury St. Edmunds, Yarmouth; July 2 to 7, Leeds, Lancaster, Bradford, Cleator Moor, Lancaster, Harrogate, Keighley, Keswick; July 9 to 14, London; July 16 to 21, Birmingham, Leicester, Bedford, Leamington, Shrewsbury; July 23 to 28, Wolverhampton, Walsall, Blackburn, Halstead, Croydon. These dates are subject to alteration.

Applications for particulars and regulations should be made to the Secretary, Trinity College, London, or to the Local Secretary of the centre. A complete list of the latter can be had from the College.

By Order of the Academical Board.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, W.

GUILD OF ORGANISTS, 35, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C.

Patron—The Right Rev. THE LORD BISHOP OF LONDON.

PRESIDENTS.
The REV. CANON SIR F. H. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., Mus. Doc.
Sir HERBERT OAKELEY, Bart., Mus. Doc.
Sir ROBERT STEWART, Mus. Doc.
Vice-President—WILLIAM PINNEY, Mus. Bac., Oxon.
Warden—CHARLES VINCENT, Mus. Doc., Oxon.

Established to advance the cause of Church music and the truest interests of its Professors, etc.

Members of the Church of England and Ireland, and the Episcopal Church of Scotland, are eligible for election, Subscription: Professional Organists (Associates) 10s. 6d. per annum; Amateurs (Members) 15s. per annum; Life subscription, 5 guineas.

Next Fellowship examination in Easter Week.

Prospectus and further particulars may be obtained from the Hon. Sec., Dr. J. H. Lewis, Staines, Middlesex.

London Organ School and International College of Music.

Established 1865, by the Rev. SCOTSON CLARK, Mus.B.
Patron—His Grace The ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY.
Principal—HENRY CLARK.

THE NEXT STUDENTS' MATINEE MUSICALE will take place on SATURDAY, March 10th.

Piano, Singing, Violin, 'Cello, Flute, Harp, Organ Lessons, with Practice, and Harmony, Private Lessons and Classes.

Candidates for Musical Degrees at any of the English Universities are expressly prepared for the Matriculation Examinations by Oxford and Cambridge graduates (in honours). Branches at Kensington and St. John's Wood.

Apply to the Director of Classes, T. H. Y. TROTTER, M.A., Mus.Bac., Oxon., 3, Princes Street, Cavendish Square, W. (close to Oxford Circus).

Publishers' Announcements.

"BIRD RAPTURES,"

Song (for Soprano).
WORDS BY CHRISTINA G. ROSSETTI.
Music by MOIR CLARK.

PRESS OPINIONS.

"'Bird Raptures' is a song of exceptional merit. The accompaniment plays an important part, and contains several original and charming effects."—THE MUSICAL WORLD, June 11, 1887.

"One of the most earnest and beautiful songs that has appeared for many a long day."—Musical Standard, Dec. 23, 1887.

"When the public can appreciate a song like this, the trade of the vulgar ballad-monger will be gone."—Musical Review, December, 1887.

BY THE SAME COMPOSER,
"BANVA,"
Four Sketches for Pianoforte Duet.

"Admirably written, and marked by an originality which will recommend them to pianists of culture."—THE MUSICAL WORLD, June 11, 1887.

STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER, AND CO., 84, New Bond Street, W.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE "JOLLY BRICK" POLKA.

By M. S. BARRON.

PRICE 3s.

"Is bright and danceable."—News of the World.

"This is a cheerful and sprightly piece, with well marked accentuation. It presents no difficulties of execution even to the young player."—Dundee Advertiser.

"One of the brighest and most sprightly polkas we have met with for a long time. The key is E flat, changing to B flat. The piece is quite above the common run of dance music."—Musical Standard.

ALSO,

A TWILIGHT DREAM.

FOR PIANO.

By M. S. BARRON.

PRICE 3s.

"An interesting piece, with a melody for the left hand."—Musical Standard.

LONDON: SWAN & CO., 4, GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, W.

IN SIX GRADES.
PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH.

Under the Sanction and Approval of the Rev. Sir FREDERICK A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., M.A., Mus. Doc., and of Sir G. A. MACFARREN, Mus. Doc.

THE MUSICIAN:

A GUIDE FOR PIANOFORTE STUDENTS,

By RIDLEY PRENTICE.

CONTAINS ANALYSES OF WELL-KNOWN PIECES PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED, ENABLING THE PUPIL TO UNITE A STUDY OF MUSICAL FORM WITH THE ORDINARY PIANOFORTE PRACTICE.

Saturday Review.—"We are far from suggesting that there is any royal road for acquiring technical knowledge, but we are quite certain Mr. Ridley Prentice's road is in every way the pleasantest that has yet been laid before any pianoforte student."

Academy.—"A knowledge of form is imparted in simple and pleasant language. We heartily commend it to all who desire to understand, satisfactorily interpret, and enjoy beautiful music."

Graphic.—"Written with the laudable purpose of helping the pianoforte student to understand and enjoy beautiful music."

School Board Chronicle.—"A useful book for earnest teachers."

Musical Review.—"Mr. Ridley Prentice has newly developed an important though much neglected branch of the teacher's duties."

Monthly Musical Record.—"No more valuable work of the kind is in existence."

W. SWAN SONNENSCHEIN & CO., PATERNOSTER SQUARE:
And all Book and Music Sellers.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER'S

ROYAL IRISH CAMBRIC POCKET-HANDKERCHIEFS.

Samples and Price Lists Post Free.

Per doz.—Children's, 1s. 2d.; Ladies', 2s. 4½d.; Gents' 3s. 6d.

Hemstitched—Ladies', 2s. 11½d.; Gents', 4s, 11d.

—:o:—

BY APPOINTMENTS TO THE QUEEN AND THE CROWN PRINCESS OF GERMANY.

ROBINSON AND CLEAVER, BELFAST.

Professional Cards.

The subscription for a "card" space in these volumes is £1 10s. for six months, and £1 per quarter—payable in advance, including copy of the paper each week. Subscriptions should be sent to the office of THE MUSICAL WORLD 12, Catherine Street, Strand, London, W.C.

Conductors and Composers.

Mr. FREDERIC H. COWEN,
73, Hamilton Terrace,
St. John's Wood, N.W.

Mr. F. KILVINGTON HATTERSLEY,
A.R.A.M.
(Professor of the Planoforte, Composer, and Conductor),
17, Finsbury Park Villas,
Green Lanes, N.

Mr. ALBERT VISETTI
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Conductor),
12, Westbourne Park Terrace, W.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN
(Guitar, Concertina, and Gigelira. Wood and Straw Instrument),
22A, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W.

Mr. F. St. JOHN LACY
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Vocalist, (baritone),
Fitzroy Mansion, Charlotte Street,
Fitzroy Square, W.

Mr. H. MARTYN VAN LENNEP
(Teacher of Singing, Composer, and Conductor),
Address—7, Wimpole Street,
Cavendish Square, W.

Mr. G. ARTHUR HIGGS, F.C.O.
L. Mus. and Tallis Gold Medallist. T.C.L. Pupil of Mr. Albert Visetti. Teacher of Singing, Harmony, Conductor, and Vocalist. (Baritone.)
Address—Trinity College, London, W.

Vocalists—Sopranos.

Madame VALLERIA
(Opera and Concerts),
Bosworth House, Husband's Bosworth,
Rugby.

Miss EDITH DESMOND
(Opera and Concerts),
c/o Nolan & Jackson.

Miss KATE FLINN
(Concerts and Oratorios),
41, Welbeck Street,
Cavendish Square, W.

Mdlle. VELMI
(Opera and Concerts),
7, Chesilton Road, Munster Park,
Fulham, S.W.

Miss AGNES LARKCOM
Has removed to
158, Portsdown Road, W.

Madame ISABEL GEORGE, L.R.A.M.
(Concert and Oratorio),
29, Albany Street, Regent's Park, N.W.

Contraltos.

Miss JOSEPHINE CRAVINO
(Concerts and Oratorio),
2, Sedgmoor Villas,
Private Lessons given. Camberwell, S.E.

Miss MARY E. DAKIN, R.A.M.
(Mez. Sop.),
(Ballads, Oratorio, &c.
31, Monmouth Road,
Bayswater, London, W.

Miss LENA LITTLE
(Concerts),
42, Norfolk Square, Hyde Park, W.

Contraltos.—Continued.

Miss PATTIE MICHIE,
68, Park Walk, Fulham Road,
London, S.W.

Madame OSCAR POLLACK
(Concerts),
56, Duchess Road,
Edgbaston, Birmingham.

Tenors.

Mr. BARTON McGUCKIN
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. Alfred Moul,
26, Old Bond Street, W.,
Or, 270, Elgin Avenue, Maida Vale, W.

Mr. ARNOLD BREEDEN
(Concerts, Oratorio, and Opera),
Address—N. Vert, Esq.,
6, Cork Street, W.

Mr. SEYMOUR JACKSON
(Concerts and Oratorio).
Old Trafford, Manchester.

Mr. PAYNE CLARKE
(Concerts and Oratorio).
28, Devonshire Street, Islington, N.

Mr. J. DALGETY HENDERSON,
Gothic Lodge,
Lordship Lane, S.E.

Mr. REDFERN HOLLINS,
30, St. Stephen's Avenue,
Shepherd's Bush, W.

Mr. BERNARD LANE,
60, Westbourne Park Villas, W.

Chevalier EDWARD SCOVEL
(Opera, Concerts, and Oratorio),
Hotel de L'Europe,
Milan, Italy.

Mr. W. ESMOND,
24, Upper Mount Street, Dublin.

Baritones.

Mr. WALTER CLIFFORD
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concerts),
c/o N. Vert, Esq.,
6, Cork Street, W.

Mr. FREDERIC KING
(Concerts and Oratorio),
19, Canfield Gardens, S. Hampstead.

Mr. NORRIS CROKER,
Egremont, Croxted Road,
West Dulwich, S.E.

Mr. JOSEPH LYNDE
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concert
63, Stafford Pl.
Buckingham Gate, S.W.

Mr. ALBERT REAKES
(Bass-Baritone, of the "London Ballad Singers," Oratorios, Concerts, &c.),
30, Lancaster Road,
Notting Hill, W.

Herr RAGNAR GREVILLIUS
(Concerts, Oratorio, and Opera),
70, Portsdown Road, Maida Vale, W.

Bass.

Mr. WATKIN MILLS requests that in future all communications respecting Concerts, &c., be addressed to his residence, Huntcliffe, Bexley, Kent.

Mr. FRANK CELLI
(Concerts and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. N. Vert, 6, Cork St.,
Burlington Gardens, W.

Trumpet and Cornet.

Mr. THOMAS HARPER,
185, King's Road, N.W.

Guitar.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN, Guitariste, Instructress to H.R.H. the Princess Louise, has returned to town, 22A, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W., where may be had her celebrated book, "Learning the Guitar Simplified," 10s. 6d.

Violin.

Mr. ALLAN CAMPBELL
(Formerly Pupil of Mr. Henry Holmes and Dr. S. S. Wesley),
23, Thicket Road,
Pupils visited and received. Anerley, S.E.

Mr. LESLIE CROTTY and
Madame GEORGINA BURNS,
c/o Mr. Alfred Moul (sole agent),
26, Old Bond Street, W.

Miss AGNES JANSON requests that all communications respecting engagements may be sent to her new address, 34A, Gloucester Place, Portman Square, W.; or to Mr. N. Vert, 6, Cork Street, W.

The FRASER QUINTET. Misses Violet (Vocalist), Ida, and Ethel (Pianist, Violoncello, and Viola), Mabel and Stella Violinists), play Quartets, Solos, Duets, two Pianofortes, &c. For Engagements, for Concerts, "At Homes," Dinner and Garden Parties.—Address: 121, Adelaide Road, N.W.

MR. HEALEY'S SPECIAL LIST.

Madame LILIAN NORDICA (Soprano)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert),
Address to
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10A, Warwick Street, W.

Mdlle. LOUISE LABLACHE (Mez. Sop.)
(Opera and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10A, Warwick Street, W

Mdlle. HELENE HASTREITER (Contr.)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert)
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10A, Warwick Street, W.

Madame BELLE COLE (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10A, Warwick Street, W.

Miss MARGUERITE HALL (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10A, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. WILLIAM NICHOLL (Tenor)
28, Belsize Road, N.W.,
Or, Sole Agent, W. B. Healey,
10A, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. JOHN PROBERT (Tenor)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10A, Warwick Street, W

Mr. VAUGHAN EDWARDES (Baritone)
(Concerts and Oratorio),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10A, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. MULES BROWN (Baritone)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10A, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. HENRY POPE (Bass)
(Opera, Concerts, and Oratorio),
Business Manager. W. B. Healey,
10A, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. T. L. CAMPION (Bass)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10A, Warwick Street, W.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES.

Public Speakers and Singers

Can use "Brown's Bronchial Troches" as freely as requisite, containing nothing that can injure the system. They are invaluable in allaying the hoarseness and irritation incident to vocal exertion, effectually Clearing and Strengthening the Voice.

"They seem to act specially on the organs of the voice, and produce a clear enunciation."—MARIE ROZE-MAPLESON.

Ask. for and obtain only "Brown's Bronchial Troches." Sold everywhere at 1s. 1½d a box.

ORGANISTS AND ORGAN STUDENTS.

You are kindly requested to write for Ainsworth's "New Patent Organ Pedal Combination List." Ainsworth's "New Patent" is perfectly unique and may be combined easily with any Piano. It is the only one which may be safely combined with any Piano without deteriorating the instrument. Having put down at my works two engines and machinery of the most desirable kind, I am now supplying my goods at a price which enables every organist and organ student to have always ready for use in his Studio an

ORGAN PEDAL PIANO,

AFFORDING PERFECTLY UNIQUE PEDAL PRACTICE.

34, Sheen Park, Richmond.

DEAR SIR,—I have deferred writing to comment upon your Pedals and Action now attached to my pianoforte until I could satisfy myself of their utility and efficiency. I can now conscientiously say that they more than fulfil all my anticipations. Although I am no carpenter, aided by your lucid diagram I had little difficulty in attaching them myself, and it is impossible to over-estimate the comfort they give to me or to conceive the saving of time one experiences in one's own room.—Believe me, yours truly,

BURNHAM HORNER, F.R. Hist.S.

To Mr. Mr. Ainsworth.

DEAR SIR,—It gives me great pleasure to bear testimony to the perfection of your Invention. I am more than satisfied with your Patent Action and Organ Pedals, and consider them worth double the money. Organists and organ students who desire to improve in the Art of Pedalling, which is so essential to a good organist, will do well to procure a set. I have seen no Action half so effective, and one can sit at the Piano and play, "Fixed in his everlasting seat," or any other organ music, or organ arrangement with the greatest pleasure. The touch of pedals could not be better, and the action is as you say, "Absolutely free from annoyances." They cannot be too highly recommended, as by their use, rapid progress is certain.—Believe me, sincerely yours,

I. B. Thornton,
Organist, Birstall, Leeds.

Cologne, July 16th, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have much pleasure in informing you that your Pedals have given the fullest satisfaction. I have them combined with my practice Piano. Many of my musical friends who have seen them, as well as my organ pupils, are quite delighted with them; and I must acknowledge that I have never met with any Pedals so noiseless and pleasant to play upon as yours. The Action I consider durable, and of very good workmanship. Every organist who desires to perfect his playing will welcome your invention. I can recommend your goods in every respect.—Yours truly,

HERR J. RODENKIRCHEN.
To John Ainsworth, Esq. Organist, The Cathedral, Cologne, Germany.

TOOLS.—In order to facilite the attachment, a complete set of tools are sent (four in number) each one marked for its particular use. By the use of these tools, and following carefully the directions, ANY ONE can make a really good attachment.

On Receipt of Trade or Professional Card, you will receive List, with Liberal Terms.

AINSWORTH'S PATENT ORGAN COMBINATION WORKS
BRINSCALL, CHORLEY.

Facts and Comments.

It is stated that in the absence of Mr. Cowen the Philharmonic directors have asked Dr. von Bülow to conduct the two final concerts of the season. This is decidedly a step in the right direction, Bülow being, if possible, greater as a conductor than as a pianist. In case he accepts, he will also give a cyclus of four pianoforte recitals consisting of the entire series of Beethoven's Sonatas, the preparations for which are in an advanced stage, although nothing definite has as yet been settled.

Mr. and Mrs. Henschel have started on a concert tour to Russia, and will sing at Berlin and other places on the way. Everyone will be glad to learn that the continuance of the London Symphony Concerts is secured for, at least, another season, when it must be hoped that the indifference with which these excellent performances have hitherto been treated will at last give way before merit and perseverance. A sufficient guarantee fund has been provided by four art-loving gentlemen, and ten evening concerts will be given between November 20th and February 19th. These will be supplemented by two afternoon concerts not included in the subscription. The prices will be considerably reduced, single stalls being 7s. 6d., and a subscription ticket for the entire series of ten concerts, £2 15s. If this does not draw the British public, then what will?

Mr. Hollins, the blind pianist, has been engaged to play at a number of first-rate concerts in America, and Dr. Campbell, the Principal of the Academy of Music for the Blind, will accompany him on his journey.

Twelve hundred and fifty pounds has been collected for the Macfarren Scholarship at the Royal Academy; but it is intended to increase the fund to two thousand pounds or more, in order to provide for the maintenance as well as the training of the scholar. Mr. Alfred Littleton, of 1, Berners-street, is the honorary treasurer.

We poor blinded mortals never know what we are doing till some scientific man comes to tell us. Mdlle. Janotha, for example, has recently had her eyes opened by Sir James Paget in his lecture before the London Society for the Extension of University Teaching, at the Mansion House. Sir James declared that "he remembered once hearing Mdlle. Janotha play a presto by Mendelssohn, and he counted the notes and the time occupied. She played 5,595 notes in 4 min. 3 sec. It seemed startling, but let them look at it in the fair amount of its wonder. Every one of those notes involved certain movements of a finger, at least two, and many of them involved an additional movement laterally as well as those up and down. They also involved repeated movements of the wrists, elbows, and arms, altogether probably not less than one movement for each note. Therefore there were three distinct movements for each note. As there were 24 notes per second, and each of these notes involved three distinct musical movements, that amounted to 72 movements in each second. Moreover, each of those notes was determined by the will to a chosen place, with a certain force, at a certain time, and with a certain duration. Therefore there were four distinct qualities in each of the 72 movements in each second. Such were the transmissions outwards. And all those were conditional on consciousness of the position of each hand and each finger before it was moved, and while moving it, the sound of each note and the force of each touch. Therefore there were three conscious sensations for every note, there were seventy-two transmissions per second, 144 to and fro, and those with constant change of quality. Let them imagine it in telegraph wires. And then, added to that, all the time the memory was remembering each note in its due time and place, and was exercised in the comparison of it with others that came before. So that it would be fair to say that there were not less than 200 transmissions of nerve force to and from the brain outwards and inwards every second, and during the whole of that time judgment was being exercised as to whether the music was being played worse or better than before, and the mind was conscious of some of the emotions which the music was intended to impress."

"Three distinct movements for each note, seventy-two transmissions per second, a hundred and forty-four to and fro," these are statistics which will give pause to many a pianist who has hitherto followed his calling in a harmless and unconscious manner, "playing," so to speak, "as he or she went for want of thought."

Four dates, April 5th, 19th, 26th, and May 2nd, are announced for the Sarasate concerts, two of which will be for Chamber music, while at the second and fourth Mr. Cusins will, as in former years, conduct the orchestra. Herr Theodor Werner, of Holland, a new, and we should say a very plucky violinist, also announces three concerts, at which the Crystal Palace orchestra, under its conductor, Mr. Manns, will assist.

Last week, at the Imperial Hotel, Liverpool, the Earl of Lathom presented Madame Marie Roze, on behalf of her admirers in Liverpool, with a tiara of diamonds. It consists of five stars fitted upon an arch of gold, containing in all about two hundred diamonds of the finest quality. Each star may be detached from the tiara, and is so fixed that it may be adjusted either as a hairpin or a brooch. The tiara is in a handsome velvet case, lined with white satin, upon which is inscribed, in letters of gold, "Liverpool testimonial to Madame Marie Roze, March 2nd, 1888."

Herr Röder, of Berlin, a prolific writer and composer, is at present in London, en route for Dublin, where he has been appointed professor of singing at the Royal Irish Academy of Music.

Mr. Barnett is busily engaged in making additions and very important alterations in the instrumentation of his Pastoral Suite, which is to be performed at one of the Philharmonic Concerts.

Mr. Oliver King will contribute two choral works to the programme of the Chester Festival next summer.

Among the artists engaged by Mr. Augustus Harris for his Covent Garden season is Madame Melba, the Australian, who made such a favourable impression at Brussels, where she first appeared at the Théâtre de la Monnaie in "Rigoletto." MM. Ritt and Gailhard have endeavoured to engage Madame Melba for the Paris Opéra, but the efforts of Mr. Harris were, as usual, crowned with success.

Mr. Walter Clifford and Miss Florence Waud, the well-known pianist, both of whom were engaged for a concert tour in the United States, have been paid a considerable sum as compensation in consequence of the postponement of the tour.

Yet another musical festival. This time it is the inhabitants of North Staffordshire who do not see why they should always have to go elsewhere for such entertainments, or why they should be behind other provinces in occasionally exacting from musicians a return visit. Hanley has been fixed upon as the headquarters of the new festival, and Dr. Heap, of Birmingham, has been engaged for the inaugural performances to be given next autumn, probably in October.

Sometime ago rumour would have it that Edward Remenyi, the Hungarian violinist, was dead. But that enterprising gentleman is not so easily killed either by rumour or more substantial missiles. Instead of going to the shores of Styx, he only went to South Africa, and there, at Grahamstown, he, not many months ago, discoursed sweet music to the girls of the Diocesan School. To show how much Ramenyi is alive and, so to speak, kicking, we reproduce part of his programme, which is in his "first manner," as the engravers say. Here it is, with all its peculiarities of spelling, although without the startling oddities of type which, as it were, give additional zest to the matter:—"Ye Violist, after ye interval, will resume his work with ye greatest pleasure in spyte of those who have had enough. Ye Musick Pieces which he will Play will be a Hungarian „ Eroica „ composed by himself, Thereupon will follow a very Bigge and Important Piece of Music, written by ye ancyent Viol Master, Giuseppe Tartini, who was by birth an Italian, and thereupon a short Piece will be Discoursed on ye G Stryng, called Aria, composed by Bach. An Ave Maria written by Jacob Arcadelt, a French Maistre de Chapelle, who lived in ye 16th century, and on whose Melodie Remenyi wrote contrapuntal Varyations, of which ye Ghost of ye Old Magister approveth (this is so). By this time methinks ye Violist, and moreover hys hearers, will have had quite enough of it, and he will finish hys Musickal Menu by a very short, pleasynge, and sweet dessert, pour la bonne bouche, and this will consist of a Valse, which goeth slowly, and another movement, which goeth hoppynge, and is mostly played with ye Left Hand. (It is very extraordinary—in sooth, those persons who do not hear it, would not believe it.) Both pieces are composed by a lyvinge Musick Master yclept Delibes. This is ye End, and everybody can Go. Important Notice!—'Nobody is obliged to be pleased.' That's All."

The news of the disbandment of the National Opera Company has been telegraphed from New York. It is necessary, however, to receive these statements with caution, as too great reliance was accorded to the sensational news that came from the same source announcing the break up of the German Opera Company, since denied.

It may be interesting to know that the benevolent millionaire who offered 50,000 dollars to the parents of Hofmann for withdrawing the child from the public platform, is the same Mr. Higginson of Boston, who started the magnificent symphony concerts originally conducted by Mr. Henschel.

The unusual spectacle of a libel suit on account of a musical criticism, says "Freund's Music and Drama," is likely to be presented in one of the City courts, with the Brothers Ferdinand and Hermann Carri as plaintiffs and the New York "Times" as the respondent. That journal spoke of a concert given by the brothers at Chickering Hall, the night before, as "an unprovoked assault" upon a piano and violin; and after a round of treatment in that style, wound up with a suggestion that some long-suffering auditor might yet get revenge by loading the piano and violin of the Brothers Carri with dynamite. Considering that the brothers have given a series of concerts in this city every season for nine years, and are loaded with foreign testimonials of their skill as artists, they feel badly used. They think they can show a malicious purpose rather than a desire for fair criticism in the article.

Among a collection of autographs recently offered for sale at the Hôtel Druot was an interesting letter written by Wagner to a friend in characteristic French, and dated 2nd April, 1861, shortly after the well-known fiasco which attended the first performance of "Tannhäuser" in Paris. Read in the light of this composer's subsequent fierce tirades, the indulgent, philosophic spirit in which he appears at first to have accepted his misfortune, may be regarded as the calm that preceded the storm.

"You must not be too hard upon your Parisian public," he says. "In spite of the enormous efforts brought to bear against me, Paris has fought heroically against the cabal of Messieurs the jockeys, and it is not her fault if she has been systematically prevented from hearing my music."

An interesting course of lectures upon the history of French music, lately delivered by M. Bourgault-Ducoudray, at the Conservatoire, has been appropriately brought to a close by some illustrations of ancient French musical instruments, the different characteristics of which were skilfully displayed in the lecturer's performance upon them.

A "trilogy," by M. V. d'Indy, founded upon Schiller's dramatic poem, "Wallenstein," recently introduced in Paris at the Lamoureux Concerts, met with a very favourable reception. It will be remembered that a symphony on the same subject, and bearing the same title, was composed by Rheinberger.

A meeting at Nice between the French song-writer Gustave Nadaud, and the Emperor of Brazil, a Sovereign whose lively interest in matters pertaining to art is well-known, appears to have been accompanied by several little incidents of a mutually agreeable character. Dom Pedro not only listened to some fifty of the singer's ditties, but himself made translations of some of them into Portuguese. Not to be outdone, Nadaud presented, by way of thank-offering, a poetical tribute of some length, couched in duly flattering terms, and addressed to "His Majesty Dom Pedro, Emperor of Brazil," which was very graciously received.

It is hoped that few French officials are as nervous as the Mayor of Rouen, who took fright at the mention of the "Tannhäuser" overture in the programme of M. Colonne's orchestral concert at Rouen. The unpatriotic conductor was forced to substitute some "French" music for the dangerous and offensive composition of a Teuton. What does our Cosmopolitan correspondent say to this?

The French "normal diapason" has been introduced into Chili, the Minister of War insisting on its adoption by the military bands.

Before leaving Europe to fulfil her South American engagement, Mdme. Patti sang at a charity concert in Lisbon, where her reception, according to accounts just received, vied in brilliancy and enthusiasm with any that she has met with in Madrid. The King and Queen and all the Royal Family of Portugal were present, and between the acts the artist was summoned to the Royal box, and personally congratulated by their Majesties on her success, the Queen presenting her with a large photograph of herself, to which she had appended her autograph. As for the calls and recalls and showers of bouquets, are they not written, already, in incidents of exactly similar character in Mr. Sutherland Edwards's History of the Prima Donna?

A German version of "The Mikado," was brought out on Friday last week at Vienna, where that operetta had been given in English on two previous occasions, with much success. Two librettists had manipulated the libretto, inventing, and altering the jokes in accordance with German taste. Of the actors, Fräulein Collin, a popular favourite who played Yum-Yum, appears to have altogether failed to seize the spirit of her part, being serious and sentimental rather than sprightly. Others sang and acted fairly well, but the chorus, male and female, seemed, as one correspondent puts it, to sing and posture under the distressing conviction that they were doing things absolutely out of the beaten track of German acting, and hardly worth learning for mere temporary purposes.

We can, in our mind's eye, see the sword which pierced Mr. Gilbert's gentle bosom on reading this account. His extraordinary lazzi, his extravagant fancies turned into "topical jokes" by two clumsy German librettists, a sentimental Yum-Yum, a chorus standing still and looking distressed—is life worth living, fame (and money) worth having, in such circumstances?

A soirée was held recently in the Music School of Fräulein L. Ramann, Nüremberg, at which the history of "The Waltz," was set forth in a cyclus. The first example dated from the early part of last century, "Ei du lieber Augustin," and some of the elaborate waltz music of Chopin and Liszt marked the height of its development. Fräulein Ramann opened the proceedings with an explanatory address.

Wagner's "Die Feen," is now so far on its way to performance at the Munich Court Theatre, that some rehearsals have already taken place. The scenery is said to cost £3,000.

Samara's operetta, "The Singer of Palermo," has achieved considerable success at the Vienna Carl Theatre.

Hungarian musicians and music lovers have determined to raise a memorial in honour of Liszt, at Budapest, but they have not yet fixed upon its character and form.

A new Conservatoire was opened last month at Cracow.

SPONTINI AND WAGNER.

(From the New York Tribune.)

Of the operatic representations of the week just past* three were devoted to "Ferdinand Cortez" and one to "Siegfried.' Spontini and Wagner were thus brought into such intimate association that an inquiry was but natural concerning those points of resemblance between the men and their creations which have caused them frequently to be represented as touching hands in the story of the development of the lyric drama. To a music student who went to the Metropolitan representations with his mind unburdened by imaginary opinions drawn from articles on Spontini contributed by Dr. Spitta to Grove's Dictionary, or the really admirable essay to be found in Berlioz's collected literary works, it must frequently have seemed as if the relationship between the Gallicised Italian and the intensely native German was more imaginary than real. There are many things in that department or portion of music criticism which has become crystallised into history that are in the same case. How often do we find Wagner discussed as if in some mysterious manner he was the direct heir in art of Gluck, when, as a matter of fact, as "Euryanthe" has demonstrated to local students, his relationship with Gluck is extremely remote except in belief, while his sonship to Weber is as plain as day. If "Euryanthe" and "Siegfried" were brought into juxtaposition as "Cortez" and "Siegfried" have been it would be interesting to discover the gifts of heredity in the latter work.

There are many more points of resemblance between Spontini and Wagner as representatives of principles in art, than there are between their creations; and there are traits of character in which the men bore a strong likeness to each other. Before Wagner there was probably no composer who worked so constantly, intelligently, and earnestly as Spontini to attain the highest conceivable effect in interpretation. When Wagner as a young man journeyed to Berlin in the vain hope of having the opera which he had made out of Shakespeare's "Measure for Measure" brought out in one of the theatres of the Prussian capital, the most powerful art impression that he received came from a representation of "Ferdinand Cortez" under the direction of the composer at the Royal opera. Here he saw a precision in all departments that he had probably never dreamt of—singers, actors, stage machinists, and musicians all acting as if inspired by the same thought, aim, and emotion. He heard an orchestra that had been drilled to respond only to the will of its leader and to publish his intentions to the utmost nicety—an orchestra that could bring out a fortissimo like the crashing of a thunder-bolt, and in the next second a pianissimo like the exhalation of a spirit ("Rien qu'un souffle!" was Spontini's customary direction to the musicians when he wished them to play pianissimo). It is not unlikely that the Berlin performance of "Cortez" which Wagner listened to in 1836 was an incident which had a lasting influence on his career. The aims and effects of his conducting were like Spontini's, though the means adopted were strikingly dissimilar. There was something of the soldier in Spontini, and it is not unlikely that it was this something that won him the favour of Napoleon. The military spirit found expression even in the words which he was wont to address to his musicians during rehearsal. "Allez!" "En avant!" "Martelez!" he would command, and when after almost numberless rehearsals he was satisfied to bring a work forward, he would dismiss his forces from the last rehearsal with the words: "Au revoir au champ de bataille." It was not without fitness that he was called the "Napoleon of Music." Wagner was a militant man, but in another field of activity. He was a soldier in the cause of intellectual and artistic progress. Last February the Tribune published an interview with Herr Seidl, in the course of which he said:

---

* Early in January.

"As a conductor, technically and intellectually, Wagner can surely be given the highest place. He ruled his musicians completely with his gestures, yes, even sometimes with his eyes alone. He lifted them up into the fairy realms of his imagination, and confided tasks to them which they had never before thought of. He inflamed them with his fiery eyes; an energetic sweep of his bâton would bring out a heavy chord from his orchestra such as had never been heard from it. He could charm as ravishing a piano out of the brass instruments as out of a violin; and to extract a pianissimo simultaneously from all the instruments of the orchestra was the most wonderful feature of his conducting. He was able to initiate the musicians in the melos of a composition without superfluous words; a sententious comparison, a witty remark, would throw more light on Wagner's intentions than whole books which have been written about controverted passages."

To the judicious the significance of this parallel between the conducting of Spontini and Wagner is plain enough. Sincerity, devotion, reverence, were the mainsprings of their effort in the interpretation of art works. These qualities are not so common among musicians now as might be supposed, and they were less common when the taste fostered by such composers as Rossini dominated the theatre and concert room, and if one wishes really to learn why Spontini's music acquired so much significance in modern music history, he must compare its spirit with that of the fashionable operas of its day. Study pursued on such lines will do justice to Spontini without enjoining a fictitious belief in the present value of his creations, such as has been expressed lately in some of the newspapers of New York. His manner is antiquated, and though his recitative and melos at times swing themselves up to a lofty plane of expressiveness, they are, on the whole, wearisome and wanting in real vital beauty. Spontini was a poor melodist, and melody is now, always was, and always will be in sæcula sæculorum the essence of music, be it lyric or dramatic.

Like Gluck and Cherubini, Spontini was a foreigner, who, coming to Paris, abandoned Italian ideals and essayed to write up to the dramatic spirit of the unspoiled element in the French people. The first great battle in behalf of the lyric drama had been won by Gluck, and Spontini adopted the works of the German reformer as his models. A dozen Italian operas at least lay behind him when he set out upon his new course, and it is characteristic of the man and of the sincerity of his aims, that when once he had embraced the new art evangel he looked upon his Italian scores only as the toys of his youth. The music of Bach, Handel, Gluck, Haydn, Mozart, and finally Beethoven received the admiration of his artistic maturity, and only his colossal vanity and egotism, we are sure, prevented him from recognising the genius of his rival, Weber. In the conscientiousness of his own merit Spontini was monumental; even Wagner's colossal egotism seems insignificant in comparison, though there is one trait that the two men had in common: an unwillingness to recognise the excellence of their contemporaries. When Spontini came to Dresden, in 1844, to conduct his "Vestale," Wagner asked permission to submit an opera score to him for judgment. "Jeune homme," replied Spontini, "what do you want to compose? If you want Romans you have my 'Vestale'; if you want Greeks, you have my 'Olympia'; if you want Spaniards, you have my 'Cortez;' if you want Indians, you have my 'Nourmahal.'"

It is also related by one of Spontini's biographers that being forced to recognise the fact that Weber, Auber, and Rossini had been admitted to the ranks of the dramatic composers, through the merits of "Freischütz," "La Muette," and "William Tell," he cried out angrily, "C'est moi qui a mis la brèche, par laquelle ils marchent tous, tous." ('Tis I who made the breach through which they all marched.) Even Berlioz, whose admiration for Spontini was boundless, and who did not hesitate to adopt many of his methods (as those who heard "Les Troyens à Carthage" last winter will have guessed) records that while Spontini came to hear his music, he never spoke of it except on two occasions. In defining his own style, Berlioz claimed that the dominant qualities of his music were passionate expression, internal fire, rhythmic animation, and unexpected changes, and he described passionate expression as that expression which largely strives to reproduce the most inward meaning of the subject. The same qualities he found in Spontini's music, toward which he probably felt himself drawn quite as much by the fact that, like Spontini, he had been obliged to do battle with the narrow-mindedness and pedantry of the Conservatory. The criticisms of the professors were directed against the very things in Spontini's music which Berlioz admired, and which he recognised as constituting its peculiar physiognomy. Chief of these are the introductions of new harmonies "invented and successfully applied before the wise men had a suspicion of their existence," and the use of chords and modulations "which custom hadn't yet made public property." These things and certain unique features of his instrumentation were looked upon as contributing to the passionate expression which was Berlioz's avowed aim. Most of them are familiar enough now and cause no surprise at the performances of "Cortez." The occasional shifting of accents to unaccented parts of the bar may be still recognised as an excellent means for producing animation and energy, but it has ceased to astonish, while Spontini's division of the violas, which is productive of really fine effects, is an every-day device now.

It is only when looked upon historically that "Cortez" can be found to possess that energy, pride, passion, and gracefulness which Berlioz lauded in it, and which still asserted sufficient force over Schumann to lead him to record in his theatrical diary: "Heard 'Cortez' by Spontini with rapture ('mit Entzuecken') for the first time."—H. R. Krehbiel.

Correspondence.

NATIONALITY IN MUSIC.

To the Editor of The Musical World.

Sir,—Your correspondent, "Cosmopolitan," may possibly have travelled a great deal; but like some others of wandering habits he seems to be addicted to a singularly superficial and hasty mode of viewing things, and among them the subject of "Nationality in Art." His arguments are plausible only at first glance; a very moderate amount of examination will suffice to show their flimsy and specious character. "Was Beethoven what he was," he asks, with an air of triumph, "because of Germany; or is German music what it is because of Beethoven?" To this I answer unhesitatingly, "both." Great composers, great poets, great philosophers most assuredly leave their impress upon the age and the country in which they live and work. Equally undeniable is it that they themselves are products of that country, of its traditions, its associations, and, so to speak, its intellectual climate. "Cosmopolitan's" argument against Nationality in Art, would, if once admitted, involve the denial of all national distinctiveness whatsoever. Now, it happens that one of the most interesting considerations in connection with music is just that very reflection on it of the temperament and modes of thought peculiar to different countries. The thoughtful, studious character of theoretical Germany, the light-hearted melody of sunny Italy, the rugged beauty of the northern, the hearty simplicity of English, the mingled sensuousness and ideality of latter-day French music, all find such unmistakeable expression, that one might almost divide these different styles into provinces, as in a map. Again it is hard to understand how the very marked differences of idiom exhibited in the folksong of various countries should have escaped the notice of anyone professing to approach the subject in a critical spirit. Our own English, Scottish and Irish tunes, the Hungarian and Polish national dances, and the equally characteristic tones and rhythms of Scandinavian music can no more be confounded together by musically constituted persons than, say, our essentially English "Bailiff's Daughter of Islington," with "Ca ira" of the French.

This brings me to the incidental denial in your correspondent's letter, that national characteristics are to be found in English music, indicating a want of perception that could be more readily understood in the case of an Englishman himself, than of one who calls himself a cosmopolitan musician. Both nations and individuals may be conceived to be to a certain extent unconscious of those idiosyncrasies and peculiarities of accent or manner which constitute the difference between themselves and other people; but for one professing to have all countries equally in his purview, this obtuseness becomes inexplicable. In short, when dealing with this subject at any rate, Cosmopolitan exhibits the vices but not the virtues of his class. In passing, I may point to quite a recent example of local colour in the work of a promising young composer, every bar of which is permeated by the special characteristics of his native music—viz., to Mr. Hamish MacCunn's orchestral and choral ballad, "Lord Ullin's Daughter."

But, instances apart, I am prepared to contend on broader grounds, that probability is hugely in favour of our finding much difference, both of degree and kind, in the musical development of different countries. The familiar analogy between the nation and the family will help to strengthen this assertion. Your correspondent can scarcely deny that particular talents and aptitudes do run in families; that one home will produce artists, another mathematicians, another financiers, another soldiers and sailors, and another musicians, and so on. May we not expect, and do we not as a matter of fact find, a similar variety of gift, bent, character, and temperament among those larger families which we call nations? I think, however, I have said enough to expose the radical unsoundness of "Cosmopolitan's" argument, and to show that even if music is, as he says, "free as air," like the air it, too, is subject to climatic conditions.—I am, sir, your obedient servant, NATIONAL.

Reviews.

VOCAL.

The vocal score of Mr. Hamish McCunn's Ballad for Chorus and Orchestra, entitled "Lord Ullin's Daughter," (Novello, Ewer, & Co.), which produced so favourable an impression when performed for the first time at the Crystal Palace, and subsequently at St. James's Hall, possesses special interest, not only on account of its intrinsic merits, but as being the work of a young musician who has rapidly succeeded in attracting notice to himself, and already occupies a conspicuous place among the ranks of promising English composers. Short though it is, the work exhibits so many unmistakeable signs of originality and dramatic perception, that it was not surprising to find, on the occasion of its introduction at the Crystal Palace, that the minds of many among the audience were wandering across the years to another first performance at the same place, when the name of Arthur Sullivan was first brought into notice by his incidental music to the "Tempest." To a composer so manifestly imbued with the spirit of his native music, Campbell's little poem offers excellent opportunities for local colouring, and these have been promptly availed of. The music throughout is unmistakeably Scotch, and a whiff, as from the moors felt even in the short opening orchestral movement, predicts one characteristic feature of the work. Following in the matter of form the example set in Mr. Stanford's "Revenge," the composer has apportioned the passages of the poem between separate divisions of the voices and full chorus. There is therefore no dramatic personation; the piece must be regarded in one sense as purely descriptive. But the description is none the less of a dramatic kind, and thus orchestra, chorus, and parts of chorus, may, as it were, be regarded, jointly and severally, as fulfilling the rôle of a single reciter. At the commencement, for instance, the narrative is taken up alternately by basses and tenors, with so little regard to division of dialogue that a short speech put by the poet into the mouth of the chieftain, is actually begun by one and continued by the other. For the rest, the various phases of this stormy poem are depicted in the music with a picturesque vigour and a control of resources calculated to arouse natural interest in any future work the promising composer may bring forward. "The Day Dream," a cantata for soli, chorus, and orchestra, founded upon Tennyson's familiar poem of that name, by Charlton T. Speer (Novello, Ewer, and Co.), also demands attention as the work of a musician whose creditable achievements date from the year 1874, when, at the age of 14, he gained the Sterndale-Bennett Scholarship at the Royal Academy of Music, of which he is now one of the professors. The main outlines of the story, it will be remembered, have already been treated, and treated charmingly, in that favourite resource of choral societies, Mr. Cowen's "Sleeping Beauty." Without attempting what would be altogether unnecessary comparisons, it may be said that the present cantata is distinguished by much pleasant and fluent melody, together with appropriateness of harmonic treatment. An orchestral introduction of some length anticipates some of the principal motives, several of which are decidedly effective; and the whole work is one that may be listened to with interest and pleasure. Many of the beauties in the poem itself are of so purely a literary kind, as not always to reward adequately the efforts of a composer, and in this respect Mr. Speer has been to a certain extent handicapped in his task.

"An Act of Daily Exercises," for mezzo-soprano, soprano, and tenor, by Albert B. Bach (Metzler & Co.), will be found a valuable assistance to vocal students, whose various acquirements (even to scale exercises, for showing "the influence of the words on musical feeling"), have been amply and ingeniously provided for; the whole being preceded—as such works should be—by a practical elucidation of the author's theory of voice production.

INSTRUMENTAL.

The attention of pianists has of late been drawn to the importance of emancipating the left hand, by the issue of several pieces and studies especially designed to subserve that purpose. Among these mention should not be omitted of a transcription, for the left hand alone, by Joseph Romano, of the celebrated sextet from "Lucia di Lammermoor" (Hutchings), a dashing bravura piece with which none but a very fairly advanced player could successfully tackle, even with the assistance of both hands. To play it as it is written affords excellent but rather fatiguing practice, not only for the usually weaker hand, but also, as we pointed out in the case of a similar study, for the effective use of the pedal, which is of necessity brought into frequent requisition. Another, but much less exacting specimen of this sort of study, is an "Impromptu" written specially for the left hand, by J. Humphrey Anger (Weekes and Co.). Two pianoforte pieces by Joseph C. Bridge, "Polonaise" and "Dance of Mummers" (Weekes and Co). make fairly agreeable drawing-room and schoolroom music, and one of more brilliant character is a fantasia on "Les Cloches de Corneville," by Sydney Smith (Joseph Williams). "Pavane Romantique" (Dernier Tournoi D'Henri II.), by H. Roubier (Joseph Williams) is a more than usually successful reproduction of an ancient dance form. By the same composer we have yet another tribute to Her Majesty's Jubilee, in the shape of an effective "Hymne Patriotique," for pianoforte (same publishers). There is decided cleverness, but some monotony in a Tarantella, by W. Dawson, who figures as both composer and publisher. The almost unvarying rhythm of six equal notes, in which this piece is written through seven compactly printed pages, might be relieved with advantage. "Turkish Cavalry" is a fairly spirited quick march for the piano, by D. R. Munro (Weekes and Co.). "Moigneaux," by Adrian Downes (D Wilcocks) fulfils its purpose as a good waltz.

Among recent music for violin and piano we may single out a little "Romance," the first of "Deux Morceaux," by J. Contrufo (Hutchings and Co.), as possessing decided charm and refinement. E. Davidson Palmer continues his series of "Operatic Fantasias" with a skilful arrangement of themes from Tannhäuser (Joseph Williams); and other useful transcriptions for the two instruments will be found in four "Fantasias on National Airs," by W. H. Birch, devoted to English, Scotch, Irish, and Welsh melodies respectively.

The Organ World.

CONGREGATIONAL SINGING.

From time to time this vexed subject appears, and earnest thinkers use voice and pen in behalf of what always has been, and ever will remain, a great institution of the Christian Church. The universality and usefulness of congregational singing is undeniable, and it is, notwithstanding its imperfect utterances, the type in the Church Militant of the greatest of all songs, the song of the Redeemed to be sung amid scenes of unfading glory, when the Church at last shall be at rest. Still, congregational singing is in a sense a very human institution, and consequently there is a practical view of its responsibilities and imperfections which is apt to be overlooked. St. Paul, in words often but never too often quoted, tells us we are to sing with the "understanding" as well as with the "heart," and it is the question of the understanding which seems to call for special consideration, simply because we are all agreed that congregational singing can only be a living thing when it springs from the heart. Some will have it that congregational singing has decayed, and that want of heart is the main cause of this decay. Such an assertion is illogical in the face of the recognised fact that religious life, despite the buffetings of a too faithless world, has of late been greatly quickened in all branches of the Church. The history of Christianity would seem to reveal the story of congregational aptitude for sacred song in a more encouraging fashion. At the close of the first dispensation (during which, as we all know, sacred art received due encouragement) the early Christians began their "Pilgrim's Progress" on earth with but little aid from the power of Art; then congregational singing pure and simple was the song of the Church; but at a very early period the Christians claimed Art as the "handmaid of religion," and though sacred Art "grew not apace, but wisely, discreetly, and slowly," the function of the trained musician was duly recognised. Then we find at various epochs of the history of the Church, fluctuations and alternations in the respective influences of the people's song and sacred Art of a more cultivated type; all the same, however, both retain distinct signs of everlasting vitality, which are as evident now as in those early days when, as ancient documents tell us, the trained singers sang from parchments, and the untrained people loyally joined in the well-guided sounds. The whole story of sacred song, in short, is told in the sublime Preface. The Church ever cries: Sursum corda and gratias agamus Domino Deo nostro, and the musician and the people answer Habemus ad Dominum and Dignum et justum est. Still, it must be allowed, we are passing through a crisis regarding congregational song; musical education is, for the time being, against it. The extended knowledge of the art has weakened the voice of the people for the time being, because it has been advanced to the length of teaching them that in Art matters, wisdom draws a line beyond which ordinary mortals may well "fear to tread," and insists upon the duty of an external, as well as an active participation in its treasures and delights. It may be, congregational singing will, in the near future, take up a new and higher position, when St. Paul's profoundly wise injunction will be more completely fulfilled than ever it has been, so far, in the history of the Church; when the "understanding" shall take a just share in the production of the people's song. There are other probable reasons for the assumed temporary diminution of power in the song of the people. The growth of refinement which inevitably accompanies the advance of Art, naturally produces a respect for the efforts of trained singers and players, which brings into action an increased desire to gain instruction and emotional power from a more attentive, listening attitude. "The meaning of a song goes deep," said Carlyle, and how deep must be the meaning of a well-enunciated sacred song. Then the growth of refinement, one of Art's greatest triumphs, may have brought about a widespread discontent regarding the imperfections of untrained singing; and it may have even produced in the minds of those at last conscious of their vocal shortcomings, a desire to avoid the, one may almost say, guilt of adding "dire discord" to the harmony of well-attuned sacred song. The uncultured may have learnt by the refining process of Art, to feel some regard for the feelings of their more cultured neighbours. This thought might be pushed to the length of an expression of some hope of a recognition of the truth, that spiritually the uncultured are called upon not to offend their "weaker brethren"—whom the cultured not unfrequently are—by their too often discordant efforts. Their would be in such a position a subtle spirit of charity demanding the respect of all. Again, as that accomplished essayist, Mr. Dunphie, tells us: "Silence is associated with all that is most touching and profound in devotional feeling;" and this feeling of silence is personal, as well as objective; that is the silence of a person in the midst of beautiful church music is a high and holy feeling, akin to the silent rapture with which one meets with lowly heart the God of Nature in the midst of a silently contemplated scene of natural grandeur or beauty. Such a feeling would disincline the religious thinker with a respect for sacred Art, to join in demonstrations of too obviously uncultured congregational singing. It has been observed that practical musicians strangely abstain from taking part in congregational singing, when they might do good work as leaders of the people's song. Such abstention is at least instructive; it betrays real depth of feeling and profound respect for sacred Art, and, it may be, it discloses consideration for one's neighbour in a desire not to offend by technical errors, in the absence of those "guiding signs" furnished by musical notation, and an accompanying self-respect calling for commendation, A too eager encouragement of congregational singing may, indeed, deprive many of the joy of listening, and also tend to foster, as indeed it often does, an inferior type of sacred Art. Undoubtedly, congregational singing is a grand impulse and a great fact in the power of the Church of Christ, well deserving earnest and thoughtful consideration; the heart of man, as an eminent writer tells us, longs for "musical as well as verbal expression." The basis of the advancement of the people's song rests upon two points, the cherishment of the power of association, a mighty power in popular Art, and the well-judged and widespread cultivation of the elementary technicalities of music. With regard to the power of association, what Englishman fails to recognise and take part in the singing of the "Old Hundredth Psalm?" Every Frenchman, said some one, can sing the quaint and beautiful Easter hymn, "O Filii et Filiæ," and not less certain is it that every German knows the choral "Ein feste Burg." Surely this grand and unassailable power of association is the real foundation of congregational music, and nothing can be wiser than teaching the people to respect this their true vocal strength, as the very wings upon which their heaven-born song shall take its flight homewards. To this end not only should the music of association be persistently cultivated as the only legitimate people's song, but congregational worshippers should be specially urged only to assist in those portions of the service, which, from their plain-song character and inherent tendencies by simplicity and repetition to evolve influences of association, are clearly stamped by the word "congregational." As regards the more technical side of congregational music, all who can read music, be their powers of vision ever so litttle, and whether through the medium of the staff or tonic sol-fa notation, should be urged and trained to sing from notes. Congregational practices might with advantage also be encouraged, if they can be managed with a minimum of perplexing ambition and a maximum of definite but limited purpose.

One very human difficulty in the way of earnest yet modest congregational singing, is the abstention of presumptuously ignorant critics, who much prefer the atmosphere of sulky silence, and the criticism of their musical betters, to any ultilitarian attitude of church-life; such persons may well occupy the attention of our preachers from time to time.

It need not be added that congregational music includes the performances of those who might sing fairly well if they could bring themselves into a condition of musical discipline; the incompetent, the vain, and the ignorant, indeed, receive special indulgence in congregational music. This may be well, but it is a flaw in the morale of the institution.

Lastly, the whole scheme of congregational music, to be wholesome and progressive, must be accompanied by a real respect for the labours of the trained musician; a respect as real, in its way, as that felt for the minister or preacher. "Each must serve and wait in his appointed place;" and it is the absence of this respect for the musician and his work in church, as evidenced in much inane talk on congregational music, which is blocking the way to solid progress, and depriving the cause of much useful sympathy. Once more, although it may be that the growth of musical education is, for a time, somewhat against congregational singing, it will soon again be for it. People having learnt one of the first lessons of practical Art, a healthy feeling of shame at the poverty of their own attainments, will soon gain strength, and being re-assured by force of a larger amount of knowledge, will prove in unmistakeable tones that congregational singing is still a real power in the Church; but, that it may so be a real strength in our religious life, be it remembered that the people's song must be lowly rather than ambitious, and must have a right place and be strictly kept in that place; for congregational singing, like a good many other things, may be an illustration of the inspired words which tell us that the proud shall be abased, but the humble shall be exalted.

E. H. TURPIN.

SPECIAL MUSICAL SERVICES.

Church Bells has the following sensible words:—

It seems to have become quite the custom now-a-days, in comparatively a large number of our churches, to hold special musical performances during the seasons of Advent and Lent. Some fifteen years since St. Anne's, Soho, if we remember rightly, gave us the lead in this matter with the St. John Passion Music of Sebastian Bach. The thing was a startling innovation on our English notions, and gave rise to some not unlively discussions as to its propriety. Conservative Church feeling talked about the distress of seeing sacred buildings turned into concert rooms; for a congregation to sit listening to a performance of music, even though it were sacred music, could not be accounted in any legitimate sense of the term a "service;" and an orchestra of fiddlers, in spite of their being vested in surplices, was an outrage on the decencies of the sanctuary.

But things move quickly, and our prejudices in this direction seem by this time very largely to have died away. For to-day these musical performances are not only given in many churches, but they are given quite frankly, as one may say, for their musical value; for the effect, that is, which the music, appreciatively listened to, may have upon the feelings of the congregation; without any attempt by the accompaniment of many prayers, or of a sermon, as in the earlier days, to disguise the thing under an appearance of its being just an ordinary form of service, with the introduction of an inordinately long anthem. Certainly it is well that this frankness should have come about. In a church, of all places in the world, we want no pretence. We must make up our minds clearly whether such or such a thing has any business in itself, for its own sake, to take place there; and if we decide that it has, we must let it take place openly. One is irritated often, when, as for instance on the occasion of a choir-sermon, one hears the preacher elaborately trying to defend the performance of anthems on the main ground that they impress upon the congregation the significance of certain passages of Holy Scripture, and tend directly to their moral improvement, and so serve exactly the same purpose as the reading of the Lessons serves, or the preaching of the sermon. No doubt a finely rendered piece of fine music may have this effect, but it is not its immediately intentional effect. Its immediately intentional effect is emotionally to move you by interesting sound; and to be emotionally moved in this manner is one of the ways, certainly, by which God means us to be refined and elevated. Nor will a reasonable and wide idea as to what religion and God's service are reject such a means of human development as this, as having nothing directly to do with these things. To imagine that a church must be absolutely only a place in which to preach and pray is narrow and foolish; and every bit of every kind of art which has ever been admitted into any church is, when logically thought of, a protest against such unreasonable narrowness. Yet it takes some time for some of us to realise this.

S.I.

PROTESTANT PRICK SONG.

An American paper has the following:—

There are in London (Eng.) two well-known public schools, founded upwards of three centuries since, says the Musical Herald, and known respectively as Dulwich College and the Blue Coat School, Christ's Hospital, Newgate Street. Prior to the Reformation, each of them was endowed with money for the purpose of providing the scholars with gratuitous instruction in "prick song" in perpetuity.

The donor of the fund in both instances appears to have been one John Dow, an enthusiastic amateur of the period, whose interest in the development of church music was fostered by his close friendship with Tallis, Byrde, Tye, and others.

Both these endowments are still a source of revenue, but it is doubtful if the alumni of either institution at the present time could even define the special branch of musical art intended by the donor to be taught. Indeed, the term is now entirely obsolete, save in some remote country English villages, where rustic musicians make use of the expression "pricked out" to imply "copied," when speaking of transcribed music.

The same definition applies to the term in its ancient form, having reference to the employment of proper musical notation instead of the primitive plain song of the Roman Catholic Church.

Protestant prick song was, in fact, the exact antithesis of Catholic plain song. It was also associated in the minds of the people at this period with secular music.

The strong Protestant sympathies of John Dow, more especially in the direction of church music, undoubtedly induced him to organise a scheme by which the musical advancement of the coming generation might be aided. That he, at all events, to some extent, succeeded in this laudable endeavour is a fact beyond question.

KEY-BOARD FINGERING.

As finger technicalities are being considered just now, the following deserves further publicity:—

The art of fingering, such as we now practise it, is the result of a gradual development, and its history is closely connected with the growth of the piano and the development of piano music. In olden times the thumb was but rarely used, except in playing octaves. When not used it was allowed to hang down, instead of giving it a place upon the key-board. By the side of the thumb, the fourth finger—we speak here of English fingering—was condemned to inactivity. It will, therefore, be plain to you when I say that there was a time when the scale was only played with three fingers. Thus we learn that about the year 1571 the scale in F, presumably with B natural, after the Lydian mode, was played thus:—

	f	g	a	b	c	d	e	f	f	e	d	c	b	a	g	f
Right hand—	1	2	1	2	1	2	1	2	3	2	1	2	1	2	1	2
Left hand—	3	2	1	x	3	2	1	x	1	2	1	2	1	2	1	2

Daniel Speer, in his "Musical Cloverleaf" (of 1698) gives another fingering:—

	c	d	e	f	g	a	b	c	c	b	a	g	f	e	d	c
Right hand—	2	3	2	3	2	3	2	3	1	2	1	2	1	2	1	2
Left hand—	1	2	1	2	1	2	1	2	2	3	2	3	2	3	2	3

Matheson in his harmony teaches the following fingering

c d e f g a b c d e f g a b c
Right hand—2 3 2 3 2 3 2 3 2 3 2 3 2 3 4
Left hand—2 1 x 1 x 1 x 1 x 1 x 1 x 1 x

Downward :

c b a g f c d c b c g f e d c
Right hand—4 3 2 1 2 1 2 1 2 1 2 1 2 1
Left hand—1 2 1 2 1 2 1 2 1 2 1 2 1 2 3

B.C. Mater, in his work published in 1731, gives a similar fingering. Lorenz Miller (1740) published still another :

c d e f g a b c c b a g f e d c
Right hand—x 1 2 x 1 2 3 4 4 3 2 1 x 2 1 x
Left hand—4 3 2 1 x 2 1 x x 1 2 x 1 2 3 4

This is like the regular fingering now in use, but whenever he wrote in flat keys, he committed what we now would call many blunders, as you may see from the following :

a*b* b*b* c d*b* e*b* f g a*b* a*b* g f e*b* d*b*c b*b* a*b*
Left hand—4 3 2 1 3 2 1 x x 1 2 x 1 2 3 4

John Sebastian Bach (1685-1750), when speaking of fingering, says, that he saw many great men who never used their thumbs or little fingers, except when striking octaves. It is difficult, perhaps impossible, to tell how far Bach helped to bring about the present style of fingering. So much is sure, that in the eighteenth century they began to use the thumb. Marpurg, in 1765, uses a style of fingering much like our own ; still, here and there he plays with his right hand thus : 2, 3, 2 2 ascending, and 3, 4, 3, 4 descending. If necessary, he even uses a fingering like this : 1, 3, 1, 3, while the following he regards as very convenient : 1, 2, 1, 2. Philip Emanuel Bach (1780) condemns this fingering 1, 2, 1, 2, but allows 2, 3, 2, 3. Turk (1789) fingers the C major scale as follows : x, 1, 2, 3, 2, 3, 2, 3, 2, 3, &c., and descending 4, 3, 2, 1, x, 1, x 1, x, 1, x, &c. The same author said that Friedeman Bach played scales with this fingering very rapidly.

The fingering as it is now used was settled by Clementi, Mozart, Vogler, Woelfl, Steibelt, Hummel, Czerny, and others ; later by Chopin, Henselt, Schumann, and above all, by Liszt. For all it must be said that the art of fingering has not yet reached that point which entitles it to be called a science. The rules of fingering must be designed to overcome every difficulty in piano music in the best possible manner.—Karl Merz.

SPECIFICATIONS.

WAKEFIELD.

As rebuilt by Mr. Alfred Kirkland, Holloway-road, London, the specification of the organ in Wakefield Cathedral is as follows :—

GREAT ORGAN, CC TO F, 55 NOTES.

Double open diapason	16 ft.	Höhl flute (C)	4 ft.
Large open diapason	8 ,,	Twelfth	3 ,,
Open diapason	8 ,,	Fifteenth	2 ,,
Gamba (C)	8 ,,	Mixture, 4 ranks	various
Stop diapason	8 ,,	Trumpet	8 ft.
Principal	4 ,,

SWELL ORGAN, CC TO F, 54 NOTES.

Bourdon	16 ft.	Vox Célestes grooved to No. 5)	8 ft.
Open diapason	8 ,,	Principal	4 ,,
Stop diapason	8 ,,	Mixture, 3 ranks	various
Torpodion (C) (bass grooved to No. 9)	8 ,,	Trumpet	8 ft.
Viol d'amour	8 ,,	Oboe	8 ,,
		Clarion	4 ,,

CHOIR ORGAN, CC TO F, 54 NOTES.

Double open diapason	16 ft.	Flute	4 ft
Open diapason	8 ,,	Piccolo	2 ,,
Stop diapason	8 ,,	Bassoon and clarionet	8 ,,
Clarabella (C) (bass grooved to No. 3)	8 ,,	Spare slide.

PEDAL ORGAN, CCC TO F. 30 NOTES.

Double open diapason	32 ft.	Flute	8 ft.
Open diapason	16 ,,	Trombone	16 ,,
Bourdon	16 ,,	Clarion	8 ,,
Principal	8 ,,

COUPLERS.

Four double-acting composition pedals.

Swell to great.	Great to pedal.
Swell to choir.	Choir to pedal.
Swell to pedal.

RECITAL NEWS.

ST. CLEMENT'S, NEAR EASTCHEAP, CLEMENTS-LANE, KING WILLIAM-STREET, E.C.—For the special services on Wednesdays during Lent, the following music has been and will be played upon the organ, by Dr. C. W. Pearce, F.C.O., organist of the church :—Ash Wednesday, Prelude and Fugue in B minor, John Sebastian Bach. February 22, Sonata, in A major and minor (No. 3), Mendelssohn (On the Lenten Choral, "In deepest need."—Ps. LI.). February 29, Andante, in E minor, Henry Smart ; Adagio Espressivo (Symphony No. 2), Schumann. March 7, Sonata, in E minor and major, Gustav Merkel (On the two Chorals, "In deepest need," and "The Morning Star.") March 14, Allegretto (Symphony No. 7), Beethoven ; "There is a green hill far away," Gounod. March 21, Prelude and Fugue, in F minor, John Sebastian Bach ; Vorspiel Parsifal, Wagner. March 28, Dramatic Fantasia, "The Royal Banners," C. W. Pearce (On the two Passion-tide Hymn Melodies "The Royal Banners forward go," and "All glory, laud, and honour.")

GLASGOW.—The following is the programme of an organ recital given by Mr. D. R. Munro, in Trinity Church, on 23rd February :—

Overture in E minor	Morandi.
Tema con Variazioni	Beethoven.
Finale from Organ Sonata	Capocci.
Cantilene	Salomé.
Alla Fuge	Lemaigre.
Cantique "Le mon de Marie"	Gounod.
Minuet and Trio	Munro.
March of the Crusaders	Liszt.

ST. ANDREW'S, STOCKWELL-GREEN.—Sunday Afternoon Musical Hours are being given. On February 5th the organist was Dr. H. Walmsley Little (organist of Holy Trinity, Tulse Hill). Vocalist, Mr. Horace Petley.

Fantasie in C minor	Berens.
Adagio in E	Merkel.
Allegro in F sharp minor	Guilmant.
Nocturne in G minor	Chopin.
March "The Rock of Israel"	H. W. Little.
Andante in E minor	Batiste.
Overture in E	Morandi.

On February 12th the organist was J. H. Olding, Esq., A.C.O. ; the vocalist was J. W. Brooks, Esq.

ST. JOHN'S CHURCH, CHELTENHAM.—An organ recital was given on February 22nd, by Mr. Ernest A. Dicks, A.C.O. A selection of sacred vocal music was sung by the choir.

Overture to the Occasional Oratorio	Handel.
Andante in F	Henry Smart.
Anthem "O Lord, my God"	Rev. C. Malan.
Prelude and Fugue in G	Mendelssohn.
Funeral March	Chopin.
Air, "Return, O God of Hosts"	Handel.
Mr. F. T. Waite.
Andante Con Moto in E	Guilmant.
Grand Chœur in A	Salomé.

CHRIST CHURCH, PRESTON.—Short organ recitals were given after each Sunday evening service at the above church, by Mr. A. Wyatt Mortimer, A.C.O., organist and choirmaster. Progamme :—

FEBRUARY 12TH.

Two Movements from Sonato No. 1, D minor	G. Merkel.
Adagio (Moonlight) C sharp minor	Beethoven.
"Quis est homo" (Stabat Mater	Rossini.
"March of Israelites" (Naaman)	Costa.

FEBRUARY 19TH.

Overture to "Samson" (a) Pomposo. (b) Allegro (Fugue). (c) Minuet.	Handel.
Adagio (Quartett in G minor)	Spohr.
Minuet	Hamilton Clarke.
March in G	Hy. Smart.

FEBRUARY 26TH.

Grand Offertoire in D	Ed. Batiste.
Barcarole (4th Concerto)	S. Bennett.
(a) Andante in G	Ed. Batiste.
(b) Duetto in A flat (Lieder ohne worte)	Mendelssohn.
Fantasia, Choral in G	Hy. Smart.

GUILDHALL, CAMBRIDGE.—Programme of organ recital, by the borough organist, Mr. F. Dewberry, Mus.B., F.C.O., on February 17th:—

Andante (9th Symphony)	Haydn.
Fugue in A minor (from pianoforte works)	J. S. Bach.
Grand Solemn March in E flat	H. Smart.
Berceuse in A	Delbruck.
Gavotte "Vivat Regina"	W S. Hoyte.
Operatic Selection "Bohemian Girl"	Balfe.

ST. MARY, ABCHURCH.—Mr. Albert E. Bishop is giving his interesting "Six Hours with the Organ Compositions of John Sebastian Bach," on Mondays, at 3. The following is the complete scheme of these excellently thought of performances:

February 20th.—Sonata in E flat, for two manuals and pedal (Peters' ed. Vol. I. No. 1); Nine Variations on the Chorale "O Gott du frommer Gott" (O God, Thou righteous God) (Vol. V. No. 2); Fugue in G major (Peters' ed. Vol. IX. No. 4); Aria in F (Vol. IX. No. 8); Prelude and Fugue in C minor (Vol. II. No. 6).

February 27th.—Fantasia and Fugue in A minor (Vol. IX. No. 4); Sonata in C minor (Vol. I. No. 2); Fugue upon the Chorale "Wir glauben all an einen Gott" (Vol. VII. No. 60); Pastorale in F (Vol. I. No. 8); Passacaglia in C minor (Vol. I. No. 7).

March 5th.—Toccata and Fugue in C major (Vol. III. No. 8); Sonata in D minor (Vol. No. 3); Fantasia in B flat upon the Chorale "Valet will ich dir geben" (Vol. VII. No. 50); Trio in C minor (Vol. IX. No. 7); Canzona (Vol. IX. No. 10).

March 12th.—Toccata and Fugue in D minor (Vol. IV. No. 4); Sonata in E minor (Vol. I. No. 4); Prelude and Fugue in F (Vol. VIII. No. 5); Prelude and Fugue in A major (Vol. II. No. 3); Fantasia and Fugue in G minor (Vol. II. No. 4).

March 19th.—Toccata and Fugue in the Dorian mode (Vol. III. No. 3); Sonata in C major (Vol. I. No. 5); Prelude and Fugue in B flat (Vol. VIII. No. 5); Chorale "Wer nur den lieben Gott lässt Walten" (Vol. VII. No. 50); Toccata and Fugue in F major (Vol. III. No. 2).

March 26th.—Prelude and Fugue in C major (Vol. II. No. 1); Sonata in G major (Vol. I. No. 6); Prelude and Fugue in B minor (Vol. II. No. 10); Counterpoint on the Chorale "Wenn wir in höchsten nöthen sein" (Vol. VII. No 58); Prelude and Fugue in E flat (Vol. III. No. 1).

So interesting a list will not fail to attract the attention of the many Bach students and admirers.

ST. MARGARET'S CHURCH, WESTMINSTER.—Recently "The Captives of Babylon," a new oratorio by Mr. Geo. Shinn, Mus. Bac. Cantab., was performed, the work having been previously heard elsewhere. The soloists were Madame Lita Jarrett, Miss Deering, Mr. E. Eugene Trydell, Mr. Robert Poole. Conductor, Mr. Geo. Shinn. Organ, Mr. T. G. Baines, organist of the church. The choir was augmented for the occasion. The pleasing character of the work gave much satisfaction to listeners.

CHRIST CHURCH, HENDON.—Programme of organ recital given by Mr. H. A. Wheeldon, F.C.O., on March 4, after evensong:—

Introduction and allegro	A. Guilmant.
Melody	Gounod.
"Cujus Animan" (Stabat Mater)	Rossini.
"Quis est Homo"	Rossini.
Funeral March	Chopin.

Notes.

Miss Florence Dick, a rising young artist, is singing every Sunday afternoon in Lent two solos in the anthem, and "The Shadow of the Cross" and "Calvary," at St. Jude's, Liverpool. There have been very large congregations. The vicar's object in having those services at an hour when the church is generally closed is to attract non-church goers to worship, and to provide, in a poor parish without a skilled choir, some of the advantages which accrue from the religious use of oratorios in churches with large means and choirs composed of clever musicians.

A diocesan choral festival will be held again this year at Exeter. The 3rd of July is the date fixed. Only parishes in the Exeter archdeaconry are to send up choirs this year; last year they were collected from any part of the diocese.

Congregational singing is fitted to lift one to the gate of heaven. I do not know where I have been more profoundly moved than by the music I used to hear in the church in Germany. There was nothing else there to move me, for at that time I could not follow the German language at all. The Germans call music "world speech," and it produces a great feeling. As to artistic choirs, it may be that they sing not with the spirit, but with the understanding, and so produce little feeling. It may be, also, that the spirit overcomes the understanding, and your artistic choir becomes a minister of God. To have music given to us in the churches by a frivolous choir, who sing only with the understanding, and never with the heart, is a kind of sacred hurdy-gurdyism, which I hope will soon come to an end.—Joseph Cook, "Musical Reform."

But Joseph Cook makes a common mistake in concluding that those who sing with the "understanding" are less liable to sing with the "heart" than those who possess no musical understanding, whereas the converse is more often the truth. One has no more right to sit in judgment upon the trained than the untrained singer; and certainly the trained singer must have some form of earnestness to induce him to learn how to sing well, while the untrained singer has an argument against his earnestness being more than momentary in the fact that he has taken little or no pains.

OLD ST. MARYLEBONE CHURCH.—The Rev. Grant E. Thomas, M.A., incumbent of the above church, writes: "It may interest some of your readers to know that there are two centenaries this year connected with the above church, which stands at the top of the High-street, St. Marylebone, and which was until 1817 the parish church of, and, as far as I know, the only church in, St. Marylebone. The first event was the baptism of Lord Byron the poet, which took place in the church on March 1st, 1788. The other was the burial of the Rev. Charles Wesley, who was buried in the little churchyard which surrounds the church, on April 5th, 1788. The church, no doubt, partly on account of its diminutive size, partly also because it is overshadowed by the large and recently handsomely-restored parish church of St. Marylebone, is but little known, and attracts but small attention; still, it is full of historic interest and association—indeed, the whole of the early history of St. Marylebone may be said to centre around it. The foundation stone was laid by Robert de Braybroke, Bishop of London, in the year 1400. It was rebuilt in the form it now stands in 1741. The interior of the original church may be seen in Hogarth's picture of 'The Marriage of the Rake,' painted in 1735. The little churchyard contains a long list of illustrious dead, and the mural tablets with which the inner walls are covered are, I am credibly informed, second to none for exquisiteness of taste and beauty of design."

Charles Wesley, one of the most gifted members of the musical branch of the family, and son of the Rev. C. Wesley mentioned in the above letter, was for many years organist of the new St. Marylebone Church. His fine organ-playing and the general estimation in which he was held secured him many influential friends. His salary was the then ample one of £100 a year, and he had a goodly number of organ pupils. Chas. Wesley died at the age of 77, in 1834, and was buried in the family tomb in old Marylebone churchyard.

ORGAN AND HARP CONCERTS.—A New York journal has the following:—"The series of eight organ concerts in the First Presbyterian Church, Fifth-avenue, was recently inaugurated by R. Huntington Woodman, in a programme that displayed his mastery of the excellent resources of the new organ. It is a curious fact that this is the first musical instrument ever used in this church. Some of the most influential members of the society shared the prejudice which has so long prevailed in Scotland against the use of an organ in a house of worship, and it was not until lately that it was deemed expedient to make so serious an innovation as is now so heartily welcomed. The regular Lenten series of organ and harp recitals by Mr. George W. Morgan and Miss Maud Morgan are proceeding. They had the assistance of Holst Hansen, in the following programme, which is here given as something of a curiosity in its way:—Organ, Fugue and Chorus ('Israel in Egypt'), Handel; Harp, 'Maud' (an Idyll), dedicated to Miss Maud Morgan, Oberthur; Organ, Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue, Thiele; Vocal, 'There is a Green Hill Far Away,' Gounod; Organ, 'Eventide,' arranged by Geo. W. Morgan, Gumbert; Harp, Andante, dedicated to Thalberg, Alvars; Organ, Overture, 'Zampa,' Herold; Duo, Harp and Organ, arranged from Sonata, op. 2, Beethoven."

L'Art Musical, a Parisian paper, has a paragraph regarding the unique completion of a service in a cathedral of sixty years, by Dr. W. H. Longhurst, and speaks of the worthy Canterbury organist as Sir Guillaume-Henri Longhurst, and overlooking his chorister-boy period, concludes that Dr. Longhurst was appointed organist sixty years ago.

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS' CALENDAR.

On Tuesday next March 13th, the library will be open to members from 7 to 10; Council Meeting, at 5; April 9th, "Annual College Dinner;" April 10th, Special Lecture, by Dr. E. J. Hopkins; April 24th, Lecture, by Dr. F. J. Sawyer, on "The Primary Rules of Keyboard Fingering;" May 22nd, Lecture; June 26th, Lecture; July 17th, 18th, 19th, F.C.O. Examatinion; July 20th, Diploma Distribution: July 24th, 25th, 26th, A.C.O. Examination; July 27th, Diploma Distribution. Other arrangements and particulars will be duly announced.

E. H. TURPIN, Hon. Sec.
95, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, W.C.

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

THE PRIMA DONNA:

Her History and Surroundings, from the 17th to the 19th Century. By H. Sutherland Edwards. Gives a picture of the life, professional and social, of every prima donna down to the present day. Two vols., demy 8vo, 24s.

"Odd corners of operatic history have been ransacked for the apt anecdotes and characteristic touches that here give life to the portrait."—Musical World.

"Volumes so full, not only of useful fact, but of pleasant anecdote and gossip, that they are sure to be read, not only with profit, but with pleasure." —Globe.

MEMOIRS of COUNT HORACE DE VIEL CASTEL.

A Chronicle of Events, Political and Social, during the reign of Napoleon III., years 1851—1864. Translated by Charles Bousfield. Two vols., demy 8vo, 30s.

"What makes his memoirs such entertaining reading is that he has not only a good memory for bad stories, but that in his rapid portraiture he shows something of the power, of the shrewd insight, and of the graphic wit of a Saint Simon. Through the scandals are scattered curious and piquant revelations.—Times.

REMINGTON AND CO., Henrietta-street, Covent Garden.

By FREDERICK HELMORE.

Just published, price Sixpence. Dedicated to Sir Arthur S. Sullivan.

THE ITALIAN REGISTERS.

VOCE DI PETTO. VOCE DI GOLA. VOCE DI TESTA.

By the same Author.

SPEAKERS, SINGERS, AND STAMMERERS. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

SINGING METHOD. No. 1. The Little Ones' Book. Containing the Songs in "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland," and "Through the Looking Glass." Also, the Nursery Rhymes, Easy Rounds, &c., used in his "Little Ones' Classes." Fcap. 4to, 1s.

SINGING METHOD. No. 2. The First Reading Book. Containing a Catechism on the Art of Singing Music from Notes, followed by Scale and Chord Exercises, by the practice of which Pupils rapidly acquire the Knowledge and Feeling for Harmony, so necessary in Part Singing. Illustrated by pleasant Rounds, Duets. and Trios. Fcap. 4to, 1s.

London: J. MASTERS and CO., 78, New Bond Street.

CASSON'S
PATENT
Organ-Building System

SEPARATE Pedal Organs for each Manual. Expressive and Controllable Pedal Basses. Perfect control of all Couplers. Reduction of number of Claviers without loss of efficiency, &c., &c. See testimonials from

Mr. W. T. BEST.
Rev. Sir F. A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart.
Dr. SPARK.
Dr. J. C. BRIDGE, M.A.
Dr. E. W. TAYLOR, F.C.O.
The late Mr. J. STIMPSON.
Mr. R. BARTHOLOMEW.
Mr. J. HEYWOOD, Birmingham.
Mr. G. A. AUDSLEY, F.R.I.B.A.
M. A. J. HIPKINS, F.S.A.
&c., &c.

Apply to the Secretary—

CASSON'S PATENT ORGAN CO., LIMITED
DENBIGH,

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, MARCH 10, 1888.

MUSIC AND MEN OF LETTERS.

A suggestive passage in Daudet's, "Trente Ans de Paris," is one among many instances that might be recounted of the obligation which poets and literary men generally seem to fancy themselves under, whenever they plead guilty to a fondness for music, of adding some remarks of an explanatory, if not of an apologetic, kind. That the writer in question feels himself almost alone among his confrères in this avowal is, at at any rate, very evident. Quoting the well-known saying of Gautier, "Music is the most disagreeable of noises" (which might be capped, but scarcely mitigated, by another, from a writer of equal celebrity, to the effect that "Music is the least disagreeable of noises)." Daudet goes on to inform us that Zola has a vague remembrance of once having played something in his youth, but does not know what it was; that Goncourt turns up his nose whenever the piano is opened; that Leconte de Lisle shows very similar prejudices; while Flaubert's devotion to the art was fancied rather than real. "In general," he sums up by saying, "men of letters hold music in abhorrence."

Goethe certainly made some vaguely pleasant remarks about music when the talented boy Mendelssohn visited him at Weimar, and among his correspondents were Zelter, the musician, and Rochlitz, the musical critic; but to say that the prince of German poets had anything like a deep insight into the sister Art would be, at least, an exaggeration. Rousseau, besides being the author of a musical dictionary, devoted himself to the composition of a charming opera and other productions, which he is said to have valued more than all his writings. In our own country the professed enthusiasm for music among many eminent writers may seem at first sight to traverse Daudet's sweeping assertion; but often, on closer inspection, this enthusiasm turns out to be of a purely sentimental order, unaccompanied by acquirement, or even by the smallest symptom of genuine musical instinct. Neither the Laureate nor Swinburne in the present day, nor Coleridge, Charles Lamb, Thomas Hood, and many others that could be mentioned in the past, give satisfactory evidence of anything like effective capacity for the Art, and some among them have openly confessed their hatred of it. Insensibility to its influence cannot, perhaps, be altogether denied in the case of an eminent contemporary dramatist, who acknowledged to us the other day that the only effect ever produced upon him by a musical performance was one of intense irritation; an irritation which went on increasing until it became unbearable.

A conspicuous example on the other side is that of the poet Browning, who shows himself by his works—witness his "Toccata of Galuppi," Abt Vogler, and many other poems —and is otherwise well known to be a cultured musician. Among literary men of another type, we have the case of the late John Stuart Mill, an ardent lover of the Art, and said also to have been a capable extemporiser on the piano. This musical propensity appears, in his case, to have been connected with what he describes, in his autobiography, as one of the darkest phases of his mental history, when, tempted for a time by a perpetual habit of self analysis, he tormented himself with the thought that the resources of music were restricted to the seven notes of the scale, and their intervening semitones, and drew therefrom a depressing analogy of the exhaustibility of all human enjoyment. From this condition he was rescued, first by reflecting upon the practically unlimited extent of such combinations; and afterwards, by the consoling power exercised upon his mind by the works of Wordsworth, a poet, by the way, whose sympathy with music as an Art, was of the slightest.

On the whole then, and despite some noteworthy exceptions, a large preponderance of evidence does seem to show that literary men, as a body, eloquently though many of them have written upon the subject, are for the most part singularly deficient in musical knowledge and musical susceptibility. In searching for an explanation of this anomaly, perhaps we may be helped by considering the distinction between word-melody and tone-melody. Is it not conceivable that poets and writers of musical prose are merely examples of the diversion into another channel of musical gift, which, but for the circumstance, might possibly have found expression in music proper? Indeed, may we not go a step farther, and broach a theory that the more concise and lucid methods of literary utterance, foster in those who practise it something akin to a positive distaste for that vaguer, dreamier realm, where thoughts and fancies and powerful emotions obtain expression unfettered by words? Composers will need no reminder of the difficulties by which they are beset in many cases, when attempting to adapt, for musical purposes, poems of acknowledged literary merit, nor how often the setting of such words is apt to give a suggestion of two tunes going at once, each interfering with the effect of the other. Here, indeed, something almost like an antagonism between word music and tone music would seem to be felt. Let it be added that whenever this antagonism is overcome, and a perfect blending of the two elements achieved, the result is generally one of rare and enduring beauty.

ROYAL NORMAL COLLEGE FOR THE BLIND.

The annual meeting of the Royal Normal College and Academy of Music for the Blind was held at Grosvenor House on Thursday March 1, by permission of the Duke of Westminster (the president of the college). The report of the executive committee for the past year referred to the fact that the progress of the college had been continuous. Physical training was especially necessary in the education of the blind, and during the past year the committee had been able to give unusual practical attention to this point. The Rev. J. Rice Byrne (one of Her Majesty's Inspectors of Schools) in the course of his report spoke highly of the strictly scientific character of the methods of instruction in use; nothing was done in a haphazard manner but in accordance with principles which had only to be stated in order to be approved. The methods were applied with great intelligence, and mechanical modes of instruction which were supposed, though without reason, to be unavoidable in schools under regular Government inspection, in order to meet the requirements of Government examinations, were unknown at the Royal Normal College. The task of learning was made to be as pleasant as possible, and the teaching staff was more than adequate to the number of students of both sexes, and was in a high state of efficiency. Mr. August Manns, musical director of the Crystal Palace, also reported in very complimentary terms on the results of the musical education given in the college. The Duke of Westminster said that those who remembered the starting of the college in a very small way 15 years ago would congratulate its promoters and conductors on the marvellous progress and success which it had met with during that period. The committee had had a very uphill fight; but thanks to their own exertions and to the admirable and enthusiastic work done by Dr. Campbell (the principal) the difficulties had melted away, and the college had now been brought to a very high state of efficiency in all respects. Miss Hughes (Cambridge) moved the adoption of the report, which was seconded by Mr. Seton-Carr and carried unanimously. The second resolution, which was moved by Mr. Denny, ran as follows:—"That in the opinion of those present the system of education both mental and physical pursued at the college is worthy of the highest commendation in that it prepares the pupils to become independent and useful in after life; and hereby pledge themselves to do everything in their power to further so good a work.' The resolution was seconded by Colonel Pinney and carried unanimously. Sir W. Tindal Robertson, M.P., moved a vote of thanks to the Duke of Westminster and Dr. Armitage, which was seconded by Mr. C. C. Fitzroy (hon. sec.) and warmly accorded. The vote was acknowledged by the Duke of Westminster and Dr. Armitage, and after a few remarks from Dr. Campbell the proceedings terminated.

Concerts.

THE BACH CHOIR.

At its second concert of the season, given at St. James's Hall on Thursday, last week, the Bach Choir once more was true to its mission of reviving such works as have little chance of publicity in the ordinary course of our musical life. There was at least one such work in the programme, Purcell's "Dido and Æneas," not improperly described as the earliest English opera in existence, and showing, together with much that is primitive in design, a great deal of genuine dramatic power. Even more remarkable is the careful attention paid by Purcell to correct and emphatic musical declamation. Not only are the metre and the division of the sentences taken into account, but certain words capable of musical description are emphasised in a manner which, if somewhat primitive, as we remarked before, shows at least an excellent intention. In this respect most of our modern composers might well take a lesson from this early master of the art. Mr. C. V. Stanford secured an excellent performance of Purcell's work, which, although seldom heard in public, is perfectly familiar to musicians. The choral rendering was especially worthy of praise, the true spirit of the original having evidently been imported to the performers. Another interesting item of the concert was the soprano solo and chorus written by Beethoven for the opening of a Vienna theatre. The overture belonging to the same occasion, and known as "Zur Weihe des Hauses," has long been among Beethoven's acknowledged masterpieces, but this vocal portion, having hitherto escaped attention, was sung for the first time in England on Thursday night. Like most posthumous discoveries of the same kind, this soprano solo and chorus may be declared to be principally of antiquarian interest. The two remaining pieces of the programme, on the other hand, belonged to contemporary art work, being Mr. Stanford's "Elegiac Ode," an earnest and beautiful work, and Brahms's violin concerto, the latter introduced by a new performer, Mdlle. Marie Soldat. This young lady, whom Mr. Stanford recently discovered in Germany, belongs to the school of which Herr Joachim is the head. Her faithful adherence to that school was indeed sufficiently proved by her selection of Brahms's concerto, a scholarly and able but by no means effective work, with which few violinists, excepting Joachim and his disciples, care to deal. Be it acknowledged at once that Mdlle. Soldat is an artist of decided merit, who phrased Brahms's intricate periods with remarkable clearness, and throughout displayed technical achievements of no common order. For what Lord Chesterfield might have called "the Graces" of violin-playing, Brahms's solid work offers little or no opportunity, and before judging finally of Mdlle. Soldat's position among her compeers, it will be necessary to hear her in music of a different type. The young lady was very favourably received. We must not forget to mention that the solo vocalists, Miss Anna Williams, Miss Thudichum, Mr. Bernard Lane, and Mr. Herbert Thorndike, materially contributed to the success of the performance.

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

It would be hard to imagine that Crystal Palace audiences rank Herr Joachim and Master Hofmann on the same platform of artistic excellence, yet the fact remains that the greatest violinist of modern times is the only artist who has completely filled the concert room since the appearance of the infant prodigy. A crowded audience is the rule when Herr Joachim plays, and last Saturday saw no exception. Herr Joachim's chief effort was the Brahms Concerto, which he has played twice previously at these concerts. As most amateurs are aware, the work bristles with enormous difficulties, and although less intricate than some of Brahms's later compositions, still requires masterful playing to unravel its many beauties. This it received in an eminent degree from the great artist, and it would be difficult to find a modern performer to equal the breadth of style and keen perception of the composer's meaning with which this fine work was rendered. Herr Joachim subsequently played Bach's "Saraband and Bourrée" in B minor, and was further heard in the same master's vigorous Concerto for two violins. In this latter work the second violin part was played by one of Herr Joachim's pupils—Miss Geraldine Morgan—who seems to possess the makings of a good artist so far as the nature of the work permits of an opinion being formed. The orchestral portion of the programme consisted of Mendelssohn's beautiful "Melusine" overture, Liszt's symphonic poem "Les Préludes," and Beethoven's Symphony in D, all finely played, although the slow movement of the Symphony was taken too fast. Miss Liza Lehmann was the vocalist, and gave delightful renderings of a beautiful air from Saint Saëns's "19th Psalm," and the arietta "Kommt ein schlanker Bursch gegangen," from Weber's "Der Freischütz."

LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The last of these excellent concerts was given on Tuesday to, we regret to say, but a poor audience, Mr. Henschel's pluck and enterprise have deserved better recognition than they have obtained, and, considering the quality of the music he provides, and the fact that his concerts are the only orchestral performances in London during the winter months, the neglect on the part of the public is simply inexplicable. The orchestra on this occasion was augmented, and the concert opened with Mr. Cowen's MS. symphony in F., No 5. Although opinions are divided as to the merits of this work as compared with the composer's other symphonies, and notably the "Scandinavian," there is no doubt that it is an earnest and, in many places, beautiful composition, while the orchestration and command of technical resources displayed is throughout masterly. It was well played under the composer's direction, and Mr. Cowen was recalled to the platform on its conclusion. The only other items on the programme were Wagner's "Trauermarsch," from the "Götterdämmerung;" the "Walkürenritt," and Liszt's symphonic poem, "Tasso (Lamento e Trionfo)." This latter work has not been heard in London for 15 years, having been last played, under Von Bülow's direction, at one of Mr. Bache's concerts in 1873, and, as its name implies, furnishes a musical illustration of the principal features of the poet's life. In his own preface to the work, Liszt remarks, "Tasso, after loving and suffering at Ferrara, was avenged at Rome; his glory still lives in the popular songs of Venice;" and, with happy inspiration, he has selected for the principal theme of the composition a motive to which he heard the Venetian gondoliers sing, upon the lagunes, the strophes of Tasso:—

> Canto l'armi pietose e'l Capitano
> Che'l gran Sepulchro libero di Cristo.

This gondoliera, in fact, is the gist of the work, being heard throughout the first portion in its mournful cadences, now alone, now mingled with strains indicative of the fêtes of Ferrara, and anon forming the kernel of the brilliant and triumphant finale. Out of this attractive subject Liszt has produced a work full of musical and poetical significance, and which illustrates forcibly his earnestness in carrying out his conceptions. Mr. Henschel's rendering was worthy of great praise.

THE WESTMINSTER ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY.

The Westminster Orchestral Society is not by any means the least meritorious of the amateur bands in which London is so rich. They are about fifty strong, and give a very good account of themselves in the concert room of the Westminster Town Hall, playing well together. At their concert of Wednesday last week, they showed their skill in Dr. Bridge's overture, "Morte d'Arthur," conducted by the composer, and in the first movement of a symphony in C, by Mr. C. S. Macpherson, the conductor of the society. Judging from this section of the symphony, we discover that Mr. Macpherson has conceived his work on a very grandiose scale. One of the themes, a pleasing melody ushered in in the first place by clarinets, bassoons, and 'celli, is more original than the rest; the treatment is somewhat heavy and incoherent, and the reminiscences of Wagner very marked. However, there has been much earnest work and something good to show for it, with a promise of better things in future. The number was very warmly received. The band appeared at their best in Mr. Barnett's concerto in D minor, for pianoforte and orchestra, the solo instrument finely played by Miss Emma Barnett, and the composer conducting. Other items of the programme were the introduction to Act III. of the "Meistersinger," and Gounod's overture to "Mireille." The vocalists were Miss Marguerite Hall, who was accompanied in a song of Massenet's by Miss Mary Chatterton on the harp, and gave also Miss Mary Carmichael's "The Tryst," and "Gondoliera," with great acceptance; and Mr. Hulbert Fulkerson, a tenor hailing from Ohio, who made a very good impression, his enunciation being particularly clear. The Duke of Westminster (the President of the Society) attended the concert.

POPULAR CONCERTS.

There was again a crammed audience at last Monday's concert, when, save for the appearance of Madame Schumann, there was no feature of more than ordinary interest in the programme. But the name of the famous pianist is quite sufficient to conjure with, especially when she plays her husband's music. Her solo on this occasion consisted of three short pieces by Scarlatti, played with exquisite delicacy, and she was subsequently associated with MM. Joachim and Piatti, in a notable rendering of Schumann's "Fantasiestücke," for pianoforte, violin, and 'cello. Schumann's music, under his gifted widow's fingers, receives an interpretation which obviously no other artist can supply, and the delight of the audience was warmly expressed at the conclusion of the performance. Herr Joachim played no solo, but joined with MM. Ries, Hollander, Gibson, and Piatti, in an admirable rendering of Mozart's fine Quintet in G minor, No. 6, and Haydn's vigorous and genial Quartet in G major, op. 64, No. 4. Mr. Henschel was the vocalist, and sang Loewe's fine song, "The Erl King," and Schumann's "The two Grenadiers," with such fire and dramatic effect as to produce an extraordinary demonstration on the part of the audience; in fact his persistence in declining an encore led to his being recalled to the platform no less than five times for his second effort.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The fourth concert of Mr. Malcolm Lawson's "Characteristic Series," took place at the Queen's Gate Hall, last week. It consisted principally of old Scotch songs, but Mr. Gabriel Thorp created a little needful variety by a fine delivery of "To Anthea," "Guiding Light" (John Henry), and "I care not" (Arthur Hervey). Miss Mary Howell's deep rich voice was heard to advantage in "Can ye sew cushions," and "Old Robin Gray:" and Mr. Malcolm Lawson played two pianoforte solos of his own, besides giving great amusement by his humorous rendering of the "Twa Corbies," and "Willie's gone to Melville Castle." Miss Marianne Rea sang several soprano solos from "Songs of the North," and Mr. William Nicholl in "Oh, Nannie, wilt thou gang with me?" "Annie Laurie," and "Loch Lomond," was received with much appreciation and vociferously encored.

Mr. Malcolm Lawson's "Schöne Müllerin" concert, supplied on Tuesday last a much felt want by all Schubert lovers—that of giving a chance of hearing an unbroken succession of songs that our average audience is either entirely unacquainted with, or only conversant with from one or two isolated examples. It would be ungracious after Mrs. Lawson's careful translation of the German to dwell on the loss of Wilhelm Müller's exquisite poetry; but, it must be owned, that "Ungeduld" and "Trockne Blumen," rendered respectively by Miss M. Rea and Mr. Lawson, with great artistic feeling, came most gratefully in their original tongue. A word of thanks is due to Mr. Raphael Roche's accompaniments. Mr. Gabriel Thorp was much applauded for his singing of "Der Jäger."

A performance of "Elijah" was given at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End, on the 3rd, with band and chorus of 200 performers. The soloists were: Miss Marianne Fenna, Madame Clara West, Mdme. Osborne Williams, Miss Lottie West, Mr. John Probert, Mr. Thomas Cassidy, Mr. James Blackney, and Mr. Thomas Kempton. Organist, Mr. D. Callow. Conductor, Mr. G. Day Winter. The hall (which seats 5,000 persons) was well filled.

"Elijah" was also performed by the Highbury Philharmonic Society on the 5th, with the following artists as principal vocalists:—Miss Anna Williams, Miss Florence Monk, Miss Hilda Wilson, Miss Rose Dafforne, Mr. Charles Banks, Mr. T. R. Croger, Mr. Frank Ward, and Mr. Watkin Mills. The full band and chorus was conducted by Mr. G. H. Betjemann.

Mr. J. Gladney Wolff gave his second annual concert at Morley Hall, Hackney, on the 5th inst., before a large and appreciative audience. A highly interesting programme was admirably carried out by the following artists:—Miss Kate Fusselle, L.R.A.M., Miss Flora Edwards, Miss Nellie Bradshaw, Miss Jennie Argent, Mr. Alfred Probert, Mr. Henry Thom, Mr. Charles Wolff, Mr. Louis B. Mallett (solo violinist), Mr. Alfred Allen (solo pianist), and Mr. Lewis Frost, the latter officiating as accompanist.

Next Week's Music.

THIS DAY (SATURDAY).
"The Minstrel's Curse," &c.	Crystal Palace.	3
Popular Concert	St. James's Hall.	3
MONDAY, 12.
Popular Concert	St. James's Hall.	8.30
TUESDAY, 13.
"Rose of Sharon" (Novello's)	St. James's Hall.	8
WEDNESDAY, 14.
Ballad Concert	St. James's Hall.	8
THURSDAY, 15.
Philharmonic Concert	St. James's Hall.	8
FRIDAY, 16.
Royal Academy of Music	St. James's Hall.	2.30

FOREIGN.

BOSTON.—The Boston Handel and Haydn Society gave a performance of Berlioz's stupendous "Te Deum," but with somewhat inefficient working material. Nevertheless, the music was very much appreciated, especially the "Te ergo Quæsumus" and the "Tibi omnes Angeli." The Cecilia Society produced a new work by Mr. Arthur Foote, a short cantata for soli, chorus, and orchestra, entitled "The Wreck of the Hesperus." There is a good flow of ideas in it; the treatment of the theme is vigorous, the part-writing is excellent; but looked at as a whole the cantata is scrappy, as if the composer, while following every suggestion of the poet's meaning, had lost sight of the conception of the whole. Grädener's comedy overture did not succeed in pleasing the critics at the sixteenth symphony concert. It was voted a bore, and Mr. Wilson in the Boston Traveller says it is as dry as a chip, whereas Smetana's Lustspiel Overture had some fun in it. By-the-way, this same Mr. Wilson writes what you would call an analytical account of the music to be performed at the classical concerts in the Boston Music Hall Bulletin. The Circular, for it cannot be called a newspaper, comes out once a week during the season, and were it not that the pages are crammed with distracting advertisements, concert-goers would be happy in possessing themselves of the sheet. Handel's oboe concerto, and three movements from Berlioz's "Romeo and Juliet," were given at the same concert, under Mr. Gericke, of course. M. Sautet, late of the Paris Opéra Comique, played the oboe very finely, but the effect of the implacably penetrating instrument in such prominent position was fatiguing to the ear. Nevertheless, some roses were handed to the gentle oboist after his performance, and I am sure he must think Americans very agreeable.

DEATHS.—At Leipsic, aged 82, Th. H. Petschke, composer of men's choruses, and one of the directors of the Gewandhaus.—At Viterbo, aged 67, Luigi Fioravanti, singer of buffo parts in Italian opera.—At St. Petersburg, aged 40, Enrico Puerari, operatic tenor.—At Naples, aged 62, Carlo Costa, teacher of harmony at the Naples Conservatoire. Carlo Costa was half-brother to the late Sir Michael Costa.—At Paris, suddenly, Jean Delphin Alard, violinist, aged 73. Alard was the pupil of Habeneck at the Paris Conservatoire, and from the age of ten upwards obtained all the honours open to a member of that great school. His career was a brilliant one, but it was as a professor at the Conservatoire and the teacher of Sarasate and other celebrated players, that he will be long remembered in Paris.—At Munich, Anton Thoms, viola player.—At Vienna, aged 69, Wenzel Hron, professor.—At Würzburg, aged 71, J. G. Bratsch, director of the School of Music.—At Vienna, aged 70, Heinrich Ruff, singer and professor; and Carl Röder, aged 65, fagottist.

PROVINCIAL.

LIVERPOOL.—The Sunday Society of this city, whose doings have been more than once chronicled in these columns, has been even busier than usual during the present winter, lectures with musical illustrations being given every Sunday before audiences running into the five thousands, and filling a hall, outside whose doors a posse of police has had to be maintained to keep back the overflow. Notwithstanding this, some portion of our city fathers refuse the use of St. George's Hall, which would hold a far greater number; and until an alderman or two can be found possessing even a modicum of the commonsense expected from a navvy or a bricklayer's labourer, it is still probable we shall have to rely upon the beerhouses for our Sunday afternoon recreation. Amongst the more interesting of the lectures of the current series have been two which Mr. J. N. Petrie has delivered within the past fortnight, the first upon "Rossini and his Works," and the second, on Sunday the 19th ult, upon "The Music of Ireland." Mr. Petrie is widely known hereabouts as a musician of culture and experience, thoroughly acquainted with the remotest history of the divine art, and with a peculiar faculty for the expression of his ideas in terse, graceful, and vigorous Saxon. Added to these mental attainments are a ready wit and an agreeable delivery, and it is obvious, therefore, that his lectures are as thoroughly enjoyed as they are largely attended. His matter in both of his present essays has been excellently chosen, thoroughly comprehensive, and of an agreeable lightness, and as his illustrators he has had several prominent members of the Carl Rosa Company. At last Sunday's lecture Mr. Leslie Crotty, Mr. Wilfrid Esmond, and Mr. A. J. McCormack, a talented trio of Irishmen, gave admirable life to the sweet songs of their nation, and that their efforts were was as thoroughly appreciated as the elegant manner of the address, goes without saying. For to-morrow the interesting subject of "The Violin and its History," has been selected, with Mr. Henry Lawson, an authority on the instrument, as its exponent. To-day, Saturday, sees the final performance of the Carl Rosa season of 1888. A seven weeks' run of opera in a provincial town, or even in a metropolitan one nowadays, is something phenomenal; and when this long period has been successful, both from an artistic and a pecuniary point of view, the phenomenon is intensified. Such, however, has been the case, and to such an extent has the Royal Court Theatre been congested during the whole of the period, that Mr. Rosa is seriously contemplating a much longer stay next year, three months being whispered as the probable extent. The two special productions of the season, "Masaniello" and "Robert the Devil," notwithstanding their musical shortcomings, have been the successes of the season—a fact scarcely creditable to the taste of the audience—the splendid spectacular adjuncts being undoubtedly the attraction, and it is to be hoped Mr. Rosa's efforts in coming years will educate the audience up to the proper pitch of taste for music as an art. The Liverpool Musical Club is becoming a very important factor in artistic life here, and so largely has its membership been augmented lately that special club rooms are spoken of. The election of Mr. F. H. Cowen as president, in place of the late Sir George Macfarren, is to be followed by a dinner prior to his departure for Australia, and this will probably prove as interesting a social event as the conversazione so successfully held a fortnight ago under the auspices of the club. Mr. Hallé's last orchestral concert but one in Liverpool has Beethoven's "Emperor" concerto in its programme, and Mr. Charles Santley as vocalist, while next Tuesday's Philharmonic concert will consist of "Moses in Egypt," with Mesdames Thudichum, Fenna, and Hilda Wilson, and Messrs. Lloyd, Harper, Kearton, Bridson, Santley, &c., as principals. Outside Mr. Rosa's theatre the playhouses have recently all been devoted to pantomime, and this somewhat decrepid form of the dramatic art has had agreeable support from the high quality of the music interpolated, more especially at the Prince of Wales's theatre, where not only is there in Mr. Shine a comedian who can sing a thoroughly good and artistic comic song in an artistic manner, but also a number of ladies recruited from the ranks of comic opera, whose efforts have been quite out of the common. In Miss Clara Merivale we have a ballad singer able to express herself with feeling, and rendering her numbers with taste and purity; in Miss Maud Rodrick, a lady possessing a mellow and cultivated contralto voice, but somewhat marring her efforts by a general heaviness of style, and in Miss Elsie Irving a singer with a singularly graceful and easy delivery, a delightfully soft tone, and an archness of manner which should prove of the utmost value in the higher ranks of comic opera.—F. W. P.

MANCHESTER, FEB. 28.—The Gentlemen's Concert of Feb. 22 was devoted entirely to chamber music, the artists being Herr Joachim, Signor Piatti, and a new pianist, Herr Willibald Richter. Of Herr Richter's antecedents we know nothing, but we have heard that he has been living in England for some years, and that he has only recently decided to add himself to the number of public performers. Large and ever increasing as this number is, there will always be room for so excellent a pianist as Herr Richter, and we shall be surprised if it takes him long to obtain a solid footing in the artistic world. His only solo was Chopin's Sonata in B minor, op. 58, and though a somewhat guarded opinion is necessary until we have heard him in a wider selection, still this sonata presents so many problems, both technical and artistic, that one can form a fair general idea of the merits of the performer. He has been endowed with a naturally pliable and elastic hand, which has been so carefully cultivated as to enable him to overcome great technical difficulties with consummate ease; and his touch, though firm and masculine, showed no sign of hardness. Nor has the intellectual side of his art been neglected; indeed his rendering of the first movement was most admirable from an artistic point of view, and thoroughly penetrated by the refined spirit of the composer. We do not think he has yet raised his cantabile touch to the perfection it will ultimately reach, and his trill will in time probably become more even; but, on the whole, we consider Herr Richter an important addition to the army of pianoforte virtuosi. He combined with Herr Joachim and Signor Piatti in splendid performances of two trios—the one a finely characteristic work by Dvorak, in F minor, op. 65, the other Haydn's in

C. In a "Lesson for Viola d'Amore," by Ariosti (adapted for violoncello), Signor Piatti gave us one of those quaintly beautiful things to which he so often treats us. Herr Joachim's solos were the adagio from Spohr's 11th concerto, and two melodies of Schumann. We fancied we missed some of the vigour which usually marks his playing—perhaps the depression due to the small and unenthusiastic audience had something to do with it.

At Mr. Hallé's Eighteenth Concert, Feb. 23, the "Hymn of Praise" and Rossini's "Stabat Mater" were given before a very large audience. The vocalists were Miss Mariott, Miss Hilda Wilson, Miss Jessie Moorhouse, Mr. Seymour Jackson, and Signor Novara. Miss Marriott and Miss Hilda Wilson sang admirably, both in the solos allotted to them, and also in the duet "Quis est Homo," which would have been encored if the audience had had their own way. Miss Jessie Moorhouse (a local contralto) must also be congratulated for her success in the duet, "I waited for the Lord." Mr. Jackson sang very well, better perhaps than we ever heard him. His best effort was the air "The sorrows of death," and the following recitative from the Hymn of Praise. We need not say that his reception was very enthusiastic. The bass parts of the "Stabat Mater" had ample justice done to them by Signor Novara, whose voice is one of considerable range and power. Altogether, the concert was a very enjoyable one, and no small portion of its success was due to the accurate way in which the choruses were given.

March 6th.—The crowded house which assembled at Mr. Hallé's nineteenth concert (March 1st) was, no doubt, largely due to the announcement that Herr Joachim was to play, and the enthusiasm which greeted his first appearance on the platform showed how highly the great virtuoso is esteemed amongst us. Certainly we never heard him play more finely than he did on Thursday last. His rendering of Spohr's 6th Concerto in G minor was most masterly, and the virtuosity which he displayed in an unaccompanied Andante in F, and Allegro in C, by Bach, was prodigious. But the whole evening had nothing more delightful to offer than his performance, in conjunction with Mr. Hallé, of Beethoven's Sonata in G major (op. 30, No. 3); at its conclusion the two veterans received an ovation which made an encore indispensable, and accordingly they repeated the last movement. The orchestral selections, though they contained no novelty, were all interesting. The principal one was Dvorak's Second Symphony in D minor, which was played for the first time at these concerts a week or two ago. A second hearing of this work brings one face to face with many things in it which previously were only seen through a glass darkly, and highly as we thought of it before, a fuller comprehension has only served to reveal new beauties. The rendering of it was very fine, and entirely repaid Mr. Hallé for the careful rehearsal it had received. The vocalist was Mdlle. Busjaeger, of Bremen, who on this occasion made her first appearance in England. In listening to a débutante it is never easy to determine how much of what one objects to is due to nervousness, and how much to want of training or natural defect. Mdlle. Busjaeger has a soprano voice which is not without promise, and which, in some respects, gives evidence of having received careful attention. Occasionally she was painfully out of time, and her phrasing often struck us as being crude and inartistic, but it is quite possible that these defects were only temporary, and were directly due to the ordeal of a first appearance.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

(From our Correspondent.)

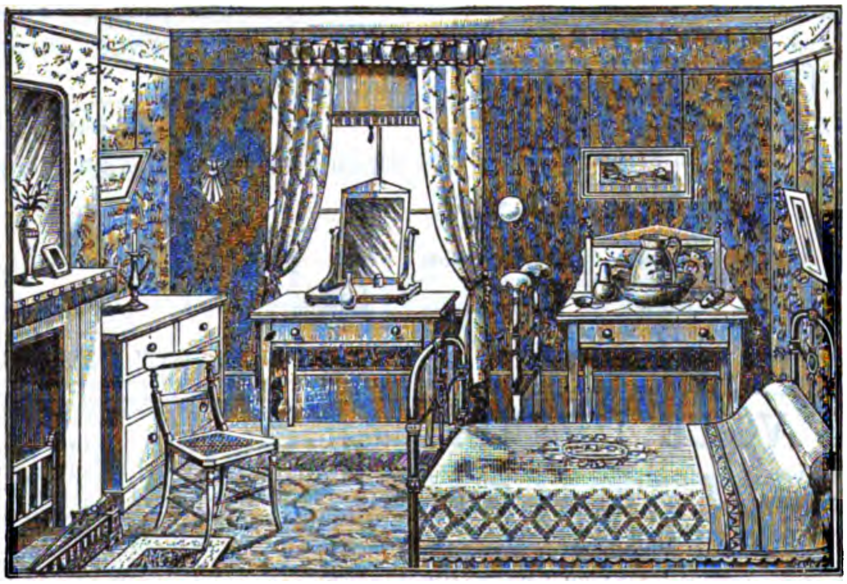
Tschaïkowsky, who is now in the receipt of a travelling pension of 3,000 roubles from the Russian Government, is at the present time sojourning in Paris. M. Benardaky, a compatriot of the composer, recently gave a musical soirée with M. Colonne's orchestra in his honour. The Colonne concert of last Sunday at the Châtelet Theatre was devoted exclusively to the works of the Russian composer, under his own direction, and the following is the interesting programme: Sérenade, pour instruments à cordes; Fantaisie de concert, pour piano," M. Louis Diemer; Deux Mélodies, "Ah! qui brûla d'amour," Mdme. J. Conneau ('cello, M. Brandonkoff), and "Toujours à toi," Mdme. Conneau; pièces pour violoncelle, M. Brandonkoff; and "Fragments de la 3e Suite." It is also reported that many persons in political circles are using their influence to induce the directors of the Grand Opéra to commission M. Tschaïkowsky to compose an opera for their theatre.

Miss Moore, the young American singer, will make her first appearance at the Opéra Comique, her voice having been found at the rehearsals to be too thin for the vast auditorium of the Grand Opéra.

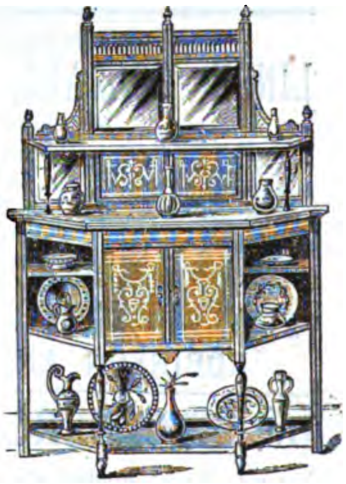
M. Maréchal's opera, "Amoureux de Catherine," has been revived at the Opéra Comique.

FURNISH THROUGHOUT (REGD.)
OETZMANN & CO.,
67, 69, 71, 73, 75, 77, and 79, HAMPSTEAD ROAD (Near Tottenham Court Road.)
CARPETS, FURNITURE, BEDDING, DRAPERY, FURNISHING, IRONMONGERY, CHINA, GLASS, &c.
Orders per Post receive prompt and faithful attention.

INEXPENSIVE ART TAPESTRY CURTAINS.
THE BURMESE. 7s. 6d. per pair, in all colours.
THE IMPERIAL. 38s. 6d. per pair, in all shades.



BEDROOM FURNISHED COMPLETE FOR FIVE GUINEAS.



EBONIZED CABINET.
Four bevelled silvered plates at back, 4 feet wide.
75s.

Consisting of Chest of Drawers, Toilet Table, Washstand with marble top and tiled back, Toilet Glass, Towel Airer, in plain art colours or in imitation of various woods, Strong Iron French Bedstead, Palliasse, Top Mattress, Bolster, Pillow, Toilet Set, Water Bottle and Tumbler, Fender, Fire Irons, Carpet (9 ft. by 6 ft.), and Rug. Five Guineas Complete.

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE, THE BEST FURNISHING GUIDE EXTANT, POST FREE.

DEFRIES' Safety Water White Oil.

The Purest, Whitest, and Best Burning Mineral Oil in England.

EQUAL IN QUALITY TO OILS SOLD UNDER FANCY NAMES, at from 1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d. per gall
FOR USE IN ALL LAMPS AND STOVES.

PRICE 1s. PER GALLON.

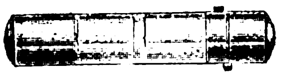
FREE DELIVERED IN LONDON AND ALL SUBURBS.

Minimum, 2 gallons. The 5 and 10 gallon drums are fitted with taps. Drums charged, and full price allowed when returned.

Terms: Cash on or before delivery. Deposit Accounts opened for Oil.

DEFRIES' SAFETY LAMP & OIL CO., LIMITED,
43 and 44, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON, E.C.

THORNHILL'S
NEW "GLOVE" BOTTLE.



FOR PERFUME & SMELLING SALTS.

Large Variety of Patterns at Various Prices

THORNHILL'S
TOILET CASES
FOR LADIES AND GENTLEMEN

THORNHILL'S ARTISTIC FANS.
A LARGE and VARIED STOCK of the BEST QUALITY.

PRESENTS.

—o—

THORNHILL'S
Fully Illustrated
LIST
OF
LATEST
NOVELTIES

POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

THORNHILL'S
OPERA GLASSES.

IN GREAT VARIETY.

THORNHILL'S
Guaranteed Razors Singly or in Sets.

W. THORNHILL & CO., TO THE QUEEN & ROYAL FAMILY. 144, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON. ESTABLISHED 1734.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER'S
LINEN COLLARS, CUFFS, AND SHIRTS.

Samples and Price Lists Post Free.

COLLARS—LADIES' 3-fold, from 3s. 6d. per doz. GENTS' 4-fold, 4s. 11d. to 5s. 11d. per doz.

CUFFS—For Ladies or Gentlemen, 5s. 11d. to 10s. 6d. per doz.

SHIRTS—Best quality Long Cloth, with 4-fold Linen Fronts 35s. 6d. per half-doz. (To measure, 2s. extra.)

N.B.—OLD SHIRTS made as good as new with best materials in Neckbands, Cuffs, and Fronts, for 14s. the half-doz.

ROBINSON AND CLEAVER, BELFAST.

Dr. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For sore throat, hoarseness, and relaxed throat, also for improving the voice

FOR SINGING AND SPEAKING

without fatiguing the voice. Celebrated in every town in Europe, India, America, and the Colonies. Testimonials from Patti, Trebelli, Patey, Santley, and the most eminent medical men.

Sold in boxes; 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d.; also in bottles for abroad.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE & RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & Co.,

Manufacturers and Importers of all kinds of Strings
FOR
VIOLIN, VIOLA, CELLO, DOUBLE BASS, HARP,
ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO,
Have always in STOCK the Largest ASSORTMENT of any House in the World.

6, GOLDEN SQUARE, W.

A BLESSING IN EVERY FAMILY.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.

These Remedies have stood the test of FIFTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE and are pronounced the best medicines for family use. Tens of thousands of written testimonials bear witness to their marvellous curative properties. They are acknowledged by the whole civilised world to be the greatest efficacy in every form of disease.
Sold by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors.

Manufactured only at THOMAS HOLLOWAY'S ESTABLISHMENT
78, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.
N.B.—Advice gratis at the above address, daily, between the hours of 11 and 4 or by letter

ASCHERBERG PIANOS.

"I only perform an act of justice when I ascribe my successes to a great extent to the excellent Instruments from your factory, on which I was favoured to play before the public. Remain convinced that I shall at all times and everywhere give preference to your Pianos over all others, and accept the assurance of my unbounded esteem.

Respectfully,

VLADIMIR VON PACHMANN."

ASCHERBERG PIANO DEPOT,

211, REGENT STREET, W.

CADBURY'S

GUARANTEED PURE. COCOA GUARANTEED SOLUBLE.

(REGISTERED.)

A FEW GOOD REASONS WHY IT ENJOYS SUCH WORLD-WIDE POPULARITY.

It is guaranteed to be Pure Cocoa.
It is Soluble in boiling Milk or Water.
It is not reduced in value by the addition of Starch, Sugar, &c.
It is especially rich in flesh-forming and strength-sustaining principles.
It contains all the delicious aroma of the natural article, without the excessive proportions of fat.
It is delicious, nutritious, digestible, comforting, and a refined beverage suitable for all seasons of the year.
It is a gentle stimulant, and sustains against hunger and bodily fatigue.
In the whole process of manufacturing Cadbury's Pure Cocoa, the automatic machinery employed obviates the necessity for its being once touched by the human hand.

PRECAUTION AND WARNING.

CADBURY BROS. warn the public of those Dutch Cocoas and their English imitations, sold as pure Cocoa, to which about 4 per cent. of Alkali and other agents are added, to give apparent strength to the liquor, by making it a dark colour. This addition may be detected by the scent when a tin is freshly opened. No Cocoa can be stronger than Cadbury's, which is guaranteed ABSOLUTELY PURE.

Always ask for Cadbury's Cocoa. Always examine your purchase. See that you have not been induced to accept an imitation, and be wary of highly-coloured and drugged preparations offered as pure Cocoa. Anything of a medicated character associated with Cocoa proclaims it at once to be an imposture.

PARIS DEPÔT: 90, FAUBOURG ST. HONORÉ.

Printed and Published by MACRAE, CURTICE & Co. (LIMITED), 12, Catherine Street, Strand, W.C.

WEEKLY.]

The Musical World.

ESTABLISHED 1822.

REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED; IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST WEEKLY, 17/6 PER ANNUM (Payable in advance).

VOL. 67.—No. 11. SATURDAY, MARCH 17, 1888. PRICE {3D. Unstamped. 4D. By Post.

THE

KARN AMERICAN ORGANS,

Manufactured by D. W. KARN & CO.,

WOODSTOCK, ONTARIO, CANADA.

The Karn Organ is a reproduction of the Pipe Organ in miniature, of pre-eminent value as an effective music exponent for the Home.

OUR AIM has not been to see how cheaply an organ can be built, BUT HOW CHEAPLY A FIRST-CLASS ORGAN can be made.

OUR CLAIM is that we are building organs equal to, if not surpassing, all others, at the very lowest reasonable prices.

COMPARISON CHEERFULLY INVITED.

New Illustrated Catalogue & Price Lists Free of the
SOLE EUROPEAN AGENTS:

THE SCHREIBER PIANO CO.,
18, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W.

To the Trade and Profession.

OLD VIOLINS.

MESSRS. BEARE AND SON, Manufacturers and Importers of every Description of Musical Instruments, Strings, Fittings, &c.,
34, Rathbone Place, London, W.,
Invite an inspection of their collection of old Violins,
All genuine examples of the celebrated old Masters.
Over 300 old instruments from which to select.

Old Violins from £5.
Old Tenors from £5.
Old Violoncellos from £10.
Old Double Basses from £15.

Sole Wholesale Agents for James Tubb's celebrated Bows.
Bows by the old makers also frequently in stock.
Tested strings unequalled for durability and equality of tone.
Repairs of every kind of Musical Instrument executed promptly by experienced workmen.

BEARE AND SON,
34, RATHBONE PLACE, LONDON, W.

Special Notices.

SOCIETY OF ARTS PRACTICAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.
THE NEXT EXAMINATION
will be held at the Society's house, 18, John Street, Adelphi, W.C., and will commence on THURSDAY, the 24th May.
Full particulars on application to the Secretary.
H. TRUEMAN WOOD,
Secretary.

MR. WILLIAM NICHOLL'S Second Chamber CONCERT, STEINWAY HALL, TUESDAY, 20th March, at Eight p.m. Artists, Miss Pauline Cramer, Madame Isabel Fassett, Mr. William Nicholl. Solo piano, Mr. Carl Armbruster; Conductors, Miss Mary Carmichael, Mr. Wilfred Bendall. The duet from the 1st Act (Scene III.) of Wagner's "Walkure," will be sung by Miss Cramer and Mr. Nicholl in Part I.

Stalls 5s., Balcony 1s., at Chappell's, Cramer's, Stanley Lucas, Weber and Co., W. B. Healy, and W. Nicholl, 28, Belsize-road, N.W.

PORTMAN ROOMS, BAKER STREET, W.—Miss MILLINGTON SYNGE has the honour to announce that she will give a PIANOFORTE RECITAL at the above rooms, on SATURDAY AFTERNOON, March 24th, 1888, at Three o'clock precisely, in aid of a lady in very distressed circumstances. The following artistes have kindly promised to assist:—Messrs. ERNEST CECIL AND CECIL TREHERNE, who will perform the Drawing-room Operetta, "BETWEEN TWO STOOLS;" Mrs. SMITH LUMSDEN, Mr. HENRY DUMMER. Tickets—Stalls numbered, 5s.; reserved numbered, 2s. 6d.; admission, 1s.; may be obtained of Miss M. Synge, 8, Shrewsbury-road, Bayswater, W., and of W. and J. Ross, 29, Norfolk-terrace, Bayswater, W., and at the doors.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL CHORAL SOCIETY.
Patron—Her Majesty the QUEEN
President—H.R.H. the Duke of EDINBURGH, K.G.
Conductor—Mr. BARNBY.
HANDEL'S MESSIAH, on GOOD FRIDAY, March 30th, at 7.
Tickets—7s. 6d., 6s., 5s., 4s.,; gallery (promenade only), 1s.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised & Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR

THE VOICE,

By T. A. Wallworth.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Madame Alwina Valleria, Mr. Iver M'Kay, and other successful Vocalists:

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & CO. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

TO ORGANISTS.—For Professional Practice, Teaching, or Concert purpose, and Home use, the "Bach Model" Pedal Instrument is only reliable substitute for a pipe organ. For design, improved action, connections, and tone, it embraces the merits of the highest class instruments; and without paying an exorbitant price you may have an instrument with organ measurements that removes the deficiencies hitherto experienced in pedal instruments.—Apply for illustrated lists, terms, and prices, to J. L. Scholefield, Musical Instrument Manufacturer, Huddersfield.

DRURY LANE.—AUGUSTUS HARRIS, Lessee and Manager.—EVERY EVENING, at 7.30. MORNING PERFORMANCES on SATURDAY, at 1.30. Augustus Harris's NINTH ANNUAL PANTOMIME, PUSS IN BOOTS. Children half-price on payment at the doors, Morning Performances only. The Performances now commence with the Transformation Scene and Harlequinade, followed by the Opening. Box-office open daily from 10.0 to 6.0.

DRURY LANE.—LAST NIGHTS of PUSS IN BOOTS, which will be WITHDRAWN on SATURDAY, March 24.

Institutes and Colleges.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, KENSINGTON GORE, LONDON, S.W.

Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.

President - - H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES, K.G.
Director - - Sir GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L., LL.D.
Next College Concert (Orchestral), March 26th, at 7.30 p.m.
Conductor - - Professor C. V. STANFORD, Mus. Doc.
The Midsummer Term commences April 25th, 1888.

CHARLES MORLEY, Honorary Secretary.

UNIVERSITY OF TRINITY COLLEGE, TORONTO. (The Church of England University of Upper Canada.)

FACULTY OF MUSIC.

The next Examinations for the degree of Bachelor of Music will be held simultaneously in Toronto and London in Easter week, 1888. Women are admissable to these examinations. For particulars apply to Rev. E. K. Kendal, D.C.L., Registrar for England, Southsea.

TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON. For MUSICAL EDUCATION and EXAMINATION, &c., and for the Granting of Certificates. and Diplomas in Music. Inst. 1872.

President - - The EARL of ABERDEEN.

THE NEXT STUDENTS' CONCERT will take place on TUESDAY March 20th, at 7 o'clock.

THE NEXT STUDENTS' ORCHESTRAL CONCERT will take place at PRINCES' HALL, PICCADILLY, on MONDAY, April 9th, at 8 o'clock.

THE NEXT EXAMINATION IN MUSICAL KNOWLEDGE will take place on June 8th. Last day of entry May 8th.

A Companion Question Book to the text book of Musical Knowledge, prepared for the use of Students, more especially for the Local Examinations in Musical Knowlege, has just been published.

Applications for tickets, regulations, and all particulars should be made to the Secretary, Trinity College, London, W.

By Order of the Academical Board.

GUILD OF ORGANISTS, 35, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C.

Patron—The Right Rev. THE LORD BISHOP OF LONDON.

PRESIDENTS.

The REV. CANON SIR F. H. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., Mus. Doc.
Sir HERBERT OAKELEY, Bart., Mus. Doc.
Sir ROBERT STEWART, Mus. Doc.
Vice-President—WILLIAM PINNEY, Mus. Bac., Oxon.
Warden—CHARLES VINCENT, Mus. Doc., Oxon.

Established to advance the cause of Church music and the truest interests of its Professors, etc.

Members of the Church of England and Ireland, and the Episcopal Church of Scotland, are eligible for election. Subscription: Professional Organists (Associates) 10s. 6d. per annum; Amateurs (Members) 15s. per annum; Life subscription, 5 guineas.

Next Fellowship examination in Easter Week.

Prospectus and further particulars may be obtained from the Hon. Sec., Dr. J. H. Lewis, Staines, Middlesex.

London Organ School and College of Music.

Established 1865, by the Rev. SCOTSON CLARK, Mus.B.
Patron—His Grace The ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY.

THE NEXT ORGAN RECITAL at ST. NICHOLAS COLE ABBEY, on TUESDAY, March 20th, at One o'clock, by Miss BUCK.

Piano, Singing, Violin, 'Cello, Flute, Harp, Organ Lessons, with Practice, and Harmony. Private Lessons and Classes.

Candidates for Musical Degrees at any of the English Universities are expressly prepared for the Matriculation Examinations by Oxford and Cambridge graduates (in honours). Branches at Kensington and St. John's Wood.

Full particulars of the Secretary, 3, Princes Street, Cavendish Square, W. (close to Oxford Circus).

T. H. Y. TROTTER, M.A., Mus.Bac., Director of Classes.
HENRY CLARK, Principal.

Publishers' Announcements.

"BIRD RAPTURES,"

Song (for Soprano).

WORDS BY CHRISTINA G. ROSSETTI.

Music by MOIR CLARK.

PRESS OPINIONS.

"'Bird Raptures' is a song of exceptional merit. The accompaniment plays an important part, and contains several original and charming effects."—THE MUSICAL WORLD, June 11, 1887.

"One of the most earnest and beautiful songs that has appeared for many a long day."—Musical Standard, Dec. 23, 1887.

"When the public can appreciate a song like this, the trade of the vulgar ballad-monger will be gone."—Musical Review, December, 1887.

BY THE SAME COMPOSER,
"BANVA,"
Four Sketches for Pianoforte Duet.

"Admirably written, and marked by an originality which will recommend them to pianists of culture."—THE MUSICAL WORLD, June 11, 1887.

STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER, AND Co., 84, New Bond Street, W.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE "JOLLY BRICK" POLKA.

By M. S. BARRON.

PRICE 3s.

"Is bright and danceable."—News of the World.

"This is a cheerful and sprightly piece, with well marked accentuation. It presents no difficulties of execution even to the young player."—Dundee Advertiser.

"One of the brighest and most sprightly polkas we have met with for a long time. The key is E flat, changing to B flat. The piece is quite above the common run of dance music." —Musical Standard.

ALSO,

A TWILIGHT DREAM.

FOR PIANO.

By M. S. BARRON.

PRICE 3s.

"An interesting piece, with a melody for the left hand."—Musical Standard.

LONDON: SWAN & CO., 4, GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, W.

IN SIX GRADES.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH.

Under the Sanction and Approval of the Rev. Sir FREDERICK A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., M.A., Mus. Doc., and of Sir G. A. MACFARREN, Mus. Doc.

THE MUSICIAN:

A GUIDE FOR PIANOFORTE STUDENTS,

By RIDLEY PRENTICE.

CONTAINS ANALYSES OF WELL-KNOWN PIECES PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED, ENABLING THE PUPIL TO UNITE A STUDY OF MUSICAL FORM WITH THE ORDINARY PIANOFORTE PRACTICE.

Saturday Review.—"We are far from suggesting that there is any royal road for acquiring technical knowledge, but we are quite certain Mr. Ridley Prentice's road is in every way the pleasantest that has yet been laid before any pianoforte student."

Academy.—"A knowledge of form is imparted in simple and pleasant language. We heartily commend it to all who desire to understand, satisfactorily interpret, and enjoy beautiful music."

Graphic.—"Written with the laudable purpose of helping the pianoforte student to understand and enjoy beautiful music."

School Board Chronicle.—"A useful book for earnest teachers."

Musical Review.—"Mr. Ridley Prentice has newly developed an important though much neglected branch of the teacher's duties."

Monthly Musical Record.—"No more valuable work of the kind is in existence."

W. SWAN SONNENSCHEIN & CO., PATERNOSTER SQUARE:
And all Book and Music Sellers.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER'S

ROYAL IRISH CAMBRIC POCKET-HANDKERCHIEFS.

Samples and Price Lists Post Free.

Per doz.—Children's, 1s. 2d.; Ladies', 2s. 4½d.; Gents' 3s. 6d.

Hemstitched—Ladies', 2s. 11½d.; Gents', 4s. 11d.

—:0:—

BY APPOINTMENTS TO THE QUEEN AND THE CROWN PRINCESS OF GERMANY.

ROBINSON AND CLEAVER, BELFAST.

Google

Professional Cards.

The subscription for a "card" space in these columns is £1 10s. for six months, and £1 per quarter—payable in advance, including copy of the paper each week. Subscriptions should be sent to the office of The Musical World 12, Catherine Street, Strand, London, W.C.

Conductors and Composers.

Mr. FREDERIC H. COWEN,
73, Hamilton Terrace,
St. John's Wood, N.W.

Mr. F. KILVINGTON HATTERSLEY,
A.R.A.M.
(Professor of the Pianoforte, Composer, and Conductor),
17, Finsbury Park Villas,
Green Lanes, N.

Mr. ALBERT VISETTI
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Conductor),
12, Westbourne Park Terrace, W.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN
(Guitar, Concertina, and Gigelira. Wood and Straw Instrument),
22a, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W.

Mr. F. St. JOHN LACY
(Professor of Singing, Composer and Vocalist, baritone),
Fitzroy Mansion, Charlotte Street,
Fitzroy Square, W.

Mr. H. MARTYN VAN LENNEP
(Teacher of Singing, Composer, and Conductor),
Address—7, Wimpole Street,
Cavendish Square, W.

Mr. G. ARTHUR HIGGS, F.C.O.
L. Mus. and Tallis Gold Medallist. T.C.L. Pupil of Mr. Albert Visetti. Teacher of Singing, Harmony, Conductor, and Vocalist. (Baritone.)
Address—Trinity College, London, W.

Vocalists—Sopranos.

Madame VALLERIA
(Opera and Concerts),
Bosworth House, Husband's Bosworth,
Rugby.

Miss EDITH DESMOND
(Opera and Concerts),
c/o Nolan & Jackson.

Miss KATE FLINN
(Concerts and Oratorios),
41, Welbeck Street,
Cavendish Square, W.

Mdlle. VELMI
(Opera and Concerts),
7, Chesilton Road, Munster Park,
Fulham, S.W.

Miss AGNES LARKCOM
Has removed to
158, Portsdown Road, W.

Madame ISABEL GEORGE, L.R.A.M.
(Concert and Oratorio),
29, Albany Street, Regent's Park, N.W.

Contraltos.

Miss JOSEPHINE CRAVINO
(Concerts and Oratorio),
2, Sedgmoor Villas,
Private Lessons given. Camberwell, S.E.

Miss MARY E. DAKIN, R.A.M.
(Mez. Sop.),
Ballad, Oratorio, &c.
31, Monmouth Road,
Bayswater, London, W.

Miss LENA LITTLE
(Concerts),
42, Norfolk Square, Hyde Park, W.

Contraltos.—Continued.

Miss PATTIE MICHIE,
68, Park Walk, Fulham Road,
London, S.W.

Madame OSCAR POLLACK
(Concerts).
56, Duchess Road,
Edgbaston, Birmingham.

Tenors.

Mr. BARTON McGUCKIN
(Operas Concerts, and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. Alfred Moul,
26, Old Bond Street, W.,
Or, 270, Elgin Avenue, Maida Vale, W.

Mr. ARNOLD BREEDEN
(Concerts Oratorio, and Opera),
Address—N. Vert, Esq.,
6, Cork Street, W.

Mr. SEYMOUR JACKSON
(Concerts and Oratorio),
Old Trafford, Manchester.

Mr. PAYNE CLARKE
(Concerts and Oratorio).
28, Devonshire Street, Islington, N.

Mr. J. DALGETY HENDERSON,
Gothic Lodge,
Lordship Lane, S.E.

Mr. REDFERN HOLLINS,
30, St. Stephen's Avenue,
Shepherd's Bush, W.

Mr. BERNARD LANE,
60, Westbourne Park Villas, W.

Chevalier EDWARD SCOVEL
(Opera, Concerts, and Oratorio),
Hotel de L'Europe,
Milan, Italy.

Mr. W. ESMOND,
24, Upper Mount Street, Dublin.

Baritones.

Mr. WALTER CLIFFORD
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concerts),
c/o N. Vert, Esq.,
6, Cork Street, W.

Mr. FREDERIC KING
(Concerts and Oratorio),
19, Canfield Gardens, S. Hampstead.

Mr. NORRIS CROKER,
Egremont, Croxted Road,
West Dulwich, S.E.

Mr. JOSEPH LYNDE
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concert
63, Stafford Pl.
Buckingham Gate, S.W.

Mr. ALBERT REAKES
(Bass-Baritone, of the "London Ballad Singers," Oratorios, Concerts, &c.),
30, Lancaster Road,
Notting Hill, W.

Herr RAGNAR GREVILLIUS
Concerts, Oratorio, and Opera),
70, Portsdown Road, Maida Vale, W.

Bass.

Mr. WATKIN MILLS requests that in future all communications respecting Concerts, &c., be addressed to his residence, Huntcliffe, Bexley, Kent.

Mr. FRANK CELLI
(Concerts and Oratorio,
c/o Mr. N. Vert, 6, Cork St.,
Burlington Gardens, W.

Trumpet and Cornet.

Mr. THOMAS HARPER,
185, King's Road, N.W

Guitar.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN, Guitariste, Instructress to H.R.H. the Princess Louise, has returned to town, 22a, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W., where may be had her celebrated book, "Learning the Guitar Simplified," 10s. 6d.

Violin.

Mr. ALLAN CAMPBELL
(Formerly Pupil of Mr. Henry Holmes and Dr. S. S. Wesley),
23, Thicket Road,
Pupils visited and received. Anerley, S.E.

Mr. LESLIE CROTTY and
Madame GEORGINA BURNS,
c/o Mr. Alfred Moul (sole agent),
26, Old Bond Street, W.

Miss AGNES JANSON requests that all communications respecting engagements may be sent to her new address, 34a, Gloucester Place, Portman Square, W.; or to Mr. N. Vert, 6, Cork Street, W.

The FRASER QUINTET. Misses Violet (Vocalist), Ida, and Ethel (Pianist, Violoncello, and Viola), Mabel and Stella Violinists), play Quartets, Solos, Duets, two Pianofortes, &c. For Engagements, for Concerts, "At Homes," Dinner and Garden Parties.—Address: 121, Adelaide Road, N.W.

MR. HEALEY'S SPECIAL LIST.

Madame LILIAN NORDICA (Soprano)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert,
Address to
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mdlle. LOUISE LABLACHE (Mez. Sop.)
(Opera and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W

Mdlle. HELENE HASTREITER (Contr.)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert)
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Madame BELLE COLE (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Miss MARGUERITE HALL (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. WILLIAM NICHOLL (Tenor)
28, Belsize Road, N.W.,
Or, Sole Agent, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. JOHN PROBERT (Tenor)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W

Mr. VAUGHAN EDWARDES (Baritone)
(Concerts and Oratorio),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. MULES BROWN (Baritone)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. HENRY POPE (Bass)
(Opera, Concerts, and Oratorio),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. T. L. CAMPION (Bass)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES.

Public Speakers and Singers

Can use "Brown's Bronchial Troches" as freely as requisite, containing nothing that can injure the system. They are invaluable in allaying the hoarseness and irritation incident to vocal exertion, effectually Clearing and Strengthening the Voice.

"They seem to act specially on the organs of the voice, and produce a clear enunciation."—MARIE ROZE-MAPLESON.

Ask for and obtain only "Brown's Bronchial Troches." Sold everywhere at 1s. 1½d a box.

ORGANISTS AND ORGAN STUDENTS.

You are kindly requested to write for Ainsworth's "New Patent Organ Pedal Combination List." Ainsworth's "New Patent" is perfectly unique and may be combined easily with any Piano. It is the only one which may be safely combined with any Piano without deteriorating the instrument. Having put down at my works two engines and machinery of the most desirable kind, I am now supplying my goods at a price which enables every organist and organ student to have always ready for use in his Studio an

ORGAN PEDAL PIANO,

AFFORDING PERFECTLY UNIQUE PEDAL PRACTICE.

34, Sheen Park, Richmond.

DEAR SIR,—I have deferred writing to comment upon your Pedals and Action now attached to my pianoforte until I could satisfy myself of their utility and efficiency. I can now conscientiously say that they more than fulfil all my anticipations. Although I am no carpenter, aided by your lucid diagram I had little difficulty in attaching them myself, and it is impossible to over-estimate the comfort they give to me or to conceive the saving of time one experiences in one's own room.—Believe me, yours truly,

BURNHAM HORNER, F.R. Hist.S.

To Mr. Mr. Ainsworth,

DEAR SIR,—It gives me great pleasure to bear testimony to the perfection of your Invention. I am more than satisfied with your Patent Action and Organ Pedals, and consider them worth double the money. Organists and organ students who desire to improve in the Art of Pedalling, which is so essential to a good organist, will do well to procure a set. I have seen no Action half so effective, and one can sit at the Piano and play, "Fixed in his everlasting seat," or any other organ music, or organ arrangement with the greatest pleasure. The touch of pedals could not be better, and the action is as you say, "Absolutely free from annoyances." They cannot be too highly recommended, as by their use, rapid progress is certain.—Believe me, sincerely yours,

I. B. Thornton,
Organist, Birstall, Leeds.

Cologne, July 16th, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have much pleasure in informing you that your Pedals have given the fullest satisfaction. I have them combined with my practice Piano. Many of my musical friends who have seen them, as well as my organ pupils, are quite delighted with them; and I must acknowledge that I have never met with any Pedals so noiseless and pleasant to play upon as yours. The Action I consider durable, and of very good workmanship. Every organist who desires to perfect his playing will welcome your invention. I can recommend your goods in every respect.—Yours truly,

HERR J. RODENKIRCHEN.

To John Ainsworth, Esq. Organist, The Cathedral, Cologne, Germany.

TOOLS.—In order to facilite the attachment, a complete set of tools are sent (four in number) each one marked for its particular use. By the use of these tools, and following carefully the directions, ANY ONE can make a really good attachment.

On Receipt of Trade or Professional Card, you will receive List, with Liberal Terms.

AINSWORTH'S PATENT ORGAN COMBINATION WORKS
BRINSCALL, CHORLEY.

Facts and Comments.

The arrangements for Mr. Harris's season at Covent Garden are now sufficiently completed to allow of some prospective remarks as to its character. There will be thirty-two performances included in the subscription, the first of which will be given on Monday May 14. As last year, the programme will again be entirely devoid of novelty, being made up of such familiar works as "Faust," "Lohengrin" "Carmen," "Don Giovanni," "Rigoletto," "Il Barbiere," and others. The interest, therefore, will entirely centre in the artists, and, in that direction, Mr. Harris is certainly very strong. Mesdames Albani, Valleria, Arnoldson, Melba, Minnie Hauk, and Nordica, will be amongst the soprani; and the contralti will include Madame Trebelli, and possibly Madame Scalchi. The two brothers De Reszke, M. Lassalle the great French baritone, the veteran Signor Cotogni, and Signor del Puente, will also appear, and an exceptionally strong chorus and orchestra are said to have been engaged. Signori Mancinelli and Randegger will be the conductors, and that veteran worshipper of Terpsichore, Madame Katti Lanner, will attend to the ballet.

Whether Italian opera in this, or any other form, can be made to flourish, remains to be seen; but there is no doubt that in Mr. Harris it possesses an able and energetic champion, who is, moreover, supported by a large subscription, extending, it is said, over most of the boxes at his disposal.

The question remains to be answered—will there be a rival season at Her Majesty's Theatre? And that question we are not prepared to answer in a definite manner. Of rumours, more or less authenticated, there are many. We understand, for example, from a source that should be well informed, that Mr. Mapleson in spite of past disaster and impending bankruptcy proceedings, intends to have another turn at fortune's wheel. Masini, the great Italian tenor, would be his trump card, and he does not see why little Nikita should not make a charming Zerlina or Cherubino.

There is also much talk of the production of "Otello," at Her Majesty's Theatre, and it should be remembered that most of the successful operas of modern times, including "Carmen" and "Mefistofele," have been first performed in England under Mr. Mapleson's auspices. If only he had a handsome balance at the bank, what an excellent manager the gallant Colonel would be! He possesses at least the gift, most rare amongst impresari, of knowing a good thing when he sees it.

The preliminary programme of the Richter Concerts has just been issued, and promises a season of more than ordinary interest. Beethoven and Wagner will, as usual, be the mainstay of the programmes, and from the music-dramas of the latter several new extracts will be given, including the "Schmiedelieder," from "Siegfried," and the closing scene of the "Götterdämmerung." Liszt will contribute a Hungarian Rhapsody, the symphonic poem, "Die Hunnenschlacht," the charming "Prédication aux Oiseaux," orchestrated by Mottl, and the "Danse Macabre," in which Mr. Frits Hartvigson will again sustain the pianoforte part. Of English music Mr. Stanford's "Irish" Symphony, and a new overture to Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night," by Mr. A. C. Mackenzie may be mentioned. But the most important feature of the season will probably be the performances of the chorus, which is said to have been largely increased and improved for the purpose. Such great works as Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" and Berlioz's "Faust" will fall to its share.

M. Ben Tayoux, a clever Frenchman, said to be of Arab descent, is at present in London, making preparations for the production of his opera, "Katherina," founded on Shakespeare's "Taming of the Shrew"—founded in the sense that the original story seems to have been sadly transmogrified and knocked about, after the French manner; the climax being brought about by Petrucchio rescuing Katherine from the waves of a lake into which she has fallen over the balcony, stepping backwards in her anger and excitement. M. Ben Tayoux is known in France chiefly by his "Concerts Conferences," at which he plays various pieces with a running comment of his own. Of his talent as a composer, and of "Katherina," we are unable to speak. That the late Hermann Goetz has already written a beautiful opera on the subject of Shakespeare's play he probably ignores.

A new symphony by the Cavaliere Zaverthal, will be performed at the concert of the Royal Artillery Band, at Woolwich, on April 4th.

Sir Arthur Sullivan (writes the London correspondent of the "Liverpool Mercury") is quietly at work in the South of France, where he has gone to finish his new opera. Mr. D'Oyly Carte recently paid him a visit, and speaks hopefully of the prospect of the new venture. Sir Arthur Sullivan was not very well when he left England, but has picked up health in sunnier climes. According to present plans, it is intended, before either the words or music are published in England, to produce the new opera in New York, thus securing the copyright there, and occupying the ground in advance of intruders who have fattened on the overflow purse of the authors of "Patience" and "The Mikado."

The Bishop of Rochester, in a communication to his diocese, has made some very sensible remarks on the subject of musical performances at churches. His lordship writes:—

"An incumbent in the diocese has claimed my direction on a question which has lately stirred some brisk and not unimportant discussion—that of the legality of using parish churches for musical entertainments, with payment charged for admission. The suitableness of raising money by such a method is a distinct matter. It may be of service to others, as well as to him, that I should publish an opinion here, communicated by the Chancellor of the diocese. 'The question of the legality of demanding a money payment for admission to a service or other function held in a church has not, I believe, been thoroughly discussed in a contested case. But it seems to me that such a demand violates the right of parishioners to attend the services of their parish church without payment, subject, as to certain parts of certain churches, to a liability to pew rents, defined by statute. I cannot conceive that it is possible to use a church for public purposes which do not transgress the 88th canon, and are yet independent of this right of the parishioners. I think that the function in question must either itself be illegal, as an act of desecration, or the parishioners have a right to be present without payment.' Hitherto, whenever notice has been sent to me, of course with corroborative evidence, that a musical entertainment is contemplated in a church, to which admission is charged by a money payment, I have distinctly forbidden it; and for any inconvenience or disappointment caused thereby those who violate the law must be held chargeable, not he who protects it. Moreover, I wish it to be clearly understood that, under similar circumstances, I shall do the same again. The House of God must not be lightly degraded into a concert room, merely because it may be found a convenient place for making money. But there is a way out of the difficulty which neither violates the rights of the parishioners nor disturbs the associations of the devout. Let some collects, with a brief address, be said at the beginning; then let the music, of course of a sacred character, follow; the benediction will conclude the service, after the taking of an offertory for whatever object is desired, either at the doors or from seat to seat. By this arrangement, which is now constantly carried out, and so far as I know generally sanctioned, no injury is done to anybody; and I for one should be sorry for the person to whom the opportunity of listening to sacred music, devoutly performed by a competent choir in church, is not only a joy, but a help."

By the sudden death of the celebrated song composer and musician, Ciro Pinsuti, the singer of ballads loses a valuable ally. His somewhat lengthy list of songs have obtained him notoriety in every fashionable drawing room. "I fear no foe," "The Raft," "The Bugler," "The Outposts," "Dreams, only dreams," and a few other songs are almost without rivals in the popular estimation. His ballads are always melodious and sometimes dramatic. It is in his admirable part songs, however, that he displays the true musicianship. Like many another successful man, Pinsuti never obtained any great measure of success with his more ambitious efforts, his "Te Deum" and his three operas being but seldom performed.

Born at Sinalunga, near Siena, in 1829, Pinsuti was the son of a musician. His father was his first teacher, and at the age of 10, when there was no New York Society for the Protection of Children to interfere, he appeared as a pianoforte "prodigy." In this case, also, the wealthy patron was not wanting to give the infant genius a proper education, and, under the charge of Mr. Henry Drummond, M.P., he came to England, and was placed, for the purpose of study, under Cipriani Potter, the then Principal of the Royal Academy of Music. He remained in England until he was sixteen, when he went to Bologna, to study under Rossini. He returned to England in 1848, and remained in the home of his adoption until three years ago, when he retired to his native town. He died at Florence, where he usually spent the winter, last Saturday, actually "in harness," being in the act of playing the pianoforte when he was stricken with cerebral apoplexy, and died within twenty-four hours.

Some members of the Roman Catholic body in this country have established a new "St. Cecelian Society" for the purpose of promoting reforms in Church music. Their first meeting was held at the Westminster Town Hall, under the presidency of the Bishop of Emmaus. From the speech of Father Limerick, O.P., it may be inferred that the English St. Cecelians are a branch of the great society founded by Father Witt in Germany.

"One object that the Society might serve," said this speaker, "would be that of bringing together those already engaged in promoting ecclesiastical music. . . . Another thing the Society could do would be to keep the whole matter of Church music before the public eye and the public conscience, so that people might begin to understand that there was a right and a wrong in the question. They might also endeavour to lead public taste in the matter of sacred music. Another of their works would be the training of singers for ecclesiastical music."

Any earnest musician who has wandered into one or other of the great Catholic churches in London will probably concur in the wish that the taste of the congregations might be educated up to the point, at least, of protesting against the introduction of operatic airs into a solemn service. We ourselves have listened with unbounded and amused astonishment to the performance of a Latin hymn to the tune of "Quando a te lieta" during a Mass; and instances are said frequently to occur of similar adaptations of more or less familiar, and, in a double sense, "profane" music. The following case occurred at one of the best known Catholic churches a few months ago:—Mr. Santley, after delivering a Gregorian "Credo" with a power and an expression which could not be surpassed, and which alone might open the ears of a congregation to the true beauties of ecclesiastical music proper, crowned the effect by a namby-pamby aria smelling of the footlights and green-baize. "The whole to conclude" with Meyerbeer's Coronation March from "Le Prophète," of which, of course, the organist, not the great baritone, was guilty.

The meeting did not pass without affording some excellent examples of Palestrina and other Church music sung by the choirs of St. Dominic, Haverstock Hill, and St. Mary's, Chelsea. Information with regard to the Society may be obtained from the hon. sec., Mr. F. T. Giles, The Lodge, Barnet.

Mr. Lloyd will leave England for America on April 28th, and the same date is fixed for the departure of Miss Alice Gomes for Calcutta.

Mr. William Nicholl will introduce three new songs by A. C. Mackenzie, at his concert at the Steinway Hall next Tuesday. Miss Pauline Cramer will sing Lieder by Franz, Urich, and Tschaikowsky, and join Mr. Nicholl in a duet from "Die Walküre." Madame Fassett and Mr. Carl Armbruster will also take part in the concert.

The play called "Dorothy Gray," which is to follow "The Hansom Cab," at the Princess's, is described as a melodrama. The heroine is a country lass who becomes a famous prima donna, with Miss Grace Hawthorne in the part. The first matinée performance is fixed for March 27th.

Mr. Ben H. Grove, the bass, a pupil of Mr. Duvivier's class at the Royal Academy, has been appointed at the Foundling Hospital Chapel, out of no less than seventy candidates.

Messrs. W. G. Wills and Sydney Grundy's new play "La Pompadour," is in active rehearsal at the Haymarket, it being due shortly after Easter.

The Copyright (Musical Compositions) Bill was read a second time in the House of Commons on March 11th.

Owing to the death of the late Emperor of Germany, the Lyric Club soirée in aid of the Musical Artists' Benefit Fund, which should have taken place last Thursday, has been postponed for the present.

Mr. Cowen's Scandinavian Symphony has been given with success at Hanover.

The Paris critics are full of a new choral work by Mademoiselle Augusta Holmès, produced recently at one of the Conservatoire Concerts. It is entitled "Ludus pro patriâ," and consists of five movements, one of them purely orchestral. The finest number appears to be a martial piece, "Forgez une épée," in which one critic recognises, oddly enough, vigour, power, and a manly energy. However that may be, it seems certain that Mademoiselle Holmès, who, by the way, used to be an ardent Wagnerite, and a constant visitor at Bayreuth, belongs to the very small class of women who have shown genuine talent in that most essentially creative of all arts, music. She is, moreover, in spite of the "Mademoiselle," and the accent grave on the "mès," an Irish lady, and it is strange that nothing of her music has as yet been heard in this country.

On Easter Thursday a concert will be given at the Paris Opéra Comique, under the direction of M. Danbé, the programme of which, excepting a slight spice of the secular afforded in Weber's overture to "Oberon," will be devoted entirely to sacred music, and will include two pieces by Gounod, conducted by the composer, and, for the second part, Verdi's "Requiem." The vocalists will be MM. Talazac and Fournets, Mdmes. Adèle Isaac and Blanche Deschamps; and if the concert prove as successful as is anticipated, it will be repeated on several subsequent Saturday afternoons.

Mdlle. Van Zandt's Easter engagements will take her to Moscow, where, rumour says, she has been offered brilliant terms for the season. The same confidential authority hints at weighty negotiations, before the departure of this talented artist from Paris, between Messrs. Abbey and Grau, touching a projected concert and opera tour in America, so far ahead as the winter of 1889-1890.

The vexed question of State subvention to theatres came to the fore, as it cannot fail to do from time to time, during a recent discussion in the French Chamber upon the "Beaux Arts" Budget. M. Cousset, deputy of La Creuse, strongly advocated the abolition of all theatrical subsidies whatever; but vested interests die hard, and eventually a vote of ten thousand francs (instead of the twenty thousand demanded) testified to the lingering affection in which the time-honoured system is still held by a majority in the Chamber.

The question of electric lighting in theatres, left in this country to the private enterprise of managers, is receiving official attention in France, and will, no doubt, shortly become the subject of a kind of legislation which some may call grandmotherly, but all must admit to be in the interest of public safety. Several interesting experiments illustrating the non-inflammable nature of this new illuminant were exhibited before the Commission recently assembled to investigate the subject in the "laboratoire international d'électricité" at Grenelles. Perhaps the most convincing of these was the practical proof afforded that an old drop scene, reduced almost to tinder by the combined influence of age and nightly exposure to the intense heat of gas-light, could be left for a whole hour in actual contact with a Swan lamp of 50 candle power, without showing the slightest disposition to catch fire. Slowly as things move here in England, signs are not wanting that the days of gas, always a foul thing in our houses, and a standing danger in our public places, are already numbered, at any rate, so far as its use in theatres is concerned.

The deaths are announced in Paris of two well-known musical instrument makers: M. Bord, age 75, the manufacturer of the cheap and popular pianos, and M. Edouard Alexandre, age 64, the head of the "Alexandre Organs" factory. The last-named gentleman, apart from business, befriended many musical artists in the time of need, and the readers of Berlioz's Memoirs and letters will recollect that he paid the expenses for the tomb in the Montmartre cemetery, which now holds the mortal remains of the great French composer, and of his first and second wives.

The music of Berlioz's symphony, "Romeo et Juliette," will be arranged as the incidental music for the production of M. Georges Lefebvre's French version of Shakspeare's play at l'Odéon.

A comic opera by the Austrian composer, Millocker, "La demoiselle de Belleville," which is founded on one of Paul de Kock's novels, is now being performed nightly at the Folies-Dramatiques with very moderate success.

The new building of the Opéra Comique will be opened during the exhibition year.

M. Henri Sellier, the well-known tenor, has left the Grand Opéra, and intends, henceforth, to seek fame and fortune on the Italian stage. Mdlle. Legouse, the composer of songs and popular pianoforte pieces, will be shortly married to the Vicomte de la Foëze.

M. Reyer has just completed his grand opera, "Salammbo," the libretto of which is founded on Flaubert's well-known novel of the same name.

It is said that Verdi's "Otello" is being prepared for performance at the Amsterdam National Theatre; and that the opera is being arranged from the pianoforte or vocal score, that is to say, the copyright is being ignored, and a garbled version of the opera offered to the public.

A new opera, entitled "De Gensenbruid," is shortly to be produced at Amsterdam, and the event derives interest from the fact that the composer of the music, M. Melas, and the librettist, M. Marnix, are both natives of the Netherlands, a country not hitherto prodigal in original productions of the kind.

"Le diner de Madelon," an old-fashioned one act piece of Désangiers, has been revived at Brussels with the addition of music by a young Belgian composer, M. Maurice Lefèvre, who had already attracted favourable notice at the Brussels Conservatoire, as well as by a short opéra comique, "Mon Ami Pierrot," in which he figured both as author and composer. The performance of his latest work at the Théâtre de la Monnaie was received with unmistakeable signs of satisfaction, the music being bright, unobtrusive, and in a style appropriate to the period represented.

Among those the anniversary of whose birth falls upon the odd day in leap year was Rossini, and last 29th February, in his native native town of Pesaro, the event was celebrated by a concert given under the direction of Signor Carlo Pedrotti, the present principal of the Musical Liceo founded in that place by the composer. Special interest and appropriateness were lent to the occasion by the performance, in addition to some familiar excerpts from "Guillaume Tell" and 'Gazza Ladrà," of several unpublished compositions of the master, the original MSS. of which remain in the possession of the municipality of Pesaro. These included a motet for four voices accompanied by a string quartet and five harps, a piece for eight male voices, which is said to have been immensely effective, and two pianoforte pieces.

A few cases of exceptional and brilliant success have caused America, North and South, to be so generally regarded as a sort of Eldorado for travelling companies, that it is well attention should be sometimes drawn to the reverse of the medal. A description lately given in "Italia," a Montevidean journal, of the terrible sufferings and privations endured by the Ciacchi-Raineri opera troupe while crossing the Cordilleras, on their way from Valparaiso to La Plata, may serve to damp the ardour of others ambitious to follow in their footsteps. The journey of these luckless artists seems to have been a veritable chapter of accidents: one musician being killed by a fall from his mule, many others more or less seriously injured by similar disaster, and all worn out by the dangers of flood and impassable roads, and the terrible weather they encountered. "Never have I witnessed a more heartrending spectacle," writes the correspondent from Puente de l'Inča, "than that presented by the unhappy group of artists who arrived here yesterday." As usual in these cholera-dreading regions, the miseries of a rigorous quarantine were added at the end of their other misfortunes, after which they were permitted to pursue their way to Mendoza.

Wagner's Symphony in C was played, for the first time in America, at the seventeenth Boston Symphony Concert. Mr. Gericke conducted it with great care. Boston owes a debt of gratitude to Mr. Higginson, another Crœsus of the right sort, whose generosity was equal to the demands of the copyright holders. Mr. Cowen's "Ruth" was given on the 7th inst.

The details of the collapse of the National Opera Company are now published. The manager, Mr. Locke, was arrested at Washington, on February 26th, on the charge of swindling by issuing false cheques. The chorus singers and other subordinates assembled on the stage of the theatre, but their meeting did not result in any definite good. They could only talk excitedly, and clamour for money—but no money was forthcoming except a sum of 1,300 dollars in the safe, which was divided amongst the two hundred people.

The members of the orchestra were trades unionists, and had long ago banded themselves together for their better protection. They refused, in a body, to play unless the management gave them an order on the night's receipts for 554 60 dollars, to be paid every night, immediately after the performance. They were indispensable, and got the order, which was honoured until the night of the 24th. The principals have taken steps to secure at least some of the salary due to them, and the warrants against the manager were issued on behalf of Miss Pierson and Mr. Sylva. Mr. McGuckin and Mr. Ludwig had been paid up to the previous week.

Liszt's "O Salutaris," and 137th Psalm were sung by the ladies of the Oratorio Society at the last concert of the New York Symphony Society. The difficult solo part in the psalm was taken by Fräulein Brandt.

Fräulein Lilli Lehmann was married at New York to Herr Paul Kalisch one day last month. The wedding of Miss Mary Davies and Mr. Cadwaladr Davies, is fixed for the 22nd inst., at Tolmer's Square Church.

"Die Götterdämmerung" was performed for the first time at Schwerin recently, and was a triumph for the conductor, Schmitt, and the artists. Ponchielli's "Gioconda" has been given at Frankfort-on the-Maine, and was favourably received. Max Bruch's "Loreley," at Breslau, achieved considerable success, and "Lohengrin," was much appreciated at Triest.

The burning of the Union Square Theatre in New York has been followed by the destruction of the National Theatre at Jassy.

The Vienna "Gesellschaft der Musik-Freunde" recently gave excerpts from Schubert's "Fierabras," the march and chorus (on the return of Charlemagne), a serenade, and an aria "die Brust gebeugt von Sorgen" (Florinde), making a specially good impression.

Correspondence.

DR. SOLIDUS AND HIS PUPIL.

EXTRACTS FROM A CORRESPONDENCE.

I.

London, May 14th, 18—.

MY DEAR YOUNG FRIEND,—It is hard for me to believe that already two years have elapsed since our relationship of teacher and pupil—a relationship associated in my mind with nothing but pleasant memories and hopeful anticipations—was brought to a sudden close by your departure from England. The short friendly greetings to which our subsequent communications have been restricted, all sufficient as a proof of enduring personal regard, have amounted, nevertheless, to almost an absolute silence concerning that wide subject in the study of which I was permitted to guide your early footsteps. That I fulfilled my part of the task conscientiously, and with a deep sense of the responsibility imposed upon me, I can fearlessly affirm; that my earnest endeavours will not be without fruitful results in the career you have chosen, I have every reason to hope. As for the silence, this has caused me no manner of misgiving; the heavy claims made upon my time in these latter years by teaching, and upon yours (as I have no reason to doubt) by the equally arduous pursuit of learning, render any attempt at excuse or explanation quite unnecessary; even if the affectionate message conveyed to me through your friend B——, who called the other day, looking hearty and well after his continental trip, were not sufficient to assure me that the many distractions of your new life have not succeeded in erasing a kindly remembrance of your old friend and mentor. Two years! An insignificant term enough for one whose round of daily duties has, in a sense, become automatic, and before whom the days, months, and years pass almost featureless, and in rapid succession; but at your age how momentous, how fruitful of events far reaching in their influence; destined to leave their mark for good or evil, in all the future stages of your career! These considerations, and the late agreeable reminder of you, have impelled me to procure your address, and snatch a spare moment to ask for some more extended account of yourself and your doings: the present direction of your studies, the tastes you have formed, and the new friendships you have cultivated. Above all, tell me which among the great masters of the past, persistent study of whose works I never tired in urging upon you, have you selected for the time being, to serve as your daily model and guide? Your ambition to become a composer, and the creditable attempts you made in that line while under my guidance, have caused me to wonder at times why it is that since you left I have received nothing from your pen, nor even an account of future projects. On reflection, however, I am inclined to regard the fact as of good augury, for I would rather see the young aspirant for the moment awed into silence by the contemplation of those giant masterpieces, than in over-haste to bring forward early attempts of his own, which neither exuberance of fancy, nor youthful enthusiasm can save from crudeness, while the secrets of form, proportion, and contrapuntal treatment are yet but partially understood. I for one, therefore, say God-speed to your plan of writing and burning. Continue it until you shall have succeeded in tracing beneath those outlying beauties admired even by the superficial, which are alone to be found in the works of acknowledged great masters of the past, that inner sense of structural beauty, that obedience to rule with a "service that is perfect freedom," without which those beauties would never have been bestowed upon the world; continue it until the fugue shall be recognised by you, not as a mere display of mechanical skill, or ingenious musical puzzle, but as having among its examples, some of the highest and noblest achievements of musical genius; continue it until something of the indomitable industry and earnestness of purpose exhibited in the lives (among others) of John Sebastian Bach, of Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, and, above all, the immortal Handel shall have been recognised and followed by you according to the measure of your strength; and then have no fear but that out of the ashes of those early attempts will rise works of mature power and enduring merit, destined, in any case, whatever their success with the general public—which, I fancy, neither you nor I just now hold in the highest esteem—to establish your claim to an honourable place in the ranks of sound, earnest-minded musicians, who have consecrated the best that is in them to the service of their art.

This portrait I have drawn for myself, remember, with the help of no better data than the recollection of certain aptitudes and enthusiasm I seemed to discern in a pupil two years ago. Whether, as a matter of fact, he now either composes or burns, I have no means of knowing. So let me hear something about yourself and your surroundings; and believe that you are always held in affectionate remembrance by your sincere well-wisher,

Harold Strainwing, Esq. SEBASTIAN SOLIDUS.

2.

Frankfort, May 21st, 18—.

DEAR AND HONOURED FRIEND,—Conscience gives me a spiteful twinge, when I reflect that, after all, this, my long premeditated letter, is written in answer to one of yours. As I have nothing but lame excuses, I will attempt none. Believe, nevertheless, that the ever-patient monitor, who spared no pains to smooth the path of my early study, and to whose cheery words of encouragement and wise counsel I owe so much, will never fail to be remembered while I live, with affection and heartfelt gratitude. You ask for a report of myself and my doings. Well, I may describe that insignificant person as both happy and hopeful; happy, as I ought to be, in having found here several high-souled, faithful friends; hopeful, as I have, perhaps, not the same warrant for being, when one considers the fickle and shallow nature of that public, whose good opinion I suppose it will some day be my business and duty to bid for. But that, I suppose, is an enigma sure to solve itself in its own way, and at its own time. The artist is, above all things, a man of destiny, and must obey the voice that is within him, whether for weal or woe. Burn my compositions? Nothing of the sort. Say, rather, they burn me—that is, for a brief season, at any rate, after the dots have scrambled out their lines and spaces, and until the bright beam along which those glowing and (for me) happy fancies floated into my soul, gradually melts into nothingness, leaving me again beneath a leaden sky, pining sorrowfully and doubtfully for more of those too rare visitations. Let the two little saving words "for me," acquit me of the charge I can fancy even now rising to your lips, of extravagance, egotism, or worse. On the contrary, I would have you believe me when I declare to you that my mental attitude is, and ever will be, one of grovelling humility, when I reflect upon the achievements, both present and past, of the great master-minds who have made music what it is. None the less am I a firm believer in those moments of heightened perception that accompany every genuine act of musical creation, in the case alike of great composers and small, during which, for too brief a period, the inner secrets and significance of some new-born musical strain are revealed to them. Transient such visions of the possibilities of sound usually are, and, once shut off, they seldom if ever return in their original intensity; so that the composer, left to review his own conceptions in the colder light of criticism, begins presently to feel that they have lost somewhat, and at times to scarcely recognise them. Tell me, however, whether a musical idea has been really what we call inspired—not obtained, that is to say, by imitative or mechanical means—tell me, in short, whether it is real, and not a sham—and I will pronounce with certainty whether or not it contains, according to its degree, some element of beauty.

As for the kind of life I spend here, it is, and has been since my arrival, one of happy monotony. Picture me in a cozy room high up in an old fashioned house facing the square, surrounded with books, music paper, and often flowers; blessed with the possession of a piano, plain of exterior, but golden-toned within; visited every bright morning by my good friend Fritz and several other worthy but less beloved members of the "Transcendentalists," a club I have lately joined; invited mostly of evenings to the house close by of my father's old friend Herr———, of whose blue-eyed youngest daughter I may have something more to tell you anon. Picture me, in a word, as a light-hearted, reading, playing, composing, smoking, musical Bohemian; not wanting, however, in diligence, or altogether unworthily endeavouring to follow in the path which your friendly counsel first pointed out for me.

I can give no answer to your inquiry why I have hitherto abstained from sending you any compositions of my own—unless certain misgivings not unconnected with the "Transcendentalists," and the unconscious influence from that quarter I feared you might possibly detect in them, caused me to hesitate. But the accompanying MS., a specimen of my more sober moments, I think may be safely sent for your consideration, which I know will be, as it always has been, at the same time indulgent and candid.—With heartiest greetings, believe me, your ever grateful friend and pupil,

HAROLD STRAINWING.

London, May 26, 18—.

DEAR YOUNG FRIEND,—Pleased though I was to see your handwriting, which I succeeded in deciphering with some difficulty, the perusal of your letter caused me some bewilderment, which deepened into a genuine feeling of concern and alarm, after I had opened the MS. that accompanied it. I can but hope that the manifest gravity of your condition has already attracted the attention of your friends, and that, before this letter arrives, they will have procured the ablest medical advice to be found in your city. The sole gleam of intelligence I have been able to discover in your so-called composition, is its title of "Rhapsody." All the rest—the harrowing disharmony, the utter absence of tonality, and general incoherence—to say nothing of consecutives which, in any case, I should deplore—can only be accounted for by a temporary upset of the intellectual balance, and are so unmistakeably the wild ravings of delirium, that my anxiety on your behalf can scarcely be called extravagant. Prompt application of ice to the head, and such other strong measures as your case may call for, followed by a period of low diet and perfect rest, may yet, as I fervently hope, restore you to mental and bodily sanity; but my mind will not be at ease until I receive later news of you.—Yours,

Herr Harold Strainwing. SEBASTIAN SOLIDUS.

(To be continued.)

The Organ World.

THE POSITION OF THE ORGANIST.

A highly-esteemed correspondent and leading organist sends the following extract from the "Church Times":—"Officially, the parish clerk holds a higher office than the organist, but, in point of fact, organists, as a rule, come from a somewhat higher social grade, and have more education than the average parish clerk, and are therefore given precedence over them." One would not expect the "Church Times" to pose as the patron of the parish clerk. However, that useful officer of past times certainly claims respect, if only for the sake of "Auld Lang Syne." The Rev. Sydney Smith knew a gentle parish clerk whom he described as "full of Amenities," and most persons who have reached middle life remember good, and often quaint, specimens of the parish clerk. But viewing the matter from a purely practical point of sight, one would like to know the grounds of the assertion that the parish clerk ranks higher officially than the organist. Something might be said in favour of the position if evidence were forthcoming that the office of parish clerk was a clerical one originally, but it is a matter of doubt whether the duties of the leader of responses had a higher origin than that humble though ancient lay official the Priest's servitor at Mass. Possibly some claim might be set up in the direction of a descent from the cantor or precentor; but evidence in this direction would involve matters of dispute, for though the parish clerk has, in the village church, often taken upon himself to lead the singers in the absence of trained help, his duties seem really to have originated in the absence of persons of higher training, such as priests, and clerical, or lay singers. This statement seems borne out by the fact that the enlargement of the staff of church officers, and the presence of singers, together with the now happily common choral renderings of the Services of the Church, have either banished the parish clerk, or put an end to his vocal and verbal performances in church. Mr. B. St. John B. Joule bears testimony in this direction, and tells the story of the parish clerk at Bloomsbury retiring from an office long regarded as unnecessary in that church. The parish clerk himself seems often to have regarded the musician as an encroaching enemy. This is illustrated by the story of that official in a Midland counties church—whose jealousy had been aroused by the creation of a new choir—saying, when he heard the minister resume, after an Anthem break-down at the third collect with the words "Let us pray," "That's right master, for it is certain we cannot sing." It seems, as evidence tends to show, that the parish clerk originated in the servitor at the altar, and his office developed itself from time to time on civil rather than on ecclesiastical lines. Let us leave the parish clerk, with all respect for his usefulness, and turn to the organist. Much misconception prevails regarding the position of the organist, because his duties in ancient times fell to the lot of men in holy orders, and—as has been pointed out before— it was no more thought necessary to assign the title of organist to the clerical holder of the office, than it was considered desirable to attach the name of preacher to those called upon from the clerical staff to occupy the pulpit from time to time. Plenty of evidence is at hand to prove that our organists, before and even after the Reformation, not only bore the title of Reverend, but received similar, and often larger, stipends than the minor canons of our cathedrals, and were held in great regard socially; although, it may be allowed, the organist in this country, until recently, could hardly be said to command the respect paid to him abroad. The organist is a man of moderate views, doing his difficult and responsible work with a self-abnegation and faithfulness which point to a profound, but never assertive, consciousness of the importance of his labours in our midst. He is the exponent and supporter of sacred art in church. His education and technical training form a long, severe, and costly process, which entitles him—to put the matter on no higher grounds—to an official position, second only to that of a responsible minister of the Church. It has been said that the organist hardly looks to either the "Church Times" or the "Rock" for a full meed of recognition; but, happily, his self-respect is now taking a practical form, for he is energetically advancing his claims to be ranked as within the boundary lines of the professions, which form an intellectual fortress in all Christian and civilised communities. The organist can even afford to leave the papers, clerical or lay, to settle questions of official position as they like. He is now safe in the esteem of all church-goers and the public at large; all the same, the quotation given by no means settles a question, the careful examination of which would probably throw into a stronger light some striking and unexpected evidences regarding the position of the organist.

E. H. Turpin.

ON REGISTERING.

III.

Though the organ student is apt to regard stop-changing as what is called "a matter of taste,' it is really a business requiring much thought and skill for its successful treatment. The necessary training, a too greatly neglected process, should only begin when the student is thoroughly well drilled in the technicalities of fingering and pedalling. Young organists falling under the tone-colour fascination may be ruined as players, if tempted from the stern path which leads to the acquisition of manipulative skill at a too early period of their student-life. A first-rate mechanism should be first secured, then the art of registering should be carefully and gently approached, and, for a time, the use of the louder combinations should be all but forbidden. It would be well to begin the study of registration by the tone-colour treatment of easy pieces with well defined rhythmical divisions. These points could be treated as opportunities for stop-changing. Two advantages accrue from this method: the player learns more readily to dissect and apportion sentences for distinct tone-colour effects, and acquires the habit of making such changes at the right structural points. In view of the time-keeping disturbance stop-changing often causes in the performances of young players, the first drill may with advantage consist of making additions or reductions in the list of stops being used, during rests, drawing or pushing in the stops exactly as the silent beats are counted. This plan teaches the preservation of time-keeping accuracy, assists in creating method which gives coolness at critical moments, and tends to bring into combined action habits of mental and physical promptitude, which are sure to be of permanent use. Then a firm but graceful movement of the hand, wrist, and fingers should be encouraged, in view of securing quickness, certainty, and silence in the act of handling draw-stop knobs. Practice may be intensified by a further selection of movements or passages in which stops are to be drawn in such brief intersectory resting points as may be furnished by single pulsation or silent half beats. It is almost to be regretted that some neatly-devised stop-changing studies are not planned for organ students. Even now organs, thanks very much to the College of Organists' Conference, are become sufficiently systematic to justify such experiments in the interests of young organ players. E. H. T.

MUSICAL ELOCUTION.

By G. Ernest Lake.

Under this heading it only remains needful to give a list of a few familiar words and syllables which most commonly suffer from mis-pronunciation, both in speaking and singing, noting, by the way, the frequent governing power of the letter "r." Here are a few words which, though urgently requiring absolute distinction, frequently receive little or none—Balm-barm, mourn-moon, court-caught, more-maw, moor-mawer, higher-hire, soul-sole, awe-ore, ah!-are, horse-hawse. These and similar words should be carefully marked with a pencil and studied, first in speech and afterwards in song, as should also the following selected from many words commonly vulgarised and mispronounced :—Knolledge for knowledge, Isrel, Isr'l, and Isreel for Is-ra-el; the terminal unt for ent and ant (as innosunt, infunt, for innocent, infant; et for it (as profit for prophet); shin, shun, or shon for tion or sion (shu'n); pun or pen for p'n in short, or pu'n in long notes (as in happen or open); and bull or pull for ble or ple (to pronounce these properly the mouth should be prepared as for oo, but the lips set apart); virchew for virtue, verger for verdure, just for jest, gürl, or g'yerl, for girl; wen for when, weal for wheel, witch for which, wear for where, ske'y, or skaigh, for sky; edg'ucated for educated; crawse and lawse for cross and loss; orphan for often! Ask Mr. Gilbert's "Major Gineral" if this be not the case. "Orphan or frequently"; scawn for scorn; berrial for burial; jawry for jûry; igher for ire; and ighon for iron. There is a too prevalent impression to the effect that such study of pronunciation is either affected or is not as necessary for the ordinary amateur as for professional vocalists. Nothing could be more untrue; it requires equally careful attention in both methods, because in chamber singing great refinement is needful on account of the words travelling naturally as far as tone, whereas in the concert-hall or opera-house the imperfect vowel sounds, percussives, consonantal glides, and conjunctive terminals are permissibly somewhat exaggerated in order that their effect may reach as far as the vocal tone. The treatment of parenthesis is another point too often overlooked, though their sense may generally be made obvious by cutting short the preceding and following words, and by singing the intermediate somewhat more rapidly, with just a suspicion of off-handedness, as it were.

Gesticulation, a good servant, but a bad master, a powerful aid to oral declamation and indispensable to the lyric stage, is generally and absolutely tabooed to any vocalists save "music-hall artists" (sic); but I venture to question the finality of this dictum, because whilst anything approaching violent movement is improper, yet much can be expressed by almost imperceptible movements of the body; whilst, if we consider the term gesticulation as including facial expression, then its artistic employment is distinctly an auxiliary to vocal and verbal expression. In the one case a pleased look assists the tone, and an elevated eyebrow the intonation (in many instances), and in the other case a tender look, an arch glance, or a happy smile can convey a world of expression. Mr. Faning's charming little song, "I've something sweet to tell you," doubtless familiar to all present, would lose two-thirds of its effect if rendered by one whose countenance was absolutely immobile; and this brings us to the consideration of the necessity for the drawing of a broad line between the vocal elocution of sacred and of secular songs. In the one case—fervour, ecstasy, rapture, even denunciation — as in "Thou shalt break them," "Consume them all," must be carefully subordinated to dignity of utterance and expression.

Even in secular vocal elocution it cannot be too constantly remembered that reserved force is the greatest, that the vibrate is an aid to effect, and not the cause of it, and that it is not only possible, but lamentably easy, to tear passion into rags and tatters, whilst much of what is proper and effective in the large sphere of the operatic stage, and with all its adventitious accessions is entirely untranslatable to the carpet or platform. Careful comparison of Miss White's setting of Herrick's "To God," with Miss Zimmermann's fine song, "The Ringlet" (No. II.), will exemplify the different treatments requisite for sacred fervour and secular passion.

Reverting to the subject of breath marks, the student who profits by the aid of a skilful master should remember that he cannot always be in leading strings, and should early endeavour to learn when and where to breathe by the study of verbal context and by himself placing marks in new songs for subsequent correction by his master. I have found this method of great assistance in the education of my own pupils, especially those destined for the profession. Nevertheless, the study of context is indispensable, because some of the results of mal-punctuation are dire. As for example, "The wicked flee when no man pursueth, but the righteous is as bold as a lion." By taking breath after the third and tenth words, and omitting to do so after the seventh, we seemingly assert that "the wicked flea, when no man pursueth but the righteous, is as bold as a lion." This proposition is, perhaps, a true one, and appeals to our tenderest susceptibilities—but it hardly embodies the impression which the wise man intended to convey. If hitherto I have used the word vocalist in the singular number, it is because individuals are necessary for concerted performances; and not that I believe good chorus singing is possible without study of the words; on the contrary, I regret to think that conductors and choir masters do very often omit to pay anything like sufficient attention to the verbal enunciation of the forces under their control. A little bird suggests that the reason may lie in the fact that we do not ourselves sufficiently study the subject, but, however this may be, our choirs, large as well as small, have much to learn in this respect, though a very little trouble in the way of breath marks—to be inserted at dictation in his copy by each individual at elementary rehearsals—would affect a greatly to be desired improvement. Nay, we venture to hope that the important subject of elocution may 'ere long be included in the examinations for the higher degree of our college.

And now I would say that there are four things needful to the equipment of the vocal student—a candle, a mirror, a pencil, and a friend. The flame of the first will show him whether he uses all his breaths in the production of tone (too much powder and too small a bullet as it were). The second will lead him to avoid grimacing and how to govern his tongue and organs of resonance. The third will help him to remember when to breathe, accentuate, dissever, and kill; and the fourth will, if properly insured against subsequent castigation, take infinite pleasure in informing him from a judicious distance, whether his tone be true, his terminals distinct, and his general enunciation audible and correct.

Before quitting the subject of vocal, in order to consider instrumental, elocution I would ask leave to allude, in a few words, to a theme which is of special interest to us as members of the College of Organists. I allude to psalm chanting. This may seem dangerous ground for us to slip upon in the presence of so many distinguished musicians, though we know that > Men rush in where angels fear to tread,

—but I may say at once that I do not intend to say anything fresh on the subject of the already too numerous systems (many of which have excellent points), but rather to plead for the better carrying out of the principle which should underlie them all, i.e., the clear articulation of the words. My attention was first directed to this when I went to Edinburgh, where, for four or five years I was incessantly called upon to defend one or other of the details of a cathedral service. The worthy Presbyterians, amongst them many liberal minds, alleged that by singing the so-called prose psalms, the beauty of the rhythm was lost, and the meaning obscured by the use of false accents or quantities. The obvious answer was, that it was not the system, but its application which was to blame, and that, perhaps, anything was better than the irreverent and doggrel paraphrases in use by the various Scottish sects. However, I undertook that, within a certain time, they should hear the psalms chanted as clearly as they themselves could read them, and I have never regretted the labour expended

(To be continued.)

SPECIFICATIONS.

Carmarthen.—A new organ has been placed in the English Baptist Chapel. The organ has been built by Messrs. Wade and Meggitt, of Tenby, and the following is the specification of the instrument:—

Great Organ, CC to G, 56 Notes.

Salcional	16 ft.	Principal	4 ft.
Open diapason	8 ,,	Harmonic piccolo	2 ,,
Gamba	8 ,,	Mixture, 3 ranks	various
Lieblich gedacht	8 ,,	Clarionet	8 ft.
Harmonic flute (grooved into No. 6	4 ,,	Trumpet	8 ,,

Swell Organ, CC to G, 56 Notes.

Lieblich bourdon	16 ft.	Vox angelica	8 ft.
Open diapason	8 ,,	Salicet	4 ,,
Violin diapason, grooved into No. 15	8 ,,	Lieblich flute	4 ,,
Vox celeste, undulating with No. 15	8 ,,	Mixture, 3 ranks	various
		Oboe	8 ft.
		Trumpet	8 ,,

Pedal Organ, CCC to F, 39 Notes.

Open diapason	16 ft.	Principal	8 ft.
Bourdon	16 ,,	Bass flute	8 ,,

The pedal organ is on the tubular pneumatic centre system.

Couplers.

Swell to great.	Tremulant to swell.
Great to pedal.	Additional knob for great pedal.
Swell to pedal.

Three composition pedals to both swell and great.

The whole cost of the instrument and alterations will be over £600.

RECITAL NEWS.

Church of St. Nicholas Cole-Abbey.—February 28th. Mr. H. W. Weston, F.C.O. (organist of Balham Parish Church).

Prelude and Fugue in C major	Bach.
Fantasia	Stephens.
On the Chorale "St. Mary."
Introduction	Hesse.
Theme and Variations in A major.
Pastorale in G major	Widor.
From the 2nd Organ Symphony.
Solemn March in A minor	Best.
Theme in the pedal bass.
Three Organ Pieces	Chipp.
(a) Fugue in A minor. (b) "In Memoriam." (c) Postlude in D.

People's Palace, Mile End-road, E.—Programme of organ recital given on March 11th, by Mr. E. F. Barker, A.C.O.:—

Offertoire in C	Tours.
Prayer and Hosannah Chorus	Lemmens.
Sonata in C minor	Mendelssohn.
Andante	G. A. Macfarren.
"But the Lord is mindful" ("St. Paul")	Mendelssohn.
Offertoire in A	Wély.
Tenor Melody	Smart.
Minuetto	J. B. Calkin.

St. Andrew Undershaft, St. Mary Axe, E.C.—On Feb. 29th, a special service of vocal, organ, and orchestral music was given. The choir of St. Andrew's and the Church Orchestral Society, with Mr. W. J. Winter, A.C.O. (assistant organist at Westminster Abbey), carried out the programme under the direction and conductorship of Mr. W. M. Wait (organist and choirmaster of St. Andrew's). Several of the items were from Mr. Wait's new cantata, "St. Andrew" (at present in manuscript).

Serborne Abbey.—Mr. G. F. Lyle (organist, &c., of the Abbey), gave an organ recital on Saturday afternoon, Feb. 11. The programme is annexed:—

Grand Offertoire in E minor	Batiste.
Allegretto from the "Lobgesang" Symphony	Mendelssohn.
Flute Concerto (allegro maestoso, adagio, and rondo)	Rink.
Pastoral	Lefébure Wély.
Prelude and Fugue in G	Bach.
Variations on "Jerusalem the Golden"	W. Spark.
Overture in F	C. Vincent.
Scene Pastorale ("The Storm")	E. M. Lott.
The Hailstone Chorus	Handel.
Tema con Variazioni (Serenade)	Beethoven.
Grand March from "Eli"	Costa.

Godalming Parish Church.—An organ recital was given lately by Mr. A. A. Macintosh, F.C.O., organist of St. Mary's, Huntingdon:—

Overture, Athalia	Handel.
Andante in D	Silas.
Sonata, No. 2	Mendelssohn.
Allegretto Grazioso in D	Tours.
Urbs Beata, Hierusalem	Pearce.
Allegretto Villereccio	Polibio Fumagalli.
Concerto, No. 8	Corelli.
Theme with Variations in A	Hesse.
Largo in G	Handel.
Marche Triumphale	Lemmens.

Kentish Town.—On February 25th, Mr. F. J. Marchment gave a recital at the church of St. Barnabas.

Concerto in B flat, No. 6	Handel.
Pastorale in C	Lefébure Wély.
Prelude and Fugue in F	J. E. Eberlin.
Air, "Hear ye Israel" ("Elijah")	Mendelssohn.
Alla Marcia	V. A. Petrali.
Melody in A flat	A. Jungmann.
Melody in F	A. Rubinstein.
Solo in F, No. 10	Corelli.
Recit. and Air, "With verdure clad" ("Creation")	Haydn.
Offertoire in G	Batiste.
Andante con moto (Quartet No. 3, Op. 71)	Haydn.
Postlude, Allegro Pomposoin D	Henry Smart.

Miss Louisa Crofton was the vocalist.

Oldham.—Mr. Joseph Clafton (organist of St. James's Church), gave a recital on February 23rd, on the organ erected in the Wesleyan Chapel, by Messrs. P. Conacher and Co. Mr. Clafton was assisted by Messrs. R. L. Whittaker, J. West and E. Bambridge, vocalists, and Mr. W. Clafton, violinist.

Overture, "Alexander's Feast"	Handel.
Cantilene	Salomé.
Adagio (violin and organ)	Handel.
Sonata No. 3	Guilmant.
Largo (violin and organ)	Handel.
Prelude and Fugue (C minor)	Bach.
Andante and Rondo (violin and organ)	Macfarren.
Adagio	Haydn.
Capriccio and Scherzo	Lemaigre.

Bolton.—Mr. W. Mullineux, F.C.O., gave a recital in the Albert Hall, on February 25th.

Offertoire for the Organ in C	Jules Grison.
Berceuse in G	Gounod.
Romance Sans Paroles	Gounod.
Minuetto for the Organ in F	E. Silas.
Overture, "Ruy Blas"	Mendelssohn.
Air with Variations	Lemmens.
Air, "Waft her Angels" ("Jephtha")	Handel.
March for the Organ in E flat	Th. Salomé.

Oldham.—On March 4th, Spohr's "Last Judgment" was given in St. James's Church, by a choir of 64 voices principally from the Oldham Vocal Society. The solos were taken by Mrs. Stourley, Mrs. Booth, Messrs. T. H. Tanner, and F. W. Dixon. Mr. J. Clafton was at the organ. The fine church was crowded to the doors, there being about 2,000 people present. This oratorio is not often sung in Lent, yet it is an appropriate work and was originally produced in Germany on a Good Friday.

Exeter.—Mr. Ferris Tozer (organist and choirmaster of Heavitree Church) gave a recital at the Victoria Hall, on March 3rd. The programme was as follows:—

Fugue in C minor	Bach.
Andante con Moto	W. S. Hoyte.
Air on "Holsworthy Church Bells"	Dr. S. S. Wesley.
Sonate Pontificale, "March and Fanfare"	Lemmens.
Selection, "Carmen"	Bizet.
Chacone	Durand.
Impromptu on Nautical Airs.

Miss Lavinia Lampen was the vocalist.

Bow and Bromley Institute.—Mr. H. W. Weston, F.C.O., gave an excellent recital here on Saturday. The Royal Silver Wedding was duly honoured by the playing of a Fantasia on the "Wedding March," &c., which opened the programme, the remaining pieces being Prelude, "Le dernier Sommeil de la Vierge," Massenet; "Prelude and Fugue in G," Bach; Variations in A, Hesse; "Fugue in G," Krebs; and overture, "Gutenberg," Loewe. Miss Kate Fusselle and Mr. R. Hilton sang with good effect, and Miss Rose Lynton made a very successful appearance as a violinist. These Recitals at the Institute fully maintain their high standard, and are deserving of proper recognition from music-loving people. To-night, St. Patrick's Day, the Blue Hungarian Band will play. It seems to be thought necessary, in the interests of regular attendants, to change the character of the entertainment now and then.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH MUSIC.

To the Editor of THE ORGAN WORLD.

SIR,—It will be very gratifying to many besides myself, if the thoughtful paper by Mr. E. Griffiths on Congregational Church Music, printed in your last issue, can be made the means of calling forth some calm, unbiassed, and helpful criticisms on the opinions which he therein sets forth.

May I be permitted to make a few (trite enough, I fear) remarks?

Mr. Griffiths appears to find strictly congregational singing only, "plainly and distinctly directed" throughout the liturgy. Do the rubrics enjoin this? Some of your readers can doubtless tell us of the state of congregational singing at the period when they were framed. This information would be useful, and perhaps somewhat surprising.

But, granted that Mr. Griffiths's reading of the rubrics is correct, let attention be drawn to the advance of the art since those days, the innumerable compositions of devotion-inspiring character since written, and the status (spiritual and artistic) of rendition now attainable.

Do not these and other matters—the work of time—justify a change in those (in many respects) out of date directions?

Do the clergy scruple to make alterations in them in order to suit their personal taste or discretion? Why, then, should the musical portion of our services be so handicapped?

But Mr. Griffiths argues also from the "spirit of the liturgy." One phase of this only.

In each of our services there is a large portion in which the priest alone gives utterance to the devotions of the whole congregation (at least, that is the ideal intended). Now, why should the similar use of words (wherein depths attainable by means of ordinary speech are sounded by the aid of music) be denied to our choirs? I make no comparison with priestly prerogatives (albeit, see Article XXVI.), but simply call attention to the fact that heart-service without lip-service is recognised in our forms of public worship.

I do not in the least wish to disparage the reality, the power for good, and the impressiveness of thoroughly good congregated singing. But in this there must necessarily, for many reasons, be a monotony. The effect, (spiritual and material) gained by means of variety in character of music, attention to nuances, cultivation of a sympathetic enunciation of words, and numerous other matters of choir-singing detail is unlimited.

Much benefit is often lost by those members of our congregations who see nothing but display and self-serving in these exhibitions of musical skill!

What is required is a little more of the "give and take" principle in these matters, than appears to be advocated in Mr. Griffiths's paper.

And now just a few words on the congregation's strictly active share (a large one it should be, undoubtedly) in the musical part of public worship. It seems to me that Mr. Griffiths harps too much on his simple music string. Simplicity, without character, proves but a small incentive to calling for the vocal powers. The energy (sadly misdirected generally) thrown into Dykes's "Lead Kindly Light," and "Nearer my God to Thee," is often strangely contrasted with the paucity of effort evinced in Tallis's "Canon," or Denby's "St. Anne."

Mr. Griffiths makes many statements which do not find acceptance with me, but for the present I ask you, sir, and your readers, to accept my apology for having already taken up so much of your very valuable space.—Yours very obediently,

COUNTRY ORGANIST.

PROTESTANT PRICK SONG.

To the Editor of THE ORGAN WORLD.

SIR,—As you, in the issue of to-day, reprint from an American paper a short article on the above, kindly allow me to write a few words on that article.

Dulwich College was founded in 1619, and the teaching of "pricke song" was provided for by the founder, Edward Alleyn. I think it not difficult to define the special branches of musical art intended to be taught by the founder of the College.

Some of the provisions contained in the founder's statutes are quaint and curious, and may possibly be of interest to some members of the College of Organists. I quote one or two.

"The two first of the six chaunters, or junior fellows, are to be musicians of sufficient skill in the art of musique to be organists of the College, and to teach the poore schollers to sing pricke song, and to play upon the violl, virginalls, organs, and other instruments." (At the time of his death Alleyn left in the College a lute, a pandora, a cythera, and six vyols.) "The other four chaunters are to be men of handicraft trades, viz., teiylors, glovers, imbroiderers, shoemakers, or such like, and for avoyding of idlenesse, to be imployed in their trades for the generall good of the College." "The service to be read and sung in the chapel of the College daily in such manner and form as near as may be as is usually observed in the King's Chapel, or in the Collegiate Church of St. Peter at Westminster; and the master, warden, fellows, and scholars to sing their parts daily in the quire of the chapel, on Sundays, holidays, and eves in their surplices, and on other working days in their gowns.—I am, yours very truly,

WILLIAM H. STOCKS.

Dulwich College, S.E., March 10th.

Notes.

Mr. W. S. Hoyte, F.C.O., has been appointed a professor of the organ at the Royal College of Music.

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.—The announcement of the annual dinner on April 9th, the Monday after Easter week, will remind many members of a pleasant meeting, revived of late years with conspicuous success. It is proposed to invite lady members and friends of members upon the present occasion. Members may send in their names to the college if desiring tickets, which will be issued in the course of a few days. The tickets will be 4s. each, and the dinner will take place, as usual, at the Holborn Restaurant.

ST. STEPHEN'S, SOUTH KENSINGTON.—During Lent, at 4 o'clock on Sunday afternoon Stainer's oratorio, "The Crucifixion," has been given, with a short address by the vicar, the Rev. J. P. Walds, each Sunday on "The Aid of Sacred Music to Devotion." The musical services on Friday evenings have been also peculiarly attractive with Gounod's "Mors et Vita." The afternoon addresses have been on "Sacred Music in Relation to Public Worship," considered as—Sacrificial, Ceremonial, Symbolical, Costly, Its relation to Incarnation, and The Conditions of Acceptable Worship. The services, at which Stainer's oratorio, "The Crucifixion," will be sung, at 4 p.m., on Sunday afternoons, and Gounod's oratorio, "Mors et Vita," will be given on Friday evenings, at 8 p.m., with full orchestral, organ, and harp accompaniment, are to be continued until the end of Lent. The music is being admirably rendered by the church choir, under the able direction of Mr. Hamilton Robinson, F.C.O.

Through the kindly offices of Mr. W. H. Cummings, the clavi-harp, or keyboard harp, invented by Mr. Dietz, of Brussels, was introduced at a recent concert, being ably played upon by Mdlle. Eugenie Dratz. The application of the keyboard to the ancient instrument brings to the fore the possibility of using strings on the organ, and bringing the two typical instruments within the grasp of one player. The thought is not entirely a new one.

Members of the College of Organists may inspect the "Dactylergon" in the College Library between 7 and 10 on Tuesday evenings.

Mr. H. Houseley, F.C.O., of Nottingham, has left England to succeed Dr. Gower, as Organist and Precentor of the Cathedral, Denver, Colorado, the last-named gentleman returning to the old country. Mr. Houseley is the fourth English organist who has gone out to this dual appointment. The cathedral at Denver is a large modern church, some 200 feet in length, with a good-sized organ. The large Denver organ, so much talked about, is not in the cathedral, but in another church, and it is played upon by Mr. W. Hall, F.C.O., a former organist at the cathedral. Mr. Houseley is a highly-talented musician, who will no doubt be an acquisition in the rising city of the West.

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS' CALENDAR.

Saturday, March 17th, Special Council Meeting at 8. On Tuesday next March 20th, the library will be open to members from 7 to 10; April 9th, "Annual College Dinner;" April 10th, Special Lecture, by Dr. E. J. Hopkins; April 24th, Lecture, by Dr. F. J. Sawyer, on "The Primary Rules of Keyboard Fingering;" May 22nd, Lecture; June 26th, Lecture; July 17th, 18th, 19th, F.C.O. Examination; July 20th, Diploma Distribution; July 24th, 25th, 26th, A.C.O. Examination; July 27th, Diploma Distribution. Other arrangements and particulars will be duly announced.

E. H. TURPIN, Hon. Sec.

95, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, W.C.

SUPPLEMENT TO "THE MUSICAL WORLD," MARCH 17TH 1888.

Yours Faithfully
Marie-Rôze-Mapleson

MACLURE & Cº LITHºº TO THE QUEEN, LONDON.

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

THE PRIMA DONNA:

Her History and Surroundings, from the 17th to the 19th Century. By H. SUTHERLAND EDWARDS. Gives a picture of the life, professional and social, of every prima donna down to the present day. Two vols., demy 8vo, 24s.

"Odd corners of operatic history have been ransacked for the apt anecdotes and characteristic touches that here give life to the portrait."—Musical World.

"Volumes so full, not only of useful fact, but of pleasant anecdote and gossip, that they are sure to be read, not only with profit, but with pleasure."—Globe.

MEMOIRS of COUNT HORACE DE VIEL CASTEL.

A Chronicle of Events, Political and Social, during the reign of Napoleon III., years 1851—1864. Translated by CHARLES BOUSFIELD. Two vols., demy 8vo, 30s.

"What makes his memoirs such entertaining reading is that he has not only a good memory for bad stories, but that in his rapid portraiture he shows something of the power, of the shrewd insight, and of the graphic wit of a Saint Simon. Through the scandals are scattered curious and piquant revelations.—Times.

REMINGTON AND CO., Henrietta-street, Covent Garden.

By FREDERICK HELMORE.

Just published, price Sixpence. Dedicated to SIR ARTHUR S. SULLIVAN.

THE ITALIAN REGISTERS.

VOCE DI PETTO. VOCE DI GOLA. VOCE DI TESTA.

By the same Author.

SPEAKERS, SINGERS, AND STAMMERERS. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

SINGING METHOD. No. 1. The Little Ones' Book. Containing the Songs in "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland," and "Through the Looking Glass." Also, the Nursery Rhymes, Easy Rounds, &c., used in his "Little Ones' Classes." Fcap. 4to, 1s.

SINGING METHOD. No. 2. The First Reading Book. Containing a Catechism on the Art of Singing Music from Notes, followed by Scale and Chord Exercises, by the practice of which Pupils rapidly acquire the Knowledge and Feeling for Harmony, so necessary in PART SINGING. Illustrated by pleasant Rounds, Duets. and Trios. Fcap. 4to, 1s.

London: J. MASTERS and CO., 78, New Bond Street.

CASSON'S
PATENT
Organ - Building System

SEPARATE Pedal Organs for each Manual. Expressive and Controllable Pedal Basses. Perfect control of all Couplers. Reduction of number of Claviers without loss of efficiency, &c., &c. See testimonials from

Mr. W. T. BEST.
Rev. Sir F. A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart.
Dr. SPARK.
Dr. J. C. BRIDGE, M.A.
Dr. E. W. TAYLOR, F.C.O.
The late Mr. J. STIMPSON.
Mr. R. BARTHOLOMEW.
Mr. J. HEYWOOD, Birmingham.
Mr. G. A. AUDSLEY, F.R.I.B.A.
M. A. J. HIPKINS, F.S.A.
&c., &c.

Apply to the Secretary—

CASSON'S PATENT ORGAN CO., LIMITED
DENBIGH,

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, MARCH 17, 1888.

"Musical World" Portraits.

MADAME MARIE ROZE.

Madame Marie Roze, whose portrait adorns our present number, is just about to leave England on her artistic tour to the Antipodes, and our readers will no doubt be glad to see once more a fair face which they have admired on the stage of the English opera for several years past. Wishing Madame Roze every success in her new career, we now leave the word to Mr. A. Irvine Innes, of Glasgow, who has supplied the following sketch of the artist's career :—

Madame Roze is now terminating one of the most successful seasons of her brilliant career. Never had she sung better, never have her powers, both as a vocalist and a dramatic artist, been exhibited with greater satisfaction to an enthusiastic public.

As far as our knowledge goes, no complete biography has yet appeared of Madame Roze, and we therefore publish a sketch of her remarkable career.

Madame Marie Roze was born in Paris, on 2nd March, 1850, her father being a well-known lawyer, and a descendant of a Dutch noble, Count Roos van der Haag, whose name. after his settlement in France, was modified to Roze de la Haye, and finally, during the reign of terror, to simple Citizen Roze. Little Marie was passionately fond of music; she could sing before she could talk, and was never so happy as when she could get her fingers on the piano. At the age of twelve she was sent to England to acquire the English language. Among her father's clients was Auber, and he was the "discoverer" of the prima donna, who became his favourite pupil. One evening, at her father's house, the great composer heard her sing, and his opinion of her voice and taste was so high that he insisted on her being sent to the Imperial Conservatoire of Music, of which he was the Director. Dion Boucicault, who was also a friend of the family, pleaded that she should be educated for the drama; but music prevailed, and Marie Roze entered the Conservatoire. When she was just sixteen, Auber selected her to sing a "Benedictus" in the chapel at the Tuileries, in the presence of the Emperor and Empress, the occasion being the celebration of the Prince Imperial's birthday. The Empress was so pleased that she asked Auber to bring the young singer again. This he did about two months later—in May, 1866—and she so delighted her hearers that the Emperor sent her a gold medal, bearing his portrait set in diamonds, with the inscription, "Napoleon III. à Marie Roze." Auber kept her hard at study until 20th July, 1867, when she passed her final examination at the Conservatoire, winning the first prize gold medals for both singing and acting. Once again she was summoned to the Imperial presence to receive a gold laurel wreath from the hands of the Emperor.

Marie Roze immediately accepted a three years' engagement at the Opéra Comique, and this was followed by a two years' engagement at the Grand Opéra, concurrent with further study under Wartel, Gounod, and Ambroise Thomas. The young prima donna—then only in her eighteenth year—conquered the hearts of her fellow-citizens from the moment she made her début in the title part of Herold's "Marie." Composers competed for her services in the interpretation of their works. The opera "L'Ombre," was written for her by Flotow, "Le Dernier jour de Bonheur," by Auber, and "Carmen," by Bizet. It was evident from the first that she was a born actress, her individuality being absorbed in every character she represented. Her first appearance at the Grand Opéra, and one of her greatest successes, was as Marguerite in "Faust." After the performance, Gounod declared that her conception of the character realised his ideal Marguerite, and he has ever since been her staunch friend and admirer. While at the height of her popularity in Paris, Marie Roze was again commanded to sing before the Emperor and Empress, for what proved to be the last time. That occasion has become historic, and is one of the most memorable incidents in the life of Madame Roze, for while she was singing at the Tuileries the momentous cypher despatch was received which made war between France and Germany inevitable. Then her patriotic spirit made her, in yet another way, the idol of Paris. She would not desert the city when the ring of German steel closed around it, nor even during the excesses of the Commune. In the earlier period of the siege she roused the enthusiasm of the people by her singing of the "Marseillaise," and other patriotic songs. Then she turned her house into a hospital, receiving 47 sick and wounded soldiers, to be nursed by herself and other ladies. She organised concerts also for the sufferers, and gave dramatic as well as musical recitals. Not till she had done what she had believed to be her duty—not till the restoration of peace and of order, did Marie Roze leave her native city. Sixteen years ago, when just twenty, she made her first appearance before an English public as Marguerite, in Gounod's "Faust," on 18th May, 1872. Marie Roze at once established her position as an Italian opera lyric artist of the first rank, and for five years remained one of the attractions of the Italian opera in the United Kingdom, her extraordinary versatility being tested by successful representations of almost every character of the répertoire. By the advice of Sir Michael Costa, Marie Roze turned her attention to oratorio, and achieved a remarkable success, the critic of the London Times stating that her singing in "Judas Maccabæus" was a perfect model of how Handel's music ought to be sung.

In 1878, on the completion of her contracts with Mr. Mapleson Madame Marie Roze signed a contract with Mr. Strakosch, the American operatic manager, for a tour in the United States. The verdict of the Old World was fully endorsed by the New. Wherever she went enthusiastic crowds filled the theatre, and one of the latest poems of Longfellow had for its theme "Marie Roze." During the yellow fever panic in New Orleans Marie Roze gave concerts in the midst of the fever-stricken City, and by her heroism and self-sacrificing devotion excited such universal admiration that large donations were sent her from all parts, thus enabling her to materially benefit the relief fund.

In 1880 Marie Roze returned to Europe, and Mr. Carl Rosa prevailed upon her to sign an engagement with him in 1882. Since that time her brilliant career with the Carl Rosa Opera must be fresh in the recollection of our readers, but mere mention of the fact that the indefatigable prima donna has studied and performed 18 distinct characters in English, at once testifies to her versatility. Add to this list the répertoire of her characters in Italian and French opera, and we have the remarkable total of 58 distinct characters which Madame Roze has performed. The honours which have been conferred upon Marie Roze, the presents she has received from many potentates, including the Queen of England and other persons, are too numerous to mention. We may only briefly refer to the recent presentation of a testimonial to her on the part of her Liverpool admirers by Lord Lathom, when that music-loving nobleman and Mr. E. R. Russell sang her praises in the most eloquent manner, the artist herself replying in a neat little speech of her own. The testimonial consisted of a magnificent tiara of diamonds, subscribed for by rich and poor in the neighbourhood of Liverpool.

VERDI'S REQUIEM MASS.

The performance at the Albert Hall, last week, of Verdi's "Messa di Requiem, the only work of its class which the great Italian master has given to the public, had almost the interest of novelty attached to it. For, although composed 14 years ago, and introduced to the London public under the composer's own auspices and by singers of almost sensational excellence, the "Requiem Mass" has not taken a permanent position on the English concert platform, and by reviving it Mr. Barnby has established another claim to the gratitude of amateurs who think that the range of legitimate sacred music is not bounded by the names of Handel, Mendelssohn, and perhaps Beethoven. If the contrapuntal depth of the early Italian masters and of Bach and Handel on the one hand and the sublime human pathos with which Beethoven has treated the words of the mass on the other are taken as the ideal and only permissible standard of sacred art, then Verdi's effort will indeed be found light in the balance. Although he attempts a fugue, his counterpoint does not amount to much; neither does he possess the breadth of conception, the depth of feeling which strike the hearer of Beethoven's Mass in D with overpowering effect. The training and the type of the Italian composer pertain to the stage; his music is of the opera operatic, and, like Rossini, he cannot change his nature even when dealing with a subject so far removed from the footlights as the service for the dead. This fact must be accepted; Verdi's work must be taken in the spirit in which it was conceived in order to be fairly judged. If its counterpoint is flimsy, if its musical grammar is faulty, one should remember that counterpoint and grammar, although excellent things in their way, are not the ultimate criterion of genius. The really important question is this—Has the composer, working according to his lights, worked earnestly, has he uttered the sacred words as he felt them? And that question may without hesitation be answered in the affirmative. Purists may object to some of the violent and distinctly operatic effects which abound in the tremendous incidents of the "Dies iræ," serious musicians may point to "consecutive fifths," and to the easy-flowing, not to say trivial, cast of some of the airs and cadences, but no one, at least, can deny the genuinely Italian charm of the duet for female voices, "Recordare Jesu pie," the melodious beauty of the Offertory set for solo quartet, and the lovely phrase to which the tenor intones "Hostias et preces." Another tenor air, "Ingemisco tamquam reus" is also interesting, were it only on account of its suggestions of "Aïda," with which opera the style of the Requiem has much in common. There is only one absolutely bad number in the score, the "Sanctus," in which the aforesaid mild attempt at a fugue is made. This is a very loud and coarsely-instrumented piece. Mr. Barnby turned it into a perfect farce by repeating it in answer to the applause of some injudicious persons who are pleased with anything that is noisy. The absurdity of the encore nuisance has never been illustrated in a more glaring manner. In other respects the performance left little to be desired, and the choral singing was good throughout. In the absence of Madame Nordica, Miss Anna Williams sang the soprano part, and acquitted herself in a very creditable manner, although the music is written for a stronger voice and a larger compass than she possesses. The contralto music was intelligently rendered by Madame Belle Cole, who sings well and declaims even better. Mr. Lloyd was magnificent in the tenor air, and to Mr. Bridson, the bass, also, a special word of praise is due.

Concerts.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

Last Saturday's concert served to introduce what, so far as we are aware, is an absolute novelty in English music, viz., a ballad declaimed by the speaking voice to an orchestral accompaniment. Mr. Corder, who has made this experiment, although probably the first Englishman to adopt the form, is by no means its inventor. Instances could be cited, in fairly numerous quantity, of spoken declamation in opera, in conjunction with more or less descriptive passages in the orchestra, and both Schumann and Liszt have gone a step further and supplied musical accompaniments to ballads, complete in themselves, and not forming merely incidental sentences in larger works. "The Minstrel's Curse," which Mr. Corder has chosen as his subject, is a translation of Uhland's well-known poem, which opens by describing the arrival at the court of a haughty monarch of two noble minstrels. The younger minstrel sings of the charms of love and springtime, and his song works so powerfully on the feelings of the queen, that she flings the rose from her bosom at the feet of the young singer. The King, mad with jealousy, stabs him he thinks his rival, and, as the elder minstrel sorrowfully bears away his youthful companion's body, he utters the curse which reduces the castle and its beautiful chace to ruin and desolation. Of the powerful dramatic opportunities here presented, Mr. Corder has hardly made the fullest use, the treatment of the striking ending of the poem being apparently shirked. The form of the composition, however, militates against success and although Mr.

Charles Fry recited the poem well, the difficulties with which the composer has handicapped himself were evident, and are likely to prevent many attempts in a similar direction. The music, so far as it goes, is appropriate to the incidents as they present themselves, Mr. Corder in one instance, where mention is made of the spring-time, making a peculiarly apt quotation from Wagner's "Walküre." The effort was loudly applauded. A fine performance of Weber's overture to "Euryanthe," and Mendelssohn's "Œdipus at Colonos," were features of the programme. The choruses in the latter work were sung by the tenors and basses of the Crystal Palace Choir, assisted by the London Vocal Union, while the text was admirably spoken by Mr. Charles Fry. Mdlle. Louise Dotti made her début at these concerts, and was very successful in the aria "Dove sono" from 'Figaro," and "Angels Ever Bright and Fair." Some part-songs by the London Vocal Union completed the programme, which was ushered in by the singing of "God Bless the Prince of Wales" in honour of the Silver Wedding of the Prince and Princess.

POPULAR CONCERTS.

On Saturday a sensation was caused by the advent of a new violinist, Mdlle. Soldat. She was associated with Herr Joachim in Spohr's duet for two violins (D minor), and scored a decided success. Madame Schumann played Andante and variations in E flat, by Mendelssohn, and two Canons, in A and B minor, by Schumann. She was mercilessly recalled again and again, and at last yielded, and played once more. The concert began with Haydn's Quartet in E flat, op. 64, and ended with the Trio in C major, No. 3, played by Miss Fanny Davies and MM. Joachim and Piatti. Miss Kate Flinn was the vocalist; she sang two songs of Cowen, and subsequently "Chanson de Florian" and "Suis-je belle" (Godard) very pleasingly. Herr Frantzen accompanied.

Last Monday's concert opened with a magnificent performance of Beethoven's fine Quartet in E minor, op. 59, No. 2, the second of the celebrated "Rasoumowski" set. Herr Joachim never plays better than when he intreprets Beethoven, and his grand tone and phrasing were displayed in their fullest perfection in the beautiful adagio, while the spirited finale was played with the greatest brilliancy. He received excellent support from MM. Ries, Hollander, and Piatti. Miss Fanny Davies was the pianist, and gave a good rendering of Mendelssohn's Caprice in F sharp minor, op. 5, one of the striking examples of the composer's power of dealing with subjects of this order, playing a Nocturne by Chopin as an encore. Herr Joachim, with his pupil, Miss Emily Shinner, played in the second part, Spohr's "Larghetto and Rondo Vivace," from the duet in D major, for two violins, and one of the most grateful of pieces of this genre in such a manner as to win much approval from the audience, a fine rendering of Beethoven's Grand Trio in B flat major, op. 97, by Miss Davies and MM. Joachim and Piatti, completing the instrumental portion of the programme. The vocalist was Herr Niemann, who was not particularly successful in songs by Schubert and Schumann.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Mr. J. E. Smith's thirteenth annual concert took place at Rushden, Northamptonshire, on Thursday, March 15th. The artists were Miss Adela Duckham, 13 years of age, solo violinist and solo pianist (a student at the Guildhall School of Music); Mr. Giuseppe Dinelli, solo violoncellist; Miss Levina Ferrari, L.A.M., soprano; Miss Florence Terrell, soprano; Miss Leila Dufour, L.A.M., contralto; Mr. Frank May, bass; pianists, Mr. G. Dinelli, Miss Nellie Tailby, and Mr. Alfred Clarke. Mr. J. E. Smith was the conductor.

By the invitation of Mr. Cummings, a number of professionals and amateurs assembled at Princes' Hall on Tuesday, to witness the performance of Mdlle. Dratz on the clavi-harp. We were able some time ago to give a very comprehensive account of this new instrument, and need only add that the performance was listened to with much interest, and impressed those present with the importance of the invention. Miss Esme Woodford, Madame Clara Suter, and Miss Alice Suter varied the entertainment with songs, and Mr. Bernhard Carrodus was the violinist.

On Tuesday evening Mr. Mackenzie conducted his oratorio, "The Rose of Sharon," at the Novello Concert, in St. James's Hall, before a large audience. The chorus deserves praise for the excellent way in which they gave their difficult music; the orchestra played very well, and the soloists, Mesdames Nordica, Hope Glenn, and Messrs. Lloyd and Santley, as well as Mr. Mackenzie, deserved all the hearty applause which was showered upon them.

The pianoforte, violin, and violoncello recital given at Steinway Hall, on the 8th inst., by Herr Max Schrattenholz and his two sons, was not nearly so well attended as it deserved to be, the performance being exceedingly meritorious. Herr Schrattenholz's pianoforte playing is characterised by delicacy and finish; while his son, Master Leo, has not only attained a remarkable proficiency in 'cello-playing, considering his age, but bids fair to develop into a composer of no inconsiderable merit. Out of the eight items included in the Recital, no less than five—rather a large proportion—were compositions by one or other of the Schrattenholz family; and included a Sonata for pianoforte and violoncello, by Master Leo Schrattenholz, in four graceful, though not strikingly original, movements. This, as well as a Concerto for violoncello and pianoforte by the same youthful composer, was warmly encored; though, unfortunately, a much less favourable specimen of his handiwork was afterwards put forward, in the shape of a trifling and inconsequent Pianoforte Duet, "Six Waltzes." Perhaps the most pleasing original composition produced was Nocturne, by Herr Max Schrattenholz. The three non-original morceaux were, Beethoven's Trio in B flat, op. 97, for pianoforte, violin, and 'cello; Ferdinand Hiller's Gavotte, Sarabande, and Courante, op. 115; and Tartini's Sonata in G minor for violin. Messrs. Schrattenholz give a second Recital on the 12th April.

A concert was given at the Portman Rooms, March 7, by the professors and pupils of the Portman Academy. Miss Clinton Fynes, the principal, Mr. Bernard Carrodus, Mr. Cecil Goodall, Miss Margaret Hoare, and Mr. Duvernoy, were among the performers.

On Saturday, 10th inst., Miss Gertrude Cloeté Brown gave her first public recital at 31, Queen's Gate Gardens. In a florid aria by Rossini, the lady showed herself possessed of a clear and flexible soprano voice, well under control, and in Lieder by Schumann and Hartmann, her animation, intelligence, and aplomb were abundantly and pleasantly evident. Herr Oscar Niemann was much applauded for his earnest rendering of songs by Schubert, Schumann, and Grieg; Herr Waldemer Meyer played his own effective "Larghetto Religioso" on the violin, and songs were contributed by Miss Helen d'Alton, Miss Carlotta Levy, and Mr. Luther Munday. Mr. Wilhelm Ganz and Mr. Raphael Roche were excellent accompanists.

LECTURE ON BAYREUTH.

Mr. Julius Cyriax, in a lecture delivered at Trinity College Mandeville Place, on Friday, March 9th, made the following observations. The motto he had chosen was "Go to Bayreuth," and this had been objected to by some critics, as it sounded like a suggestion for a new formula of swearing. Bayreuth had no more claim on public importance than Olympia, the centre for a thousand years of the classic games. No one should have an object in travelling there but the one dramatic (Wagnerian) object. After commenting on the musical destitution of England, the lecturer went on to say that the journey to Bayreuth was comparatively inexpensive, and there was a choice of several routes to the beautiful little town. Accommodation was very fair, for the inhabitants did all in their power to ensure the comfort of visitors. Wagner's Theatre was a unique model, from which even London managers might glean some useful hints. One lesson seemed very necessary to the English, and that was "how to listen." The custom of enveloping the audience in total darkness, besides adding untold effect to the stage, greatly encouraged perfect stillness, and there was no vexatious precision in the simultaneous turning of 2,000 leaves, because programmes and books of the words were useless. The invisible orchestra was another marvellous innovation. Not only did the music come with threefold the poetic charm, but there was no distraction possible from the mannerism and peculiarities from which no conductor or band were entirely free. During Wagner's life (to please him) and after his death (to honour him) the artists at Bayreuth gave their services devoid of all the vexatious egotisms by which the drama is usually hampered. The chorus, composed of thirty prima donnas, the world-famous tenor, instructed by the Meister himself how to appear on the scene, the beautiful soprano singer, content to cross the stage with but a couple of lines to sing, all showed a spirit of abnegation and of perfect unity. During the pauses between the acts, all flocked out to gaze at the beautiful Bavarian landscape. Mr. Cyriax then gave a slight sketch of the story of Parsifal, and concluded his lecture by a musical illustration of the introduction to that opera. He was warmly applauded by a closely packed audience at the end.

HERR EHRENFECHTER'S LECTURE ON DEPPE'S METHOD.

One of the most interesting chapters in Miss Fay's collection of letters, published a few years ago under the title of "Music Study in Germany," is that in which the lively young American relates, in her own vivacious and enthusiastic style, how, after working hard, with but partial satisfaction to herself, under the guidance, one after another, of some of the best-accredited pianoforte professors in Europe, she at last found a haven of rest and assurance in the method of a teacher, already immensely popular among his pupils, named Herr Deppe. So great, indeed, was the confidence inspired in her by this new-found musical Pastor, that, with characteristic pluck, she resolved then and there to discard much she had, with infinite painstaking, acquired in other quarters, and to smooth the way for the reception of this new revelation by "beginning all over again." The account given of the first interview between the earnest-minded pupil and her master has in it something not only amusing, but, to a certain extent, pathetic. "'I will do anything,' I said. 'Very good. But I warn you that you will have to give up all playing for the present, except what I give you to study, and those things you must play very slowly.' This was a pleasant prospect, as I was just preparing to give a concert in Berlin, under Kullak's auspices, and had already got my programme half learned! But I had 'invoked the demon,' and I felt bound to give the required pledge." While making due allowance for a certain artless enthusiasm which, combined as it is with no small share of shrewdness, constitutes one of the great charms of the book, Miss Fay's description of the unbounded faith inspired in his followers by Herr Deppe, of the originality, thoroughness, and energy of the man, is certainly calculated to stimulate the imagination, especially of young student readers, and to whet their appetite for some more elaborate account of his system. With a view to satisfying this natural curiosity, a lecture upon "The Mechanism in Pianoforte Playing on Deppe's Principles," was delivered by Herr Ehrenfechter, presumably a former pupil, and evidently a staunch advocate of that master's mode of teaching, last Wednesday afternoon, at Steinway Hall. After a certain amount of generalities, which seem to be de rigueur on such occasions, it is fair to say that the lecturer did proceed to the concrete, describing with some minuteness various leading features of the new system, the mode of holding hand and arm, the conduct of the fingers, and other matters in which his hearers may be supposed to have been specially interested. But, after all, can it be said that there was anything really "new," as far as essential particulars are concerned, in the principles thus brought forward with so much flourish? Allowing for such diversity of opinion upon minor details as must be taken to be inevitable among professors and doctors, all that Herr Ehrenfechter said appears to have been said before in various works upon pianoforte technique, published from time to time in this country and on the continent. When, with perhaps needless aggressiveness, the lecturer, quoting from Pauer's little manual of pianoforte playing, denied that, in a strict sense of the word, there were any such things as the legato and staccato touches, it was impossible to avoid feeling that here was a wrangle, and no very important one, about terms which, after all, Herr Pauer has employed in their generally accepted sense, and, therefore, in the manner most likely to be understood by his readers. No doubt the high-stepping mode of finger movement, so extensively adopted, for instance, at Stuttgart, has met with dissentients in many quarters; although, it should be added, the benefit of this, as an exercise for imparting strength and flexibility, has been pretty generally admitted, whatever modifications—and they are innumerable—may be desirable for special effects. The importance of the arm, as a factor in tone production, has also afforded subject for conflicting theories; but this, too, has been discussed from many points of view by many writers, among whom may be mentioned Germer, in his "Technics of Pianoforte Playing. Deppe does certainly recommend a somewhat unusual treatment of the thumb in scale passages, but even in regard to this innovation, by which Miss Fay, and doubtless many others, were greatly impressed, it cannot be denied that scales of exquisite evenness and pearllike delicacy have been achieved by many a virtuoso in the more generally accepted manner. For the rest, any one who has had the advantage of watching not one, but several really great pianists, will not fail to have been struck by the diversity of means employed by them for producing more or less similar effects; and it is well to remember sometimes that over and above "methods" and "principles"—the utility of which for the student we should be the very last to underrate—there is a difference in the quality of tone-production among pianists that must be regarded as altogether personal to them, and is scarcely to be taught; a difference intimately connected, in this case with the mystery of touch, but somewhat anaolgous to that observable in singers. For the rest, although Herr Ehrenfechter cannot be said to have launched a thunderbolt among training schools or any other schools, in England or elsewhere, his discourse contained some interesting features, and doubtless served a useful purpose in drawing the attention of pianoforte amateurs to the necessity of technical study for all who aspire to proficiency on the instrument.

Music Publishers' Weekly List.

SONGS.

Cause and Effect	Yardley	J. Williams.
Memories...	A. Goring Thomas	„
Olden Times	H. Farmer ...	„

INSTRUMENTAL.

Bourrée	W. Hedgcock ...	J. Williams.
Gigue	„ ...	„
Gypsy Gabriel Waltz	Leideritz... ...	„
Gypsy Gabriel Lancers...	„ ...	„
Le Livre de Histoires (pianoforte duets)	Burgmein ...	Ricordi.
Quartet in C for two violins, tenor, and 'cello...	Geo. A. Ames ...	London Musical Publishing Co.

OPERA, CANTATA, &c.

Gypsy Gabriel, comic opera	Florian Pascal . .	J. Williams.
John Gilpin, comic cantata	G. Fox	„
350 Questions and Exercises	Academical Board, Trinity College ...	Hammond.
Rise and Development of Synagogue Music...	Rev. F. L. Cohen	Wertheimer.

Next Week's Music.

THIS DAY (SATURDAY).

Afternoon Concert	Crystal Palace.	3
Popular Concert	St. James's Hall.	3
St. Patrick's Day Irish Concert	St. James's Hall.	8
St. Patrick's Day Irish Concert	Albert Hall.	8

MONDAY, 19.

Popular Concert	St. James's Hall.	8.30

TUESDAY, 20.

Mr. Wade's Chamber Concert	Princes' Hall	8.30
Mr. Nicholl's Chamber Concert	Steinway Hall.	8
Students' Invitation	Trin. Coll, Mandeville Place.	7.30

THURSDAY, 22.

Philharmonic Society Concert	St. James's Hall.	8

FRIDAY, 23.

Mr. Bonawitz's Recital	Portman Rooms.	3
Sullivan's "The Prodigal Son"	Kensington Town Hall.	8

FOREIGN.

New York.—Madame Gerster re-appeared at a recent concert of Signor Campanini, and was received with warm sympathy by the public. After she began to sing it was observed that her voice had recovered some of its lost tone, but she still sings with great effort, and her upper notes want clearness. It is hoped the artist may eventually regain her powers. At the fourth concert of the New York Symphony Society, Bargiel's Prometheus Overture, a Bach Concerto for stringed instruments, and the Eroica Symphony were the chief numbers. It appears that on the rumours of the failure of German opera in this city, Mr. Mapleson hurriedly wrote to one of the stockholders, offering his services as manager of the Metropolitan. The letter arrived one day after the resolution had been taken to continue the German opera. And Mr. Ernest Gye, who had been enterprising enough to take the first steamer in order to come in person with an offer to the directors, was ten days too late with his offer. The fourth season of German opera has come to a close, and the following statistics showing the relative popularity of the operas presented, cannot fail to be of interest to your readers. They were published in the New York Tribune. "For the benefit of those who wish to study the lessons of the season we are enabled to-day to furnish some statistics which are thoroughly trustworthy and which form a significant commentary on much of the reckless and ill-informed talk indulged in a few weeks ago, when an effort was made to cut short the career of German opera in this city. It is needless to say that these statistics do not contain all the lessons to be derived from the season, and that they do not serve unaided to solve the operatic problem which is being worked out in New York more conscientiously, more determinedly, and more thoughtfully here than in any city in the world outside of those in which the opera is an institution subventioned by the government. For the present, however, we confine ourselves to the figures, which, as arguments, are supposed popularly to be always truthful. The season began on November 2, and has consisted of 47 subscription nights, 16 regular matinées and an extra matinée. In this period 14 operas have been produced. Up to and including the representation of "Lohengrin," the receipts and attendance at these operas were, as is stated in the following table, in which the works are arranged according to their comparative popularity, as indicated by the average nightly receipts:

Operas.	Times.	Total Receipts.	Average Receipts	Total Attendance	Ave Atdance
Götterdammerung	5	$21,168 25	$4,233 65	14,393	2,879
Siegfried	10	33,235 00	3,323 50	24,760	2,476
Walküre	4	11,943 00	2,985 75	9,254	2,314
Prophet	2	5,548 75	2,824 37	4 659	2,329
Tristan und Isolde	3	8,399 75	2,799 92	6,282	2,094
Lohengrin	6	15,847 75	2,641 29	13,747	2,291
Faust	4	10,520 25	2,630 06	9.223	2,306
Tannhäuser	4	10,267 25	2,566 81	8,433	2,108
Meistersinger	1	2,543 50	2,543 50	1,944	1,944
Euryanthe	4	10,162 50	2,540 62	8,635	2,159
Trompeter	7	17,319 00	2,474 11	14,104	2,057
Jewess	3	7,067 25	2,355 75	6,729	2,243
Cortez	4	9,094 00	2,273 50	8,535	2,134
Fidelio	4	8,997 00	2,249 25	8,139	2,035

"Since last Tuesday two representations of "Die Götterdämmerung" have been given, and this afternoon "Siegfried" will be repeated. These three representations are not included in the table. Assuming, merely for the sake of argument, that the receipts for these representations will not change the average for the two works (as a matter of fact, they will materially increase it), the total receipts for the season will reach 184,004.05 dols. for 64 representations, as against 202,751 dols. for 61 representations last season, a gross loss of 18,747.95 dols. The average receipts last season were 3,323.78 dols.; this season, 2,871.98 dols., a difference of 451.80 dols. a performance in favour of last season.

"A final paragraph about the relation of Wagner's works to the season's business. Of the fourteen works presented, seven—that is, one half—were Wagner's. These seven were performed 36 times to the remaining works' 28. Wagner's operas brought into the treasury 115,195.30 dols., against 68,808.75 dols. brought in by the other works. The Wagnerian average was 3,199.87 dols.; the non-Wagnerian 2,457.45 dols., a difference in favour of Wagner of 742.42 dols. a night. This is the popular answer to the criticism of Mr. Stanton's choice of repertory. The assessments paid by the box-holders is, of course, not included in the above tables."

PROVINCIAL.

Birmingham, Feb. 27.—Mr. J. W. Turner's English Opera Company are at present fulfilling a fortnight's engagement at the Grand Theatre, and have attracted crowded houses. On Thursday last, when "Maritana" was given, the house was literally sold out. Mr. Turner's impersonation of Don Cæsar de Bazan is now well established. His acting is never overcharged, and his voice is still agreeable and pleasant to listen to, moreover, his style of vocalisation, as well as his excellent phrasing, may serve as a valuable lesson to many aspiring tenors. Mr. Turner is well supported by good singers, his principal contralto being Miss Josephine Yorke, the sopranos, Miss Constance Bellamy, Mdlle. D'Alcourt, Miss Reba Henderson, and others. The orchestra is under Mr. T. E. Turrel. One of the best all round performances was that of Auber's "Fra Diavolo." The repertoire comprised the following operas:—"The Bohemian Girl," "Faust," "Marriage of Figaro," "Maritana," "Fra Diavolo," and "Lily of Killarney." Mr. Badger, a local tenor, will make his début in the "Bohemian Girl" this week. He possesses a good voice of considerable range, has an agreeable presence, and will no doubt realise the expectations formed of him. Mr. Stockley's third orchestral concert was the best attended of any of his series. The principal attraction was, no doubt, Miss Fanny Davies (a native of Birmingham); she played Mendelssohn's second pianoforte concerto in D minor, op. 40, accompanied by the orchestra, also Schumann's first novelette in F major, and Rubinstein's Staccato Etude in C. The performance of the concerto was in every way masterly; the orchestra, under Mr. Stockley's excellent conductorship, never accompanied better, and materially assisted towards the success. Miss Davies played with great clearness and delicacy, with unerring correctness; perhaps, the only drawback towards complete perfection is the want of a little more power. She was several times recalled, and met with a most enthusiastic reception. Beethoven's Symphony in D, No. 2, op. 36, Wagner's overture to "Tannhäuser," and a new suite by Edward Elgar, of Worcester, were the other principal orchestral items. Mr. Edward Elgar is a first violinist in Mr. Stockley's band, and in 1885 produced at one of these concerts an orchestral Sevillana in G minor. The suite played on Thursday is full of orchestral colouring, and contains points of undoubted merit. Mr. Elgar conducted his own work. The vocalists were Mdlle. Antoinette Trebelli and Mr. Henry Pope. Both were in excellent form, their efforts deserving a word of high praise. Mr. Stockley and his orchestra gave a most intelligent reading of Beethoven's Second Symphony. The forty-eighth chamber concert given by the Clef Club at their own rooms, introduced a string quartet by our clever violinist, Mr. F. Ward; it was played by Mr. F. Ward, Messrs. Priestley père, and his two clever sons in a superb manner, and elicited warm appreciation from all present. The quartet is constructed on strictly classical principles. The finale is a brilliant fugue in four parts, broadly developed. The slow movement introduces a beautiful melody, and its accompaniments are treated in a musicianly way. Mr. Brewerton and Mr. Gervas Cooper, two of our best amateur baritones, were the vocalists. Both gentlemen are the lucky possessors of excellent and well-trained voices. March 4th.—Mr. Badger, our local tenor, made a successful début as Thaddeus in "The Bohemian Girl." His presence is in his favour, and with a little experience, study, and perseverance, he will be a valuable addition to the operatic stage. His voice will grow in volume, and with a little more training, the slight defect of throatiness will disappear. He was enthusiastically encored for his artistic rendering of "Then you'll remember me." Mr. Turner's successful engagement terminated on Saturday with "Maritana." The house was crowded. —O P.

FOR DISEASES OF THE
THROAT, CHEST, LUNGS
SODEN
MINERAL
PASTILLES
BEST REMEDY FOR COUGHS, ASTHMA,
BRONCHITIS,
SORE THROAT,
WHOOPING COUGH.

"19, Harley-street, Cavendish-square, W.
"I have watched the effects of the Soden Waters for a considerable period, and regard them as extremely valuable in Obstinate Catarrhal Affections of the Throat. The small amount of Iron which they contain renders them very useful in the early stages of Throat Consumption, and they do good in nearly all cases of relaxation of the mucous membrane. The
SODEN MINERAL PASTILLES
offer a most convenient method of using the Waters, producing both a Local and General effect. They are especially beneficial in Catarrhal Diseases of the air-passages. I frequently found them of great service in the case of Singers and Public Speakers. (Signed)
"MORELL MACKENZIE, M.D."

INSIST on your chemist getting you the genuine article. See that each box has Dr. W. Stoeltzing's signature and our Trade Mark (Two Globes with Cross and Crescent), which is impressed on each pastile. At 1s. 1½d., of all Medicine Vendors, or post free for 15 stamps of the Soden Mineral Produce Company, Dyer's-buildings, Holborn, London, E.C.

DEFRIES' Safety Water White Oil.

The Purest, Whitest, and Best Burning Mineral Oil in England.

EQUAL IN QUALITY TO OILS SOLD UNDER FANCY NAMES, at from 1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d. per gall
FOR USE IN ALL LAMPS AND STOVES.

PRICE 1s. PER GALLON.

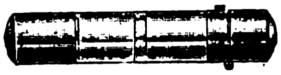
FREE DELIVERED IN LONDON AND ALL SUBURBS.

Minimum, 2 gallons. The 5 and 10 gallon drums are fitted with taps. Drums charged, and full price allowed when returned.

Terms: Cash on or before delivery. Deposit Accounts opened for Oil.

DEFRIES' SAFETY LAMP & OIL CO., LIMITED,
43 and 44, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON, E.C.

THORNHILL'S
NEW "GLOVE" BOTTLE.



FOR PERFUME & SMELLING SALTS.

Large Variety of Patterns at Various Prices

THORNHILL'S ARTISTIC FANS.
A LARGE and VARIED STOCK of the BEST QUALITY.

THORNHILL'S
TOILET CASES
FOR LADIES AND GENTLEMEN

PRESENTS.

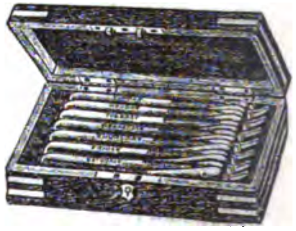
THORNHILL'S
Fully Illustrated
LIST
OF
LATEST
NOVELTIES

POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

THORNHILL'S
OPERA GLASSES.

IN GREAT VARIETY.

THORNHILL'S
Guaranteed Razors Singly or in Sets.



W. THORNHILL & CO., TO THE QUEEN & ROYAL FAMILY. 144, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON. ESTABLISHED 1734.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER'S
LINEN COLLARS, CUFFS, AND SHIRTS.

Samples and Price Lists Post Free.

COLLARS—LADIES' 3-fold, from 3s. 6d. per doz. GENTS' 4-fold, 4s. 11d. to 5s. 11d. per doz.

CUFFS—For Ladies or Gentlemen, 5s. 11d. to 10s. 6d. per doz.

SHIRTS—Best quality Long Cloth, with 4-fold Linen Fronts 35s. 6d per half-doz. (To measure, 2s. extra.)

N.B.—OLD SHIRTS made as good as new with best materials in Neckbands, Cuffs, and Fronts, for 14s. the half-doz.

ROBINSON AND CLEAVER, BELFAST.

Dr. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For sore throat, hoarseness, and relaxed throat, also for improving the voice

FOR SINGING AND SPEAKING

without fatiguing the voice. Celebrated in every town in Europe, India, America, and the Colonies. Testimonials from Patti, Trebelli, Patey, Santley, and the most eminent medical men.

Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d.; also in bottles for abroad.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE & RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & Co.,
Manufacturers and Importers of all kinds of Strings
FOR
VIOLIN, VIOLA, CELLO, DOUBLE BASS, HARP,
ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO,
Have always in STOCK the Largest ASSORTMENT of any House in the World.

6, GOLDEN SQUARE, W.

A BLESSING IN EVERY FAMILY.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.

These Remedies have stood the test of FIFTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE and are pronounced the best medicines for family use. Tens of thousands of written testimonials bear witness to their marvellous curative properties. They are acknowledged by the whole civilised world to be the greatest efficacy in every form of disease.
Sold by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors.

Manufactured only at THOMAS HOLLOWAY'S ESTABLISHMENT
78, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.
N.B.—Advice gratis at the above address, daily, between the hours of 11 and 4 or by letter

ASCHERBERG PIANOS.

"I only perform an act of justice when I ascribe my successes to a great extent to the excellent Instruments from your factory, on which I was favoured to play before the public. Remain convinced that I shall at all times and everywhere give preference to your Pianos over all others, and accept the assurance of my unbounded esteem.

Respectfully,

VLADIMIR VON PACHMANN."

ASCHERBERG PIANO DEPOT,

211, REGENT STREET, W.

PEARS' SOAP
A PERFECTLY PURE SOAP · IT KEEPS THE PORES OPEN, THE COMPLEXION CLEAR, AND THE HANDS AND SKIN SOFT · A VERY DURABLE SOAP ·
THE WORLD RENOWNED
IN PRAISE OF PEARS' SOAP
I HAVE FOUND IT MATCH-LESS FOR THE HANDS AND COM-PLEX-ION,
Adelina Patti
SPECIALLY APPOINTED
ENGLISH COMPLEXION SOAP.
ICH DIEN
BY ROYAL WARRANT, MAKERS TO THE PRINCE OF WALES.
ESTABLISHED IN LONDON 100 YEARS,
FIFTEEN INTERNATIONAL AWARDS

A BRIGHT HEALTHFUL SKIN AND COMPLEXION ENSURED BY USING

PEARS' SOAP.

AS RECOMMENDED BY THE GREATEST ENGLISH AUTHORITY ON THE SKIN,
Prof. SIR ERASMUS WILSON, F.R.S., PRES. OF THE ROYAL COL. OF SURGEONS, ENGLAND,
AND ALL OTHER LEADING AUTHORITIES ON THE SKIN.

COUNTLESS BEAUTEOUS LADIES, INCLUDING MRS. LILLIE LANGTRY, RECOMMEND ITS VIRTUES
AND PREFER PEARS' SOAP TO ANY OTHER.

The following from the world-renowned Songstress is a sample of thousands of Testimonials:

Testimonial from Madame ADELINA PATTI.

"I HAVE FOUND IT MATCHLESS FOR THE HANDS AND COMPLEXION." Adelina Patti

PEARS' SOAP IS FOR SALE THROUGHOUT THE CIVILIZED WORLD.

Printed and Published by MACRAE, CURTICE & CO. (LIMITED), 12, Catherine Street, Strand, W.C.

WEEKLY.]

The Musical World.

ESTABLISHED 1822.
REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED; IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST WEEKLY, 17/6 PER ANNUM (Payable in advance).

VOL. 67.—No. 12. SATURDAY, MARCH 24, 1888. PRICE {3D. Unstamped. 4D. By Post.

THE

KARN AMERICAN ORGANS,

Manufactured by D. W. KARN & CO.,

WOODSTOCK, ONTARIO, CANADA.

The Karn Organ is a reproduction of the Pipe Organ in miniature, of pre-eminent value as an effective music exponent for the Home.

OUR AIM has not been to see how cheaply an organ can be built, BUT HOW CHEAPLY A FIRST-CLASS ORGAN can be made.

OUR CLAIM is that we are building organs equal to, if not surpassing, all others, at the very lowest reasonable prices.

COMPARISON CHEERFULLY INVITED.

New Illustrated Catalogue & Price Lists Free of the
SOLE EUROPEAN AGENTS:

THE SCHREIBER PIANO CO.,
18, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W.

To the Trade and Profession.

◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆

OLD VIOLINS.

MESSRS. BEARE AND SON, Manufacturers and Importers of every Description of Musical Instruments, Strings, Fittings, &c.,
34, Rathbone Place, London, W.,
Invite an inspection of their collection of old Violins,
All genuine examples of the celebrated old Masters.
Over 300 old instruments from which to select.

Old Violins from £5.
Old Tenors from £5.
Old Violoncellos from £10.
Old Double Basses from £15.

Sole Wholesale Agents for James Tubb's celebrated Bows.
Bows by the old makers also frequently in stock.
Tested strings unequalled for durability and equality of tone.
Repairs of every kind of Musical Instrument executed promptly by experienced workmen.

BEARE AND SON,
34, RATHBONE PLACE, LONDON, W.

Special Notices.

SOCIETY OF ARTS PRACTICAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

THE NEXT EXAMINATION
will be held at the Society's house, 18, John Street, Adelphi, W.C., and will commence on THURSDAY, the 24th May.
Full particulars on application to the Secretary.
H. TRUEMAN WOOD,
Secretary.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL CHORAL SOCIETY.

Patron—Her Majesty the QUEEN.
President—H.R.H. the Duke of EDINBURGH, K.G.
Conductor—Mr. BARNBY.
HANDEL'S "MESSIAH," on GOOD FRIDAY, at 7.
Artists:—Madame Nordica, Madame Belle Cole, Mr. Henry Piercy, and Mr. Watkin Mills.
Prices—7s. 6d., 6s., 5s., 4s., ; gallery (promenade only), 1s.

GOOD FRIDAY. HANDEL'S "MESSIAH"

WILL BE PERFORMED AT THE
ROYAL ALBERT HALL,
Commencing at 7, and concluding by 9.45.
GALLERY, ONE SHILLING.

THE GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Established by the Corporation of London.

Principal—Mr. H. WEIST HILL.

Students' Concerts will take place on April 25, May 9 and 23, June 6 and 20, and July 4.

Recitals and Lectures by Professors of the School, WEEKLY.

The Next Term will commence on Monday, April 16, 1888.

For prospectuses and all further particulars, apply to the Secretary.

By Order,
CHARLES P. SMITH,
Secretary.

Victoria Embankment, E.C.

TOWN HALL, BIRMINGHAM.

AN ORGANIST is required for the BIRMINGHAM TOWN HALL. The Organ is well known as a fine instrument of four manuals and seventy-six stops, and it has been decided to expend, at an early date, a large sum in thoroughly renovating and modernising its mechanism and appliances, and adding to its resources. The Organist will, under certain conditions, have the exclusive control of the Organ, and will be at liberty to give Recitals for his own benefit. He will also receive the fees payable in respect of Meetings or performances at which the Organ is required. Applications (marked "Town Hall Organist") are to be made, not later than May 8th, to Mr. C. G. BEALE, 3, Newhall Street, Birmingham, from whom a Schedule can be obtained by post, showing the conditions of the appointment.

NIKITA.

——o::o——

For Engagements, &c., address,
ROBERT STRAKOSCH,
MANAGER,
34, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE, W.C.

Institutes and Colleges.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, KENSINGTON GORE, LONDON, S.W.

Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.

President - - H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES, K.G.
Director - - Sir GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L., LL.D.
Next College Concert (Orchestral), March 26th, at 7.30 p.m.
Conductor - - Professor C. V. STANFORD, Mus. Doc.
The Midsummer Term commences April 25th, 1888.
CHARLES MORLEY, Honorary Secretary.

UNIVERSITY OF TRINITY COLLEGE, TORONTO. (The Church of England University of Upper Canada.)

FACULTY OF MUSIC.

The next Examinations for the degree of Bachelor of Music will be held simultaneously in Toronto and London in Easter week, 1888. Women are admissable to these examinations. For particulars apply to Rev. E. K. Kendal, D.C.L., Registrar for England, Southsea.

TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON. For MUSICAL EDUCATION and EXAMINATION, &c., and for the Granting of Certificates and Diplomas in Music. Inst. 1872.

President - - The EARL of ABERDEEN.

THE NEXT STUDENTS' ORCHESTRAL CONCERT will take place on MONDAY, April 9th, at PRINCES' HALL, PICCADILLY, at 8 o'clock, when the Programme will probably be composed as follows:—

Overture, "Rosamunde," Schubert; Song, "Quando a te lieta" ("Faust,") Gounod, Miss Kate Milner; Serenade and Allegro Giojoso for Pianoforte and Orchestra, Mendelssohn, Mr. R. W. Lewis; Song, "Italian Boat Song," James Shaw Ford, Mr. Frank Swinford, Student (Sims Reeves Exhibitioner); Vocal Trio, "Vorrei parlar" ("Falstaff,") Balfe, Miss Bowley, Miss Ada Cartwright, and Miss Lizzie Dunkley; Allegro from Concerto for Pianofore and Orchestra in A minor, Schumann, Miss Emily Rivett (Benedict Exhibitioner); Overture in F, Frank Swinford (Student); Movements from Suite for Orchestra, "Lay of the Last Minstrel" (Larghetto—Romance, Moderato), John Francis Barnett; Recit. and Cavatina, "Infelice" ("Ernani,") Verdi, Mr. Frank Swinford; Polonaise in E flat, for Pianoforte and Orchestra, Chopin, Miss Blanche St. Clair; Songs (a) "Oh Fatima" ("Abu Hasan,") Weber; (b) "Near Thee," Raff, Miss Grosvenor Gooch; Violoncello Solo, Mr. J. H. Callcott (Exhibitioner); Ave Maria for Voice, Pianoforte, Violoncello, and Harp, Marie Brooke (Student), Miss Florence Verey, Miss Marie Brooke, Mr. J. H. Calcott, and Mr. Albert Putnam; Finale from Symphony in D (No. 2), Beethoven. Conductor, Mr. George Mount.

By Order of the Academical Board.
Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, W.

GUILD OF ORGANISTS, 35, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C.

Patron—The Right Rev. THE LORD BISHOP OF LONDON.
PRESIDENTS.
The REV. CANON SIR F. H. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., Mus. Doc.
Sir HERBERT OAKELEY, Bart., Mus. Doc.
Sir ROBERT STEWART, Mus. Doc.
Vice-President—WILLIAM PINNEY, Mus. Bac., Oxon.
Warden—CHARLES VINCENT, Mus. Doc., Oxon.

Established to advance the cause of Church music and the truest interests of its Professors, etc.

Members of the Church of England and Ireland, and the Episcopal Church of Scotland, are eligible for election. Subscription: Professional Organists (Associates) 10s. 6d. per annum; Amateurs (Members) 15s. per annum; Life subscription, 5 guineas.

Next Fellowship examination in Easter Week.

Prospectus and further particulars may be obtained from the Hon. Sec., Dr. J. H. Lewis, Staines, Middlesex.

London Organ School and International College of Music.

Established 1865, by the Rev. SCOTSON CLARK, Mus.B.
Patron—His Grace The ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY.
Principal—HENRY CLARK.

THE NEXT ORGAN RECITAL at ST. NICHOLAS COLE ABBEY, on TUESDAY, April 10th, by Miss EDROFF.

Piano, Singing, Violin, 'Cello, Flute, Harp, Organ Lessons, with Practice, and Harmony. Private Lessons and Classes.

Candidates for Musical Degrees at any of the English Universities are expressly prepared for the Matriculation Examinations by Oxford and Cambridge graduates (in honours). Branches at Kensington and St. John's Wood.

Apply to the Director of Classes, T. H. Y. TROTTER, M.A., Mus.Bac., Oxon., 3, Princes Street, Cavendish Square, W. (close to Oxford Circus).

Publishers' Announcements.

Third Edition.

Daily Vocal Exercises, for Mezzo Soprano, Soprano, or Tenor. By ALBERT B. BACH, Author of the "Principles of Singing," &c. Full music size, 60 pages, 8s. net.

SATURDAY REVIEW.
"We can heartily recommend these 'Daily Exercises' as clear and rational in method, and eminently fitted for the object for which they are written."

THE MUSICAL TIMES.
"This most valuable series of exercises is intended as a practical supplement to the author's lectures on 'Musical Education and Vocal Culture.' They are laid out upon principles which can scarcely fail to meet with approval because of their clear and reasonable character."

THE MUSICAL WORLD.
"The 'Daily Exercises' will be found a valuable assistance to vocal students, whose various acquirements have been amply and ingeniously provided for."

London: METZLER & CO.

"BIRD RAPTURES,"
Song (for Soprano).
WORDS BY CHRISTINA G. ROSSETTI.
Music by MOIR CLARK.
PRESS OPINIONS.

"'Bird Raptures' is a song of exceptional merit. The accompaniment plays an important part, and contains several original and charming effects."—THE MUSICAL WORLD, June 11, 1887.

"One of the most earnest and beautiful songs that has appeared for many a long day."—Musical Standard, Dec. 23, 1887.

"When the public can appreciate a song like this, the trade of the vulgar ballad-monger will be gone."—Musical Review, December, 1887.

BY THE SAME COMPOSER,
"BANVA,"
Four Sketches for Pianoforte Duet.

"Admirably written, and marked by an originality which will recommend them to pianists of culture."—THE MUSICAL WORLD, June 11, 1887.

STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER, AND CO., 84, New Bond Street, W.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE "JOLLY BRICK" POLKA.
By M. S. BARRON.
PRICE 3s.

"Is bright and danceable."—News of the World.

"This is a cheerful and sprightly piece, with well marked accentuation. It presents no difficulties of execution even to the young player."—Dundee Advertiser.

"One of the brighest and most sprightly polkas we have met with for a long time. The key is E flat, changing to B flat. The piece is quite above the common run of dance music."—Musical Standard.

ALSO,
A TWILIGHT DREAM.
FOR PIANO.
By M. S. BARRON.
PRICE 3s.

"An interesting piece, with a melody for the left hand."—Musical Standard.

LONDON: SWAN & CO., 4, GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, W.

IN SIX GRADES.
PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH.

Under the Sanction and Approval of the Rev. Sir FREDERICK A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., M.A., Mus. Doc., and of Sir G. A. MACFARREN, Mus. Doc.

THE MUSICIAN:
A GUIDE FOR PIANOFORTE STUDENTS,
By RIDLEY PRENTICE.

CONTAINS ANALYSES OF WELL-KNOWN PIECES PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED, ENABLING THE PUPIL TO UNITE A STUDY OF MUSICAL FORM WITH THE ORDINARY PIANOFORTE PRACTICE.

Saturday Review.—"We are far from suggesting that there is any royal road for acquiring technical knowledge, but we are quite certain Mr. Ridley Prentice's road is in every way the pleasantest that has yet been laid before any pianoforte student."

Academy.—"A knowledge of form is imparted in simple and pleasant language. We heartily commend it to all who desire to understand, satisfactorily interpret, and enjoy beautiful music."

Graphic.—"Written with the laudable purpose of helping the pianoforte student to understand and enjoy beautiful music."

School Board Chronicle.—"A useful book for earnest teachers."

Musical Review.—"Mr. Ridley Prentice has newly developed an important though much neglected branch of the teacher's duties."

Monthly Musical Record.—"No more valuable work of the kind is in existence."

W. SWAN SONNENSCHEIN & CO., PATERNOSTER SQUARE;
And all Book and Music Sellers.

Professional Cards.

The subscription for a "card" space in these columns is £1 10s. for six months, and £1 per quarter—payable in advance, including copy of the paper each week. Subscriptions should be sent to the office of The Musical World 12, Catherine Street, Strand, London, W.C.

Conductors and Composers.

Mr. FREDERIC H. COWEN,
73, Hamilton Terrace,
St. John's Wood, N.W.

Mr. F. KILVINGTON HATTERSLEY,
A.R.A.M.
(Professor of the Pianoforte, Composer, and Conductor),
17, Finsbury Park Villas,
Green Lanes, N.

Mr. ALBERT VISETTI
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Conductor),
12, Westbourne Park Terrace, W.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN
(Guitar, Concertina, and Gigelira. Wood and Straw Instrument),
22A, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W.

Mr. F. St. JOHN LACY
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Vocalist (baritone),
Fitzroy Mansion, Charlotte Street,
Fitzroy Square, W.

Mr. H. MARTYN VAN LENNEP
(Teacher of Singing, Composer, and Conductor),
Address—7, Wimpole Street,
Cavendish Square, W.

Mr. G. ARTHUR HIGGS, F.C.O.
L. Mus. and Tallis Gold Medallist. T.C.L. Pupil of Mr. Albert Visetti. Teacher of Singing, Harmony, Conductor, and Vocalist. (Baritone.)
Address—Trinity College, London, W.

Vocalists—Sopranos.

Madame VALLERIA
(Opera and Concerts),
Bosworth House, Husband's Bosworth,
Rugby.

Miss EDITH DESMOND
(Opera and Concerts),
c/o Nolan & Jackson.

Miss KATE FLINN
(Concerts and Oratorios),
41, Welbeck Street,
Cavendish Square, W.

Mdlle. VELMI
(Opera and Concerts),
7, Chesilton Road, Munster Park,
Fulham, S.W.

Miss AGNES LARKCOM
Has removed to
158, Portsdown Road, W.

Madame ISABEL GEORGE, L.R.A.M.
(Concert and Oratorio),
29, Albany Street, Regent's Park, N.W.

Contraltos.

Miss JOSEPHINE CRAVINO
(Concerts and Oratorio),
2, Sedgmoor Villas,
Private Lessons given. Camberwell, S.E.

Miss MARY E. DAKIN, R.A.M.
(Mez. Sop.),
Ballads, Oratorio, &c.
31, Monmouth Road,
Bayswater, London, W.

Miss LENA LITTLE
(Concerts),
42, Norfolk Square, Hyde Park, W.

Contraltos.—Continued.

Madame OSCAR POLLACK
(Concerts).
56, Duchess Road,
Edgbaston, Birmingham.

Tenors.

Mr. BARTON McGUCKIN
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. Alfred Moul,
26, Old Bond Street, W.,
Or, 270, Elgin Avenue, Maida Vale, W.

Mr. ARNOLD BREEDEN
(Concerts, Oratorio, and Opera),
Address—N. Vert, Esq.,
6, Cork Street, W.

Mr. SEYMOUR JACKSON
(Concerts and Oratorio).
Old Trafford, Manchester.

Mr. PAYNE CLARKE
(Concerts and Oratorio).
28, Devonshire Street, Islington, N.

Mr. J. DALGETY HENDERSON,
Gothic Lodge,
Lordship Lane, S.E.

Mr. REDFERN HOLLINS,
30, St. Stephen's Avenue,
Shepherd's Bush, W.

Mr. BERNARD LANE,
60, Westbourne Park Villas, W.

Chevalier EDWARD SCOVEL
(Opera, Concerts, and Oratorio),
Hotel de L'Europe,
Milan, Italy.

Mr. W. ESMOND,
24, Upper Mount Street, Dublin.

Baritones.

Mr. WALTER CLIFFORD
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concerts),
c/o N. Vert, Esq.,
6, Cork Street, W.

Mr. FREDERIC KING
(Concerts and Oratorio),
19, Canfield Gardens, S. Hampstead.

Mr. NORRIS CROKER,
Egremont, Croxted Road,
West Dulwich, S.E.

Mr. JOSEPH LYNDE
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concert
63, Stafford P[illegible]
Buckingham Gate, S.W.

Mr. ALBERT REAKES
(Bass-Baritone, of the "London Ballad Singers," Oratorios, Concerts, &c.),
30, Lancaster Road,
Notting Hill, W.

Herr RAGNAR GREVILLIUS
(Concerts, Oratorio, and Opera),
70, Portsdown Road, Maida Vale, W.

Bass.

Mr. WATKIN MILLS requests that all communications respecting engagements be sent to his new address, Hyacinth Road, Roehampton Park, S.W.

Mr. FRANK CELLI
(Concerts and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. N. Vert, 6, Cork St.,
Burlington Gardens, W.

Trumpet and Cornet.

Mr. THOMAS HARPER,
185, King's Road, N.W

Pianoforte.

Mr. G. PRADEAU
(Lessons and Recitals),
1, Stowe Road,
Shepherd's Bush, W.

Guitar.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN, Guitariste, Instructress to H.R.H. the Princess Louise, has returned to town, 22A, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W., where may be had her celebrated book, "Learning the Guitar Simplified," 10s. 6d.

Violin.

Mr. ALLAN CAMPBELL
(Formerly Pupil of Mr. Henry Holmes and Dr. S. S. Wesley),
23, Thicket Road,
Pupils visited and received. Anerley, S.E.

Mr. LESLIE CROTTY and
Madame GEORGINA BURNS,
c/o Mr. Alfred Moul (sole agent),
26, Old Bond Street, W.

Miss AGNES JANSON requests that all communications respecting engagements may be sent to her new address, 36, Albion Place, Hyde Park, W.; or to Mr. N. Vert, 6, Cork Street, W.

The FRASER QUINTET. Misses Violet (Vocalist), Ida, and Ethel (Pianist, Violoncello, and Viola), Mabel and Stella Violinists), play Quartets, Solos, Duets, two Pianofortes, &c. For Engagements, for Concerts, "at Homes," Dinner and Garden Parties.—Address: 121, Adelaide Road, N.W.

MR. HEALEY'S SPECIAL LIST.

Madame LILIAN NORDICA (Soprano)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert,
Address to
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10A, Warwick Street, W.

Mdlle. LOUISE LABLACHE (Mez. Sop.)
(Opera and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10A, Warwick Street, W

Mdlle. HELENE HASTREITER (Contr.)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert)
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10A, Warwick Street, W.

Madame BELLE COLE (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10A, Warwick Street, W.

Miss MARGUERITE HALL (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager. W. B. Healey,
10A, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. WILLIAM NICHOLL (Tenor)
28, Belsize Road, N.W.,
Or, Sole Agent, W. B. Healey,
10A, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. JOHN PROBERT (Tenor)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10A, Warwick Street, W

Mr. VAUGHAN EDWARDES (Baritone)
(Concerts and Oratorio),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10A, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. MULES BROWN (Baritone)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10A, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. HENRY POPE (Bass)
(Opera, Concerts, and Oratorio),
Business Manager. W. B. Healey,
10A, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. T. L. CAMPION (Bass)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10A, Warwick Street, W.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES.

Public Speakers and Singers

Can use "Brown's Bronchial Troches" as freely as requisite, containing nothing that can injure the system. They are invaluable in allaying the hoarseness and irritation incident to vocal exertion, effectually Clearing and Strengthening the Voice.

"They seem to act specially on the organs of the voice, and produce a clear enunciation."—MARIE ROZE-MAPLESON.

Ask for and obtain only "Brown's Bronchial Troches." Sold everywhere at 1s. 1½d a box.

ORGAN.—A fine-toned modern TWO-MANUAL for SALE. Contains 16 stops and 678 speaking pipes, and all the latest improvements. Price £250. Full particulars on application.—Fincham's Organ Factory, 150, Euston Road, London.

MISS EMILY SHINNER will give an EVENING CONCERT, at 4, Carlton-gardens, by kind permission of the Right Hon. A. J. Balfour, M.P., on Friday, March 23, at 9 o'clock, assisted by Miss Marguerite Hall, Mdlle. Janatha, and the Shinner Quartett—First Violin, Miss Emily Shinner; Second Violin, Miss Lucy Riley; Viola, Miss Cecilia Gates; Violoncello, Miss Florence Hemmings. Stalls, Half a Guinea. Stanley Lucas, Weber, and Co., 84, New Bond-street; Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

DRURY LANE.—LAST NIGHTS of PUSS IN BOOTS, which will be WITHDRAWN SATURDAY NEXT, March 24.

PUSS IN BOOTS.—HARRY PAYNE (Clown), Jenny Lawson, Marie Williams, Bettina de Sortis, Victor Stevens, Reuben Inch, Charles Danby, Violet Newham, Charlotte Elworthy, Minnie Inch, Florence Graham, Marguerite Etoile, Kaufman (the Champion Bicyclist).

A RUN OF LUCK, withdrawn in the height of its success, Dec. 11, 1886, to make way for the Christmas pantomime, will be revived SATURDAY, March 31 next. Messrs. Harry Nicholls, Percy Lyndal, E. W. Gardiner, Victor Stevens, F. Gould, Reuben Inch, Arthur Yates, A. Collins, and Herbert Standing, &c.; Mesdames Mabel Fortescue, Edith Bruce, Blanche Massey, M. Inch, Marie D'Altra, Marie Williams, M. Mildmay, and Maud Milton, &c.—Box-office now open.—DRURY-LANE.

TO ORGANISTS.—For Professional Practice, Teaching, or Concert purpose, and Home use, the "Bach Model" Pedal Instrument is only reliable substitute for a pipe organ. For design, improved action, connections, and tone, it embraces the merits of the highest class instruments; and without paying an exorbitant price you may have an instrument with organ measurements that removes the deficiencies hitherto experienced in pedal instruments.—Apply for illustrated lists, terms, and prices, to J. L. Scholefield, Musical Instrument Manufacturer, Huddersfield.

By order of the Executor of the late Nathaniel J. Holmes, Esq., Pembroke Lodge, Slaithwaite Road, Lewisham.

MESSRS. DYER, SON, and HILTON will Sell by Auction on the premises, as above, on Wednesday next, March 28th, a magnificent-toned, 7-octave GRAND PIANOFORTE, in walnut case, by "Horming and Moller," which obtained a gold medal at the Copenhagen Exhibition; a very fine organ-toned Harmonium, with 20 stops, in carved walnut case, by Ramsden; a Concertina, by Wheatstone, and a quantity of bound Music. May be viewed the day prior and morning of sale, and catalogues had of R. S. Fraser, Esq., Solicitor, 4, Finsbury Circus, E.C., and of the Auctioneers, Blackheath, S.E.

Facts and Comments.

The late German Emperor was not much of a musician, and it is said that his favourite composer was Piefke, a bandmaster and the composer of the "Düppler Sturm-Marsch" and other stirring military pieces. But the Emperor had the instinct of a good honest man for good honest things, and it is well-known that he never missed a performance of "Lohengrin." In the Correspondence between Wagner and Liszt, which will shortly be published in an English translation, there are some curious passages showing that even in very early days the then Prince of Prussia and his wife, the present Empress Dowager, took a warm interest in Wagner's art. Perhaps the fact that the lady was a Princess of Weimar, and frequently visited that city, where Liszt was residing as a favourite of the Court, may partly account for the circumstance.

Again and again we are told that Liszt has had conversations with the Prince and Princess, and expects the best results from their intercession. "The Prince," Liszt writes on one occasion, "has a high opinion of you as a poet and musician, and seems to take an interest in the success of your work at Berlin."

At that time, Hülsen, the manager of the Court Opera, a soldier and an aristocrat without special knowledge, but a well-intentioned and fairly-intelligent man, contemplated a performance of "Tannhäuser," but Wagner being himself an outlaw, and having no confidence in the local conductors, who were hostile to him, insisted upon Liszt being invited to superintend the performances, and on this point the matter seems to have been wrecked, Wagner, poor as he was, preferring to forego the considerable royalties of a Berlin performance to having his work done in a slipshod manner.

When this scheme had fallen through, Schöneck, a friend of Wagner, proposed to give the work at Kroll's, one of the minor Berlin theatres; but Hülsen, now acting the part of dog in the manger, revived an old edict which prohibited the performance of grand opera at any but the subventioned theatres. Wagner and Schöneck had the ingenious idea of announcing "Tannhäuser" as a "Singspiel" or operetta, as we should say, introducing probably a few scraps of spoken dialogue, although this is not mentioned in the Correspondence. It was to remove the interdict, or else to get "Tannhäuser" performed at the Court Opera, that the intercession of the Prince of Prussia was solicited and apparently promised.

One more anecdote concerned the great Emperor and the greater composer. "It is difficult," wrote the correspondent of an English paper in connection with the Bayreuth performances, "to say what are the mysterious conditions of musical leadership; they are certainly nearest akin to the qualities of a great military commander, and one can only agree with good old Emperor William, who, himself entirely innocent of musical knowledge, said after Wagner's late performance of Beethoven's C Minor Symphony at Berlin, in his homely way: 'Now you see what a good general can do with his army.'"

It is stated that a site somewhere near Piccadilly Circus has been found for a Carl Rosa theatre, which is to be the permanent seat of opera in London. As yet the news seems to us too good to be true, but even the rumour of the possibility of such a thing is not without a certain value as a sign of the times.

The forthcoming Sarasate Concerts will all be with orchestra, conducted by Mr. W. G. Cusins. The dates are May 5th, 19th, 26th, and June 2nd.

To-day week, the Saturday next before Easter, when the Saturday Popular Concerts have ceased from troubling, and the Mondays are at rest, the directors of the Royal Albert Hall will commence a series of concerts on the afternoons of the last day in the week. As the scheme has been conceived in a popular spirit of cheap admission, it is to be hoped that it will meet with a fair amount of success. A comfortable seat for half-a-crown, and some good music, without the disadvantage of waiting three-quarters of an hour in an east wind to secure it, is a boon not to be lightly despised.

Whitechapel is ever the least likely locality of this huge metropolis in which to discover art, and harmony is not supposed to reign unalloyed amongst the denizens of Commercial-street. And yet year by year, for the last eight seasons, the Rev. S. A. Barnett has brought the power and charm of art within the reach of the humble and the poor. This year, the collection which this East-end clergyman has brought together in the St. Jude's schoolhouse, includes Frank Dicksee's "Harmony."

Another musical picture, not without a suspicion of humour and a great deal of excellent painting, is "The Rehearsal"; and the "Mandoline Lesson," by Favretto, is one of a long list of interesting works lent by Mr. J. S. Forbes. On the walls of this schoolhouse are also Millais's "Orphans," Munkacsy's "Pharisee," Leighton's "Slinger," and many a fine work by Joseph Israels.

The concert recently held at the Stanley Hall, Holloway, organised by the employés of the Midland Railway, Kentish Town, in aid of the funds of the North London or University College Hospital, has resulted in a donation of £57 to that charity.

The Lyric Club have secured the family mansion of the late Lord Lonsdale, St. Ann's, Barnes, for their summer clubhouse. The mansion occupies an exceptionally fine situation, surrounded by wooded grounds exceeding eight acres, having a frontage of 220 yards disclosing a splendid river view of over 1½ miles, from which members of the Lyric and certain other clubs are invited to view the Boat Race.

Mr. Davey gave a lecture on English songs at Brighton last week.

The success of "Otello" at Vienna has been very considerable. Herr Jahn conducted, and the principal parts were entrusted to Frau Schlaeger, and Herren Winkelmann and Reichmann. The Vienna critics, including Hanslick, endorse the favourable opinion expressed by the audience. "Otello" has also been received with enthusiasm at Brünn.

The Baquet Theatre at Oporto was completely destroyed by fire on Tuesday night, the conflagration being caused by a gas accident which occurred during the last act. There was a very full house at the time. Ten bodies have been taken from the débris up to the present. A large number of people were injured, and no doubt exists that upwards of eighty lives have been lost.

The Stratford Musical Festival closed on the 13th inst., with a concert by the prize winners, including: Easter anthem, "The Lord is my Strength," West Ham Parish Church Choir, male vocal quartet, "The Long Day Closes" (Sullivan), Messrs. W. C. McKechney, W. Watson, W. Barclay, and E. Tobin, Forest Gate; pianoforte solo, "Bourrée in G minor" (E. Silas), Miss E. M. Heap, Loughton, Seniors (left school) competition; soprano song, "Orpheus with his lute" (Sullivan), Miss Maggie Foot, Forest Gate; vocal duet, "Gentle Spring, in Sunshine Clad (H. Smart) Misses E. C. E. McKechney and M. Scott, Forest Gate; pianoforte duet, "Reapers' Song" (D'Ourville), Miss and Master Blew, Leytonstone, ages, 13 and 12; bass song, "Son of Hybrias the Cretan" (Elliott), Mr. Robert Gladding, Forest Gate; pianoforte solo, Scherzo No. 2, from "Aquarellen" (Gade), Miss E. E. Harris, Loughton, Seniors (at school) Competition; song (boy soprano), "Song Should Breathe" (J. L. Hatton); Master W. Cook, West Ham Parish Church Choir, age 14; pianoforte duet, "Andante and Bolero" (W. Macfarren), Misses K. Latter, Woodford, and R. M. B. Bonner, Chigwell, Seniors (left school) Competition; hymn-tune, awarded Certificate of Honour (T. Bidgood), sung by Misses McKechney and Scott, Messrs. W. McKechney and Barclay; cornet solo, "The Better Land" (Cowen), Mr. P. Piegrome, Stratford; vocal quartet, "The Vale of Rest" (Mendelssohn), Misses Foot and Holdway, Messrs. Fairfax and R. J. Dobson, Forest Gate; anthem, "The Lord is Loving" (Garrett), Upton Congregational Church Choir; song, awarded Certificate of Honour (Percy C. Buck), Miss Emily McFarlane Brown, accompanied by the composer; pianoforte solos, Canzonetta in G Minor (Dussek), Rustic Dance, (Mackenzie), Miss F. L. Henman, Chingford, aged 12; violin solo, Entr'acte Gavotte "Mignon" (Thomas), Mr. Robert Crawford, Walthamstow; contralto song, "Come to Me, O ye Children" (T. Anderton), Miss Mary M. Wood, Forest Gate; pianoforte duet (Loeschhorn), Miss M. Latter and F. L. Henman, Seniors (at school) Competition; tenor song, "Sigh no more, Ladies" (Sullivan), Mr. Charles Harding, West Ham; prize pianoforte composition, "Song without Words" (Percy C. Buck), Mr. Percy C. Buck; part song, "Eldorado" (Pinsuti), Plaistow Congregational Church Choral Society. The Mayor and Mayoress of West Ham distributed the prizes and certificates.

It is encouraging to note the success of a movement so eminently calculated to popularise music amongst us. Other suburbs of London might do well to imitate the enterprise of Stratford, as it is not to be supposed that the far east monopolises all the budding musical talent of greater London. No doubt many young aspirants in the north and west, to say nothing of the south, burned to do battle with their more fortunate brethren in the competition from which they were necessarily excluded. Perhaps Highgate and Ealing and other such outlying districts will some day organise a festival of their own, and with as much glory as happy Stratford.

New York has followed Boston very closely in the production of Wagner's Early Symphony at the first of Seidl's symphony concerts, at Chickering Hall. At the same concert Herr Kalisch, the husband of Fräulein Lilli Lehmann, made a very good impression by his rendering of the "Preislied," and other tenor solos.

Another interesting American first performance was that at the Metropolitan Opera House, of "Manfred," Herr Ernest Possart reading the text, and the German Opera band and chorus giving Schumann's music. A repetition of the performance has been promised. It is said that Herr Possart, when director of the Munich Court Opera, gave over 200 stage performances of this work.

The "American Art Journal" gives a notice of a Young People's Matinée, at the Steinway Hall, New York, and thus describes a "Chopin Suite," by Hlavac, performed for the first time. "The 'Chopin Suite' is a huge musical joke, most amusing to a musician, and wholly unintelligible to anybody else. It is composed of six pieces by Chopin, which are each performed upon various instruments of the orchestra in turn, to the accompaniment upon the piano of the Chopin F minor Etude. These are: 'Prelude,' 'Scherzino,' 'Nocturne,' 'Valse Elogue,' 'Alla Marcia.' A grand finale is then given, in which these various numbers are all performed at once in one grand ensemble. The result is ludicrous in the extreme."

Chicago, which boasts of splendid musical talent among its citizens, has never been able to organise an orchestra until the present time. Great interest is felt in the public appearance of the new band, under Mr. Hans Balatka, fixed for March 9.

Passing from the severe to the lively, we record the first concert of the Ladies' Amateur Society in New York. It is said that the daughter of the Mayor, Miss Hewitt, was so impressed with the Ladies' Orchestra in London (which one?), when visiting there, that she determined to carry out a similar scheme in New York. About thirty ladies compose the band, conducted by Mr. Reinhard Schmelz. They wore a becoming uniform of white, with blue sashes, and they played "surprisingly well," the overture to the "Magic Flute," Bruch's introduction to "Loreley," Brahms's Hungarian Dances, Wilhelmj's air for the G string on a theme by Bach, and Beethoven's Turkish March.

The death is announced of the Baron Blaze de Bury, the well-known writer and musical critic of the "Revue des Deux Mondes." He was the eldest son of "Castil-Blaze," the once famous musical critic of the "Journal des Débats," who about sixty years ago transformed and mutilated Weber's "Freischütz" into "Robin des Bois," for the Parisian public.

M. Chabrier is engaged on a new grand opera, entitled "La Glu," the libretto of which is founded on M. Richepin's drama of the same name.

The first performance of M. Lalo's opera, "Le Roi d'Ys," at the Opéra Comique, will take place on the 15th of next month.

M. Guiraud's opera, "Madame Turlupin," has been revived at the Opéra Comique. A new comic opera, in one act, entitled "Dimanche et Lundi," by M. Deslandres, was well received last week at the same theatre.

The experiment has from time to time been tried here, on more or less inconsiderable scale, of organising concerts for the exclusive production of works by little heard native composers. "Le Ménestrel" gives an account of a similar experiment recently witnessed at Brussels, when the Arts Club of that city placed their rooms at the disposal of "L'Union des Jeunes Compositeurs." A concert including the performance of several meritorious compositions was the result; and among the pieces eliciting especial marks of satisfaction, were a suite for pianoforte and violin, by M. de Greet, a young professor at the Conservatoire, lately heard at one of the Colonne concerts; another interesting suite for hautboy and piano, by M. Van Comphout; a curious Harpzang for voice, with accompaniment of two harps and two flutes, by M. J. Blockx, and a vocal piece possessing both charm and originality entitled "Reliquaire d'amour," by M. Léon Du Bois.

We learn from the Milanese journal "Asmodes," that M. Maurel, the celebrated baritone, has published a little volume, written in French, bearing upon some of the principal points to be observed in order to achieve an adequate representation of Verdi's "Otello," together with sundry general remarks concerning recent developments of the musical drama in Italy.

The considerable success has been recorded of a suite for orchestra by Signor Mancinelli, lately performed at one of the "Classical Concerts" in Madrid.

Reward for merit, of the musical order, at any rate, does not appear to be altogether overwhelming in Italy, if we may judge from the particulars published in a Milan journal, of a prize lately offered by the Turin authorities for a funeral mass to be performed at the Metropolitan Church there, on the 28th July next, in commemoration of the death of King Charles-Albert. The happy winner is promised by the minister a sum of "nine hundred lire; out of which he is to not only undertake all expenses incidental to copying the parts for chorus and orchestra, but also to pay executants and singers."

Compare this with the terms offered in Paris to the successful composer of a "Marche Solennelle," scored for military band, to be played at the forthcoming Exposition Universelle, viz.:—"First prize, 3,000 francs; second prize, 2,000 francs; and two honourable mentions to be made at the option of the jury, each carrying with it a prize of 300 francs. The time occupied by performance is not to exceed ten minutes. It will certainly be conceded that they do these things better in France than in Italy. In England we do not do them at all.

The reversal by the Court of Appeal of the remarkable sentence upon M. Carvalho of three months' imprisonment for being manager of the late unfortunate Opéra Comique, has been received with a universal feeling of relief by the Parisian public, for whose satisfaction the prosecution was originally professed to have been undertaken. After terrible catastrophes of this sort, the first instinct aroused appears to be one of blind desire to punish anybody and everybody whose name happens, however innocently, to be connected with it, and for the time Bacon's aphorism has to be reversed, and justice defined as a "wild kind of revenge."

Some very enjoyable performances were recently given by the "Société des Compositeurs," at the Salle Pleyel, of various Greek and Breton melodies, introduced by M. Bourgault-Ducoudray, who, it will be remembered, has edited a charming edition of modern Greek songs; and by M. Oscar Comettant of some popular Scandinavian airs. To illustrate the adaptibility of Greek modes to modern music, M. Bourgault-Ducoudray has composed three hymns, founded upon different scales, which, sung by chorus of female voices with solo, with accompaniment of piano, organ, and viol d'amour produced a charming effect.

Some elaborate scenic effects have been devised for M. Ambroise Thomas's forthcoming ballet "La Tempête," one of these consisting of an ultra-realistic stage ocean, in which the ship is engulfed during the opening act. Those old enough to have witnessed Charles Keane's representation of the play at the Princess's, may remember a very impressive presentation of the same incident.

Dr. Mann, of King's College, Cambridge, has already commenced practising the chorus for a festival which is to be held in the University City during the coming summer, probably in June. One of the works chosen by the committee for performance is "Saul." Dr. Mann has not, up to the present, selected any novelty, being himself desirous of giving "Elijah."

TSCHAIKOWSKY.

Tschaikowsky, the distinguished Russian composer, is in London, and on Thursday evening conducted two of his works at the Philharmonic Concert. The performance took place too late for notice in the present issue, but our readers will be glad to know something of the career of so prominent a man, and we therefore reprint a chapter concerning him from the interesting book on Russian music by Cesar Cui, himself a composer of note. It will easily be seen that M. Cui has not much sympathy with the work of his confrère, and his remarks, therefore, should be taken cum grano. They, nevertheless, deserve attention.

Tschaikowsky has more than one point of resemblance to Rubinstein; he writes in all styles, and his source of melody is inexhaustible, but his work is often too hurried. He is a composer of remarkable talent, excelling in chamber and symphonic music; he is weaker in dramatic music, and his career would have been more brilliant if he had been more severe towards himself, and had reasoned out more thoroughly his system of composition, and his various tendencies. Tschaikowsky possesses great facility of melodic invention. His themes for the greater part are charming; there is not much depth or power in them, but the pervading feeling of dreamy melancholy is very attractive, and the particular turns of the phrasing impart a certain individuality. Modern harmony, with all its bold and delicate effects, contains nothing new to Tschaikowsky. The only reproach that can be made as regards his music, is a too frequent use of chromatics, which gives a weakly feeling to his harmonies. He is fond of polyphony and often makes use of it, sometimes to the detriment of the principal ideas in the work. In the construction of his pieces Tschaikowsky is rather uniform. He likes the form of variations especially; but they are not Beethoven's or Schumann's variations. Tschaikowsky does not possess the art that these great masters had in constructing such great developments on a very simple theme. Tschaikowsky's variations are principally based on changes of harmony, instrumentation, rhythm, and on contrapuntal devices. His orchestration is full of taste, brilliancy, and colour. Dramatic music is Tschaikowsky's weak point. His declamation is completely defective, and sometimes the rhythm of his music does not correspond with that of his words, neither does the length of his pieces with portions of the libretto; he generally writes more music than is necessary. He is obliged to have recourse to frequent pauses for the voice, repetitions of verses and words, all this being incompatible with good sense, and notwithstanding these stratagems, his operatic music seems to resemble a badly-fitting garment. Another strange thing, Tschaikowsky is certainly not a Wagnerian, yet it is not unusual to see him making use of Wagner's system, the orchestra predominating over the voice, all the principal ideas being given to the instruments, and the leading character in the drama taking a secondary place. Tschaikowsky is far from being a partisan of the new Russian school; he is rather antagonistic to it. But he has not been able to free himself from its influence, which has left visible traces on his lyrical works. The misfortune is that he cannot be said to belong to one school or to the other. Having submitted as it were unconsciously to the new doctrines, he has not abandoned declamatory music and melodic recitative. On the other hand, if he had been satisfied with the old forms in combination with his lyrical talent, he could have written operas full of beauty. The words would only have been an excuse for the score; the dramatic situations might not always have had the right expression, but Tschaikowsky would have worked without any obstacles, and produced pages of beautiful music. But he did not sufficiently revere precedents to remain in the old groove, neither had he the courage to adopt the ideas of the new Russian school; for this reason, his operas lack style and character, they fail to satisfy either the adherents of the old or the advanced school.

The first opera by Tschaikowsky, which was performed at St. Petersburg, "Opritchnik" (the Opritchniks were the body-guard of Ivan the Terrible), is founded on a historical subject very dramatic in itself, but spoiled by the libretto, which shows an inexperienced hand. It is composed of scenes badly put together that recall many situations already used in opera. The characters are not well drawn, and they are full of contradictions. At the same time, the music of this opera, being the work of such a composer as Tschaikowsky, could not be without certain qualities. But these qualities only appear in episodes: considered as a whole, the opera fails in unity of style, the forms are undecided, and sometimes there is a disagreeable mingling of the Russian and Italian styles. The second opera "Vakoula the Blacksmith," was written for a competition, and it gained the prize offered by the Russian Musical Society. There was no doubt of the victory, as those who competed had but little talent; no composer of the new school would undertake that sort of work, being persuaded that competitions never produce a masterpiece. The subject of "Vakoula" is taken from a novel by Gogol; it is full of charm and life. The music of this work is preferable to that of "Opritchnik"; the melody, harmony, and instrumentation are more delicate, more interesting, but, as regards style and musical form, we always find the same indecision and want of conviction. But the chief defect in "Vakoula" is the striking contrast between Gogol's pleasing subject and Tschaikowsky's melancholy music. Everything has been done to support his operas. They have been repeatedly performed; the services of the best artists have been secured, so as to add new interest. Notwithstanding all this, little or no success attended the performance of the works. This is not surprising, as Tschaikowsky's element is much more that of instrumental music than of scenic music.

DR. SOLIDUS AND HIS PUPIL.

EXTRACTS FROM A CORRESPONDENCE.

4.

Dear Dr. Solidus,—The fact that I should have been able to send you that recent composition of mine, without dreaming of the lively reception in store for it, affords a striking example of the changes that all unconsciously to ourselves even two short years may bring about in our tastes and general habits of thought. Unwittingly, then, I have after all worn my heart on my sleeve—on the sleeve, too, of the most ceremonial garb my intellectual wardrobe now possesses, arrayed in which I certainly flattered myself I might still, without fear of offence, enter into the presence of the orthodox. It is well, perhaps, that a confession which would have to be made sooner or later, should be brought about thus early in the day by my unintentional self-revelation; and now that the ice is broken, I feel in a measure free to unbosom myself further, knowing, as I well do, that the impression first caused me by the slightly acrid tone of your letter must be modified by my remembrance of your habitual indulgence towards those whose opinions differ from your own. Yes, I will admit at once that my views have undergone material transformation since the days when I used to trudge to your house for my daily lesson. Or, rather, may I not say they have developed, not losing their identity, but growing, as the world grows, as the age grows; not destroying, but rather consummating—in a way I fear you will little anticipate or approve—those very sentiments of reverence for the past with which you took such pains to imbue me. For what, after all, is the first great lesson impressed upon us when we contemplate the example of those mighty architects whose united efforts have raised the glorious fabric of music to the height it has even now attained—a height which enables it within but a few hundred years to tower in rivalry with those other arts whose beginnings date from an age when music, as we conceive it, was yet a thing unknown. Servility? timorous conservatism? blind obedience to the traditions and behests of those who lived and worked before them? Why, at the advent of each of these giants, as he comes strident upon the age, you seem to hear the clink of hammer, and the rattle of yet another fetter, as it falls riven with a mighty blow that resounds through all time, from the fair limbs of the muse to whom he has dedicated his knightly service. You ask me to emulate, according to the measure of my strength, those champions of the past; and in the same breath tell me to sit idly beneath the trees, content with singing over again the battles they fought, the victories they won. Not so would I read the lesson they bequeath; and not on such terms (let me say it with all deference) do I conceive imitation of them such as you so constantly enjoin, to be even possible. For the only way open to us of imitating originality is—not to imitate it; and "all who follow," as the proverb says, "must go behind." For myself, I will confess that music is either emotional or nothing; it is an endless striving after new glimpses of the infinite, and whenever such revelations are vouchsafed to the poet of sound, old raptures for him gradually wear away, and small though the voice may be compared with that which spoke to some musicians of old, it is a voice that lures him ever onward to the fulfilment of his inevitable destiny. Filled with such thoughts, how shall I meet your solemn invocation of the old masters in a manner and spirit that shall combine frankness with becoming respect for one of your learning and high attainments? Shall I blurt out the further confession that to me, in the phase through which I am at present passing, Handel is often a bore; that much to be found in the works of many justly-reverenced composers commands my intellectual approval and admiration, but fails to inspire me with sympathetic delight; that, in short, the living voices of the present, just because they are living and still have in them the potentialities of life, seem to drown many great utterances of the past, heard, as it were, faintly from the distance, and belonging to a day that no longer is? But no. These confidences have already overstepped the limits I had prescribed for them. Already I begin to accuse myself of having unintentionally acted upon the instructions given to executioners in the old days of torture, "Pile upon him weights, as many as he could bear—and more."

Let me rather return once more to those other matters personal to myself, in which you were kind enough to express an interest, and concerning which there is neither need nor likelihood of controversy between us. I may tell you, at least, without fear of contradiction, whether you wholly believe it or not, that of all the ardent souls who loathe the frills and fopperies of some of the more popular developments of modern art, and whose views thereupon—earnest, impatient of trammels, and ever eager to dive into the depth of things—many would expect to find associated with a vein of profound melancholy, my friend Fritz is the hopefullest and cheeriest: that of all patient, true-hearted, fair-haired girls, his sister, my Lottchen—for we were formally affianced yesterday, after sundry parental demurs in which her youth and my music contributed the chief ground for objection—is the sweetest and best. Yes; you may congratulate me, at least, on this. We are engaged; we have even had our first quarrel, and are as happy as Art is long. To the pretty, methodical ways characteristic of the daughters of Germany, there is added, in her case, an artless vivacity which exercises its charm upon all who approach her, and, withal, a shrewdness of outlook in the practical affairs of life not regrettable, you will probably say, if she is doomed to companionship with so impulsive a free-lance as my unworthy self. As for music, using the word in the sense in which alone I consider it worthy of regard—that is to come. Nor is it matter for surprise for me that, considering the staid, matter-of-fact surroundings amid which her life had been hitherto passed, she should yet accord but timid, half-hearted credence to what seem to her my high-flown notions. So far, at any rate, you and she are likely to agree when you meet; though not to the length, as well I know, of recommending my serious attention, as she once did (on the occasion of that first tiff), to the comfortable income netted by that poor creature X, with his trade songs and contemptible operettas. But my Lottchen has of late been studying English with a will, and has already mastered the meaning of that phrase which from time immemorial has cast its blighting influence over all true art—"the main chance."—That I may live to prove to her that in fidelity to our best and highest aspirations, lies the real main chance of progress and earthly happiness, is the fervent hope of—

Yours sincerely, HAROLD STRAINWING.

To Dr. Sebastian Solidus, London.

5.

London, June 12, 18—.

My dear Sir,—First, all good wishes upon the happy event foreshadowed in your letter just to hand, and in the announcement of which I seem to discern at least some hope that the more sobering influence lately imported into your life may produce in due time its much needed effect; secondly, a suggestion, the necessity for which is pressed home strongly to me by the whole tenor of your remarks, that reference to music and all matters pertaining to it be in future rigidly avoided between us. When I see a young man, a sort of artistic spendthrift and libertine, ready to fling his patrimony to the winds, and equally ready to jeer at those great predecessors to whose struggles and reverent toil in the field of art he is indebted for all he has and knows, I feel painfully that no words of mine can avail to arrest him in his downward course. He has already destroyed the ropes I would fain fling to his rescue, and nought is left for me but to turn sadly away and leave him to the lessons of the stormwind and the raging billows. Further discussion, therefore, would but engender useless irritation on both sides; henceforth I am dumb. Let me tell you a story. A few years ago, in an Eastern city, whose name I cannot remember, a group of swarthy turbaned natives assembled before the house of some local magnate, gazing upwards, with a sort of lazy wonder characteristic of those lands, at a strange and, to them, altogether bewildering apparition. For lo, from the topmost dome of the palace there has sprung up in a night, and now gleams aloof, spear-like beneath the brazen sky, a mysterious metal spire, and presently, amid the muttered comments, may be heard the word "magic"; whispered hints of a sacrilegious wand, a gift from the barbarians of the west, which has endowed the Sahib with power to enslave the very lightning, and defy heaven itself. Soon above at least half-a-dozen other palaces belonging to great ones of the city, arose similar rods; and, perhaps, when the first low roll of distant thunder told of the coming storm, an unwonted sense of triumph and security gladdened the hearts of their possessors. But the first flash of lightning! Then, my good friend, struck the supreme hour of test. Swiftly flew the avenging current to the iron fingers, uplifted there in mockery; so swiftly that the hearts of those within had no time to quake, nor their lips to blanch with fear, before the house fell crashing and burning about their heads, and the thunder laughed, as their vain pranks with heaven's fire thus ended in death and destruction. For they had forgotten to connect their conductors with the ground! No occasion, I think, to dwell upon the moral of this true history. Let genius and arrogance, wherever they exist, together or apart, take heed to it.—Your well-wisher,

SEBASTIAN SOLIDUS.

Harold Strainwing, Esq., Frankfort.

Reviews.

Messrs. Novello, Ewer, & Co., send "I was glad," a musicianly setting of Psalm CXXII., by Edward Hodges, which is appropriately dignified and religious in tone, and will find its place in the repertory of cathedral and other choirs. "Jesu, the very thought is sweet," by T. Collier Grounds (same publisher), is a religious song, with chorus at the end. There is a little suggestion of the secular in the opening theme, but, taken as a whole, this song is well written and effective. "Oh fair, oh sweet and holy," by Otto Cantor, with words translated from the German (Stanley Lucas & Co.), impresses us as being a song of unusual merit, and contains some features of undeniable charm, both in the voice part and the accompaniment. "A Picture," by Louisa Grant, is a tuneful, but not altogether appropriate, rendering of the words; which latter, however, though marked by some cleverness, contain an allegory—not the most favourable of subjects for musical treatment.

No. 48 of Weekes and Co.'s "Series of Morning and Evening Services" contains a well-written "Magnificat" and "Nunc Dimittis" in F, by E. Griffith.

Next Week's Music.

THIS DAY (SATURDAY).
Afternoon Concert	Crystal Palace.	3
Popular Concert	St. James's Hall.	3
Miss M. Synge,	Portman Rooms.	3
Mrs. Julian Marshall's Orchestra	Hampstead Vestry Hall.	8
MONDAY, 26.
Popular Concert	St. James's Hall.	8.30
TUESDAY, 27.
"Ruth" (Sacred Harmonic)	St. James's Hall.	8
WEDNESDAY, 28.
"The Redemption" (Novello)	St. James's Hall.	8
FRIDAY, 30.
"The Messiah"	Albert Hall.	7
Rossini's "Stabat Mater," &c.	St. James's Hall.	7.30

The Organ World.

ORGAN SONATA FORM.

An esteemed correspondent asks for information concerning the application of the principles of instrumental form, other than the fugal and contrapuntal types, to the construction of the organ sonata. The subject is one of great interest in several respects. In the first place, it brings forward the question, how far shall the forms hitherto regarded as chiefly peculiar to secular instrumental music displace the more severe, and one may say "vocal" types of organ music, and invade the regions of sacred art? Next, it may be asked, are the symphonic forms favourable to the calm, reflective, and somewhat inelastic genius of the organ? Lastly, the subject is one intimately connected with the development of modern instrumental music—a development which received so powerful an impetus from the works of the great German trio, Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven—and consequently a matter of both artistic and historical interest to the musician of to-day. Although Mendelssohn was the originator, in a sense, of the modern organ sonata, and his six works ranked under hat head will always take a front place in the list of organ classics, it has been already shown that he practically declined to answer the first question as settled in favour of the definite and complete adoption of the symphonic plans. It is true Mendelssohn pointed the way with no uncertain hand, but his religious and artistic education was against the disturbance of the traditions and associations of the Bach school, which had become an integral feature of the grave, stern church music of the Germans. So Mendelssohn, although he went somewhat "further a-field" than his great predecessor, can hardly be said to have advanced greatly upon the sonata plans and the preludes, etc., Bach gave to the world. One of the advantages of a late art period, is that of the power of selecting some preceding and given epoch of art-work, as typical of a given use. Thus, Palestrina's church music and madrigals present many points of identity in manner; and Bach's domestic clavier works and organ compositions obviously intended for churches where in his day organs were, as the rule, only to be found, show many similarities of thought and workmanship. But in these advanced times we can hardly accept Palestrina's art save as supremely ecclesiastical; and Bach's instrumental music, notwithstanding its strong vitality, is throughout to be regarded as serious in thought and purpose. One need not pause to ask the question, Would Bach have hesitated to adopt what for the sake of argument may be called secular forms, as Mendelssohn seems to have hesitated, for organic use in Church? Because he had not the opportunities for such a selection of style, consequently the scope for reflection as to propriety of style was more limited in his day. Strangely enough, the symphonic forms—the germs of which existed in the early Toccatas, etc., of such writers as Froberger and Buxtehude, who preceded Bach himself—were to be developed not so much through the professedly collective forms such as Mendelssohn's organ sonatas, but in the detached movements of the less prominent composers of organ music working under the influence of the instrumental works of the great German period extending say from Haydn to Schumann. The men who thus prepared the way for the adoption of what are called the sonata forms, without writing complete collective works regularly embodying such forms, were Hesse, Rinck, S. Wesley, T. Adams, W. Russell, and others, who in their Preludes, Fantasias, Voluntaries, Toccatas, etc., foreshadowed the systematic recognition of the form, principles, presentation, development, and recapitulation with accompanying instincts for the use of tone-colour identification in a larger employment of organic and stop-changing effects. The question of the introduction of a new musical architecture into sacred Art, which was in the first instance chiefly associated with the concert-room, was gradually and unostentatiously settled in favour of such adoption. As regards the adaptability of the symphonic forms to the calm accents of the organ, this is a matter in which it seems clear mechanism must bend to the exigencies of thought, and lend itself as it best may to new requirements. The resources of the organ are somewhat uncertain, its mechanisms, as an eminent writer has observed, are coy and by no means pliable, and organs differ so greatly in their registers, tone-qualities, and arrangements that composers find serious impediments in handling the instrument in an orchestral direction. Still, much has been and is being done to minimise these characteristic difficulties, and the composer who is not too exacting, who is himself a skilled player, and who knows how to adapt his ideas to an instrument with but small expressive power and with decided lines of demarcation in its tone-colour effects, may do much that is interesting in identifying and developing the leading features of his work. Following the sonatas of Mendelssohn, the works of that type by Merkel, practically represent the next marked advance, and inaugurate satisfactorily the adoption of the modern symphonic forms. The organ sonata may be said to have grown in two directions and under two influences. There is the German type, in which the Bach contrapuntal manner forms a solid basis and a link with the older method; in which form is utilised with a prudent dignity, not unmindful of the staid antecedents of the instrument, and with due regard for the contrapuntal aptitude of the organ. Of this school Merkel may be said to be the leader, and he has been worthily followed by Rheinberger, Otto Dienel, Töpfer, and others; all writing under the influence of the tone of thought surrounding the organ in Germany. Then one development has been of a less contrapuntal and more orchestral type, and under the brighter ritual and modes of thought of the southern countries; and this growth finds utterence in the works of A. Guilmant, Morandi, Petrali, Salomé, etc. Then the midway style of English organic ideality, which Dr. F. J. Sawyer has cleverly alluded to in a lecture delivered before the College of Organists—a style at once solid and graceful, contrapuntal aud melodic, organic and orchestral—has found expression in the works of Mr. W. T. Best and other writers. Space will not permit an attempt at anything like an analysis of the artistic and historical growth of the organ sonata, and the discussion of best models, the aspirations and achievements of the sonata writers cannot now be approached. But the men who have directly contributed to the creation of the modern organ sonata may be named as Mendelssohn, Merkel, Rheinberger, Guilmant, Morandi, Petrali Salomé, Macfarren, Best, Hopkins, Ouseley, J. F. Bridge, F. E. Gladstone, Hamilton Clark, Dudley Buck, etc. While the composers who have indirectly prepared the way for the organic application of modern form, though not contributing actually to the list of sonatas for the organ, may be named, as Hesse, Rinck, S. Wesley, T. Adams, Lefebure Wely, H. Smart, Batiste, S. S. Wesley, Silas, etc. These lists are confessedly imperfect, and are merely offered as suggesting the general lines upon which the modern organ sonata has grown up, and has been built upon the symphonic form schemes. One may hazard the thought that the organ sonata will be a marked figure in the future of the organ music of all nations largely employing and gifted with a natural affection for the instrument.

E. H. Turpin.

MUSICAL ELOCUTION.

By G. Ernest Lake.

At the same time one could not help acknowledging the value of such queries as "Why should several words be rapidly recited and the rest of the half verse drawled?" Or again, "Why should a long pause be made upon an unimportant word, or even syllable, and then a hurried jump be made over one or two others ?" Well, then, I would venture to ask why it is that most of us continue to treat our sacred poems as mere pegs to hang music upon? Melody is the voice of poetry, not its meaning. Are we content to work upon old lines, either from a spirit of conservatism or from a desire to save ourselves and choirs trouble? We have the authority of Elvey's and the "Cathedral" psalters for treating the words between the accent point and the first bar of the mediation as part of the two-beat system of the chant, which undoubtedly commences at the accent, and not at the first bar line. Experiences of working with both of these books has led me to the conclusion that their principles, if not always consistently exemplified, are undeniably correct, but that in the primer the varieties of type are too many and confusing for general use, and in the latter the theoretical exemplification of the whole system being wholly contained in the admirable preface, is of no assistance in practically guiding the eye. I am well aware of the objections to the above mentioned systems of treating the reciting note. Some urge that choirs will not take the trouble to study it (for "choirs" I fear we must often read "choirmasters!") others say that congregations require a firmly accentuated syllable or word from which to make a start, as it were. I can only say that I believe a little tact will remove the first objection, and a little practice the second. The contention is that it is not right to sing "thy soul doth mag—" "The Lord bringeth the cow." This is simple irreverence. Also that if we have the words, righteousnes endu | reth for | ever, with an accent on the syllable "right," there is neither sense nor advantage in dwelling on that until we have used up the time of our two beats, and then jumping headlong into the mediation over the syllables "eousness en-" which have to be got in anyhow on the way, or half left out. Is it contended that these faults are not rife? Certainly, I heard some of them a short while ago in a celebrated church, whose music we are accustomed to look to for an example. Again, is it right to hurry the words of the reciting note, and to drawl those of the mediation. Are the former less significant, and the latter more so? I venture to think that all the words should be recited at the same pace as they are sung (that is in effect equally), and that words should be pronounced as in reading, so that if the accent fall upon one syllable, as in hárden, présence, ríghteousness, the prosodical meaning of the whole word (as if read), and not one syllable only should be emphasized. The proper synthesis of syllables and not their separation is the true basis of elocution. It may be said by those who accept the exegesis of error, that if Elvey's psalter be upon the one hand too diffuse, and if the cathedral psalter, on the other, leaves too much to the fallible memories of choristers, what is the practical remedy?" In reply I can only say with all humility that the plan which I have myself adopted for some years, and have, so far, found to answer admirably, has been as follows: Each verse read over to and by the choristers, and the marking of the syllables between the accent and the bar, in the following way: A thick pencil stroke placed over a word, syllable or syllables, represents each of the two minims of the implied bar, and thus divides the syllables between the two beats. Examples: Harden | ,mag ni | fy, righteousness | , shew ourselves | praises unto | counsel of the; and the sign ʌ (insertion, which represents a rest or pause for breath). By this means only two signs are requisite for the proper division of the additional bar, which undoubtedly occurs between the accent and the mediation, and by their means an undue prolongation of unimportant words or syllables is avoided by a method which, I venture to think, is simple, and which I can only say has been found to be easily acquired and appreciated by the most uneducated rural as well as advanced urban choirs.

A strong point of difference between the pronunciation of synonymous words of common derivation by the Gallic and Teutonic races (broadly defined), lies in the fact that whilst the former seem to avoid the strong accentuation of any one syllabic vowel, the latter appear to require it; the result is the two characteristics, glibness and force. In French psalm chanting it is often impossible to lay a stress upon one particular syllable, as we do; I am, therefore, strongly inclined to look upon our method as an exemplification of a rational idiosyncracy in general matters, that of requiring a firm accent or point of departure—like Mr. Micawber's "pausing for a final spring!" But, inasmuch, as rhythm does not always demand this (and when it does, a complete word is always available), and seeing that common sense points to the advisability of vocally pronouncing words as if spoken, I submit that the exigencies of chant "pointing" do not necessitate either from a choral or congregational point of view—the violation of the rule that recitation, whether vocal or oral, should be guided by the rules of ordinary elocution. Therefore, in chanting, every word should be recited in the same method as that which would be employed by a good elocutionist. Our able and learned psalter editors have demonstrated this after the reciting note, therefore it only remains for us to carry out their principle in all words which occur before the first bar of the mediation.

(To be continued.)

THE COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS' DINNER.

The approach of Easter brings this pleasant meeting forward as an event of the near future, taking place as it does on the Monday succeeding Low Sunday, on this year April 9th. Some wit once asserted that Englishmen will celebrate anything which may occur by a dinner; however, the College of Organists claim a satisfactory raison d'être for their Annual Festival. The institution is not only an artistic power for good in the musical world, but it is developing itself, there are evident signs to show, as a social engine of no small importance, in the midst of a hitherto not only scattered, but rarely united, body of professional men. The College of Organists' Dinner is just one of those occasions calculated to foster fraternal feeling, lead to pleasant and often valuable introductions, promote an interchange of artistic ideas, and give new life to the round of one's yearly professional work and daily musical aspirations. At the forthcoming meeting the Doyen of organ-players, Dr. E. J. Hopkins, will preside; and his genial words, interesting recollections, and useful comments, will doubtless be duly appreciated by the friends gathered around him. For the convenience of those coming long distances, ordinary dress is worn. The arrangements will be similar to those of previous occasions; and the assembly is confined to the sterner sex, who make up the great body of the organ-playing world. Tickets, 4s. each, exclusive of wine, may be obtained of the Assistant-Secretary of the College, Mr. S. Philpot. The dinner takes place, as before-stated, on April 9th, and is fixed for 6.30, at the Holborn Restaurant. It is to be hoped a goodly company will rally round the veteran chairman and the numerous leaders of the professional world who are expected to be present.

KEYBOARD FINGERING.

By the kindness of Dr. E. J. Hopkins, the following is extracted from a rare, old work in his possession, entitled "The Hapsichord Illustrated and Improv'd, wherein is shown the Italian manner of fingering, with lessons on that Instrument and the Organ, &c." From internal evidence, this work was published in London about 1740, and it was presumably a translation. The compass given of the harpsichord covers four octaves, from C to C. The fingering is given after the continental fashion, from 1 to 5, 1 being the thumb sign. The scale of C for two octaves is thus set:

x 1 2 3 x 1 2 x 1 2 3 x 1 2 3
3 2 1 x 3 2 1 x 2 1 x 3 2 1 x

The descending scale stands thus:

3 2 1 x 3 2 1 x 2 1 x 3 2 1 x
x 1 2 3 x 1 2 x 1 2 3 x 1 2 3

This fingering it will be seen is not very different from the present method, but the slight differences are interesting points of development upon other methods of the same and somewhat earlier periods. No other scale is given, though the book contains a number of preludes and pieces by Handel and Matheson, in various major and minor modes, up to two sharps and two flats. The latter portion of the work is devoted to an elaborate essay on figured bass, with a large number of examples, which go to show that figured bass was then not only an essential, but a diligently pursued study. This curious work may claim further attention.

E. H. T.

THE SISTINE CHAPEL CHOIR.

This once famous organisation no longer enjoys its former reputation. Political causes, the increase of other fine choral bodies, changes in the constitution of the choir are among the reasons assigned for the decadence of a fame which was once absolute and dominant. Originally, the choir consisted of about thirty-two voices, equally divided into the usual number of vocal parts, and sometimes employed as a double choir. At one time, the choir sang from one gigantic score, written, it was said, on parchment. Then, and until recently, the sublime and devotional works of the great Palestrina school were heard to perfection. A recent visitor to Rome enters a complaint that the music of the Pope's choir, as still to be heard in the great Basilica of St. Peter's, has fallen off seriously from its former supreme excellence; and speaks of a recent performance as being very unworthy of the high position and former reputation of the most celebrated ecclesiastical choral body the world has known. This is greatly to be lamented, and especially is it to be regretted, seeing that the St. Cecilia Society, aided by many musicians of eminence, are seeking to revive the glories of sixteenth century art. Certainly the world has been indebted to the choir of the Sistine Chapel for the most faithful and carefully-studied of all expositions of pure ecclesiastical music, and it is a matter of profound regret that this high standard and valuable model cannot be maintained in its original excellence. Our modern choirs seem unable to realise the beauties and mannerisms of the Palestrina school, a result only to be obtained by well-trained pure voices able to breathe out in long-drawn sentences—without manifesting the worldly vulgarities of strongly-marked accents and making too palpable all rhythmical divisions—the devotional stream of contrapuntal eloquence which formed the main feature of the perfect ecclesiastical music of that great epoch. It may be hoped that some timely action will save to us the glorious traditions of the once splendid musical organisation known as the choir of the Sistine Chapel, with its unrivalled collection of unaccompanied Church music.

E. H. T.

TWO INVENTIONS FOR ORGANS.

Pneumatic Action for Organs.—641 (1887).—M. Hetherington, Wallsend-on-Tyne. The entire action of the organ described is worked by pneumatic pressure only, instead of by pressure and exhaust, and with one uniform pressure throughout the instrument. For every stop there is formed in the sound-board a longitudinal wind chest. In the sound-board are air passages, in the tops of which the pipe feet rest. Under the sound-boards are arranged the pneumatic flues as many as there are keys to the organ. The construction and arrangement of the key and stop action, and means for coupling octaves, manuals, or pedals with manuals, and the construction of other parts are also of a novel character.

Organs.—2,171 (1887). W. J. Ledward, Pentrich. Relates to the construction of "pipe organs," and consists in arrangements for controlling the passage of air from the wind chest to the sounding pipes, and to means for preventing ciphering in such organs.

MUSICAL ELOCUTION.

To the Editor of The Organ World.

Dear Sir,—As a professor of singing myself, having studied for four years abroad, and been very successful in teaching the art, I am deeply interested in the articles in your paper about pronunciation and elocution, and quite agree that elocution is not sufficiently attended to. I, for one, always advise my pupils to have lessons in the art. I go to Southsea and Shanklin every week to give lessons. I suppose the sonata reviewed in your paper, and written for left hand only, can be had at any of the music shops, for I should like to have it, as, in consequence of my right arm being disabled for several years, and still contracted at elbow, though I can use it well now, I often play left hand pieces, that hand being stronger.

I enclose programme and tickets for my coming concert.

Believe me, yours faithfully,
M. H. Synge.

In answer to several inquiries as to Mr. Macdonald Smith's "Dactylergon" referred to in Mr. T. L. Southgate's lectures on the "Physiology of Pianoforte Playing," we are requested to say that the apparatus will shortly be on sale at Messrs. Chappell's.

SPECIFICATIONS.

SPECIFICATION OF ORGAN

In the Chapel of Alleyn's College of God's Gift, Dulwich, built originally by England in 1760, and enlarged and restored by Lewis and Co., 1888:—

Great Organ, CC to G, 56 Notes, 8 Stops.

	ft. tone.	pipes.		ft. tone.	pipes.
Open diapason	8	56	Mixture (2 ranks)	2	112
Stopped diapason	8	56	Cornet (4 ranks)	2	128
Principal	4	56	Trumpet	8	56
Twelfth	2⅔	56
Fifteenth	2	56			576

Swell Organ, CC to G, 56 Notes, 5 Stops.

	ft. tone.	pipes.		ft. tone.	pipes.
Open diapason	8	56	Trumpet	8	56
Stopped diapason	8	56
Principal	4	56			312
Mixture (2 ranks)	2	88

Choir Organ, CC to G, 56 Notes, 5 Stops.

	ft. tone.	pipes.		ft. tone.	pipes.
Dulciana	8	56	Vox humana	8	56
Stopped diapason	8	56
Flute	4	56			280
Fifteenth	2	56

Pedal Organ, CCC to F, 30 Notes, 1 Stop.

	ft. tone.	pipes.
Bourdon	16	30

Couplers and Accessories.

Swell to great.	Great to pedal.
Swell to choir.	Swell to pedal.
Choir sub-octave to great.	Choir to pedal.

Three composition pedals to great.
Two composition pedals to swell.
Pedal to draw on and off great to pedal.

Summary.

	stops.	pipes.		stops.	pipes.
Great organ	8	576	Couplers	6	—
Swell organ	5	312
Choir organ	5	280		25	1198
Pedal organ	1	30

The first organ for Dulwich College was bought by the Founder in 1618, who, in his diary, under date 27th April of that year, writes:—"Bought a p. orgaines for ye chapell, off Mr. Gibbs, of Powles, £8 2s." From Alleyn's diary we also learn that on the 27th of May that same year 2s. 6d. was given Mr. Burward for tuning ye orgaines, and on April 13th of the following year the sum of £5 10s. was paid Mr. Burett for a dyapason stop and other alteracions to the organe. From Oct. 1st, 1622, when 15s. was paid Mr. Hamden for mending ye orgaines and making 3 or 4 newe pipes for a dyapason, until August, 1760, when the present organ was built, we are not prepared to say what instrument was used. The organ now in the chapel was built by George England, the elder, who received for it £260, together with the old organ. A few years ago the instrument was tuned to equal temperament, and the present pedal organ added by Messrs. Lewis and Co.

In September, 1887, Dr. E. J. Hopkins, organist of the Temple Church, visited the chapel, and made a thorough examination of the organ, telling us that we had in it an excellent specimen of England's work well worthy of restoration, and in the following November the work was put in hand.—W.H.S.

RECITAL NEWS.

PARISH CHURCH, FOLKESTONE.—Programme of organ recital given in aid of the expenses incurred in repairing and improving the organ, by Mr. Alfre . Oake, L.R.A.M., A.C.O., on March 15th:—

Sonata in F minor	Mendelssohn.
Andante Grazioso	Smart.
Fugue in A minor	J. S. Bach.
Allegretto in B minor	Guilmant.
Song "Pro Peccatis" ("Stabat Mater")	Rossini.
Rev. H. A. Wansbrough, M.A.
Rondo de Campanelli	Morandi.
"There is a green hill far away"	Gounod.
Toccata in G Cantilene Nuptiale	Dubois.
March in A	Collin.

There was a very large congregation, and the offertory was a highly satisfactory one.

HOLY TRINITY CHURCH, HALSTEAD.—An organ recital was given on March 13th.

Hymn and Prayer.
Larghetto, Symphony in B flat	Schumann.
Concerto in B flat	Handel.
Song, "For ever with the Lord"	Gounod.
Adagio, Pathetique Sonata	Beethoven.
Fugue in G minor	Bach.
Air, "But the Lord is mindful"	Mendelssohn.
Meditation	Munro.
Funeral March	Guilmant.
Song, "Brother, thou art passing"	Sullivan.
Serenata	Braga.
March in E flat	Salomé.

Organist, Mr. George Leake, F.C.O.

GERMAN CHAPEL ROYAL.—On March 18th, a special funeral service was held, commemorative of the late German Emperor. The choir (men and women) was conducted by Mr. Otto Goldschmidt, and Mr. F. Weber was at the organ. The music was of course appropriate, and included Chopin's "Funeral March" and the "Dead March in Saul."

St. John's Choir, of Jersey City, U.S., will be conducted during the coming year by Mr. John White, at present the organist of the Church of the Ascension. This choir forms the basis of the St. Cecilia Society, an ambitious choral association of Jersey City. The purpose of the change of organists is to insure still longer strides in the direction of high-class choir performances. A good deal of feeling has resulted from the change, because the choir and St. Cecilia's Society are warmly attached to Mr. Dressler, the present organist and leader.

The second Morgan organ and harp matinée took place at Chickering Hall, New York, on March 1, the vocalist being Miss Hattie Clapper. The programme was as follows:—

Organ, Introduction and Fugue	Hesse.
Harp, Fantasie on 'Un Ballo in Maschera"	Toulmin.
Organ, Melody, Fugue, and Variations, dedicated to Saint-Saëns	César Frank.
"Oh, Thou that Tellest," "Messiah"	Handel.
Organ, Offertoire "St. Cecile"	Batiste.
Harp (a) Berceuse Harp (b) Pastorale	Hasselmans.
Organ, March, dedicated to P. S. Gilmore	Morgan.
Duo, harp and organ	Beethoven.

A SUNDAY MORNING RECITAL.—A writer in the Daily News describing a visit to the People's Palace on Sunday, says in the course of his article: "At half-past twelve the doors were thrown open, and rather more than 900 people flocked in to an organ recital of sacred music by Mr. G. J. Rayner, the organist of Victoria Park Congregational Tabernacle. There were nine items in the programme, including two from Mozart's 12th Mass, one from the 'Creation,' and another from the 'Messiah.' The time adopted for this organ recital struck me as rather an odd one. I am told in explanation that the good wives of the East-end, many of them quite regardless of wind and weather, have a practice of driving out of doors their lords and masters while they get the Sunday dinner. As the public-houses do not open till one, this expulsion often comes a little rough on the lords and masters. They have to find their entertainment at the street corners till one o'clock. Half-past twelve was selected as a time at which none of them would be drawn from places of worship, while it might catch a few who would otherwise be sucked into the public-houses when they opened, and thus be the means of giving some working men a little good music instead of a good deal of bad beer. The intention at least seems praiseworthy. As to how far the intention is fulfilled is one of the points around which the storm of controversy rages pretty briskly. Sir Edmund Currie the other Sunday morning posted an intelligent working man, well acquainted with his class and his neighbourhood, at the door of the hall, with instructions to count as nearly as he could the number of working men who came in. Very few women, I may observe, attend these Sunday morning gatherings. The enumerator found that out of 900 men, over 800—I think it was 840—belonged undoubtedly to the working class. On the other hand, the Rev. Mr. Richardson, vicar of the church, which unfortunately for his peace of mind stands next door to the Palace, posted himself at the gates as the people came out this morning, and came to the decided conclusion that a majority of those attending the organ recital were not of the class supposed to be attracted by the music. Seven-eighths—or as he expressed it at another point in the conversation I had with him, two-thirds—of the men wore gloves. Not only were they not of the working class, but they did not even belong to the neighbourhood, but came from a distance all round, as I understood him, in order to give an appearance of success to this Sunday entertainment. Mr. Richardson is evidently very earnest in his opinions upon this subject, and is convinced that there is a Macchiavellian cunning in the employment of the word 'sacred' in connection with the music at these recitals. By-and-bye, he apprehends that that word "sacred" will be dropped. Meanwhile, I am assured, that the 912 men and youths sat mute and deeply attentive, that there was the most perfect decorum, and that after about three-quarters of an hour of impressive music—such as many of us delight to get if we can in our own homes on Sunday—the assembly dispersed, and the hall was closed."

At the Bow and Bromley Institute to-night, M. Auguste Wiegand, of Ostend, gives an organ recital; his programme includes works by Bach, Mailly, Grison, and other writers for the instrument.

Notes.

Mr. J. J. Monk, of Liverpool, writes:—"I came across two organ works the other day. I don't know whether it is generally known that Mr. Maybrick's ("Stephen Adams") grandfather, Michael Maybrick, was organist of St. Peter's Parish Church, in this city, many years. He was a pupil of Richard Wainwright, who was organist before him. The titles of the two works are as follows: 'Six Voluntaries for the Organ; or Preludes and Fugues, Composed and Dedicated to William Ludlow, by Michael Maybrick, Organist of St. Peter's, Liverpool;' 'Twelve Voluntaries for the Organ, Composed in a Free Style, and Founded on Church Melodies.' These are also written in the form of introduction and fugue. No. 6 of the first set is composed on a subject 'from Wrenshall,' a well-known local preacher and composer at the time. Mr. William Ludlow, to whom the first volume is dedicated, was brother to the late esteemed secretary and treasurer of the Liverpool Philharmonic Society, Mr. Henry Ludlow. The volumes are extremely interesting and enjoyable, and well worthy of resuscitation."

M. Alexandre Guilmant announces four organ concerts at the Trocadero, on the 5th, 12th, 19th, and 26th April. M. Colonne will conduct the orchestra, and the bulk of the works performed will be by Bach and Handel, though a fair sprinkling of contemporary composers will also be represented.

Services commemorative of the late German Emperor were held in Westminster Abbey and at the Private Chapel, Windsor, the Queen attending at the last-named place. Suitable funeral anthems were sung, and Dr. J. F. Bridge and Mr. Walter Parratt, Mus. Bac., the respective organists, played appropriate pieces.

The choir, &c., and members of the congregation of St. George's, Bloomsbury, have presented to their retiring organist, Mr. E. H. Turpin, a handsome diamond ring, and a massive writing-table library with candlesticks, &c., together with an illuminated address.

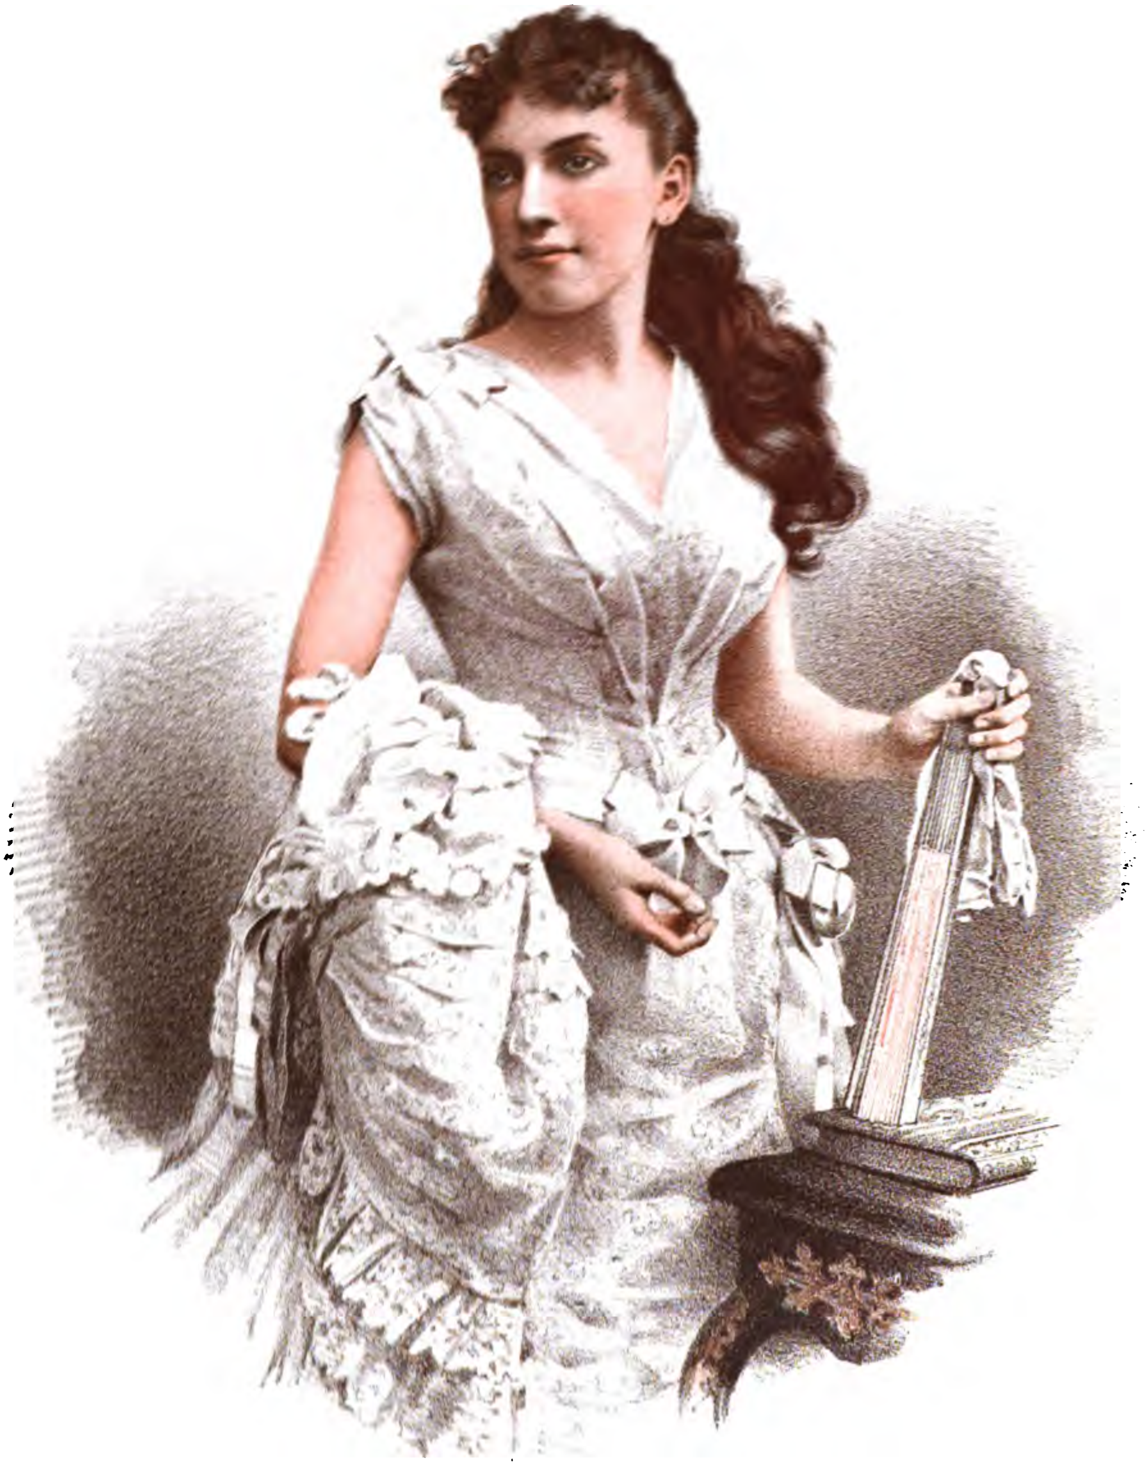
COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS' CALENDAR.

On Tuesday next March 27th, the library will be open to members from 7 to 10; April 9th, "Annual College Dinner;" April 10th, Special Lecture, by Dr. E. J. Hopkins, on "The English Mediæval Church Organ;" April 24th, Lecture, by Dr. F. J. Sawyer, on "The Primary Rules of Keyboard Fingering;" May 22nd, Lecture; June 26th, Lecture; July 17th, 18th, 19th, F.C.O. Examination; July 20th, Diploma Distribution; July 24th, 25th, 26th, A.C.O. Examination; July 27th, Diploma Distribution. Other arrangements and particulars will be duly announced.

E. H. TURPIN, Hon. Sec.

95, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, W.C.

Supplement to "The Musical World," March 24th 1888.



Yours sincerely
Nikita

Maclure & C° Lith. to the Queen London

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

THE PRIMA DONNA:

Her History and Surroundings, from the 17th to the 19th Century. By H. SUTHERLAND EDWARDS. Gives a picture of the life, professional and social, of every prima donna down to the present day. Two vols., demy 8vo, 24s.

"Odd corners of operatic history have been ransacked for the apt anecdotes and characteristic touches that here give life to the portrait."—Musical World.

"Volumes so full, not only of useful fact, but of pleasant anecdote and gossip, that they are sure to be read, not only with profit, but with pleasure." —Globe.

MEMOIRS of COUNT HORACE DE VIEL CASTEL.

A Chronicle of Events, Political and Social, during the reign of Napoleon III., years 1851—1864. Translated by CHARLES BOUSFIELD. Two vols., demy 8vo, 30s.

"What makes his memoirs such entertaining reading is that he has not only a good memory for bad stories, but that in his rapid portraiture he shows something of the power, of the shrewd insight, and of the graphic wit of a Saint Simon. Through the scandals are scattered curious and piquant revelations.—Times.

REMINGTON AND CO., Henrietta-street, Covent Garden.

By FREDERICK HELMORE.

Just published, price Sixpence. Dedicated to SIR ARTHUR S. SULLIVAN.

THE ITALIAN REGISTERS.

VOCE DI PETTO. VOCE DI GOLA. VOCE DI TESTA.

By the same Author.

SPEAKERS, SINGERS, AND STAMMERERS. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

SINGING METHOD. No. 1. The Little Ones' Book. Containing the Songs in "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland," and "Through the Looking Glass." Also, the Nursery Rhymes, Easy Rounds, &c., used in his "Little Ones' Classes." Fcap. 4to, 1s.

SINGING METHOD. No. 2. The First Reading Book. Containing a Catechism on the Art of Singing Music from Notes, followed by Scale and Chord Exercises, by the practice of which Pupils rapidly acquire the Knowledge and Feeling for Harmony, so necessary in PART SINGING. Illustrated by pleasant Rounds, Duets. and Trios. Fcap. 4to, 1s.

London: J. MASTERS and CO., 78, New Bond Street.

ORGANISTS AND ORGAN STUDENTS.

You are kindly requested to write for Ainsworth's "New Patent Organ Pedal Combination List." Ainsworth's "New Patent" is perfectly unique and may be combined easily with any Piano. It is the only one which may be safely combined with any Piano without deteriorating the instrument. Having put down at my works two engines and machinery of the most desirable kind, I am now supplying my goods at a price which enables every organist and organ student to have always ready for use in his Studio an

ORGAN PEDAL PIANO,

AFFORDING PERFECTLY UNIQUE PEDAL PRACTICE.

34, Sheen Park, Richmond.

DEAR SIR,—I have deferred writing to comment upon your Pedals and Action now attached to my pianoforte until I could satisfy myself of their utility and efficiency. I can now conscientiously say that they more than fulfil all my anticipations. Although I am no carpenter, aided by your lucid diagram I had little difficulty in attaching them myself, and it is impossible to over-estimate the comfort they give to me or to conceive the saving of time one experiences in one's own room.—Believe me, yours truly,

BURNHAM HORNER, F.R. Hist.S.

To Mr. Mr. Ainsworth.

DEAR SIR,—It gives me great pleasure to bear testimony to the perfection of your Invention. I am more than satisfied with your Patent Action and Organ Pedals, and consider them worth double the money. Organists and organ students who desire to improve in the Art of Pedalling, which is so essential to a good organist, will do well to procure a set. I have seen no Action half so effective, and one can sit at the Piano and play, "Fixed in his everlasting seat," or any other organ music, or organ arrangement with the greatest pleasure. The touch of pedals could not be better, and the action is as you say, "Absolutely free from annoyances." They cannot be too highly recommended, as by their use, rapid progress is certain.—Believe me, sincerely yours,

I. B. Thornton,
Organist, Birstall, Leeds.

Cologne, July 16th, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have much pleasure in informing you that your Pedals have given the fullest satisfaction. I have them combined with my practice Piano. Many of my musical friends who have seen them, as well as my organ pupils, are quite delighted with them; and I must acknowledge that I have never met with any Pedals so noiseless and pleasant to play upon as yours. The Action I consider durable, and of very good workmanship. Every organist who desires to perfect his playing will welcome your invention. I can recommend your goods in every respect.—Yours truly,

HERR J. RODENKIRCHEN.

To John Ainsworth, Esq. Organist, The Cathedral, Cologne, Germany.

TOOLS.—In order to facilite the attachment, a complete set of tools are sent (four in number) each one marked for its particular use. By the use of these tools, and following carefully the directions, ANY ONE can make a really good attachment.

On Receipt of Trade or Professional Card, you will receive List, with Liberal Terms.

AINSWORTH'S PATENT ORGAN COMBINATION WORKS
BRINSCALL, CHORLEY.

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, MARCH 24, 1888.

"Musical World" Portraits.

NIKITA.

Is this the face that killed two Indian chiefs,
And roused a combat furious, terrible,
In which the vanquished lover met his death?—

exclaims the reader who has, perhaps, never read Marlowe's "Faustus," but has read the romantic tales spread abroad about the charming subject of this week's MUSICAL WORLD portrait. The truth is, the original of that portrait is herself apt to laugh merrily in her girlish way, when the story of the Indian Chief is mentioned in her presence. The young lady is ambitious and full of high artistic plans for the future, and thinks that the tale by this time has served its purpose, and might be dropped with advantage. Substituting for the noble savage competent teachers, and a concert room for the wild woods, the true account of her early days, as furnished by trustworthy witnesses, is certainly more in accordance with probability, and more in keeping with the precedents of other youthful singers who were destined in after years to make their mark in the world. The age of many musical phenomena will often have been remarked to partake somewhat of their phenomenal character, skipping backwards and forwards in a manner to embarrass the calculations of the expertest arithmetician. But on this point, in the present instance, we can have no doubt. We have it, indeed, on no less authority than that of the young lady herself, that she was born in the year 1872. "I cannot," she adds, "remember the date, but I know it was on a Sunday." And so it may be regarded as beyond all dispute that at present Nikita is sixteen years old, a statement fully borne out by her artless manners and general youthful appearance. Her first experience of a concert room was obtained when not more than three years old, and at that time, and for several years after, she was under the guidance of her uncle and first teacher, Le Roy, of whom she never tires of speaking in terms of tenderest affection and gratitude. The scene of her childish triumphs was speedily transferred from small concert rooms to a larger hall in Washington, and in a miscellaneous selection at a concert given in that city she quickly succeeded in enlisting the sympathy of her audience. Success followed her to New York, where, at the Academy of Music, on Decoration Day—at about the time, probably, when the mythical Indian Chieftain would otherwise have made his appearance—she sang, attired in a little short dress and holding the American flag in her hand, on the same platform with Mdme. Sinico, Signor Campobello, and other well-known artists, and in the presence of the President, the members of the Cabinet, and various celebrities. This was at the happy age when nervousness is a thing unknown, and Nikita well remembers how, after she had finished singing, she went to the President's box and waved the flag over his head, amid the cheers of the audience. Crowned with flowers at Chickering Hall, tasting the delights of appearing for the first time on a real stage at the Park Theatre in the "Dead Heart," making money in Boston, and subsequently at Stoughton, a town in Massachusetts, forming one of the chief attractions of a company organised by her uncle and called by him "The Miniature Patti Company," Nikita continued the career which was now beyond shadow of doubt marked out for her by fate. It was at Boston that the miniature Patti first made acquaintance with the real Patti, and the kindly reception and encouragement extended by the great artist to the young beginner is pleasant to think of, and will doubtless rank among the most agreeable recollections of the younger artist's life. Following the advice of her new and powerful friend, Nikita proceeded to Europe to pursue her studies, there to meet with sundry disappointments in her search for a fitting teacher, until, by a curious coincidence, she happened to meet Madame Strakosch. Her introduction to that lady's husband—the famous teacher who had been so prompt in detecting, and so successful in developing the genius of Patti herself—speedily followed, and then her path became, once for all, clear to her. In due time, after receiving from Strakosch lesson by lesson what he called "the ten commandments," and undergoing thereupon the necessary course of training, "My dear master," she says, "to whom I had grown more and more attached, brought me one day a contract to sign for seven years, together with a cake and a card case as a souvenir." That card case, and every letter he wrote to her, has since been sadly placed among her most dearly prized treasures, not to be parted with for all the money in the world. The favourable impression she made upon the London public on her first appearance here, at Her Majesty's theatre, is of too recent occurrence to need more than passing mention. Her perigrinations since then have been of the most extensive kind, and that conspicuous attribute of the Prima Donna which Mr. Sutherland Edwards has pointed out in his last book—familiarity with travelling—bids fair to be exemplified to a remarkable degree in this young lady's case. It is, above all, satisfactory to relate that when very recently at the Albert Hall she again made her appearance before a London audience, the advance observable, not only in vocal skill but in the development of feeling, was a general subject of remark among competent judges. The fact of her progress in artistic culture thus keeping pace with her progress in popularity, is one undoubtedly calculated to inspire bright hopes concerning the future of this interesting young singer, and all will cordially unite in best wishes for their realisation to the fullest extent. We should add that since the death of Mr. Strakosch, Nikita's or, as by her private name she is known, Miss Nicholson's affairs have been under the competent and intelligent management of his son.

Concerts.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The Philharmonic season opened on Thursday, the 8th, in exceptionally favourable circumstances, one of the largest audiences ever seen at St. James's Hall having assembled to hear the opening concert. The causes of this phenomenon are not so far to seek. It might almost reconcile one to the kind of hero-worship which finds its expression in the so-called "star system"—existing on the concert platform no less than on the operatic stage—when one sees that occasionally, at least, popular veneration singles out so worthy an object as Madame Schumann. Wherever that great artist has of late appeared the room has been crowded to excess and the enthusiasm at fever heat; and last night was no exception to the general rule. Madame Schumann on this occasion had not selected for her chief piece one of her husband's compositions, in the interpretation of which she stands alone, but her reading of Chopin's F minor Concerto may at least to some extent claim the authority of tradition. For was it not Schumann who in a manner "discovered" Chopin, and whose first published article, full of youthful fire and exuberance, has for its subject an early work of that master? Madame Schumann, of course, does not display that intimate sympathy with Chopin's wayward genius which makes, for example, M. de Pachmann's rendering of his music a unique thing, and which depends upon the Slavonic, as distinguished from the Teutonic, temperament almost more than upon individual genius. On the other hand, she brings to this as to all other tasks that artistic feeling, that conscientious entering into the composer's intentions, which distinguish the genuine musician from the mere virtuoso. Her effects are never exaggerated; her power never degenerates into noise; her tempo rubato leaves the underlying rhythmical motive intact. Her reading, in short, is classical in the best sense of the word, and so grand in conception as almost to overshadow the slender outline of the work selected. For Chopin's genius does not show to advantage in pieces of this extension; it was at home in the mazurka, the nocturne, the étude; for the larger forms of the concerto it was too subtle, too ethereal, too little robust; besides which the Polish composer's ideas of instrumentation were of the most primitive kind. Needless to add that Madame Schumann evoked thunders of applause both after the concerto and when she appeared again on the platform to accompany Miss Liza Lehmann in two of Schumann's songs. That young artist proved herself worthy of the prominent and difficult position in which she was placed by such an accompanist. Her style of singing combines the refinement of art with the simplicity of natural feeling, and it is difficult to say which of these two qualities is more needful for the perfect interpretation of Schumann's heartfelt musical lyrics. This feature of the evening also was highly appreciated. In other respects the concert was of more than ordinary interest, proving as it did beyond a doubt that in choosing Mr. Cowen as its conductor, the Philharmonic Society has made a step in the right direction. Mr. Cowen had provided an interesting although not very remarkable programme, showing a happy mixture of the old and the new. A quaint and graceful suite, extracted from an opera by Rameau, recalled to mind the time so graphically pictured by Diderot in his "Neveu de Rameau;" Mr. Stanford's prelude to "Œdipus," conducted by the composer, represented the latest phase of modern art, although inspired by a very old theme indeed; Schumann's symphony in D minor occupied a kind of middle distance. In all these the Philharmonic orchestra, under its new conductor, showed to eminent advantage. Decisive rhythmical phrasing, careful observation of the dynamic nuances, and intelligent reading, were noticed throughout, and nowhere more than in the beautiful romanze, which forms the slow movement of the symphony. The result, in short, was one of which the conductor and the artists playing under him might well be proud.—The Times.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

A much smaller audience assembled on Saturday last than should have availed themselves of the opportunity of hearing Mdlle. Clotilde Kleeberg again, for this young lady is an artist of no mean abilities. She exhibits delightfully clear scale and passage playing, and, moreover, interprets music with due regard to the composer's intentions. On this occasion she played Mendelssohn's somewhat hackneyed G minor Concerto admirably, with plenty of fire, but without exaggeration, and was loudly applauded and twice recalled. Mr. Manns was responsible for an extremely good rendering of Schumann's overture to Byron's "Manfred," perhaps as happy an example as can be found of the composer's orchestral work. The symphony was the mélange by Goldmark, termed "A Country Wedding," to which the term "suite" might perhaps be more applicable, as the treatment of the subjects and the character of those subjects themselves is hardly on a scale usually associated with symphonic form. The work, which has not a few dull moments, contains some sound writing and some charming melody, the introductory theme being happy in the extreme. Mackenzie's orchestral ballad "La Belle Dame sans Merci," presented somewhat of a contrast, in its compact and musicianly treatment, with Goldmark's discursive "Symphony." It is one of Mr. Mackenzie's best works, and received a worthy interpretation. Mrs. Hutchinson was the vocalist, and sang the well known air from "La Reine de Saba," and two pretty songs by Fischhof, with much acceptance.

POPULAR CONCERTS.

The chief attraction at Monday's concert was Brahms's new Pianoforte Trio in C minor, op 101. Unfortunately, Herr Joachim was absent in Germany, but Madame Neruda proved an excellent substitute, and with Madame Schumann and Signor Piatti, gave a worthy interpretation of the work. Brahms, in this Trio, shews all his mastery of the technicalities of his art, and, if his inspiration occasionally nods, he almost atones for it by the beauty of the slow movement, which was received on Monday with great favour. The scherzo, also, with its peculiarities of rhythm, is a delightful movement, and it is to be hoped that Mr. Chappell will give his audiences an opportunity of hearing the work again next season. Madame Schumann played the first of her husband's "Humoreske," and the "Novellette in F," with exquisite feeling and effect, and was rewarded with one of those bursts of applause which fall to the share of few other artists. The vocalist was Miss Janson, who gave a very successful interpretation of Schubert's "Der Tod und das Mädchen," and a Swedish song "So schön." Beethoven's fine Quartet in F minor, op. 95, and Mendelssohn's unfinished Quartet, excellently played by Mme. Neruda and MM. Ries, Straus, and Piatti concluded the concert.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The students of the Royal Academy of Music gave a Chamber Concert at St. James's Hall, on Friday afternoon, last week. The choir gave some part-songs under Mr. Burnett's conductorship, with great expression, and the rest of the programme consisted chiefly of solo performances. Miss Meta Scott's rendering of Raff's pianoforte suite in E minor was good, and so was an organ piece played by Mr. W. G. Kipps, and a violin solo, Vieuxtemps's Ballade and Polonaise, by clever Miss Ada Tunks. Several compositions by the students were included in the programme, but as the length of the concert did not allow of our hearing much more than half of it, we can only single out for mention two songs by Henry J. Wood, sung by Mr. B. H. Grove, one of which "The sea hath its pearls," appeared to show a fair amount of musical feeling and invention, while that by Arthur O'Leary, entitled "The shadow on my heart," sung intelligently, but with no great charm of voice by Miss Helen Saunders, is written in the hackneyed style of the drawing room ballad. Mr. Reginald Steggall, Miss Amy Horrocks, and Mr. Mudie, were also down in the programme as composers.

Mr. Malcolm Lawson closed his series of Characteristic concerts on Tuesday last week, with Pergolese's "Stabat Mater." The solos were taken by Miss Margaret Hoare and Miss Greta Williams. Both these ladies are gifted with fine expressive voices, and their services were most efficiently rendered. The choruses were undertaken by the ladies of the St. Cecilia Society, conducted by Mr. Lawson, and Miss Fisher was the accompanist. The second half of the concert consisted of early Venetian music. Mr. M. Lawson sang two Gondola songs, authorship unknown, and Marcello's beautiful duet, "Dunque ti degna," with Miss Hoare. That lady was also heard in "O di che," Marcello. Mr. Lawson played a toccata of Galuppi on a harpsichord, lent for the occasion, a performance more remarkable for antiquity than for musical value.

Notwithstanding the terrible weather on Monday afternoon, when a regular transatlantic "blizzard" was sweeping the streets, Miss Falconar's morning concert at Steinway Hall was exceedingly well-attended, and by an audience so appreciative that the performers were called back after no less than twelve of the seventeen items constituting the programme, two of the encores being complied with. Madame Edith Wynne's bright rendering of Dudley Buck's "When the heart is young" was in itself sufficient recompense to those who had braved the storm, while Miss Mary Willis, Mr. Henry Phillips, and Mr. René Ortmans—a charmingly sympathetic violinist—were thoroughly appreciated. An amusing contretemps occurred during Miss Falconar's singing of the old Welsh air, "The Ash Grove," through an apparent discrepancy in the copies of the music used by that young lady and her accompanist, Mr. Henri Logé. Mr. Henri Logé's name figured no less than five times on the programme in the composer's column—a decided mistake, considering that unfortunately not one of the compositions thus put forward possessed any claim to originality, or to freedom from constant reminiscences of celebrated writers, whilst one, the song entitled "Relics," which was given in very good style by Miss Mary Willis, contains as its chief idea a close, though doubtless perfectly unintentional, plagiarism on a very well-known song of Sir A. Sullivan's. Mr. Henri Logé's very distinct individuality, in the way of expression, was reserved for his accompaniments, in which, however, his extreme delicacy of manipulation sometimes verged on exaggeration.

No more interesting programme for a vocal chamber music concert could be wished for than that arranged by Mr. William Nicholl for last Tuesday evening. The most important item was the love duet from Act I. of "Die Walküre," sung by Miss Pauline Cramer and Mr. William Nicholl, Mr. Carl Armbruster accompanying. London has no opportunity of hearing the Nibelungen Tetralogy now or in the near future, and therefore we are glad to welcome such crumbs of comfort as that afforded on Tuesday evening, always provided that the performers, like the above, are musically and dramatically equal to the task. Although the English translation was used, Miss Pauline Cramer did not fail to invest every phrase with significance, and carried her audience with her. Mr. Nicholl showed much more power than he did when singing in the "Götterdämmerung" duet at the Wagner Society's Conversazione last year. His art of sustained singing stood him in good stead, and he also delivered the music with great expression. Of the rest of the programme we can say no more than that Madame Fassett in the "Spirit's Song," Mr. Nicholl in Henschel's "Gipsy Serenade" and two "Songs of the North," and Miss Cramer in Franz's "Frühlingsfeier" were especially appreciated.

On St. Patrick's night, last Saturday, concerts of Irish music were given at the Albert Hall (Madame Patey, Miss Nikita, and Mr. Sims Reeves singing), and at the St. James's Hall.

Mr. Charles Wade provided an excellent programme for the last of his series of Chamber Concerts, which took place at Princes' Hall last Tuesday evening. The brunt of the work fell to the share of the Cologne Conservatoire Quartet, who, although not of equal individual merit, are a most capable body of artists. They appeared to the greatest advantage in Beethoven's "Rasoumowsky" Quartet in E minor, the adagio of which was excellently played, the great Schumann Quintet, which concluded the concert, being considerably marred by the indiscreet ardour of the pianist, Herr Schönberger. This gentleman possesses many of the qualifications for a great artist, his execution being finished, and his pianissimo clear and pearly; he unfortunately, however, is rather prone to exaggeration, a defect which considerably detracts from the merits of his playing. He obtained great applause for his rendering of some pieces by Tschaikowsky. The concert giver, who may be advised to pay rather more attention to his enunciation, was heard to advantage in two of Dvorak's "Gipsy Melodies," in Gounod's pretty song, "Love's Philosophy," and a somewhat conventional ballad by Wellesley Batson. Miss Marguerite Hall also sang, rendering Schubert's "Gretchen am Spinnrade" with true artistic feeling, and being quite as successful in Henschel's dainty little song, "The sunny beam."

Pending the completion of the new operetta on which Mr. Gilbert and Sir Arthur Sullivan are understood to be engaged, the Savoy Theatre relies upon revivals of earlier favourites, and the "Pinafore," having run its course, was on Saturday evening followed by "The Pirates of Penzance." Mr. Grossmith, as Major-General Stanley, Mr. Richard Temple as the Pirate King, Miss Jessie Bond as Edith, and Mr. Rutland Barrington as the sergeant of police, sustained their original parts with undiminished success. The character of Mabel is now in the hands of Miss Geraldine Ulmar. Mr. François Cellier conducted the performance with care and circumspection.

Music Publishers' Weekly List.

SONGS.

I'll tend thy bower	Hamish MacCunn	Paterson.
Spring Song	Alfred Gallrein ...	„
To Julia Weeping	Hamish MacCunn	„

PIANOFORTE.

"Elaine" Waltz	Caroline Lowthian	Paterson
"Fairest of all" Waltz...	Maria Lehfeldt ...	Weekes.
"Skye" Collection of Reels and Strathspeys		Paterson.

PART SONGS.

Bonnie Wee Thing	Arranged by F. Peterson ...	Paterson.
Gondellied	A. Gallrein ...	„
Good-night, and joy be wi' ye a' ...	Arranged by H. A. Lambeth ...	„
'Mid the lilies (trio)	Otto Schweitzer	„
My Nannie's Awa'	Arranged by H. A. Lambeth ...	„
Of a' the Airts	„	„
Trump of War	„	„

PROVINCIAL.

Bradford.—In the past fortnight the most interesting event was the concert of Mr. W. B. Sewell, on the 24th ult. Most of his principals were from Manchester and other towns at some distance, the body of his orchestra of 70 being local men. The "Italian" symphony and Dr. Villiers Stanford's ballet music from the "Veiled Prophet" were the substantial and novel items respectively, and, like the "Zampa," and other overtures, had a stirring and adequate performance, at once intelli gent and musician-like, but running into extremes of tempi occasionally. Mrs. Norman Salmond (pianist), and Mr. Norman Salmond (bass vocalist), took an able part in the concert, which was conducted by the promoter. There was an appreciative audience, but the scheme is hardly paying expenses yet. On Friday, March 2, a Mr. Cohn, for some time well known in Manchester amateur circles, but now a professor here, had Mr. E. Vieuxtemps down for 'cello solo, a Beethoven pianoforte and 'cello sonata, and Mendelssohn variations for the same instruments. The pianist proved an able conductor, and in the Chopin C sharp minor scherzo, Liszt's arrangement of Schumann's "Widmung," and other pianoforte solos, found ample acknowledgment of his ability. A company of vocalists spent last week at the Theatre Royal in the comic opera "Rhoda." Miss Kate Chard, Mr. Leverett (baritone), and Mr. Fairbanks (bass) wereamongst the most competent, and Mr. Deane Brand, the proprietor of the opera, who has become a Gilbert and Sullivan representative in opera at the Antipodes, made his mark in comic business. There is plenty of the latter in "Rhoda," but little really good music, the numbers being mostly slight, pretty, and generally reminiscent. College Chapel Society, 70 strong, gave Barnett's "Ancient Mariner," roughly effective, on Monday; and on Tuesday a really effective, entertaining programme of light and good music was presented by the Porter family, ladies of much ability, with an exceptionally talented 'cellist in Miss Amy.

LEEDS.—The eighth of the popular concerts took place on Feb. 23, when a most interesting programme of orchestral music was given. Mendelssohn's bright and sparkling "Italian Symphony," and a selection from Wagner's works, including the "Meistersinger" overture, the introduction and closing scene from "Tristan," the "Walkürenritt," and the "Kaisermarsch," were the chief features of the programme, and were not only played with both spirit and refinement, but were received with warmth by a large audience, who were so taken by storm by the magnificent tone picture from "Die Walküre" that an encore had to be conceded. Beethoven's great pianoforte concerto in E flat was admirably played by Mr. Hallé, who, to his accustomed neatness and precision, added an unwonted warmth of feeling Berlioz's brilliant "Carnaval Roman" overture afforded, with the "Italian Symphony," an interesting comparison of two different methods of treating a similar subject. The same composer's orchestral version of Weber's "Invitation to the Waltz" fell rather flat, but was no doubt a concession to those of the audience who might be disposed to regard much of the programme as "heavy." Miss Clara Leighton was the vocalist, and contributed to the success of the concert by her excellent rendering of Weber's "Ocean, Thou Mighty Monster," and a delightful number from "Mignon." Mr. Hallé was, as usual, the leading spirit of the evening, and seemed, whether conducting or playing, to be more youthful and energetic than ever.—March 19. The ninth and last but one of the Popular Concerts was given on the 14th, when a large audience assembled to hear a very delightful programme of chamber music, interpreted by Messrs. Joachim and Eckener (violins), Gibson (viola), and Piatti (violoncello), with Miss Fanny Davies as pianist. The principal items of the programme were Beethoven's quartet in F major (the 1st of the "Rasoumoffsky" set), and Schumann's pianoforte quintet, each one of its respective composer's finest works. Herr Joachim played Spohr's "Dramatic" concerto in his best style, and gave, as an encore, the Sarabande and Bourrée of Bach's which he has made so familiar. Miss Fanny Davies chose as her solo Mendelssohn's fine prelude and fugue in E minor, and played it admirably. She also joined Signor Piatti in Beethoven's sonata in A (op. 69) for pianoforte and violoncello, which, it is needless to add, met with a most artistic interpretation. Miss Davies seems to us to have gained in breadth and power since her last visit to this neighbourhood, and may now fairly claim to be considered as belonging to the first rank of living pianists, more especially as regards her performance of Schumann's and Mendelssohn's works. Miss Bertha Moore was a very acceptable vocalist, and sang a graceful little "Lullaby" by H. Young, and Haydn's familiar canzonet, "My mother bids me bind my hair," with perfect refinement.

BIRMINGHAM, March 13th.—The Viennese pianist, Benno Schönberger, appeared here for the first time, in conjunction with Mitchell's Blue Hungarian Band. The favourable opinion formed of him on the Continent and in London was further endorsed here, and Herr Schönberger created a genuine and lasting impression by his remarkable powers over the keyboard. He played four nights in succession, and on each occasion he fairly carried everything before him. His selection included Mendelssohn's Prelude and Fugue in E minor, which he played with a remarkable individuality, the chief characteristics being his extraordinary blending of fortissimi and pianissimi passages. He further contributed excerpts from Chopin, Liszt, and modern composers. The audience on each occasion was charmed with his delightful touch, and enthusiasm on Saturday night was so great that he had to reappear six times in succession, playing two encores in response. The Hungarian Band, who also appeared here for the first time, are certainly "Nature's musicians;" although only seven in number, three first violins, one second violin, one viola, one double bass, and a player on the cymbal, they produce a wonderful amount of tone, the cymbal lending sustaining power to the strings. Their most effective and remarkable performances were those pieces descriptive of their nationality. The famous Csárdás, with its two movements, a "Lassu," and a "Friss," were given in such a manner as to evoke the most enthusiastic applause. Two vocalists completed the list of artists, an excellent soprano, Miss Emily Parkinson, and a tenor who knows how to sing, Mr. Reginald Groome. Madame Michel most ably accompained all the vocal items. Messrs. Harrison's last popular concert of the present series was given last night to a crowded and overflowing house. Mr. Charles Hallé and his famous orchestra, also Madame Norman Neruda, as solo violinist, Madame Lilian Nordica (soprano), and Miss Hope Glenn (contralto), were the attraction. We are accustomed, thanks to Messrs. Harrison, to hear Mr. Hallé's band once a year, an opportunity which always is hailed with delight and anticipation by all musical people. The orchestra gave a most masterly rendering of Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony, and although we have heard it played by Mr. Hallé's band on former occasions, the performance last night may rank among the finest. Wagner's "Tannhäuser" overture, Mozart's overture to "Don Giovanni," Smetana's overture, "Lustspiel," and Dvorak's "Two Legends," were the other orchestral items. Madame Norman-Neruda chose for her soli Spohr's Dramatic Concerto in A minor, No. 8, Adagio in E (Mozart), prelude in E (Bach), and, with Mr. Hallé, Beethoven's Andante Con Variazioni from the "Kreutzer Sonata." Madame Norman-Neruda's playing never leaves the slightest loophole for criticism; whatever she does is done with real consummate art and skill, voilà tout. Poor blind and deaf Smetana! What terrible and sad affliction in old age Unerring nature seems often cruel, and our heartfelt sympathy goes with the dead composer who, so cruelly afflicted, could write beautiful strains to delight mankind. Madame Lilian Nordica is deservingly a great favourite here, and on former occasions I have had the opportunity in these columns of speaking of her great talent. She met with a most demonstrative reception last night, and fairly enchanted the vast and crowded audience. Miss Hope Glenn's rich contralto and artistic phrasing scored for her a triumphant success. Mr. Hallé's conducting is so well known that it would almost be futile to say a word in his praise. Messrs. Harrison once more had a glorious season, and are already engaged making prepartions for the next. My old friend, Martin Roeder, from Berlin, for some years resident in Milan, where I often heard his compositions, has obtained a most lucrative appointment as Professor of Singing at the Royal Irish Academy of Dublin.—O. P.

March 19.—Whilst London is preparing for the season, we in the provinces have fulfilled our devoirs to the satisfaction of music lovers and the masses, and our concert series 1887-8 is nearing that inevitable goal which threatens all and everything. The last concert of the Birmingham Festival Choral Society was given on Thursday, and attracted a fair house. A deviation was made from the ordinary path, and instead of giving a complete choral work, we had a concert of a miscellaneous character, consisting of part songs, ballads, duets, and trios. The orchestra on that occasion was dispensed with, and the accompaniments were given on the organ and pianoforte. It is now ten years since this Society gave a similar miscellaneous concert, which in reality does not lie in their sphere of action, and ought to be left to musical entrepreneurs. With a magnificent chorus of 400 voices we want something more complete and better than part songs and glees. The vocalists engaged for that evening were: Madame Lilian Nordica, Madame Trebelli, Mr. Henry Piercy, and Mr. Watkin Mills. Mr. W. Astley Langston acted as organist and accompanist, a task which he fulfilled to the letter. Mr. Stockley conducted the choral items, the principal of which was Mendelssohn's Motett "Hear my prayer," the solo part being given by Madame Nordica, with exquisite pathos and true artistic conception. Madame Trebelli, Mr. Piercy, and Mr. Watkin Mills are also old favourites here, and it would be useless to state over and over again how they acquitted themselves. It only remains for me to say that the chorus singing was excellent, and one of the best specimens they gave was Sullivan's hymn, "O gladsome light" ("Golden Legend"). The chorus is now in full practice for the forthcoming festival, the programme of which (complete) has now been definitely settled.

MANCHESTER, March 13.—The list of musicians resident in Manchester has quite recently received an important addition by the advent of Herr Carl Fuchs, a young violoncello player who has a brilliant future before him, if one may judge from the ability he has already displayed. This gentleman made his first appearance in Manchester about a year ago, and on that occasion we called attention to his remarkable technique. Another opportunity of hearing him was given at the Gentlemen's concert (March 5), and this served to confirm our previous impression. He selected as his tour de force Schumann's Violoncello Concerto in A minor (op. 129), inserting in the vivace an astonishing Cadenza by Bernhard Cossman. An artist who can effectively play this difficult work proves himself to be of exceptional power, and Herr Fuchs must be congratulated on having given an entirely successful rendering of it. At the same concert Mdlle. Soldat, a pupil of Herr Joachim, made a very brilliant début. Once or twice her tone suffered somewhat, perhaps from nervousness, but, on the whole, both in Vieuxtemps's Concerto in E and a Mazurka by Zarzycki, she proved not only that she is possessed of unusual executive powers, but also that she is able to infuse into her playing an amount of passionate feeling that one is hardly prepared for. She made a strong impression, and, we have no doubt, will be welcomed when she comes amongst us again. The vocalist, Mr. Seymour Jackson, was in good voice, and was especially successful in Handel's "Tell fair Irene," which he sang with great expression. The orchestral selections were unimportant. On March 7 the last of a series of four concerts, organised by the committee of the Schiller-Anstalt, took place. The previous three had been so thoroughly enjoyable that much was expected of the fourth, and when it was announced that Herr Joachim would play, it was known that expectation would not be disappointed. Every seat in the somewhat small hall was filled, and amongst the audience were Mr. Hallé, Herr Straus, Signor Piatti, and many others that one is more accustomed to see as performers than as listeners. Herr Joachim was in a double sense the hero of the evening, not only from the unbounded enthusiasm which his playing aroused, but also from the fact that the committee had availed themselves of his presence to do honour to the society, and to him ,by creating him an honorary member. The ceremony of installation took place after the concert, and in it neither fasting nor vigils bore a prominent part. The first item on the programme was Brahms's Sonata for Piano and Violin in G major (op. 78). a work full of beauty and with an adagio that is truly inspired. Herr Joachim is the finest living exponent of Brahms's violin music, and he was ably seconded by Herr Max Mayer, a pianist well-known and appreciated in Manchester for his thoroughly conscientious and artistic playing. Later on, the Herr Professor Dr. Joachim (as the programme had it) played two melodies of Schumann, of which "Am Springbrunnen" created such a desire for more that he good-naturedly returned and gave one of those wonderful things of Bach which we have no wish to hear anyone else attempt, His last solo consisted of some of the well-known Hungarian dances, into the playing of which he directed an amount of energy that was simply enormous, and here again he complied with the demand for an encore. Herr Carl Fuchs also appeared and gave two violoncello solos, the one a Romance by Davidoff, in which he displayed a beautiful cantabile, the other a well-known Gavotte by Popper, which was so admirably played as to secure an encore. Interspersed amongst the instrumental music were songs, which were well rendered by Miss Pfeiffer von Beek, a lady possessing a contralto voice of considerable merit; and one of the most enjoyable concerts of the season was brought to a close by a splendid performance of Schubert's Pianoforte Trio in B major (op. 99), in which Herren Joachim, Max Mayer, and Carl Fuchs took part.

GLASGOW, Tuesday, March 6.—The third of a series of Chamber Concerts given by Mr. W. H. Cole, took place on Thursday evening, the Berkeley Hall being comfortably well filled. The principal works announced and performed were Beethoven's string Quartet, op. 18, No. 3, and Schubert's Quintet for piano and strings (the "Trout") op. 114. Mr. Cole and Mr. John Daly gave a fine rendering of Spohr's Duet for violins, op. 3, No. 1, and Mr. J. Bradley contributed two pianoforte solos by Chopin. Mrs. Graham P. Moore was the vocalist. — Tomorrow evening (Wednesday) Mr. J. T. Carrodus announces a violin recital in the Queen's Rooms. His solos are "Fandango," Molique; "Romance," Svensden; "Chaconne," Bach; "Mosè in Egitto" (one string), Paganini; and "Scotch Melodies," Carrodus. Mr. Carrodus will be assisted by his son, Mr. J. Carrodus, who will play two 'cello solos, and Miss Marianne Fenna as vocalist.—E. J. R. B.

Tuesday, March 13—A grand evening concert was given under the auspices of Blythswood Parish Church Guild (President, Rev. William Fergus; Secretary, Mr. E. James R. Berger), in honour of the Silver Wedding of their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, on Friday evening, March 9, in the hall of the church. The programme, being an exceedingly attractive one, resulted in a crowded attendance at the hall, notwithstanding the unpleasant nature of the weather. The following ladies and gentlemen appeared and met with great favour:—Mrs. Walker, Miss G. Johnson Messrs. Oswald, Taylor, Rutherford, Charles F. Ferguson, J. Cairns, and Mr. Emile Berger, who acted as accompanist and solo pianist. Mr. Berger's solo was "Songs of Prince Charlie" (E. Berger), and in response to an encore he played another of his own compositions entitled "Punchinello." A dramatic and lyrical recitation was given last night in the Waterloo Rooms by Miss Eva Adams, the hall being comfortably well filled. Miss Adams (who has just turned 14, has for the past few years been under the tuition of Dr. Moxey) met with a most enthusiastic reception. In all, she gave seven recitations, perhaps her best being the selection from Shakespeare's "As You Like It" and a Scotch selection. Her other pieces were "The Death of Little Dombey," "Barbara Frietchie," Selection from "Jackanapes," "Becalmed," and "Papa's Letter." Miss Adams was supported by Madame Annie Grey (Scotch vocalist), Mr. D. M. Jackson (tenor), and Mr. F. W. Bridgman (solo pianist).

NOTES FROM PARIS.

Two new sacred works, by M. Gounod, will be produced during the month of June—viz., on the 14th an oratorio at Rouen Cathedral, and on the 24th a mass at Rheims Cathedral.

"La Dame de Monsoreau," at the Grand Opéra, continues to attract crowded houses.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised & Improved, of
A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR
THE VOICE,
By T. A. Wallworth.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Madame Alwina Valleria, Mr. Iver M'Kay, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & CO. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER'S
ROYAL IRISH CAMBRIC POCKET-HANDKERCHIEFS.

Samples and Price Lists Post Free.

Per doz.—Children's, 1s. 2d.; Ladies', 2s. 4½d.; Gents' 3s. 6d.

Hemstitched—Ladies', 2s. 11½d.; Gents', 4s. 11d.

—:0:—

BY APPOINTMENTS TO THE QUEEN AND THE CROWN PRINCESS OF GERMANY.

ROBINSON AND CLEAVER, BELFAST.

CASSON'S
PATENT
Organ-Building System

SEPARATE Pedal Organs for each Manual. Expressive and Controllable Pedal Basses. Perfect control of all Couplers. Reduction of number of Claviers without loss of efficiency, &c., &c. See testimonials from

Mr. W. T. BEST.
Rev. Sir F. A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart.
Dr. SPARK.
Dr. J. C. BRIDGE, M.A.
Dr. E. W. TAYLOR, F.C.O.
The late Mr. J. STIMPSON.
Mr. R. BARTHOLOMEW.
Mr. J. HEYWOOD, Birmingham.
Mr. G. A. AUDSLEY, F.R.I.B.A.
M. A. J. HIPKINS, F.S.A.
&c., &c.

Apply to the Secretary—
CASSON'S PATENT ORGAN CO., LIMITED
DENBIGH.

FOR DISEASES OF THE THROAT, CHEST, LUNGS
SODEN
MINERAL
PASTILLES
BEST REMEDY FOR COUGHS, ASTHMA,
BRONCHITIS,
SORE THROAT,
WHOOPING COUGH.

"19, Harley-street, Cavendish-square, W.

"I have watched the effects of the Soden Waters for a considerable period, and regard them as extremely valuable in OBSTINATE CATARRHAL AFFECTIONS OF THE THROAT. The small amount of Iron which they contain renders them very useful in the early stages of THROAT CONSUMPTION, and they do good in nearly all cases of relaxation of the mucous membrane. The offer a most convenient method of using the Waters, producing both a Local and General effect. They are especially beneficial in CATARRHAL DISEASES of the air-passages. I frequently found them of great service in the case of Singers and Public Speakers. (Signed)

SODEN MINERAL PASTILLES

"MORELL MACKENZIE, M.D."

INSIST on your chemist getting you the genuine article. See that each box has Dr. W. Stoeltzing's signature and our Trade Mark (Two Globes with Cross and Crescent), which is impressed on each pastille. At 1s. 1½d., of all Medicine Vendors, or post free for 15 stamps of the SODEN MINERAL PRODUCE COMPANY, Dyer's-buildings, Holborn, London, E.C.

DEFRIES' Safety Water White Oil.

The Purest, Whitest, and Best Burning Mineral Oil in England.

EQUAL IN QUALITY TO OILS SOLD UNDER FANCY NAMES, at from 1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d. per gall
FOR USE IN ALL LAMPS AND STOVES.

PRICE 1s. PER GALLON.

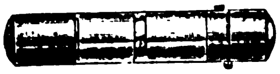
FREE DELIVERED IN LONDON AND ALL SUBURBS.

Minimum, 2 gallons. The 5 and 10 gallon drums are fitted with taps. Drums charged, and full price allowed when returned.

Terms: Cash on or before delivery. Deposit Accounts opened for Oil.

DEFRIES' SAFETY LAMP & OIL CO., LIMITED,
43 and 44, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON, E.C.

THORNHILL'S
NEW "GLOVE" BOTTLE.



FOR PERFUME & SMELLING SALTS.

Large Variety of Patterns at Various Prices

THORNHILL'S ARTISTIC FANS.
A LARGE and VARIED STOCK of the BEST QUALITY.

THORNHILL'S
TOILET CASES
FOR LADIES AND GENTLEMEN

PRESENTS.

THORNHILL'S
Fully Illustrated
LIST
OF
LATEST
NOVELTIES

POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

THORNHILL'S
OPERA GLASSES.

IN GREAT VARIETY.

THORNHILL'S
Guaranteed Razors Singly or in Sets.

W. THORNHILL & CO., TO THE QUEEN & ROYAL FAMILY. 144, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON. ESTABLISHED 1734.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER'S
LINEN COLLARS, CUFFS, AND SHIRTS.
Samples and Price Lists Post Free.

COLLARS—LADIES' 3-fold, from 3s. 6d. per doz. GENTS' 4-fold, 4s. 11d. to 5s. 11d. per doz.

CUFFS—For Ladies or Gentlemen, 5s. 11d. to 10s. 6d. per doz.

SHIRTS—Best quality Long Cloth, with 4-fold Linen Fronts 35s. 6d. per half-doz. (To measure, 2s. extra.)

N.B.—OLD SHIRTS made as good as new with best materials in Neckbands, Cuffs, and Fronts, for 14s. the half-doz.

ROBINSON AND CLEAVER, BELFAST.

Dr. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For sore throat, hoarseness, and relaxed throat, also for improving the voice

FOR SINGING AND SPEAKING

without fatiguing the voice. Celebrated in every town in Europe, India, America, and the Colonies. Testimonials from Patti, Trebelli, Patey, Santley, and the most eminent medical men.

Sold in boxes; 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d.; also in bottles for abroad.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE & RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & Co.,

Manufacturers and Importers of all kinds of Strings
FOR
VIOLIN, VIOLA, CELLO, DOUBLE BASS, HARP,
ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO,
Have always in STOCK the Largest ASSORTMENT of any House in the World.

6, GOLDEN SQUARE, W.

A BLESSING IN EVERY FAMILY.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.

These Remedies have stood the test of FIFTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE and are pronounced the best medicines for family use. Tens of thousands of written testimonials bear witness to their marvellous curative properties. They are acknowledged by the whole civilised world to be the greatest efficacy in every form of disease.
Sold by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors.

Manufactured only at THOMAS HOLLOWAY'S ESTABLISHMENT
78, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.
N.B.—Advice gratis at the above address, daily, between the hours of 11 and [illegible] or by letter

ASCHERBERG PIANOS.

"I only perform an act of justice when I ascribe my successes to a great extent to the excellent Instruments from your factory, on which I was favoured to play before the public. Remain convinced that I shall at all times and everywhere give preference to your Pianos over all others, and accept the assurance of my unbounded esteem.

Respectfully,

VLADIMIR VON PACHMANN."

ASCHERBERG PIANO DEPOT,

211, REGENT STREET, W.

DEFRIES' Safety Water White Oil.

The Purest, Whitest, and Best Burning Mineral Oil in England.

EQUAL IN QUALITY TO OILS SOLD UNDER FANCY NAMES, at from 1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d. per gall
FOR USE IN ALL LAMPS AND STOVES.

PRICE 1s. PER GALLON.

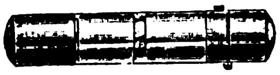
FREE DELIVERED IN LONDON AND ALL SUBURBS.

Minimum, 2 gallons. The 5 and 10 gallon drums are fitted with taps. Drums charged, and full price allowed when returned.

Terms: Cash on or before delivery. Deposit Accounts opened for Oil.

DEFRIES' SAFETY LAMP & OIL CO., LIMITED,
43 and 44, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON, E.C.

THORNHILL'S
NEW "GLOVE" BOTTLE.



FOR PERFUME & SMELLING SALTS.

Large Variety of Patterns at Various Prices

THORNHILL'S TOILET CASES FOR LADIES AND GENTLEMEN

THORNHILL'S ARTISTIC FANS.
A LARGE and VARIED STOCK of the BEST QUALITY.

PRESENTS.

THORNHILL'S
Fully Illustrated
LIST
OF
LATEST
NOVELTIES

POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

THORNHILL'S
OPERA GLASSES.

IN GREAT VARIETY.

THORNHILL'S
Guaranteed Razors Singly or in Sets.

W. THORNHILL & CO., TO THE QUEEN & ROYAL FAMILY. 144, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON. ESTABLISHED 1734.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER'S
LINEN COLLARS, CUFFS, AND SHIRTS.

Samples and Price Lists Post Free.

COLLARS—LADIES' 3-fold, from 3s. 6d. per doz. GENTS' 4-fold, 4s. 11d. to 5s. 11d. per doz.

CUFFS—For Ladies or Gentlemen, 5s. 11d. to 10s. 6d. per doz.

SHIRTS—Best quality Long Cloth, with 4-fold Linen Fronts 35s. 6d. per half-doz. (To measure, 2s. extra.)

N.B.—OLD SHIRTS made as good as new with best materials in Neckbands, Cuffs, and Fronts, for 14s. the half-doz.

ROBINSON AND CLEAVER, BELFAST.

Dr. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For sore throat, hoarseness, and relaxed throat, also for improving the voice

FOR SINGING AND SPEAKING

without fatiguing the voice. Celebrated in every town in Europe, India, America, and the Colonies. Testimonials from Patti, Trebelli, Patey, Santley, and the most eminent medical men.

Sold in boxes; 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d.; also in bottles for abroad.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE & RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & CO.,
Manufacturers and Importers of all kinds of Strings
FOR
VIOLIN, VIOLA, CELLO, DOUBLE BASS, HARP,
ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO,
Have always in STOCK the Largest ASSORTMENT of any House in the World.
6, GOLDEN SQUARE, W.

A BLESSING IN EVERY FAMILY.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.

These Remedies have stood the test of FIFTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE and are pronounced the best medicines for family use. Tens of thousands of written testimonials bear witness to their marvellous curative properties. They are acknowledged by the whole civilised world to be the greatest efficacy in every form of disease.
Sold by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors.

Manufactured only at THOMAS HOLLOWAY'S ESTABLISHMENT
78, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.
N.B.—Advice gratis at the above address, daily, between the hours of 11 and [illegible] or by letter

ASCHERBERG PIANOS.

"I only perform an act of justice when I ascribe my successes to a great extent to the excellent Instruments from your factory, on which I was favoured to play before the public. Remain convinced that I shall at all times and everywhere give preference to your Pianos over all others, and accept the assurance of my unbounded esteem.

Respectfully,

VLADIMIR VON PACHMANN."

ASCHERBERG PIANO DEPOT,

211, REGENT STREET, W.

LADIES, SHOP BY POST.

By making your Purchases Direct from the Darlington Mills, you are sure of getting New Goods at first hand, fresh from the Looms, and at a clear Saving of ALL the Intermediate Profits of Draper and Wholesale Merchant.

LARGE BOX OF SPRING PATTERNS SENT FREE

By Post, on Approval, to any Address in Town or Country.

Darlington Dress Fabrics

Noted Darlington Zephyr Cloths.

"The DOROTHY."
"The IRENE."
"The QUEEN MAB."
"The SAN REMO."
"The MADGE."

Noted Darlington Tweed Costume Cloths.

"The GRAMPIAN."
"The CALEDONIAN."
"The VIRGINIAN."
"EMPRESS COSTUME CLOTH."
"SILVER WEDDING."
"NEW SKIRTINGS."

THE NEW SPRING WEAVINGS COMPRISE UPWARDS OF 1,000 VARIETIES
☞ ALL IN THE LATEST FASHION,
GIVING AN UNLIMITED CHOICE.
TOGETHER WITH THE CELEBRATED

DARLINGTON CROSS-WARP SERGES

And Gold Medal Merinoes and Cashmeres,

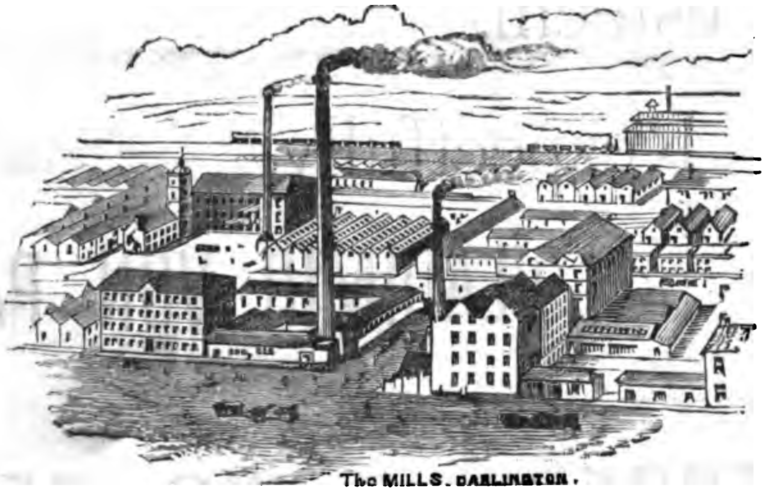
All Renowned for their Beautiful Appearance, Thorough Money Value, and Hard-Wearing Qualities.

These Splendid Goods are

Sold Direct to the Public,

Without the intervention of Wholesale Merchants, Drapers, Agents, or Middlemen, all intermediate profits being given to the Purchaser.

All Goods are Warranted to be Equal to Samples.



The MILLS. DARLINGTON.

Any Length Cut—No Matter how Short.

Any Article not approved will be changed within seven days.

All Parcels delivered Carriage Paid to any Railway Station in Great Britain or Ireland.

Messrs. HENRY PEASE & CO.'S SUCCESSORS buy their Wool direct from the English Farmer. After careful sorting and cleansing the wool is spun into yarn, and the yarn is woven into the various charming fabrics, for which the firm have been renowned since their Establishment in 1752—the entire process of manufacture being carried on in their own Mills at Darlington, employing more than 1,000 hands.

HY. PEASE and Co.'s Successors, SPINNERS & MANUFACTURERS, The Mills, Darlington.

Illustrated Catalogues of 60 Pages, Post Free. (ESTABLISHED 1752.)

Printed and Published by MACRAE, CURTICE & Co. (LIMITED), 12, Catherine Street, Strand, W.C.

WEEKLY.]

The Musical World.

ESTABLISHED 1822.
REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED; IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST WEEKLY, 17/6 PER ANNUM (Payable in advance).

VOL. 67.—NO. 13. SATURDAY, MARCH 31, 1888. PRICE {3D. Unstampe
{4D. By Post.

THE

KARN AMERICAN ORGANS,

Manufactured by D. W. KARN & CO.,

WOODSTOCK, ONTARIO, CANADA.

The Karn Organ is a reproduction of the Pipe Organ in miniature, of pre-eminent value as an effective music exponent for the Home.

OUR AIM has not been to see how cheaply an organ can be built, BUT HOW CHEAPLY A FIRST-CLASS ORGAN can be made.

OUR CLAIM is that we are building organs equal to, if not surpassing, all others, at the very lowest reasonable prices.

COMPARISON CHEERFULLY INVITED.

New Illustrated Catalogue & Price Lists Free of the
SOLE EUROPEAN AGENTS:

THE SCHREIBER PIANO CO.,
18, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W.

To the Trade and Profession.

OLD
VIOLINS.

MESSRS. BEARE AND SON, Manufacturers and Importers of every Description of Musical Instruments, Strings, Fittings, &c.,
34, Rathbone Place, London, W.,
Invite an inspection of their collection of old Violins,
All genuine examples of the celebrated old Masters.
Over 300 old instruments from which to select.

Old Violins from £5.
Old Tenors from £5.
Old Violoncellos from £10.
Old Double Basses from £15.

Sole Wholesale Agents for James Tubb's celebrated Bows.
Bows by the old makers also frequently in stock.
Tested strings unequalled for durability and equality of tone.
Repairs of every kind of Musical Instrument executed promptly by experienced workmen.

BEARE AND SON,
34, RATHBONE PLACE, LONDON, W.

Special Notices.

THE GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Established by the Corporation of London.

Principal—Mr. H. WEIST HILL.

Students' Concerts will take place on April 25, May 9 and 23, June 6 20, and July 4.
Recitals and Lectures by Professors of the School, WEEKLY.
The Next Term will commence on Monday, April 16, 1888.
For prospectuses and all further particulars, apply to the Secretary.
By Order,
CHARLES P. SMITH,
Victoria Embankment, E.C. Secretary.

TOWN HALL, BIRMINGHAM.

AN ORGANIST is required for the BIRMINGHAM TOWN HALL. The Organ is well known as a fine instrument of four manuals and eventy-six stops, and it has been decided to expend, at an early date, a large sum in thoroughly renovating and modernising its mechanism and appliances, and adding to its resources. The Organist will, under certain conditions have the exclusive control of the Organ, and will be at liberty to give Recital for his own benefit. He will also receive the fees payable in respect o Meetings or performances at which the Organ is required. Application (marked "Town Hall Organist") are to be made, not later than May 8th, to Mr. C. G. BEALE, 3, Newhall Street, Birmingham, from whom a Schedule can be obtained by post, showing the conditions of the appointment.

DRURY LANE.—AUGUSTUS HARRIS, Lessee and Manager —A RUN OF LUCK, withdrawn in the height of its success, Dec. 11 1886, to make way for the Christmas pantomime, will be revived SATURDAY NEXT, March 31. Messrs. Harry Nicholls, Percy Lyndal, E. W. Gardiner, Victor Stevens, F. Gould, Reuben Inch, Arthur Yates, A. Collins, and Herbert Standing, &c.; Mesdames Fortescue, Edith Bruce, Blanche Massey, Minnie Inch, Marie D'Altra, Marie Williams, Millicent Mildmay, and Maud Milton, &c.—Box-office open daily, from ten to six.—DRURY-LANE.

A RUN OF LUCK, at Drury Lane, was triumphantly successful; the interest was cumulative, and the cheers increased in volume and force as the performance progressed. Each descent of the curtain was followed by the strongest proof of satisfaction that an excited audience can give. Certainly a feat in modern stage realism, and success is the emphatic result.—Daily Telegraph.

A RUN OF LUCK, at Drury Lane, embraces at once the best and most attractive features of modern melodrama and farcica comedy.—World.

TO ORGANISTS.—For Professional Practice, Teaching, or Concert purpose, and Home use, the "Bach Model" Pedal Instrument is only reliable substitute for a pipe organ. For design, improved action, connections, and tone, it embraces the merits of the highest class instruments; and without paying an exorbitant price you may have an instrument with organ measurements that removes the deficiencies hitherto experienced in pedal instruments.—Apply for illustrated lists, terms, and prices, to J. L. Scholefield, Musical Instrument Manufacturer, Huddersfield.

ORGAN.—A Fine-toned Modern Two-manual ORGAN fo Sale. Contains Sixteen Stops, Couplers, Composition Pedals, and all the latest improvements. Price £250.—Fincham's Organ Factory, 150, Euston Road, London.

ORGANIST WANTED for Hadley Church, Barnet. Mixed Choir. Salary £30. Apply to Rev. H. W. P. STEVENS, Barnet.

TO ENTREPRENEURS.—Charles Haydn Arnold, age 16, Classical Solo Pianist, is open to engagement, would tour with high-class Concert party. Terms easy. Address, ENNISKILLEN.

Institutes and Colleges.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, KENSINGTON GORE, LONDON, S.W.

Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.

President - - H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES, K.G.
Director - - Sir GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L., LL.D.

Next College Concert, May 17th, at 7.30 p.m.

The Midsummer Term will commence on April 25th, 1888.

Regulations may be obtained from the Registrar, Mr. George Watson, at the College.

CHARLES MORLEY, Honorary Secretary.

UNIVERSITY OF TRINITY COLLEGE, TORONTO. (The Church of England University of Upper Canada.)

FACULTY OF MUSIC.

The next Examinations for the degree of Bachelor of Music will be held simultaneously in Toronto and London in Easter week, 1888. Women are admissable to these examinations. For particulars apply to Rev. E. K. Kendal, D.C.L., Registrar for England, Southsea.

TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON. For MUSICAL EDUCATION and EXAMINATION, &c., and for the Granting of Certificates and Diplomas in Music. Inst. 1872.

President - - The EARL of ABERDEEN.

THE NEXT STUDENTS' ORCHESTRAL CONCERT will take place on MONDAY, April 9th, at PRINCES' HALL, PICCADILLY, at 8 o'clock, when the Programme will probably be composed as follows:—

Overture, "Rosamunde," Schubert; Song, "Quando a te lieta" ("Faust,") Gounod, Miss Kate Milner; Serenade and Allegro Giojoso for Pianoforte and Orchestra, Mendelssohn, Mr. R. W. Lewis; Song, "Italian Boat Song," James Shaw Ford, Mr. Frank Swinford, Student (Sims Reeves Exhibitioner); Vocal Trio, "Vorrei parlar" ("Falstaff,") Balfe, Miss Bowley, Miss Ada Cartwright, and Miss Lizzie Dunkley; Allegro from Concerto for Pianoforte and Orchestra in A minor, Schumann, Miss Emily Rivett (Benedict Exhibitioner); Overture in F, Frank Swinford (Student); Movements from Suite for Orchestra, "Lay of the Last Minstrel" (Larghetto—Romance, Moderato), John Francis Barnett; Recit. and Cavatina, "Infelice" ("Ernani,") Verdi, Mr. Frank Swinford; Polonaise in E flat, for Pianoforte and Orchestra, Chopin, Miss Blanche St. Clair; Songs (a) "Oh Fatima" ("Abu Hasan,") Weber; (b) "Near Thee," Raff, Miss Grosvenor Gooch; Violoncello Solo, Mr. J. H. Callcott (Exhibitioner); Ave Maria for Voice, Pianoforte, Violoncello, and Harp, Marie Brooke (Student), Miss Florence Verey, Miss Marie Brooke, Mr. J. H. Calcott, and Mr. Albert Putnam; Finale from Symphony in D (No. 2), Beethoven. Conductor, Mr. George Mount.

By Order of the Academical Board.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, W.

GUILD OF ORGANISTS, 35, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C.

Patron—The Right Rev. THE LORD BISHOP OF LONDON.

PRESIDENTS.

The REV. CANON SIR F. H. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., Mus. Doc.
Sir HERBERT OAKELEY, Bart., Mus. Doc.
Sir ROBERT STEWART, Mus. Doc.
Vice-President—WILLIAM PINNEY, Mus. Bac., Oxon.
Warden—CHARLES VINCENT, Mus. Doc., Oxon.

Established to advance the cause of Church music and the truest interests of its Professors, etc.

Members of the Church of England and Ireland, and the Episcopal Church of Scotland, are eligible for election. Subscription: Professional Organists (Associates) 10s. 6d. per annum; Amateurs (Members) 15s. per annum; Life subscription, 5 guineas.

Next Fellowship examination in Easter Week.

Prospectus and further particulars may be obtained from the Hon. Sec., Dr. J. H. Lewis, Staines, Middlesex.

London Organ School and International College of Music.

Established 1865, by the Rev. SCOTSON CLARK, Mus.B.
Patron—His Grace The ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY.
Principal—HENRY CLARK.

THE NEXT ORGAN RECITAL at ST. NICHOLAS COLE ABBEY, on TUESDAY, April 10th, by Miss EDROFF.

Piano, Singing, Violin, 'Cello, Flute, Harp, Organ Lessons, with Practice, and Harmony. Private Lessons and Classes.

Candidates for Musical Degrees at any of the English Universities are expressly prepared for the Matriculation Examinations by Oxford and Cambridge graduates (in honours). Branches at Kensington and St. John's Wood.

Apply to the Director of Classes, T. H. Y. TROTTER, M.A., Mus.Bac., Oxon., 3, Princes Street, Cavendish Square, W. (close to Oxford Circus).

Publishers' Announcements.

"A perfect little gem of a composition."—Truth, 22nd Dec., 1887.
"A richly-harmonised melody."—Court and Society.
"An elegant piano romance."—Standard.
"A charming little sketch."—Court Journal.

RESIGNATION. Pianoforte solo. By EUGENE WAGNER. Post free 1s. 6d.—Charles Woolhouse, 81, Regent Street, London, W.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TECHNICAL EXERCISES for the Pianoforte, on the Deppe principle, systematically arranged by C. A. Ehrenfechter. Price 2s. 6d., net.

London: WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W.

Third Edition.

Daily Vocal Exercises, for Mezzo Soprano, Soprano, or Tenor. By ALBERT B. BACH, Author of the "Principles of Singing," &c. Full music size, 60 pages, 8s. net.

SATURDAY REVIEW.

"We can heartily recommend these 'Daily Exercises' as clear and rational in method, and eminently fitted for the object for which they are written."

THE MUSICAL WORLD.

"The 'Daily Exercises' will be found a valuable assistance to vocal students, whose various acquirements have been amply and ingeniously provided for."

London: METZLER & CO.

The Universal Circulating Music Library

(ESTABLISHED 1854.)

IS THE LARGEST IN THE WORLD.

SUBSCRIPTION £2 2s. PER ANNUM, £1 8s. PER HALF YEAR, &C.

MUSIC can be selected at end of term, as subscribers' property, equal to one-half of their subscription at full price. All Music, English and Foreign, &c., promptly supplied.—For Prospectuses apply to

CHARLES WOOLHOUSE, Proprietor.
81, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE "JOLLY BRICK" POLKA.

By M. S. BARRON.

PRICE 3s.

"Is bright and danceable."—News of the World.

"This is a cheerful and sprightly piece, with well marked accentuation. It presents no difficulties of execution even to the young player."—Dundee Advertiser.

"One of the brighest and most sprightly polkas we have met with for a long time. The key is E flat, changing to B flat. The piece is quite above the common run of dance musica —Musical Standard.

ALSO,

A TWILIGHT DREAM.

FOR PIANO.

By M. S. BARRON.

PRICE 3s.

"An interesting piece, with a melody for the left hand."—Musical Standard.

LONDON: SWAN & CO., 4, GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, W

IN SIX GRADES.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH.

Under the Sanction and Approval of the Rev. Sir FREDERICK A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., M.A., Mus. Doc., and of Sir G. A. MACFARREN, Mus. Doc.

THE MUSICIAN:

A GUIDE FOR PIANOFORTE STUDENTS,

By RIDLEY PRENTICE.

CONTAINS ANALYSES OF WELL-KNOWN PIECES PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED, ENABLING THE PUPIL TO UNITE A STUDY OF MUSICAL FORM WITH THE ORDINARY PIANOFORTE PRACTICE.

Saturday Review.—"We are far from suggesting that there is any royal road for acquiring technical knowledge, but we are quite certain Mr. Ridley Prentice's road is in every way the pleasantest that has yet been laid before any pianoforte student."

Academy.—"A knowledge of form is imparted in simple and pleasant language. We heartily commend it to all who desire to understand, satisfactorily interpret, and enjoy beautiful music."

Graphic.—"Written with the laudable purpose of helping the pianoforte student to understand and enjoy beautiful music."

School Board Chronicle.—"A useful book for earnest teachers."

Musical Review.—"Mr. Ridley Prentice has newly developed an important though much neglected branch of the teacher's duties."

Monthly Musical Record.—"No more valuable work of the kind is in existence."

W. SWAN SONNENSCHEIN & CO., PATERNOSTER SQUARE:
And all Book and Music Sellers.

Professional Cards.

The subscription for a "card" space in these columns is £1 10s. for six months, and £1 per quarter—payable in advance, including copy of the paper each week. Subscriptions should be sent to the office of THE MUSICAL WORLD 12, Catherine Street, Strand, London, W.C.

Conductors and Composers.

Mr. FREDERIC H. COWEN,
73, HAMILTON TERRACE,
ST. JOHN'S WOOD, N.W.

Mr. F. KILVINGTON HATTERSLEY,
A.R.A.M.
(Professor of the Pianoforte, Composer, and Conductor),
17, FINSBURY PARK VILLAS,
GREEN LANES, N.

Mr. ALBERT VISETTI
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Conductor),
12, WESTBOURNE PARK TERRACE, W.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN
(Guitar, Concertina, and Gigelira. Wood and Straw Instrument),
22A, DORSET STREET, PORTMAN SQUARE, W.

Mr. F. ST. JOHN LACY
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Vocalist) (baritone),
FITZROY MANSION, CHARLOTTE STREET,
FITZROY SQUARE, W.

Mr. H. MARTYN VAN LENNEP
(Teacher of Singing, Composer, and Conductor),
Address—7, WIMPOLE STREET,
CAVENDISH SQUARE, W.

Mr. G. ARTHUR HIGGS, F.C.O.
L. Mus. and Tallis Gold Medallist. T.C.L. Pupil of Mr. Albert Visetti. Teacher of Singing, Harmony, Conductor, and Vocalist. (Baritone.)
Address—TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON, W.

Vocalists—Sopranos.

Madame VALLERIA
(Opera and Concerts),
BOSWORTH HOUSE, HUSBAND'S BOSWORTH,
RUGBY.

Miss EDITH DESMOND
(Opera and Concerts),
c/o NOLAN & JACKSON.

Miss KATE FLINN
(Concerts and Oratorios),
41, WELBECK STREET,
CAVENDISH SQUARE, W.

Mdlle. VELMI
(Opera and Concerts),
7, CHESILTON ROAD, MUNSTER PARK,
FULHAM, S.W.

Miss AGNES LARKCOM
Has removed to
158, PORTSDOWN ROAD, W.

Madame ISABEL GEORGE, L.R.A.M.
(Concert and Oratorio),
29, ALBANY STREET, REGENT'S PARK, N.W.

Contraltos.

Miss JOSEPHINE CRAVINO
(Concerts and Oratorio),
2, SEDGMOOR VILLAS,
Private Lessons given. CAMBERWELL, S.E.

Miss MARY E. DAKIN, R.A.M.
(Mez. Sop.),
Ballads, Oratorio, &c.
31, MONMOUTH ROAD,
BAYSWATER, LONDON, W.

Miss LENA LITTLE
(Concerts),
42, NORFOLK SQUARE, HYDE PARK, W.

Contraltos.—Continued.

Madame OSCAR POLLACK
(Concerts),
56, DUCHESS ROAD,
EDGBASTON, BIRMINGHAM.

Tenors.

Mr. BARTON McGUCKIN
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
c/o MR. ALFRED MOUL,
26, OLD BOND STREET, W.,
Or, 270, ELGIN AVENUE, MAIDA VALE, W.

Mr. ARNOLD BREEDEN
(Concerts, Oratorio, and Opera),
Address—N. VERT, Esq.,
6, CORK STREET, W.

Mr. SEYMOUR JACKSON
(Concerts and Oratorio),
OLD TRAFFORD, MANCHESTER.

Mr. PAYNE CLARKE
(Concerts and Oratorio),
28, DEVONSHIRE STREET, ISLINGTON, N.

Mr. J. DALGETY HENDERSON,
GOTHIC LODGE,
LORDSHIP LANE, S.E.

Mr. REDFERN HOLLINS,
30, ST. STEPHEN'S AVENUE,
SHEPHERD'S BUSH, W.

Mr. BERNARD LANE,
60, WESTBOURNE PARK VILLAS, W.

Chevalier EDWARD SCOVEL
(Opera, Concerts, and Oratorio),
HOTEL DE L'EUROPE,
MILAN, ITALY.

Mr. W. ESMOND,
24, UPPER MOUNT STREET, DUBLIN.

Baritones.

Mr. WALTER CLIFFORD
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concerts),
c/o N. VERT, Esq.,
6, CORK STREET, W.

Mr. FREDERIC KING
(Concerts and Oratorio),
19, CANFIELD GARDENS, S. HAMPSTEAD.

Mr. NORRIS CROKER,
EGREMONT, CROXTED ROAD,
WEST DULWICH, S.E.

Mr. JOSEPH LYNDE
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concert
63, STAFFORD PLACE,
BUCKINGHAM GATE, S.W.

Mr. ALBERT REAKES
(Bass-Baritone, of the "London Ballad Singers," Oratorios, Concerts, &c.),
30, LANCASTER ROAD,
NOTTING HILL, W.

Herr RAGNAR GREVILLIUS
(Concerts, Oratorio, and Opera),
70, PORTSDOWN ROAD, MAIDA VALE, W.

Bass.

Mr. WATKIN MILLS requests that all communications respecting engagements be sent to his new address, Hyacinth Road, Roehampton Park, S.W.

Mr. FRANK CELLI
(Concerts and Oratorio),
c/o MR. N. VERT, 6, CORK ST.,
BURLINGTON GARDENS, W.

Trumpet and Cornet.

Mr. THOMAS HARPER,
185, KING'S ROAD, N.W

Pianoforte.

Mr. G. PRADEAU
(Lessons and Recitals),
1, STOWE ROAD,
SHEPHERD'S BUSH, W.

Guitar.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN, Guitariste, Instructress to H.R.H. the Princess Louise, has returned to town, 22A, DORSET STREET, PORTMAN SQUARE, W., where may be had her celebrated book, "Learning the Guitar Simplified," 10s. 6d.

Violin.

Mr. ALLAN CAMPBELL
(Formerly Pupil of Mr. Henry Holmes and Dr. S. S. Wesley),
23, THICKET ROAD,
Pupils visited and received. ANERLEY, S.E.

Mr. LESLIE CROTTY and
Madame GEORGINA BURNS,
c/o Mr. ALFRED MOUL (sole agent),
26, OLD BOND STREET, W.

Miss AGNES JANSON requests that all communications respecting engagements may be sent to her new address, 36, Albion Place, Hyde Park, W.; or to Mr. N. VERT, 6, Cork Street, W.

The FRASER QUINTET. Misses Violet (Vocalist), Ida, and Ethel (Pianist, Violoncello, and Viola), Mabel and Stella Violinists), play Quartets, Solos, Duets, two Pianofortes, &c. For Engagements, for Concerts, "At Homes," Dinner and Garden Parties.—Address: 121, Adelaide Road, N.W.

MR. HEALEY'S SPECIAL LIST.

Madame LILIAN NORDICA (Soprano)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert),
Address to
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mdlle. LOUISE LABLACHE (Mez. Sop.)
(Opera and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W

Mdlle. HELENE HASTREITER (Contr.)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert)
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Madame BELLE COLE (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Miss MARGUERITE HALL (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. WILLIAM NICHOLL (Tenor)
28, BELSIZE ROAD, N.W.,
Or, Sole Agent, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. JOHN PROBERT (Tenor)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W

Mr. VAUGHAN EDWARDES (Baritone)
(Concerts and Oratorio),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. MULES BROWN (Baritone)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. HENRY POPE (Bass)
(Opera, Concerts, and Oratorio),
Business Manager. W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. T. L. CAMPION (Bass)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Google

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES.

Public Speakers and Singers

Can use "Brown's Bronchial Troches" as freely as requisite, containing nothing that can injure the system. They are invaluable in allaying the hoarseness and irritation incident to vocal exertion, effectually Clearing and Strengthening the Voice.

"They seem to act specially on the organs of the voice, and produce a clear enunciation."—Marie Roze-Mapleson.

Ask. for and obtain only "Brown's Bronchial Troches." Sold everywhere at 1s. 1½d a box.

CASSON'S
PATENT
Organ - Building System

SEPARATE Pedal Organs for each Manual. Expressive and Controllable Pedal Basses. Perfect control of all Couplers. Reduction of number of Claviers without loss of efficiency, &c., &c. See testimonials from

Mr. W. T. BEST.
Rev. Sir F. A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart.
Dr. SPARK.
Dr. J. C. BRIDGE, M.A.
Dr. E. W. TAYLOR, F.C.O.
The late Mr. J. STIMPSON.
Mr. R. BARTHOLOMEW.
Mr. J. HEYWOOD, Birmingham.
Mr. G. A. AUDSLEY, F.R.I.B.A.
M. A. J. HIPKINS, F.S.A.
&c., &c.

Apply to the Secretary—
CASSON'S PATENT ORGAN CO., LIMITED
DENBIGH.

THE MUSICAL WORLD is on sale at Merrydew's Library Boulogne-sur-Mer.

Notice to Advertisers.—Advertisements should be sent not later than 5 o'clock on Wednesdays, to the Office, 12, Catherine St Strand.

Notice to Subscribers.—The Subscription to The Musical World is now reduced to 17s. 6d. per annum (payable in advance).

All business communications to be addressed to the Manager of The Musical World.

All communications in reference to the literary part of the paper to be addressed to the Editor, who cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless accompanied by a stamped directed envelope.

Facts and Comments.

We are informed that the Queen has promised to send to the Bologna Exhibition some of the valuable MSS. and rare editions of the Buckingham Palace library. Many musicians and collectors have also placed their treasures at the disposal of the English Committee, of which the Duke of Edinburgh is the honorary, and Mr. Cusins the acting, president, and it may be expected that England will be well represented on that interesting occasion.

The remarks we made some time ago as to the musical instinct being more common amongst painters than poets, will receive a very interesting illustration in a dramatic and musical performance to be given by the pupils of Professor Hubert Herkomer, at the new theatre erected in connection with the art school of that able painter, at Bushey, Herts. The name of the play is "The Sorceress," and the action will be entirely pantomimic, there being no spoken dialogue, and, indeed, no words at all, excepting in connection with the choruses. These choruses, as well as the incidental music, have been written by Mr. Herkomer himself.

Talking of painting in connection with music, we may mention a picture by M. Bruck Lajos, which is destined for the Royal Academy exhibition, and which possesses special interest for musical amateurs. We mean the portraits of the "Popular" quartet, Messrs. Joachim, Ries, Straus, and Piatti, represented at their desks, just before setting to work.

Herr Joachim rests the tip of his bow on the desk, and gazes thoughtfully at his music. M. Ries is standing. M. Straus is in the act of easing a string of his viola, and Signor Piatti, one can see, has been ready for a long time. The portraits are life-like and unmistakeable. The group is represented at one end of a long room, and a finishing touch is given by Mr. Arthur Chappell, who, like a sweet little cherub, sits up aloft, in a picture on the wall.

M. Bruck Lajos has also finished a portrait of Lady Folkestone and a picture of Ruth, which, since Mr. Cowen has treated the subject, may also, in some way, be considered musical.

In the dramatic line, also, music, in familiar phrase, is looking up. Miss Neilson, the young actress recently discovered by Mr. Gilbert, and who made her début as Cynisca in "Pygmalion and Galatea" last week, was a pupil of Signor Randegger at the Royal Academy, where she gained the Sainton-Dolby Scholarship and other distinctions; and the heroine of the new play which Mr. Nisbet, the dramatic critic of the "The Times," is preparing for the stage, is a budding and finally blooming prima-donna.

Dr. Von Bülow, as we anticipated several weeks ago, has accepted the conductorship of the last two Philharmonic Concerts. The dates of his Beethoven Recitals are fixed for June 4th, 12th, 19th, and 26th.

Mr. Hermann Klein's useful "Musical Notes" for the year 1887 has just been published. The portraits given in the previous issues will be omitted, and the publishers have thereby been enabled to reduce the price by one-half.

Miss Mary Carmichael, Miss Marguerite Hall, and Mr. William Nicholl are going to give a concert in Florence in the Easter week.

Mr. Alfred Hollins, of the Royal Normal College and Academy of Music for the Blind at Upper Norwood, near London, has been giving successful performances at Baltimore, where, at the Peabody Institute, he played Beethoven's E Flat Concerto, creating a great impression, and being forthwith engaged for another performance.

Amongst the artists who have tendered their services for Mr. Ambrose Austin's benefit concert on June 13th are Mesdames Albani, Valleria, and Trebelli, and Messrs. Lloyd, Santley, Cusins, and Richter.

At the final examination for eight open scholarships in the Royal College of Music, the total number of candidates was 276, of whom 33 were disqualified. The remainder were examined at 38 centres and reduced to 69, and these were brought up to the final examination at the College, when they divided themselves as follows:—Singing, 21; pianoforte, 20; violin, 20; composition, 5; violoncello, 2; double bass, 1. The following are the names of the successful candidates:—Composition: Scholar, Liddle, Samuel, Leeds. Singing: Scholars, Magrath, Charles J., Cork; Richardson, Mary A., Silverdale, Staffordshire; Sandbrook, John, Dowlais. Piano: Scholar, Simon, Grace M., Kensington. Violin: Scholar, Watkins, Harry, Tottenham. Violoncello: Scholar, Williams, Arthur, St. Clears, South Wales. Double Bass: Scholar, Hobday, Arthur C., Faversham.

The Hungarian vocalist, Madame Dalnoky, is going to give a matinée, to be held, by the kindness of Mrs. Mackay, at 7, Buckingham Gate, on April 19. Among the artists who will assist Madame Dalnoky are Madame Schlutter, Miss Leila Dufour, Mr. Hayden Coffin, Signor Rizelli, Mr. Egbert Roberts, vocalists, M. Réné Ortmans, violin, and Signor Carlo Ducci and Mr. Wilhelm Ganz, conductors.

At the afternoon performance at Mr. and Mrs. German Reed's Entertainment on Easter Monday, a new First Piece will be produced, entitled "Wanted—An Heir," by Malcolm Watson, the Music by Alfred J. Caldicott; and Mr. Corney Grain will give for the first time his new musical sketch, "Mossoo in London."

The arrangements for the great triennial Handel Festival, at the Crystal Palace in June, include the performance of several works on the "Selection" day possessing some novelty. The Organ Concerto will be No. 7, in B flat, specially interesting from the fact that it is the only composition in which Handel has included in the score a distinct part for the pedals. The other instrumental works introduced for the first time will be the Overture to "Samson," and that to "Semele." Choruses from "Belshazzar," "Alexander Balus," and the 95th Psalm, will be sung for the first time, also arias from the Italian operas, "Giulio Cesare," "Deidamia." From "Ottone" an aria for baritone will be introduced, which all Handelian biographers aud historians have hitherto declared to be irrevocably lost, the autograph of which, however, was recently found by Dr. A. H. Mann amongst the musical treasures of the Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge.

The great rehearsal will take place on Friday, June 22nd; the "Messiah," Monday, June 25th; a selection, Wednesday, June 27th; and "Israel in Egypt," Friday, June 29th. The tickets for seats south of the centre transept will be issued at the Crystal Palace, and tickets for seats north of the centre transept by Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co., Berners-street, Oxford-street, W. The following are the principal vocalists:—Madame Albani, Madame Nordica, Miss Annie Marriott, and Madame Valleria; Madame Patey and Madame Trebelli; Mr. Edward Lloyd and Mr. Barton McGuckin; Mr. Santley, Mr. Bridson, and Mr. Brereton. The solo organist will be Mr. W. T. Best; organist, Mr. Alfred J. Eyre. Chorus and orchestra will consist of 4,000 performers, conducted by Mr. August Manns.

Very Welsh was the ceremony and the company which did honour to the "chief songstress" of the principality, Miss Mary Davies, on the occasion of her marriage to Mr. William Cadwaladr Davies, Secretary and Registrar of the University College for North Wales, in the little church in Tolmer's-square last week. Music, too, sent its contingent to do honour to one who is one of the most popular and respected of its professors. Madame Patey, Mr. Lloyd, Madame Antoinette Sterling, Mr. Lewis Thomas, Madame Clara Samuell, Mr. Guy, Madame Mudie-Bolinbroke, Mr. Sauvage, Madame Marian Mackenzie, Mr. Vert, Madame Edith Wynne, and Mr. Spencer Curwen were readily recognisable amongst many other personages well known in musical life, besides several of the past and present students of the Royal Academy of Music, where Miss Mary Davies received her professional education.

As the bride walked up the church on her father's arm, Mr. Fountain Meen played the bridal music from "Lohengrin," the same music which served as a "processional" at the weddings of Madame Christine Nilsson and Madame Albani. A wedding hymn in Welsh was sung to the fine old Welsh tune "Salome," and the interlude consisted of Sterndale Bennett's graceful quartet, "God is a Spirit," sung by Misses Owen and Eleanor Rees, Messrs. Hirwen Jones and Daniel Price.

The approaching marriage is announced of another concert and oratorio singer—Miss Agnes Larckom, to Mr. Herbert Jacobs, of the Inner Temple. Miss Larkcom will not, however, give up her profession. April 14th is fixed for the wedding.

Little Otto Hegner is the latest addition to the fast swelling list of infant prodigies. Unlike some of his compeers, however, there is more of the musician and less of the prodigy about him. To see the merry little fellow in his dark suit, set off with an amplitude of white cravat, one would in no wise expect to find that his playing showed a high degree of power and a breadth of touch. Such, however, are the most characteristic features of the performance of this eleven-year-old wonder. In him we have only another example of the dictum that, given a congenial artistic temperament, if you only take a child young enough you can teach him to do anything—provided he "takes to it." That little Otto enjoys his playing, is an all-evident and agreeable feature of the performance.

On the 15th instant, at the National Hospital, Ventnor aged 22, died Louisa Frances Kellett, scholar of the Royal College of Music, second daughter of the late Francis Killett of Dublin. R.I.P.

A skilled musician and a humorous mimic, Mr. Thomas German Reed, who died last week at his residence, St. Croix, Upper East Sheen, Surrey, will be missed by a large circle. The author of the "Gallery of Illustrations" had reached his seventy-first year, and had passed a busy life. When still young, he married an actress of some renown, Miss Priscilla Horton, and she soon came to evince a strong taste for extravaganza of the more refined order. In 1854, after taking part in some of Charles Kean's Shaksperean revivals at the old Princess's, Mrs. German Reed and her husband commenced a long provincial tour with a piece designed to admit of the introduction of parodies of different styles of singing, and the class of entertainment which now bears his name is as popular now as it was thirty years ago.

The German musical papers have been misled by the review of the Princess of Wales's life, as given in the "Graphic," with her portrait as a Doctor of Music, into believing that this musical degree has only just been conferred upon her, and they wonder whether it is Oxford or Cambridge that has paid the compliment to the popular Princess. We believe that it was during the visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales to Ireland, some four or five years ago, that the Dublin University invested the royal lady with the honorary degree of Mus. Doc

The preliminary prospectus of the Hereford Festival has just been issued. Six oratorio performances will be given on the mornings and evenings of Sept. 11 and 12, and the mornings of Sept. 13 and 14, and there will also be a miscellaneous programme and a chamber concert. The chief works selected are Sterndale Bennett's "Woman of Samaria," Sullivan's "Golden Legend" (probably conducted by the composer), Cherubini's "Mass in D minor," Spohr's "God, Thou art great," Schubert's "Song of Miriam," Sir F. Gore-Ouseley's "St. Polycarp," Dr. Hubert Parry's ode, "Blest pair of Sirens," the "Elijah" and "Messiah," and portions of the "Creation" and "Samson." The chief artists will be Madame Albani, Miss Anna Williams, Madame Enriquez, Miss Hilda Wilson, Messrs. Lloyd, Brereton, and Santley. Mr. Carrodus will lead the orchestra, and Dr. Langdon Colborn will conduct. The prospects of the festival are highly satisfactory, and no fewer than 230 stewards have agreed to serve, that is to say, a larger number than at any previous Hereford Festival. The Hon. and Rev. Archdeacon Stanhope and the Rev. G. E. Ashley will act as joint hon. secretaries.

The first performance of the comic opera "Le Dragon dela Reine," at the Alhambra Theatre, Brussels, on Sunday night, was in every way successful. The plot is laid in the year 1736, and the libretto by Messrs. Decourcelle and Beauvallet is throughout interesting and frequently amusing. M. Léopold de Wenzel's music is said to evince originality and abounds in sparkling melodies. The principal rôle was well sustained by Madame Simon-Girard, and Mesdames Lydie Borel and Ollivier, as well as Messrs. Dechesne and Simon Max, in the other leading parts, were applauded. The mise en scène and the ballet were perfect. M. de Wenzel was called twice before the curtain.

Handel's pastoral play, "Acis and Galatea," was put upon the stage of the Court Theatre, at Karlsruhe (under Herr Mottl). It is said that the audience tried in vain to conceal their boredom.

Neitzel's "Dido" was produced at Weimar, on the 18th inst., and achieved considerable success.

DR. SOLIDUS AND HIS PUPIL.

EXTRACTS FROM A CORRESPONDENCE.

(CONCLUSION.)

Frankfort, June 15, 18—.

DEAR SIR,—The proposal in your last letter to discontinue once and for all, discussion of a subject upon which it seems unlikely we shall ever come to an agreement, has my hearty assent. Henceforth, then, let all questions relating to art be rigorously tabooed between us. Allegories often make dangerous arguments; and yours of the lightning conductor, to be complete, should go farther and state what was the ultimate issue of the catastrophe you so graphically describe; how many inhabitants of the town in question profited by the lesson, and to what extent life and property have since been spared by the adoption of a great invention which, but for the first fatal experiment, might have remained unknown in those parts to the present day. The honour instinctively rendered by mankind to the pioneers, whatever their chosen field of discovery, is in no small measure inspired by a consideration of the dangers they knowingly incur. If I for one am prepared to accept the risk, even to the length of offering my own person, when fulfilling for instance the rôle of "conductor" at some future concert the date of which has not yet been fixed: if, with progress for my motto, I would rather fall, supposing I am to fall at all, as a shattered tree, than as a withered trunk, who, among the prudent ones, now so anxious to save their skins, will have a right to cavil at my choice?

But after all, the gist of our dispute lies in the widely divergent notions we hold as to what music really is, and what the extent of its possibilities. I maintain that these are practically unlimited; while you would narrow them to achievements of the past and to such inconsiderable variations upon worn out modes of expression as now alone remain possible. My contention is, that the wide universe teems with music enveloping our existence as does the atmosphere this terrestrial globe; that faint echoes of this infinite harmony, caught by the giant composers of other days, have been sufficient to endow even the restricted forms they adopted with life and the attributes of supreme beauty. Music, like religion, is apt to die in ritual, and it now behoves all sincere lovers of progress to emulate the singleness of heart, the purity of purpose of those who worked in shackles, rather than to worship those shackles as being in any sense the secret of their greatness. Think not I am here running tilt against what are generally understood as the classical forms alone. My temerity goes much farther. I speak not of sonata, or fugue, or any other of the established models, all of which be it admitted have served good purpose and supplied the framework of much priceless achievement. I would go deeper into the heart of things. I would raise the question—surely worth a moment's reflection from the thoughtful musician—whether the very phraseology and fashions of musical idiom, outside of which so-called "cultivated" ears have come to be incapable of recognising any music at all, have not exercised a paralyzing influence upon our art; whether, in short, all of us are not prisoners without knowing it? Is it by reason of the refinement or of the blunting of our perceptions that the intervals and peculiar rhythms of other times and remote countries no longer have significance to civilised ears; are, indeed, actually disagreeable to them? What, too, of the major and minor tones of the Greeks, and other imaginable divisions and subtleties of inflection which, once apprehended, might conceivably open to us a whole world of sound at present utterly beyond the ken of our dwarfed and imprisoned faculties? Melody is the soul of music; harmony, the soul of melody. In connection with these, men fondly imagine they have discovered certain immutable laws, whereas they are still but on the threshold of the subject. Tune—always tune! The country yokel, alive to the simple rhythm of a fiddler's jig, condemned to sit out some long classical master-piece, would complain "There is no tune"; the prim professor, in the presence of some example of more recent development, shakes his head and exclaims, "There is no form." The cases are essentially the same, and probably both professor and yokel, were it possible to confront them with some phases of art as it will be a few centuries hence, would find themselves equally bewildered and disgusted. Sometimes I almost wish Bach had never written a fugue, that the world might see how that wonderful imagination, that far-reaching and eminently anticipatory intellect would have worked when unhampered by the trammels of that most exacting of forms. Even the fixed shapeliness of the sonata, exquisitely as it has been handled by some of the great masters, has been, in my humble opinion, a stumbling-block to the free expression of many an imaginative mind. As for me, I tire of landscape gardening, with its trim walks and formal terraces, its neat lawns, clipped trees, and well-kept hedges, and would fain quit this Watteau-like scenery once and for all. I sigh for the open, and long to roam forest, climb mountains, and wander amid Nature's wildest places—there, with the wide ocean spread before me, and the limitless vault of heaven above, to draw one deep breath of freedom and feel myself in the presence of the infinite. So wish me well on my journey, and believe me none the less, your sincere friend, HAROLD STRAINWING.

Dr. Solidus, London.

London, June 17th, 18—.

SIR,—The only observation that occurs to me after perusing your last extraordinary letter is this: When a young man, with the lesson of life still before him, fancies the ends of a rather vain discussion can be served by calling his former friend and master a withered trunk, it is not only high time that the discussion should be dropped, but also eminently desirable that all communication for the future be discontinued between them.—I am, sir, your most obedient servant, SEBASTIAN SOLIDUS.

Harold Strainwing, Esq., Frankfort.

FIVE YEARS LATER.—TWO NEWSPAPER EXTRACTS.

From a Daily.—In several incidents connected with the production last night of Dr. Solidus's new oratorio, entitled "Lot's Wife," a work formidable both as regards weight and dimensions, yet another proof was afforded of the notable change which has of late years come over the public taste, and the utter hopelessness of attracting even a moderate-sized audience by a display of erudition however profound, of contrapuntal skill however astonishing, when unaccompanied by those qualities of fancy, dramatic force, and imaginative freedom, which alone find favour with modern musical amateurs. The vast area of the Albert Hall almost empty, yawning like a dismal chasm before the excellent orchestra and colossal chorus which the veteran composer and conductor had gathered together and conducted in person, sent back confusing echoes of a really excellent performance, with a persistency almost suggestive of premature encores. Some half-dozen occupants of the stalls, finding themselves the fortunate possessors of many hundred pounds worth, of seats, took advantage of the rare privilege, and shifted and changed about at their own sweet will; while boxes for the most part and the galleries altogether were deserted. The sight, in short, was one calculated to arouse in the minds of thoughtful spectators of a certain age many memories and some reflections, not untinged with sadness, upon the mutability of all human things. . . . To attempt anything like a detailed analysis of the five long parts which make up Dr. Solidus's new work would greatly exceed the limits of our space and probably, in the present state of public taste, serve no useful purpose. One stands almost aghast at this stupendous monument of learning, untiring industry, and inexhaustible contrapuntal resource; fugue following upon fugue; words and sentences and half sentences tossed about from one part of the chorus to another; musical figures ground, elongated, shortened, and twisted, as if caught in the toils of some huge and complex piece of machinery.

One example of the almost superhuman skill displayed by the learned composer in the treatment of his subjects must suffice. The theme in the first part, when Abraham pleads for the condemned cities, is again heard de augmentatione in the duet of thanksgiving (in Canon) sung by Lot and his wife on their escape into the plain; and is made to do service also—this time in "retrograde imitation"—in the scholarly but lengthy chorus, "I have given Ar unto the children of Lot for their possession." A more effective chorus was that descriptive of the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, although here some slight similarity may be traced between Handel's conception of hail and Dr. Solidus's fire and brimstone. But to the curious in such matters the contrast between old methods and new, as illustrated in our composer's mode of dealing with the well known episode of the Pillar of Salt, will have special interest. We all know how some young representative of the modern emotional school would have striven—probably in an orchestral interlude—to delineate the terror, the repentance, the frantic appeals to those dear to her, of Lot's wife, as she feels life slowly ebbing away before the progress of her dread transformation. But not so Dr. Solidus. With consummate ingenuity of contrapuntal device, he seizes the occasion in a double fugue of three subjects, to convey musically an idea of the gradual process of crystallization; and in the rendering of this number—for the first and only time, be it acknowledged—the chorus showed some symptoms of wavering, especially among the soprani. "Lot's Wife" is an essentially choral work, and the few soli, interspersed with "recitativo secco" are of inconsiderable interest and require but brief mention.

. . . .

The conclusion of the oratorio was followed by a hearty and unanimous burst of applause, which, however (owing to circumstances already adverted to), being almost entirely restricted to the performers themselves, might have had the appearance of self-praise to anyone ignorant of the reverent affection in which the veteran master is held by all who have co-operated with him in his gigantic undertaking. Passing under the portico of the gloomy hall into the street, where the services of a veritable army of cabs was at the disposal of about a score of persons, it was impossible to repress a sigh, partly of relief, partly of vague regret, at the reminder so recently brought home to us: "The old order changeth, and old music must make way for the new."

From a Society Paper.—The rosy countenance of Mr. Harold Strainwing, the season's lion, and publishers' hope, had good cause to beam all over with gratification as he bowed before the curtain in acknowledgment of the plaudits which greeted his new operetta, or burlesque, or medley, or whatever else it may be called, produced at the Jollity Theatre last Saturday night. For in "Love and the Ladybird," not only has the lucky young composer scored a second success within the last twelve months, but he has done so in a manner which should make it easy for him to achieve a similar feat as many times hereafter as he likes. Commonplace and trashy the music may be; but of one thing there can be no doubt, Mr. Strainwing understands his public and the trade; and he knows, too, how to turn that knowledge to profitable account; so that with some half-dozen little gold mines in his pocket, in the shape of sentimental ballads, patter-songs, and serio-comic ditties—not to mention a vocal polka that has already taken the town by storm—he may be considered pretty well fortified against the sneers of the more serious critics. If "Kisses in the gloaming" is not altogether new, the composer has probably gone on the principle that audiences at the "Jollity" are for the most part best pleased by tunes resembling something they have heard before. There can be no doubt, on the other hand, as to the success of the ballad for tenor, "Linger moonbeams while ye can," or of the rather mawkish "Oh pangs that ever," and the comic dance of undertakers at the end of the second act fairly brought down the house. I may here mention a fact known only to his intimate friends, that when abroad, not so many years ago, Mr. Strainwing dabbled in music of the extreme transcendental school, but his lucky star as usual befriended him, and he failed signally therein. The cosy little theatre looked its brightest on Saturday, and lorgnettes were levelled throughout the evening in the direction of the stage-box, where sat the charming, flaxen-haired Frau Strainwing, radiant with pleasure and pardonable pride. It was a sight to see that ever devoted slave of the young and pretty, Captain Raffers, who, by the way, with the exception of a darkish tint under the left eye, seems none the worse for the recent little fracas in Brighton—popping in and out of the box on every conceivable excuse during the entr'actes, now with an ice, and now with a joke. To those who watched his movements it was very evident that the gallant captain prefers blue eyes to black. Talking of blue eyes, a good story went the round of the clubs last week, about the veteran Admiral Sir James Mottle, who, it will be remembered——

A COINCIDENCE.

A correspondent has sent to an evening paper an extract from "The Gentleman's Magazine" of January 4, 1788, by way of illustration of the old saying that history repeats itself. It has reference, as our readers will see, to an infant phenomenon of the name of Hofmann, who astonished the world at that time. Unfortunately the phenomenon was a girl instead of a boy, so that there is not much in the coincidence. But the extract itself is interesting, and deserves reproduction. What, by the way, became of Sophia Hofmann in after life? What became of Josef Hofmann in after life? some able editor may ask in the year of grace 1988.

January 4.

Mr. Urban,—You will much oblige me by inserting in your valuable miscellany the following short account of an infant musician, Sophia Hofmann. This child, when only nine months old, discovered so violent an attachment to musical sounds, that, if taken out of a room where any person was playing on an instrument, it was frequently impossible to appease her but by bringing her back. The nearer she was carried to the performer the more delighted she appeared to be, and would often clap her little hands together in accurate time. Her father, who is a very industrious and ingenious musician, applied himself to the cultivation of these favourable symptoms. He taught her by a very singular process the names of the notes, and their situation on the harpsichord; and so successful were his instructions, in aid of her natural genius, that in less than twelve months, being then not more than a year and three-quarters old, she could, with tolerable correctness, play a march, a lesson, and two or three songs, besides a few bars of many other tunes, which she had accidentally heard. At the time I first saw her, which was in November last, she was two years and four months old, and had been under her father's tuition about a year and a half. She played a lesson of Stamitz, a gavot, the air of "Malbrouk," "La Belle Catherine," a German march, and many other tunes with surprising correctness, and, considering the weakness and diminutive size of her fingers, it is really unaccountable how she contrived to manage very distant intervals, and to scramble through difficult passages without interrupting the time or deranging the connection of the harmony. I observed that if she struck a wrong note she did not suffer it to pass, but immediately corrected herself. When she had played for about ten minutes she seemed inclined to quit the instrument, but on my desiring her to play "Malbrouk" again she readily complied, and, to my astonishment, transposed the whole, without the least hesitation or defect, into another key than that in which she had first played it.

It was with a good deal of trouble that she could be prevailed on to sing; but, having once begun, she continued voluntarily at intervals to accompany "How sweet in the woodlands," "Dans votre lit," and two or three other songs with her voice. When she touches a note which is very much out of tune she sometimes stops and laughs, but I have reason to think her ear is not so infallibly sensible of such defects as Crotch's is reported to be, for if the dissonant note be struck by itself, or, indeed, if it do not occur in one of her own tunes, she does not seem to be aware of it or to be affected by it. A gentleman, I remember, told me that having put his finger one day on an organ which was out of tune in a room where Crotch was sitting, the boy, then only three years old, turned away with looks of great uneasiness, and cried very vehemently when his brother attempted to bring him back to the instrument. He added that his ear was so exquisite as to enable him, when even an unskilful person pressed down nine or ten of the keys together, to name every note which composed the sound with great rapidity and accuracy. It would be injustice to neglected genius were I to lose this opportunity of reminding the public of what they seem to be ignorant—that William Crotch is still living and at Cambridge; and that this extraordinary boy, after maintaining a mother and a brother for more than nine years out of a life of twelve by the exhibition of talent which nature has, it is hoped, endowed him with for nobler purposes, is still left to rely on precarious bounty for his support. If we consider his origin and his unsettled course of living, his powers must appear very wonderful. At seven years of age he became his own instructor in the mechanical part of music, and so well has he succeeded that now, in his thirteenth year, he has almost finished an oratorio, which is said to contain such marks of invention and such sublime combinations of harmony as promise one day to give us what we yet want, an original English style. Independent, indeed, of his favourite art, he possesses an active and vigorous mind, which, under proper cultivation, may hereafter display a combination of talents rarely, if ever, found in a musician. The newspapers have lately been boasting of a laudable propensity among the rich and noble of the present day to musical patronage; will none of these step forward to rescue the name of Crotch from our already too copious catalogue of deserted genius?

But to resume. The little heroine of my narrative—Sophia Hofmann—is certainly more indebted to the persevering ingenuity of her father than to any effort of her own natural talents, for those extraordinary powers which she displays at so early an age; at the same time it ought to be observed that, had nature afforded a less favourable soil, the seeds of instruction could scarcely yet have taken root, much less have produced such promising fruits from an infant mind. She appears to be perfectly well acquainted with musical notation, for if you show her any tune which she can play, she knows it at the first glance, and will stop, her father tells me, at a wrongly pointed note. The foregoing remarks are hastily made, after a first visit. I mean, when I go to London, to study her more accurately; and will take an opportunity of giving you more particular information on a subject well worthy not only of public attention but of public patronage. B. A.

Next Week's Music.

THIS DAY (SATURDAY).

Afternoon Concert	Crystal Palace.	3
Afternoon Concert	Albert Hall.	3

MONDAY, 2.

National Concert	Albert Hall.	7.45

DEATH OF MR. WALTER BACHE.

It is with regret that we record the death of Mr. Walter Bache, after a short illness, on Monday afternoon, at 17, Eastbourne Terrace. Mr. Bache was a pianist of considerable merit, but he will chiefly be remembered as the champion in England of Liszt's music, which, but for him, would have been very little known in this country. With Mr. Bache, the advocacy of Liszt's claims to greatness was a kind of sacred mission to which he directed all his energy, much of his time, and much of his hardly-earned money; for it is well known that the annual concerts which he carried on for a number of years were given at a considerable pecuniary loss. These concerts were almost exclusively devoted to Liszt's music; several of the "Symphonic Poems," and the concertos in E flat and A, were here introduced to the notice of the public, which at first was very little inclined to respond to the call. The taste for Liszt's music was of slow growth in this country, and is even now far from firmly established. During the master's visit to this country, Mr. Bache was his constant companion, and was also one of the chief promoters of the scholarship founded in memory of Liszt at the Royal Academy. The friendship between master and pupil dated back as far as 1862, when Mr. Bache made Liszt's acquaintance, and stayed with him for the space of three years, after which he returned to England, and settled in London, as a pianoforte teacher of great reputation and extensive practice. As a pianist, Mr. Bache represented the school to which he belonged, and although he did not play with the brilliancy characteristic of Sophie Menter, Stavenhagen, and others of Liszt's pupils, his earnestness of purpose, his energy, and his unwearying study, made up for the absence of what Liszt would call feu sacré. Mr. Bache was born at Birmingham, in 1842, the son of a Unitarian Minister, and belonged to a thoroughly musical family. An elder brother, who was a composer and violinist of great promise, died at a very early age, and a sister, Miss Constance Bache, is also an ardent lover of the art, who amongst other things has translated the words of many of Liszt's songs. Walter Bache received his musical education at Leipsic, where he was a pupil of Moscheles, but the chief impulse and final direction of his studies he owed to the master to whom his subsequent life was devoted.

Music Publishers' Weekly List.

SONGS.

Angel and the Child, The (A to E) ...	Sidney Shaw ...	Woolhouse.
Aureola, The (C to F)	G. Byass... ...	„
Beyond the Shadows (A to E)... ...	Carlo Ducci ...	Ascherberg.
Can you Forget? (D to D)	Sidney Shaw ...	Woolhouse.
Guardami (E to F)	S. Emily Oldham	„
Loyal and True (C to F)	„	„
Serenade (E to F)	J. C. Forester	„
Twilight	J. E. Vernham	„
Valley of Dreams, The (C to F) ...	Zuccardi ...	Ascherberg.
Technical Exercises for the Pianoforte (Deppe)	Ehrenfechter ...	Weekes.
Birmingham and Midland Musical Guild, Report	...	Myers, Birmingham.

VIOLIN AND VIOLONCELLO.

Elégie	G. Saint-George	Woolhouse
Feuilles d'Album, 6 morceaux	„	„
Legende	H. F. Sharpe ...	„
Idylle	„ ...	„
Reverie by M. Bourne, Transcribed for Violin by	G. Papini ...	Ascherberg.
Revoir by M. Bourne, Transcribed for Violin by	„ ...	„
Romance in D	Sidney Shaw ...	Woolhouse.

NOTE FROM PARIS.

In the last scene of the fourth act of Benjamin Godard's new opera, "Jocelyn," the revolutionary tunes of the "Marseillaise," "Ca ira," and the "Carmagnole" are treated in a masterly manner during the procession of the condemned bishop to the scaffold, and there is no doubt that this part of the score will be frequently heard at concerts.

The Organ World.

ON FIGURED BASSES.

By Charles Joseph Frost, Mus. Doc., Cantab, Fel. Coll. Org.

Twenty years ago, or thereabouts, figured bass reading was an accomplishment but few trained musicians possessed. This was accounted for by its having dropped out of use, as far as published music was concerned, and so there was no need of the accomplishment, except to cathedral organists, who had to accompany some old music from the old scores which had merely the voice parts printed, and underneath which a figured bass was all that was supplied by way of accompaniment. Such a figured bass, in the absence of a more elaborated accompaniment, was a most necessary thing as it enabled the organist to grasp the harmonies of the score with much greater facility than the reading of the mere voice parts alone would afford.

Candidates for Fellowship at the College of Organists, who have to read a piece of vocal score in which the alto and tenor parts are printed upon the C clef, would doubtless also be grateful to the examiner, if they were to vouchsafe them a similar help, by means of a few figures put to the bass of that examination test. But, as figured bass reading forms a separate test, perhaps the examiners are wise in testing to the utmost the candidate's knowledge of, and facility of reading from, the C clefs without such extraneous aid, helpful as it might be.

Even in the present day the figured bass remains just as much a dead letter, as far as published music is concerned, as it was twenty years ago; but the increase and popularity of examinations has brought about a necessary cultivation of this accomplishment, as it is included in some of the schemes, so that a candidate's chances of success are much diminished, unless he or she goes up well prepared in this particular.

As no one in the present day dreams of publishing even an anthem or service, with merely a figured bass by way of accompaniment, students have had some difficulty in getting the necessary material for practice at such work They have been compelled to haunt old book stores for works at least a century and a half old, or to utilise all the harmony treatises that contained figured basses by way of exercises, or else to get up an accumulation of old examination papers. But such difficulties for future students will be lessened. Since the publication of such works as the National Society of Professional Musicians Book of Examination Questions, a book of the Trinity College examination papers, and one or two other kindred works, which will afford them a fair amount of material. One of our modern harmony books goes so far as to renounce the figured bass theory altogether, but considering its universal adoption for the purpose of harmony exercises, it is questionable wisdom to drop it altogether, and may result, in the long run, in such a book being fought shy of by students on this account. Of course it is well understood that a knowledge of harmony is indispensable to figured bass reading, which is a natural growth of it. It would be possible, of course, for one not having studied harmony to get a certain amount of acquaintance with the system of figuring the interval from the bass notes, and with such a knowledge to be able to play a little from a figured bass; but it stands to reason that the progressions must of necessity be faulty, for it would be impossible for such a one to properly prepare and resolve the discords, avoid consecutives, and the like, who had never learnt the laws on those subjects. It is also well understood that an advanced student will thoroughly know, from the figures, the harmonies that are intended to accompany a figured bass, if only time is allowed to think it all out, and work it out upon paper. But to do such a thing at sight at the keyboard, is a very different thing, and so means, in addition to all this, some hard practice at the actual work itself, which, though supplementary to all the rest, cannot well be gained by other means. Practice of this kind, in its earliest stages, should be in the simplest form, and contain nothing but common chords, then the addition of their inversions, and so add the more complicated harmonies by degrees. On this account, a very fair insight into the thing is obtained by going through the figured bass exercises of an ordinary harmony book, which thus approaches them systematically. When a little freedom in the art is obtained in this way, wider experience can be had by going through basses from other sources, which do not introduce the difficulties so systematically; for as such gradual approach to them is a help in the first place, so will it be necessary that no such help is forthcoming for the student in later stages. It would be more straightforward work too for him, if their was more agreement amongst those who write figured basses as to methods of doing so. The variety of ways of figuring to express the same thing, tends to make the task of playing at sight, from a figured bass, a more uncertain one than it need be. It must readily be assumed that the less figuring there is to be read, the better for quick sight reading, and on this account not one figure more should be put down than is actually necessary to express the harmony that is intended. With this object in view, it is generally accepted that all unfigured bass notes are to bear common chords, and that no figuring of $\substack{5\\3}$ or $\substack{8\\5\\3}$ is in the least necessary, except by way of contradiction of a previous harmony on the same bass note, or when either of these is affected by an accidental. In the inversion $\substack{6\\3}$ the simple 6 is universally accepted as quite sufficient to express it in all cases where the third is not inflected; but no abbreviation of the $\substack{6\\4}$ can be made while the single 6 is accepted for the first inversion, and the 4 for the suspension of a 4-3. To come to the dominant (or any other) seventh, the simple 7 expresses all that is necessary much more concisely than the full $\substack{7\\5\\3}$; the suspended 7-6 being merely the first inversion of a common chord with the root delayed, never includes a 5 (unless specially figured) like the plain 7 does when not followed by a 6. On this account the simple figuring 7-6 is ample, instead of the full $\begin{smallmatrix}7&6\\3&-\end{smallmatrix}$ Where the 5 is also suspended in this chord, or rather inversion, for it is the first inversion of a suspended 9-8, it must always be figured $\substack{7\\5}$ 6, though, perhaps, it may be safer and clearer, even though it is most undesirable, to put in one figure really unnecessary to show the resolution of the 5 in the figuring as well as the 7, by setting it thus: $\begin{smallmatrix}7&6\\5&6\end{smallmatrix}$. The inversions of the chord of the seventh (not the suspensions) are abbreviated thus: $\substack{6\\5\\3}$ to simply $\substack{6\\5}$ $\substack{6\\4\\3}$ to $\substack{4\\3}$ and $\substack{6\\4\\2}$ to simply 2. The late Professor Macfarren had a way of simplifying the figuring of last inversions of suspensions, and the suspensions of complete chords by simply drawing a line or lines horizontally from the figuring of the first of the two bass notes, and thus indicating the continuation of the intervals built over the first, for the second. In the case of the last inversion of a suspended fourth, $\begin{smallmatrix}5&-\\2&-\end{smallmatrix}$ was sufficient to show $\substack{5\\2}$ 6, and in the last inversion of a suspended ninth, $\begin{smallmatrix}4&-\\2&-\end{smallmatrix}$ did instead of $\begin{smallmatrix}4&5\\2&3\end{smallmatrix}$. To experts at this kind of thing such little things may not be very important but to the average student it is the saving of a thought, by the condensation of two thoughts into one, and so becomes a gain or facility in reading their figured bass. As it is an understood thing that harmonies only are figured, passing notes do not claim our attention. At the same time, it must be borne in mind that when a composer is writing a figured bass, which is his musical shorthand, he may wish a passing note here and there, which he may dot in now and then with a figure. To make this clear from doubt, and to show that it is really a passing note, the harmony notes should invariably be figured in addition, otherwise it is impossible for any reader of figured basses to discern what is intended. Everything that will clear a path of doubt and tend to set in the clearest and concisest manner possible the ideas intended is to be hailed with delight, as enabling a student to appear at his best when undergoing such an examination test. The times are not so far remote when the average candidate for the College of Organists' examination came well-primed up with his Bach fugue or Mendelssohn sonata; but his figured bass found him in sorry plight, and even if now there is not that close observance of that slow and steady time which is looked for, the subject shews that it is by degrees getting that attention which its importance demands.

ON REGISTERING.
IV.

The various branches of the art of registering may be formulated under these heads—organic, antiphonal, rhythmical,—as illustrative of form outlines, as showing up interweaved melodies or counterpoints, as orchestral or suggestive of other instruments than the organ. Then the work of stop-changing is naturally brought to bear upon the two great instrumental functions, the primary faculty of enunciating solo work and the secondary art of accompaniment playing. Certainly the first duty of the organ student in this matter is learning how to make what may be called organic combinations. This work is divided into two sections, one concerning the building up of foundation tone and superadded harmonic strata, the other the effective combination of organ tones, pure and simple, or more or less tinged with borrowed, or rather imitated, orchestral tone-colour effects. The study of this principal department of the business of registering demands long and patient attention, and an affection for, and understanding of, the genius of the instrument. Neglect of this study not only tends to the ineffective performance of classical organ music, but induces a too decided leaning towards imitative orchestration and a consequent loss of good organic style. The antiphonal and rhythmical views [of the art of stop-changing have a distinct bearing upon each other, as tone-contrasted sentences are for the most part divided into figures or sentences having measured or rhythmical proportions; though short figures and even single chords may at times receive antiphonal treatment. These linked together departments of the stop-changing art, like the related divisions the distinct enunciation of form outlines and the suggestion of orchestral effects, come very often under the head of manual changing, owing to the rapidity with which the changes have to be affected. Albeit, changes of manual and the employment of different manuals at the same time, are matters entirely to be ranged as registering. Antiphonal and rhythmical tone-changes call for a practised eye and a logical mind. Sentences have to be inspected or rather dissected, proportioned, and set clearly forth, very much as though they formed portions of musical propositions. Then, to advance a stage, the study of musical architecture or form is indispensable to the organist engaged in the work of enunciating the presentation and return of themes, not to speak of the more fragmentary utterances and reminders of the process called development. The registering for combined melodies or contrasted and interweaved counterpoints, call for both organic and orchestral knowledge regarding tone-colour effects, and admirable illustrations of this delicate art may be found in Bach's Sonatas. The orchestral or imitative effects demand not only a general acquaintance with orchestral idioms, but an intimate knowledge of the compass and powers of individual instruments.

E. H. Turpin.

MUSICAL ELOCUTION.
By G. Ernest Lake.
Section II.—INSTRUMENTAL ELOCUTION.

I feel I have already trespassed at such length upon your kind attention, that I will but briefly embody a few ideas upon the affinity of elocution with its purely instrumental interpretation. We all know that notes, even with their indications of light and shade, are but as statues of more or less beautiful appearance, and that it is the "perusing" as indicated by legato curves and slurs that can alone vivify and endue them with life, soul, and animate significance. It is not altogether beside the question to pause and ask whether some better sign could not be found to indicate the legato, and some better word to express it. For myself I am inclined to think the sign sufficient, provided another symbol such as the straight clamp used by Sir Sterndale Bennett could be universally used to indicate a bind or tie. At present the confusion caused is as frequent as it is mischievous. There is also undoubted need of a word to express the legato curve and the slur, and to define by a word the former as implying a rhythmic sentence, and the latter a word or syllable only; as it is, the two meanings are frequently and erroneously confused. I will, therefore, ask leave to express my meanings by the use of the aforesaid terms, curve and slur. We often hear it said that there is poetry in sculpture, which is true enough; but whether the statue be merely an abstract personification of beauty, and its poetry, therefore, merely subjective; or, whether, by representing definite action, its poetry be objective; yet that poetry is necessarily restricted in number of ideas. So also it is with painting. Abstractive music again is the same—in the croon of the wind, in the song of the waters, in the hum of summer insects; in all of these it is the poetry of Nature, doubtless understood of the Creator to whom it is addressed. But when music was formulated by the mind of man it became obedient to the laws of rhythm. "Rhythm"—I translate from Rousseau—is in music the difference of movement which results from "the quickness or slowness, the length or brevity of the time." Moore still more appositely calls it "The measured beat which marks the character and expression of music."

Music is, therefore, the rhythmical evoking, through the media of aural sensation of Idea, but differing from the poetry of speech in that, whereas ordinary poetry conveys much the same subject matter to all and sundry, music presents varied mental pictures to various hearers. By this means not only the doers of music, but the hearers also become poets for the time being—poets, great or little, according to the degrees of purity of soul and loftiness of mind. They are supplied with the framework of poetry in melody and rhythm. It only remains for them to add the subject. In hearing great oratory and in reading great books, I believe that it is often the music of the idea which lifts us to ecstatic heights, and that in listening to grand music it is the idea conveyed by the rhythmical sound which produces the delicious result. Whether the heights be those of joy or sorrow, the pleasure and its causes are the same. And now, if these affinities be acknowledged it remains to see how this rhythmical poetry is to be expressed or elocutionised—to coin a word—by instrumental musicians. In Dr. Stainer's primer of composition—which is strongly recommended for study by would-be executants as well as authors—it is shown how very frequently the finest thoughts of the greatest masters are set forth in the simpler measures of the most familiar hymn metres, and here let me say that I have the less hesitation in quoting from the excellent work just mentioned, because that before I was acquainted with it, I had been in the habit of explaining to pupils the phrasing of rhythm by the addition of words and metrical lines, according to the character of the music. Now whether we select sacred or secular verses (the word is used in its strict sense as implying not a stanza, but a line of poetry), their use illustraing the elocution of musical sentences, is enormous, and whilst again deprecating the application of any individual subjective idea or ideas to music, I venture to think that the temporary addition of truly poetical words to a students' edition of "songs without words," or the classical slow movements, would be of the greatest assistance to their proper elocutionary study. Such a word as to-morrow, set to notes which were covered with a slur, would at once indicate to the student where the proper accent should fall, and show why it is that the last note of a slur should be dactyllic, or, in other words, short and light.

It has been shown that loric production, or sustaining power is absolutely essential to vocal elocution; it is just as requisite for instrumental, and there is a direct analogy between the two. The art of cantabile playing—now-a-days, alas! so fatally neglected—is indispensible to him who would make his poetical utterances reach the breasts of his hearers. The preposterous notion that organ playing necessarily injures pianoforte touch, is now, happily, fast dying out, it was engendered in the days of imperfect organ mechanism, and has no longer a raison d'etre in these days of pneumatic "actions"—tubular or otherwise. The organist who is also a pianist, is the best possible executant of sustained and cantabile accrement. Hans Von Bülow has given his emphatic testimony to this, and for far higher authorities we gave Mendelssohn in practice, and Schumann in theory. We know how the latter advises all to neglect no opportunity of practising the organ; would that some of his numerous young lady worshippers would nowadays adopt his advice! I have never met with but one female pupil who had nothing to learn in the matter of legato touch and tone production, and it turned out that her mother (a friend of Moscheles) had made her, as a little girl, practice upon the harmonium.

(To be continued.)

SPECIFICATIONS.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

The following is the specification of an organ built by Messrs. Bevington and Sons, Rose-street, Soho, London, for All Saints' Church, Hunter's-hill, Sydney:—

GREAT ORGAN, CC TO G, 56 NOTES.

Double Diapason	16 ft.	Flauto Traverso	4 ft.
Open Diapason	8 ,,	Principal	4 ,,
Salcional	8 ,,	Full Mixture (various).
Claribel	8 ,,	Trumpet	8 ,,

SWELL ORGAN, CC TO G, 56 NOTES.

Double Diapason	16 ft.	Harmonic Flute	4 ft.
Open Diapason	8 ,,	Principal	4 ,,
Hohl Flöte	8 ,,	Mixture (various).
Bell Gamba	8 ,,	Cornopean	8 ,,
Vox Celestes	8 ,,	Oboe	8 ,,
Vox Angelica	8 ,,

CHOIR ORGAN, CC TO G, 56 NOTES.

Dulciana	8 ft.	Suabe Flöte	4 ft.
Lieblich Gedact	8 ,,	Clarionet et Bassoon ...	8 ,,

PEDAL ORGAN, CCC TO F, 30 NOTES.

Open Diapason	16 ft.	Bourdon	16 ft

All Stops to CC.

COUPLERS.

Swell to Great.
Swell to Choir.
Swell to Pedal.
Great to Pedal.
Choir to Pedal
Pedal to Super Octave.

Three Composition Pedals to Great Organ. Two ditto to Swell Organ. Part Tubular Pneumatic Action to Great Organ. Front and side pipes decorated.

DONCASTER.

Description of organ erected in the Spring-gardens Chapel, Doncaster, by Casson's Patent Organ Company, Limited, Denbigh, two manual instrument, great and choir on lower manual (Casson's Patent):—

GREAT MANUAL.

Bourdon, 16ft. 58 pipes.
Open diapason, 8ft. 58 pipes.
Clarabella, 8ft. 58 pipes.
Principal, 4ft. 58 pipes.
Mixture, III. and IV. ranks, 220 pipes.
Choir to great.
Swell to great.

GREAT PEDALIER.

Quint, 10⅔ft., 12 notes in 10⅔ft. pitch; remainder in actual 32ft. from No. 1.
Open diapason, 16ft. 12 pipes, remainder from No. 2.
Bourdon, 16ft. from No. 1.
Great to pedal.
2 Composition pedals acting on all the above stops and couplers.

CHOIR ORGAN.

Dulciana, 8ft. 51 pipes to gamut G. [from 3.
Gedackt, 8ft. 46 pipes, bass
Flauto traverso, 4ft. 58 pipes.
Swell to choir.

CHOIR PEDALIER.

Bourdon, 16ft. No. 8 in duplicate.
Choir to pedal.

SWELL ORGAN.

Harmonic flute, 8ft. 46 pipes.
Viola, 8ft. 58 pipes (7 stopped)
Vox Célestes, 8ft. 46 pipes.
Gemshorn, 4ft. 58 pipes.
Trumpet, 8ft. 58 pipes.

SWELL PEDALIER.

Bourdon, 16ft. No. 8 in duplicate.
Swell to Pedal.

GENERAL ACCESSORIES.

2 Casson's Patent Pedal Helps.
2 Casson's Patent Manual Helps.
Swell Pedal.
Wind Indicator—signal,

OAK CASE.

The front prospect Pipes being in bright "spotted" metal.

SUMMARY.

Sounding Stops	16
Accessory Ditto	8
Total draws	24
Total pipes	897

The above Organ is constructed to carry out, so far as means admit, Mr. Casson's principles of Organ-building. These principles are as follows; those marked * being adopted in this case.

PRINCIPLES.

* It is necessary that each division of the Organ (Great Swell, &c.) be absolutely complete. To this end:—

1. * Each Division must have its special Pedal Division, called a Pedalier.
2. * All couplers are stops of the division which they augment, e.g., Swell to Great a stop of the Great Organ, Choir to Pedal a stop of the Choir Pedalier.
3. * Combination actions must govern a complete division, i.e., all the Couplers and other Manual and Pedal Stops.
4. The pipes of the Swell Pedalier must be in the Swell box.
5. * The stops of each division must form one group.

PRACTICE.

* More than one Pedal Clavier is impracticable; any Pedalier must therefore be attachable to it (to the simultaneous exclusion of others) by stud called a "Pedal Help."

* When two Manual Divisions are coupled, the Pedal Help of the augmented division must attach the Pedaliers of both.

* If a Pedal Stop be suitable for more than one division it must draw and work separately for each.

Any Pedalier may contain special melodic stops.

* Two or more Manual Divisions (called in this case sub-divisions) may be attachable to one Manual Clavier by Manual Helps. In this case the couplers must be allotted separately to each Sub-division, and each Sub-division is subject to all the above principles.

RECITAL NEWS.

NICE (FRANCE) AMERICAN EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—An organ recital was given on March 10th. Programme:—

Choral with Variations	Henry Smart.
Six Fugues on the name "Bach"—No. 2	Schumann.
Vocal Solo "The First Palm Sunday"...	J. Faure.
Mr. Charles Copland.
Sonata No. 2	Mendelssohn.
Intermezzo	A. Macbeth.
Andante con moto.............................	Hesse.
Lied ohne Worte..............................	Mendelssohn.
Vocal Solo "There is a green hill"	Gounod.
Mr. George Aspinall.
Marche religieuse	Gounod.
Movement from a Sonata....................	Dussek.
Chorus "Then round about the starry throne"	Handel.
Postlude (Triumphal March)...............	Westbrook.

Organist, Mr. B. Parsons, B.A. (St. John's College, Cambridge), and A.C.O.

ST. MICHAEL'S CHURCH, WHITBY.—An organ recital, by Mr. T. J. Hoggett, with vocal and instrumental items, was given on Monday evening, March 12th. Programme:—

Verset de Procession	Th. Dubois.
Sonata, No. 3	Mendelssohn.
Barcarolle (violin)	Spohr.
Mr. H. Hallgate.
Solo, Quartette, and Duet, with Hymn from "Crucifixion"	Stainer.
Rev. W. Ingram, Rev. A. G. Austen, and Messrs. W. Walters and J. Beadnell.
Barcarolle from 4th Concerto	Bennett.
Trio Violin 'Cello Organ	Rheinberger.
Messrs. Hallgate, Greenwell, and Hoggett.
Toccata in G	Th. Dubois.
Anthem, "Turn Thy Face"	Attwood.
The Choir.
Air, with Variations	W. Rea.
Violoncello Solo Sarabande Gavotte	G. F. Handel.
Mr. L. W. Greenwell.
Cornelius March	Mendelssohn.
Postlude

WHITBY WEST CLIFF CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.—An organ recital was given by Mr. T. J. Hoggett, on Feb. 27, at half-past seven o'clock. Programme:—

Overture in E minor	G. Morandi.
Air, "Angels ever bright and fair"	Handel.
Miss Doughty.
Adagio in D major	E. J. Hopkins.
Fugue in A minor	J. S. Bach.
Duet, "I waited for the Lord"	Mendelssohn.
Mr. Newbitt and Mrs. Watson.
Cantilene in A minor	H. Salomé.
Gavotte in A major	A. Thomas.
Air, "O, rest in the Lord"	Mendelssohn.
Miss Coster.
Toccata in G. major	T. Dubois.
Andante con variazione	W. Rea.
Quartette, "Glory to Thee, my God, this night"	Gounod.
Postlude in D	E. T. Chipp.

ST. NICHOLAS, COLE ABBEY.—An organ recital was given on Tuesday last, March 20, at St. Nicholas, Cole Abbey, by Miss Buck, a student at this college, of which the subjoined was the programme:—

Sonata	Salomé.
Allegretto	Gladstone.
Benediction	Saint Saëns.
Toccata	Widor.
Cantilene	Dubois.
Fantasia	Scotson Clark.
Offertoire	Léfébure Wely.

All the numbers were correctly and effectively played, especially the sonata by Salomé and the toccata by Widor. The next organ recital at this church will be on April 10 by Miss Edroff.

Dr. Stainer's "Crucifixion," with organ accompaniment, was sung at St. Mary's, Berkeley-square, on Maunday Thursday, 29th, preceded by a shortened evensong at seven o'clock. Mr. John E. West conducted, and Mr. H. C. Tonking presided.

CHATHAM.—Mr. H. C. Tonking gave a recital in the Congregational Church, on Wednesday evening, March 14. The following was the programme:—

Organ concerto in B flat (No. 2)	Handel.
(Introduction—allegro, adagio. allegretto)
Toccata and fugue in D minor	J. S. Bach.
Gavotte in F, "Canon in the Octave"	Martini.
Judex, "Mors et Vita"	Gounod.
Gavotte in A, "Mignon"	Ambroise Thomas.
Grand chœur in D	Alex. Guilmant.

Mr. B. M. Carrodus and Mdlle. Vagnolini were the violinists.

WESLEYAN CENTENARY CHAPEL, DEWSBURY.—A recital on the grand organ was given by S. W. Pilling, Esq., on March 22. Vocalist, Miss Effie Thomas (Huddersfield):—

Fugue in E flat	J. S. Bach.
Andante (G major)	Batiste.
Air, "Jerusalem, Thou that killest the Prophets" (St. Paul)	Mendelssohn.
Fantasie pour orgue	Saint Saëns.
Allegretto	Mendelssohn.
Recit. and arioso, "I will sing of Thy great mercies"	Mendelssohn.
Marche funebre et chant seraphique	Guilmant.
Introduction and variations on "Pleyel's German Hymn" (M.S.) (By Desire.)	Lemare.
Andante solenelle, "Evening Prayer"	Smart.
Sacred song, "The City of Rest"	Pinsuti.
Marcia villereccia	Polibio Fumagalli.
Cantilène (M.S.)	Grison.
Overture, "Les Martyrs"	Donizetti.

Notes.

The ex-Empress Eugenie lately purchased of Messrs. Metzler and Co., Great Marlborough-street, one of Mason and Hamlin's Liszt Model American Organs for use in the Memorial Chapel at Farnboro', beneath which, in a Sarcophagus, repose the remains of the late Emperor Napoleon III., and the Prince Imperial.

An unusual course has just been taken by the Rev. A. Poole, vicar of Ryde, regarding the occasional presence of Dissenters in the church choir. For some time past, members of the Philharmonic Society of Ryde, including several Nonconformists, have assisted at special services in the parish church, out of goodwill towards their conductor, the organist. No objection seems to have been entertained until lately, when the vicar, wishing, perhaps, to make an example, gave an order that a lady, daughter of the present Mayor, should no longer be permitted to assist in the musical service.

The venerable Miss Gertrude Rapp, despite her seventy-five years, performed some excellent selections on the organ, at the eighty-third anniversary of the founding of the Economite Society, celebrated recently.—Pittsburg Bulletin.

The pitch of the great organ in the Springer Music Hall, in Cincinnati, is now being lowered about three-eights of a tone. Since the subject of a lower pitch was agitated a few years ago by the principal musical journals of the country, there has been a general concession to the demand. The change in this organ is made to accommodate the pitch of the orchestra, so that the instrument can be used at the coming May festival. This instrument, one of the largest in existence, has four manuals and about 100 stops.

Dr. W. Spark thus writes in the columns of a contemporary:—"Mons. Alexandre Guillmant has announced four concerts at the Trocadero, Paris, for the 5th, 12th, 19th, and 26th April, and this talented Parisian organist will introduce works chiefly by his favourite composers, Bach and Handel, though a fair sprinkling of contemporary composers will also be represented. But how is it that many beautiful compositions for orchestra and organ by the immortal Mozart—all charming, melodious, and effective—are not produced and brought to the front at these specialité concerts? It ought to be known that Mozart has written fifteen single movements for the organ with accompaniments for a small orchestra. Pieces of that sort, generally of a brilliant and melodious character, were performed at Salzburg during service, instead of the Graduales, until this custom was abolished in 1873 by order of the archbishop. The German editor who has compressed three out of these fifteen movements (published by Messrs. Breitkopf and Härte in their complete editions of Mozart's works) into a sonata, and has added the necessary marks for execution, with a cadenza, and hopes that they will be in this form a welcome addition to the scanty literature for organ and orchestra; the more so as they are original compositions by Mozart." Some of these works were heard at a lecture given by Dr. Sawyer before the members of the College of Organists.

Members and friends of the College of Organists are reminded that tickets (4s. each, exclusive of wine) for the Annual College Dinner, an important social and academical gathering, may be obtained at the college. The dinner is fixed for Monday, April 9th, at 6.30, at the Holborn Restaurant.

Recently Mr. Ernest Fowles, a well-known organist, was violently assaulted by the Rev. T. R. Smithson. The unhappy affair was duly reported, and much sympathy has been expressed for Mr. Fowles and his relatives.

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS' CALENDAR.

On Tuesday next March 27th, the library will be open to members from 7 to 10; April 9th, "Annual College Dinner;" April 10th, Special Lecture, by Dr. E. J. Hopkins, on "The English Mediæval Church Organ;" April 24th, Lecture, by Dr. F. J. Sawyer, on "The Primary Rules of Keyboard Fingering;" May 22nd, Lecture; June 26th, Lecture; July 17th, 18th, 19th, F.C.O. Examination; July 20th, Diploma Distribution; July 24th, 25th, 26th, A.C.O. Examination; July 27th, Diploma Distribution. Other arrangements and particulars will be duly announced.

E. H. TURPIN, Hon. Sec.

95, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, W.C.

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

THE PRIMA DONNA:

Her History and Surroundings, from the 17th to the 19th Century. By H. SUTHERLAND EDWARDS. Gives a picture of the life, professional and social, of every prima donna down to the present day. Two vols., demy 8vo, 24s.

"Odd corners of operatic history have been ransacked for the apt anecdotes and characteristic touches that here give life to the portrait."—Musical World.

"Volumes so full, not only of useful fact, but of pleasant anecdote and gossip, that they are sure to be read, not only with profit, but with pleasure." —Globe.

MEMOIRS of COUNT HORACE DE VIEL CASTEL.

A Chronicle of Events, Political and Social, during the reign of Napoleon III., years 1851—1864. Translated by CHARLES BOUSFIELD. Two vols., demy 8vo, 30s.

"What makes his memoirs such entertaining reading is that he has not only a good memory for bad stories, but that in his rapid portraiture he shows something of the power, of the shrewd insight, and of the graphic wit of a Saint Simon. Through the scandals are scattered curious and piquant revelations.—Times.

REMINGTON AND CO., Henrietta-street, Covent Garden.

By FREDERICK HELMORE.

Just published, price Sixpence. Dedicated to SIR ARTHUR S. SULLIVAN.

THE ITALIAN REGISTERS.

VOCE DI PETTO. VOCE DI GOLA. VOCE DI TESTA.

By the same Author.

SPEAKERS, SINGERS, AND STAMMERERS. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

SINGING METHOD. No. 1. The Little Ones' Book. Containing the Songs in "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland," and "Through the Looking Glass." Also, the Nursery Rhymes, Easy Rounds, &c., used in his "Little Ones' Classes." Fcap. 4to, 1s.

SINGING METHOD. No. 2. The First Reading Book. Containing a Catechism on the Art of Singing Music from Notes, followed by Scale and Chord Exercises, by the practice of which Pupils rapidly acquire the Knowledge and Feeling for Harmony, so necessary in PART SINGING. Illustrated by pleasant Rounds, Duets. and Trios. Fcap. 4to, 1s.

London: J. MASTERS and CO., 78, New Bond Street.

ORGANISTS AND ORGAN STUDENTS.

You are kindly requested to write for Ainsworth's "New Patent Organ Pedal Combination List." Ainsworth's "New Patent" is perfectly unique and may be combined easily with any Piano. It is the only one which may be safely combined with any Piano without deteriorating the instrument. Having put down at my works two engines and machinery of the most desirable kind, I am now supplying my goods at a price which enables every organist and organ student to have always ready for use in his Studio an

ORGAN PEDAL PIANO,

AFFORDING PERFECTLY UNIQUE PEDAL PRACTICE.

34, Sheen Park, Richmond.

DEAR SIR,—I have deferred writing to comment upon your Pedals and Action now attached to my pianoforte until I could satisfy myself of their utility and efficiency. I can now conscientiously say that they more than fulfil all my anticipations. Although I am no carpenter, aided by your lucid diagram I had little difficulty in attaching them myself, and it is impossible to over-estimate the comfort they give to me or to conceive the saving of time one experiences in one's own room.—Believe me, yours truly,

BURNHAM HORNER, F.R. Hist.S.

To Mr. Mr. Ainsworth.

DEAR SIR,—It gives me great pleasure to bear testimony to the perfection of your Invention. I am more than satisfied with your Patent Action and Organ Pedals, and consider them worth double the money. Organists and organ students who desire to improve in the Art of Pedalling, which is so essential to a good organist, will do well to procure a set. I have seen no Action half so effective, and one can sit at the Piano and play, "Fixed in his everlasting seat," or any other organ music, or organ arrangement with the greatest pleasure. The touch of pedals could not be better, and the action is as you say, "Absolutely free from annoyances." They cannot be too highly recommended, as by their use, rapid progress is certain.—Believe me, sincerely yours,

I. B. Thornton,
Organist, Birstall, Leeds.

Cologne, July 16th, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have much pleasure in informing you that your Pedals have given the fullest satisfaction. I have them combined with my practice Piano. Many of my musical friends who have seen them, as well as my organ pupils, are quite delighted with them; and I must acknowledge that I have never met with any Pedals so noiseless and pleasant to play upon as yours. The Action I consider durable, and of very good workmanship. Every organist who desires to perfect his playing will welcome your invention. I can recommend your goods in every respect.—Yours truly,

HERR J. RODENKIRCHEN.

To John Ainsworth, Esq. Organist, The Cathedral, Cologne, Germany.

TOOLS.—In order to facilite the attachment, a complete set of tools are sent (four in number) each one marked for its particular use. By the use of these tools, and following carefully the directions, ANY ONE can make a really good attachment.

On Receipt of Trade or Professional Card, you will receive List, with Liberal Terms.

AINSWORTH'S PATENT ORGAN COMBINATION WORKS
BRINSCALL, CHORLEY.

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, MARCH 31, 1888.

TSCHAIKOWSKI AT THE PHILHARMONIC.

For the second Philharmonic concert, given at St. James's Hall, the directors had provided an attraction which, although less universally popular than Madame Schumann's appearance at the first, did not fail to draw a good audience, including many musicians of note. M. Tschaikowski, one of the leading composers of the Russian school, is at present visiting Western Europe, bent upon one of the pleasantest errands that can fall to an artist's share. With a liberality unknown in countries where the purse strings are in the hands of popular assemblies, the Russian Government has granted him a travelling stipend for no other purpose apparently than that he should see and be seen and heard by various nations. In the case of a famous composer such a journey naturally takes the form of a triumphal progress. For the last fortnight M. Tschaikowski has been the hero of musical Paris, where he has been fêted at public concerts and in fashionable drawing-rooms. On Thursday night he made his first appearance before an English public, conducting two of his own works and being received with every mark of distinction. The occasion was, indeed, one of more than merely individual significance. M. Tschaikowski comes to us as the representative of a school of music, young as yet and comparatively undeveloped, but all the more rich in promise because it draws its inspiration from distinctly national sources. Of that school very little is known among us. Glinka, its founder, is an honoured name in musical history, and an Italian version of his "La Vie pour le Czar" was recently produced at Covent Garden, though without much success. Rubinstein, the greatest of Russian musicians, is, of course, well-known in this country, both as composer and as pianist; but his name is German, and so, to a large extent, is his music. One must go to such composers as Borodine and Tschaikowski to arrive at the peculiar flavour of Slavonic art, and to realise that Napoleon's saying of the thin coating of civilisation that divides the Russian from the Tartar holds good in music also. What we mean is, not that the art of these masters lacks in any sense culture; they also have been trained at conservatoires and have imbibed the latest theories of the "advanced" German school; they are indeed mostly Wagnerians to the backbone. But through it all one feels that here forces quite distinct from Western civilization are at work—rhythms, which immediately suggest the dances of peasants, intervals and harmonies which point, through the medium of the Russian church service, to pentatonic scales and the modes of ancient Greece. It was this national cachet which chiefly interested English amateurs in the works of Tschaikowski which have been heard in London so far. Apart from this, he is a master of the orchestra, and his symphonies no less than his chamber music and his songs are marked by breadth of treatment and lyrical impulse Perhaps for the same reason he has been less successful in dramatic music. Among the very numerous works which this fertile composer has produced in a comparatively short space of time —he was born in 1840, and was 22 years old when he adopted music as a profession—there are several operas, the "Opritchnik," so called after the bodyguard of Ivan the Terrible, "Vakoula the Blacksmith," founded on Gogol's novel of that name, the "Enchantress," given to the world in November last, and others. But none of these has met with permanent success. Cesar Cui, himself a composer of note, in his interesting volume on Russian music states that Tschaikowski lacks dramatic force and dramatic style; that he wavers between the old school and the new, and that his music does not fit the words. As to all this we cannot speak from personal knowledge, as these operas are unknown outside Russia, but to judge by the general qualities of Tschaikowski's music these statements are intrinsically not unlikely. The works selected for performance on the 22nd, were not upon the whole well adapted to show the composer in the most favourable light. The serenade for stringed orchestra (op. 48), for example, is in no sense representative of his power. Those unacquainted with his symphonies might judge by this serenade that Tschaikowski is an elegant and graceful but not a very profound writer. Neither could they divine the rare beauty of orchestral colouring of which the Russian master has shown himself capable elsewhere; for such effects are of course out of the question where the wind instruments are absent. With one exception, moreover, there is not much that is Russian in this serenade. The first movement does not suggest any particular nationality unless the solemn theme with which it opens should be a reminiscence of some ancient hymn. The valse which forms the second movement is even less characteristic of Slavonic rhythms. Very fine in itself is the "Larghetto elegiaco" which ensues and which introduces a charming long-drawn melody with a pizzicato accompaniment more suggestive of a "Serenade" than anything else in the work. This in its turn is followed by the one exception above referred to—a Russian theme brimful of life and character and winding up with a perfect masterstroke, where the solemn melody from the first movement interrupts the merry bustle for a moment, soon again to be swallowed up by it. As a whole, the serenade is an ingenious and inspiriting piece of music, although, as we said before, something more continuous and significant might have been chosen for so important an occasion. Even less satisfactory was the second piece, a fragment from the Orchestral Suite No. 3, very charming in itself, but deprived of its true meaning by being torn from its context. The composer secured an excellent performance of both pieces, showing himself a good conductor, possessed of a remarkably clear and decisive beat. Especially the serenade was admirably executed by the fine string band of the Philharmonic, Mr. Carrodus playing a solo for the violin in first-rate style. Warm applause was in each case the inevitable result. Over the remainder of the concert we must pass very briefly. Like most Philharmonic programmes it was much too long, and the absurdity had been committed of winding up with a novelty, which we must on principle decline to notice. A juvenile symphony by Haydn, with a specially charming adagio, was well played under Mr. Cowen's direction, and M. Ondricek gave a spirited reading of Mendelssohn's violin concerto. Miss Eleanor Rees was the vocalist, and acquitted herself creditably in an air, "Be thou patient," by Smart.—The Times.

Correspondence.

COUNTERPOINT.

To the Editor of The Musical World.

Sir,—Now that a new President of the Royal Academy of Music has been chosen, and that a change has been made in the Professorship of Music at Cambridge, it is a fitting opportunity to protest against the excessive time and importance given to the study of counterpoint as hitherto taught in England. In the works of the most eminent living composers it is almost entirely neglected; the reign of fugue and the strict countrapuntal system have had their day, and while it is certainly desirable that the student should understand the principles which governed the compositions of great masters of a bygone age, it is not necessary that this system should be made the most important feature of musical education. The studies of harmony and rhythm ought both to be fully mastered before that of counterpoint, which, after all, is a mere matter of mechanical application, and may be excelled in by persons who have little or no natural gift for composition. All that can be said in this school of writing has been said by Handel, Bach, and their contemporaries; modern music depends on harmony and rhythm chiefly for its effects. Surely, then, education should keep pace with the times, and not be confined to perpetuating anachronisms. Hitherto the value of a man's work has been estimated here for the ingenuity of his fugal writing, the strictness of his canonical examples, and his general ability to manufacture combinations of phrases in triple or quadruple counterpoint. The disastrous effect of this upon English art has been but too apparent. There are plenty of men who can produce works, such as oratorios or sacred cantatas, in which they rely chiefly on these mechanical means for expressing themselves; but in how many of these works is it possible to find a single novel idea, a fresh and original melody, or indeed a melody that is not conceived in the most flattering, not to say abject, imitation of those of Handel and Mendelssohn! Dr. Stanford was one of the first and most eminent of those who have broken through the charmed circle of the prejudices and narrowness of the English contrapuntal school, and now that in his turn he is called upon to be a teacher, and what is more, a teacher who, by virtue of his position as a Professor at Cambridge, can have great influence upon musical culture and education, we look to him to raise our standard of thought to the level of modern times, and we can look to him the more confidently that he is connected with the Royal College of Music, which is doing such good work in the same direction. Counterpoint is necessary as an essential part of a musician's mental outfit, but it ought to be taught as modern musicians use it, and not in the manner of things past. Our epoch has produced such men as Wagner, Liszt, Dvorak, Gounod, and others, who can compare with any composers; and reverence for the dead is no longer a virtue which implies neglect of the living. The dead can do no more for us; it is to the living that we must look, to carry on the work of music, a few steps only it may be, towards the goal of perfection; and if we ourselves do not desire to be left behind, we must take care to know and understand their works. This, to a very great extent, is not the case with us in England; we are still, to a very large extent, slaves to the fetish of fugue. The first inquiry as to the merits of a new work on its production is not "Is it dramatic, and in sympathy with the subject?" or, "Are its melodies good and its orchestration musicianly and original?" but, "Has it a fugue?" If it has not a fugue, the rest goes for little; and so long as we have so few opportunities for hearing music, this spirit of narrow conservatism must predominate. In London and Manchester, and one or two other great towns where concerts are numerous and good, matters are far different, and new works of the most advanced school are constantly heard, but in the provinces such is not the case, and thought runs still in the narrow groove, and will continue to do so as long as musical education is carried on in the same antiquated manner.

There are far too many examinations and too few concerts, and though the former are profitable in a money sense to professors, who doubtless find in them a comparatively easy way of adding to their incomes, yet I venture to think that if the same money that is now wasted in examination fees were devoted to the maintenance of good concerts, the result would be better and more satisfactory in every way—even better than perpetuating and encouraging the race of fifth hunters, and contrivers of contrapuntal puzzles.

E.P.

HERR EHRENFECHTER'S LECTURE.

To the Editor of The Musical World.

Sir,—May I ask your kind permission to say a few words in reference to your recent report of my lecture on Deppe's method? Your correspondent asks the question: Can it be said that there was anything really "new" as far as essential particulars are concerned? He admits the existing diversity of opinion upon minor details among professors. But are not what he considers minor really essential details? The manner of touch, for instance, is a subject, the importance of which must be patent to anyone looking on pianoforte playing as an art. There can be no doubt that of the different modes of touching the keys, one only can be the best. If Deppe has succeeded in determining and defining this one touch, then this must be admitted as something new, inasmuch as he clears up a point not generally understood before.

There is one more remark on which, with your leave, I would like to say a word. Your correspondent says:—There is a difference in the quality of tone-production among pianists that must be regarded as altogether personal to them, and as scarcely to be taught, a difference intimately connected with the mystery of touch. Now, if I am correct in saying that there is nothing mysterious except that to which we are unable to assign a distinct cause, then there is nothing mysterious in the difference in the quality of tone-production, except to those who are unable to account for it. The quality of tone is absolutely the result of the quality of touch. Now, a beautiful touch is not a gift, but an acquirement. I am fully aware that the true-born artist will often do the right thing by instinct, as it were, owing to his natural keen sense for, and perception of, the beautiful. But, I maintain that with the large majority of players quality of tone-production, as almost everything else, is altogether the result of intuition.—Yours faithfully, C. A. EHRENFECHTER.

March 26th, 1888.

Concerts.

MISS EMILY SHINNER'S CONCERT.

Under distinguished patronage, and at the residence of a statesman in whom much interest at present centres, namely, the Right Hon. A. J. Balfour, M.P., Miss Emily Shinner's evening concert on the 23rd inst. was in every particular a satisfactory performance. Miss Shinner allotted herself no slight task in the interpretation, as leading violinist, of Schubert's A minor Quartet and Brahms's Quintet in F minor, besides Beethoven's Romance in G, a legitimate opportunity of showing the violinist's purity of tone and charm of phrasing. Miss Shinner should certainly be commended for choosing this last as a solo in preference to one of the many tricky modern compositions so much in vogue amongst virtuosi. The results of these several performances fully convinced those present that this lady violinist, a pupil of Joachim, had not over-estimated her resources. She was ably assisted by Miss Lucy Riley (second violin), Miss C. Gates (viola), and Miss F. Hemmings (violoncello). Mdlle. Janotha, an able exponent of whatever she undertakes, contributed Schumann's pianoforte suite, "Carnaval," besides rendering valuable aid in Brahms's Quintet for pianoforte and strings. The vocal pieces which varied the instrumental portion of the programme, comprised songs by Brahms and Kjerulf, ably rendered by Miss Marguerite Hall.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Wimbledon Musical Society gave Handel's Oratorio "Samson," in the Lecture Hall, March 22nd, the only professional vocalist engaged being Madame Clara West, whose clear, bright, and flexible soprano voice gave excellent effect to "Ye men of Gaza," and "Let the bright Seraphim." The other solo parts were very creditably sustained by the members of the choir and the chorus accompanied by small band and pianoforte, did justice to the conductor, Mr. W. Sumner.

The special constable has hung up his truncheon and taken the pipe of peace. Amateurs and members of the musical profession gathered together at the Cannon Street Hotel on Monday evening last, under a committee of management, composed of some of the City Special Constables, and gave a "smoking concert" in aid of the funds of the Police Orphanage. Amongst the singers were:—Miss Fanny Joyce, Miss Rose Lee, Chief Inspector Littlechild, Mr. H. Prenton, Mr. Miles Mole, Mr. J. Fuller, Mr. Leo Stormont, Mr. Herbert Sims Reeves, and Mr. Ernest Reeves.

On the afternoon on last Saturday, a great army of London Sunday School singers, some fifteen hundred strong, besieged the Albert Hall. The programme consisted of works by Handel, Mendelssohn, Schumann, John Hullah, Henry Leslie, Cowen, Farrant, and others, and was performed by the London Sunday School Choir, and the London Sunday School Orchestral Band. Mr. Luther Hinton conducted. The choir has been formed for the purpose of improving singing, and seeks to cultivate Christian union amongst Christians of all denominations. A Midsummer Festival will be held at the Crystal Palace on June 13th.

TERRY'S THEATRE.

Not many years ago a theatre, celebrated for the finished manner in which pieces of a more or less emotional character were produced upon its stage, suddenly gave signs of a radical change of tactics, the wisdom of which at that particular time was vindicated by the result, and went boldly in for rollicking farce. Last week, at Terry's Theatre, the walls of which have for several months re-echoed with laughter at the comic woes of an eccentric woman-hater on the brink of bigamy, exactly the reverse of this process was witnessed, and certainly those who saw, or thought they saw, cause for regretting the one will have every reason for congratulating themselves upon the reaction in public taste indicated by the other. In both cases the transforming magician was Mr. Pinero, one of the cleverest and most weatherwise of contemporary playwrights, who, in his domestic drama "Sweet Lavender," has now given to the stage a simple homely story, so full of human interest, such a veritable gallery of living portraits, suggesting to a certain extent the methods, humour, and sympathetic insight of several of our greatest English novelists, but nevertheless possessing a distinct individuality of their own—that the playgoer must indeed be jaded, and his taste vitiated by a long course of unhealthy stimulants who shall fail to extract enjoyment from this bright, kindly, and eminently wholesome piece. For such enjoyment to be complete the piece must be seen at least twice, not only for the sake of the many good things in it, but by reason of one fault. Mr. Pinero has several times before given proof of a secret fondness for mystifying his audience, even in parts of a play where a full comprehension of the situation is actually impeded by the process. The element of surprise is one thing, utter bewilderment another; and there can be no hesitation in saying that by the withholding of information as to the past history of Ruth Rolt—"Sweet Lavender's" mother—which could have been so easily given at an earlier stage, the interest surrounding that character comes to be of a somewhat shadowy kind, with more or less detriment to the general effect. But neither this nor the fact that the dialogue, always admirable, is on occasions perhaps unduly prolonged, will be allowed to weigh against the success of a piece which, even at its weakest moments, far surpasses in interest and quality of workmanship the sort of mental fare to which playgoers of the present day are so often accustomed. With quick perception of the special aptitude of his interpreters—one of the most essential talents for a successful dramatic author—Mr. Pinero has provided in the generous-hearted, dipsomaniacal barrister, Dick Phenyl, in whose chambers in the Temple the scene is laid, a part exactly suited to Mr. Terry's now familiar oddities of manner and utterance; and well supported as he is, it is still not too much to say that he is the life and soul of the piece. But the idiosyncracies of the other personages of the little drama are so marked; each is in its way such a perfect well-rounded bit of character painting, that the mind is apt to revert afterwards from one to the other, with a strong impression that each of them, if taken alone for the central figure of a comedy, would be almost sufficient to ensure a success. Where is there to be found, on the stage, a more lovable specimen of English girlhood, bright, clever, true-hearted to the core, than Clement Hale's former sweetheart, Minnie, so delightfully rendered by Miss Maude Millett? Or who could refuse sympathy to the frank, trusty young lover, Clement Hale (Mr. Bernard Gould), or to the worthy Dr. Delaney, a fashionable physician of Thackerayan type, impersonated to the life by Mr. Alfred Bishop, or Mr. Brandon Thomas's capital conception of the retired banker, Mr. Geoffrey Wedderburn, not forgetting a hearty young American (Mr. F. Kerr), Mr. Maw, the solicitor (Mr. Sant Matthews), and Mr. Bulger, the wigmaker (Mr. T. C. Valentine)? In the part of "Sweet Lavender" Miss Norreys was, as usual, charming, but at times, it must be confessed, just a little stagey; and sympathetic as this young actress always is, one misses some of the spontaneity she has been accustomed to show in lighter rôles. A word of appreciation is also due to the thoroughly artistic acting of Miss Carlotta Addison in the somewhat difficult part of the housekeeper, Ruth Rolt. To sum up, this is a very full play, and were we condemned to attend for a number of successive nights some theatre now open in London to be elected by ourselves, our choice would unhesitatingly fall upon "Sweet Lavender."

FOREIGN.

MILAN, March 9.—A very unlucky season that at La Scala! Things do not go well at all there, and I may suppose that the impresario Lamperti is reciting the mea culpa, mea maxima culpa. Be this as it may, there is one deplorable fact, viz., that with such an enormous subvention as that given to La Scala, we should not have had such bad performances (with the exception of "Favorita"), such poor stage mounting, such a deficiency of artists. The would-be "stars"—I mean Gayarre and Madame Kupfer-Berger—have altogether fallen short of general expectations. The orchestra itself played badly now and then, as if seized by the general epidemic, and in one instance ("L'Africaine") rousing loud demonstrations among the audience a few nights ago. Well, "Lohengrin" was said to be the solatium of the subscribers, and everyone has been on the look-out with anxious expectation. I am sorry to say the result was not satisfactory. When, fifteen years ago, that work made its first appearance on the same stage, with a very fine ensemble of interpreters, one might have thought the last day of the world had come. The vast La Scala, crowded with most distinguished people—citizens and guests—became the arena for a savage fight, and "Lohengrin" lost its life in expiation. That was the epoch of anti-Wagnerism, and anything in the Italian school fell far short of imagination; no one then thought of a musical drama as the new exponent of lyrical art. Of course, part of the audience was anxious to do justice to the beautiful work, the more so that it had been finely performed; but it was of no use, and the few had to withdraw from the field. The course of fifteen years of strong artistic life has led to many improvements, and the so-called new school has begun to attract more general attention. So, when it was decided to revive "Lohengrin," people went to La Scala as for a new work deserving the deepest attention and curiosity. But what use were the good intentions of the audience (it was a grand house last night), seeing that the interpreters of the powerful work were, with very slight exceptions, shamefully deficient. This was, of course, a matter of life or death; and it may fairly be said that this time the work did not fall, but that a considerable part of the audience would have greatly relished it but for the imperfect performance. Gayarre and Kupfer-Berger (an Elsa of renown) have been found much inferior to their fame. Only Signor Battistini (Telramondo) and Signora Vidal (Ortruda)—who sang for the first time on the stage of La Scala—were correct, intelligent, and faithful to their respective characters. The orchestra, though much applauded in several numbers, was not vigorous enough; and the chorus though very good musically, moved about like puppets. As to the scenery, I may mention as an instance, the alcove in the third act, which was painted, probably to save the expense of making a real one. The numbers which were most appreciated were the prelude (encored), the chorus preceding the arrival of the Swan (encored), the sestet, and finale of the first act; the duet between Ortruda and Telramondo, the air of Elsa, Aurette che si spesso, and parts of the duet between Elsa and Ortruda, in the second act; the prelude to the third act (encored), the duet between Elsa and Lohengrin, the narrative of Lohengrin, and some other parts. At the end of each act and of the opera, Signor Faccio and the artists were called before the curtain. Had the performance been as good as that of 1873, I am sure "Lohengrin" would have been received enthusiastically. To-night we shall have the second trial, and in a few days the first of a "nuovissima": "Nestorio," by Maestro Gallognani, already mentioned by me. At the Manzoni Theatre we have a very good series of operas: Gounod's "Romeo and Juliet" and "Sonnambula," beautifully given, and well attended. Verdi's "Otello" has made its second appearance in Rome, at the Costanzi, with Tamagno, Maurel, and Signora Borghi-Mamo. Useless to say that the splendid work met with the most perfect success.—GUILIO A. MANZONI.

BERLIN, March 9.—Dr. von Bülow has been elected honorary member of the Berlin Association of Professors of Music, which says something for his popularity here. A new symphony by Gernsheim, No. 3, was played at the eighth Philharmonic Concert, the composer conducting. It appears to be a work of unequal merit, the effect of its many beauties being now and then nullified in the length and intricacy of the working out. Opinions for and against this new work were expressed with considerable freedom after the performance, but, on the whole, Herr Gernsheim may be pleased with his reception. The rendering of the overture to "Der fliegende Holländer," was remarkably fine under Von Bülow's bâton. Goldmark's new E flat MS. symphony was heard for the first time in Berlin at a popular concert in the Philharmonic. It is a very brilliantly scored work, but wants depth. Herr Kogel conducted.—Two interesting vocal recitals have been given lately by Herr Gura and Fräulein Spiess respectively.—Rubinstein's "Sulamith" will be given at the last Symphony Concert, April 18, at the Royal Opera House.—16th. The death of the Emperor has been mourned here with musical honours, as behoved a musical city. The service at the Philharmonic comprised a Chorale by Bach, arranged for wind instruments, Gluck's "De Profundis," a memorial sermon, the Emperor's favourite hymn, "Wenn ich einmal soll scheiden, Beethoven's "Elegischer Gesang," and Dead March from the "Eroica" Symphony. Von Bülow, at the Philharmonic Concert he shortly afterwards conducted, chose the following orchestral pieces as appropriate to the occasion: Brahms's Tragic Overture, Wagner's "Kaisermarsch," and the "Eroica" symphony. The Philharmonic Choir, under Herr Siegfried Ochs, are rehearsing Bach's Passion according to St. Luke, which they intend to give publicly after Easter. The authenticity of this work is disputed, and perhaps a new light will be thrown on the question by the effect of this first performance. Herr Scharwenka intends to repeat Berlioz's Requiem for the fourth time on the 31st. The theatres are closed until the end of the month.

LEIPSIC.—The memorial concert given at the New Gewandhaus included a new MS. Trauermarsch by C. Reinecke, Chorales by Bach, fourth movement of Schumann's E flat symphony, and Cherubini's "Requiem." Frau Lucca entered upon her engagement here as Frau Fluth, in Nicolai's "Merry Wives."

ST. PETERSBURG.—A new orchestral suite by Cesar Cui has been given at the seventh Symphony Concert. The work consists of four movements, Tema con Variazioni, Quasi ballata, Scherzo, and Marcia. This composer has struck out a line for himself, but his originality, though evident, is not equally attractive throughout the work. The Czar and Czarina visited the Conservatoire recently, and seemed greatly pleased with the classes and lessons they "inspected." The Czar and the Court attended a charity concert conducted by Rubinstein, with the result that 10,000 rubles profit was made. Glinka's music to "Fürst Holmsky" was included in the programme.

DEATHS.—At Villefranche, aged 73, Louis Barrielle (Bonvoux), vocalist.—At Pau, aged 85, Charles Delprat, professor of singing, &c.—At Turin, aged 77, Leonardo Moja, professor of the violoncello.—At Berlin, Hans Richter, dramatic author (not related to the great conductor of that name).—At Verona, aged 35, Ernesto Pastorelli, composer.—At Udine, Pietro Zugolo, musical instrument maker.—At Verona, Paolo Bombardi, professor of singing and composer.—At New York, Richard, member of the French opera troupe.—At Paris, aged 73, Bérand, singer in opera and professor.—Suddenly, at St. Petersburg, Mme. Bitchourine, member of the Russian opera.—At Berlin, Heinrich Söhlmann, once singer at Royal Opera.—At Mittweida, aged 60, F. A. Böhme, trombone player.—At Weiz, aged 74, Hanns Sutter, composer of choruses.—At Riga, aged 68, Emilie Auguste Flintzer-Haupt, formerly of the Mannheim Opera.—Ernest Halven, conductor and composer, aged 40.—At Saint Dié, Feb. 13, J. R. Grosjean, organist and editor of the Journal des Organistes.—At Milan, aged 82, Antoinetta Galzerani, once prima donna.—At Inglau, Therese Braunecker-Schäfer, singer of operettes in Vienna.—At Chur, aged 75, J. A. Held, and at Shaffhausen, Ludwig Klassen, professors of singing.

PROVINCIAL.

MANCHESTER, March 20.—On Thursday evening, March 8, the concluding concert of Mr. Hallé's thirtieth season occurred. The audience, as might have been expected, was very large, and enthusiastic to a degree; every appearance of Mr. Hallé was the signal for a hearty burst of applause, which was evidently intended to make him feel that all present fully appreciated the value of his services to our city. Those who can recall the condition of music in Manchester before Mr. Hallé came, must shudder to think of what we might have been now had it not been for him. The present concert was in no way inferior to those which have made him so much honoured amongst us. Perhaps the most important item of the programme was Beethoven's Triple Concerto, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello. The executants were Madame Neruda, Mr. Hallé, and Signor Piatti, and the conductor, to the infinite delight of everybody, Herr Joachim. The concerto is not by any means the finest product of Beethoven's inspiration, but it is far too good to be uninteresting, and the largo is of great beauty. The performance of the work was admirable, with the exception of a slight slip on one occasion on the part of Madame Neruda. For this however she much more than atoned by her rendering of the adagio from Spohr's 9th Concerto. In this she displayed a delicacy, a purity of tone, and a perfection of phrasing that were quite unsurpassable; and we could not help thinking that even Joachim, who was in the audience, must have envied her wonderful pianissimo. Signor Piatti gave a melody of his own, entitled "Ossian's Song," which was so well received as to secure him an encore; and just near the end of the concert Mr. Hallé played two well-known pieces by Heller. He was of course enthusiastically recalled, and gave as an encore Chopin's "minute" waltz. The vocalist was Miss Liza Lehmann, a lady who possesses a soprano voice of great beauty, though somewhat lacking in volume. She sings with an unusual amount of refinement, and her rendering of Saint Saëns's beautiful air "Thou, O Lord" was in the highest degree artistic. In the little speech which the enthusiasm of the audience made it necessary for Mr. Hallé to make at the close of the concert, a noteworthy and regrettable thing was his announcement that in consequence of ill-health Herr Straus had been compelled to resign his post of leader of the violins. Herr Straus fulfilled this responsible duty so efficiently that it will be difficult to find an adequate substitute.—The chief feature of the Gentlemen's Concert on Tuesday last was a trio for pianoforte, violin, and horn, by Brahms (op. 40). The difficulty of the combination has been overcome by the composer in a masterly manner, and the trio is undoubtedly a very fine specimen of his work. The opening andante seems a little involved, at a first hearing, but the remaining movements—the scherzo, the adagio mesto, and the finale, in which he has availed himself of the horn to give a strong suggestion of a hunt—all these are extremely interesting. In the hands of Madame Neruda, Mr. Hallé, and Herr Paersch, the trio was admirably performed, and created a very favourable impression. The other concerted pieces comprised four "Märchenerzählungen," by Schumann (op. 132) for pianoforte, violin, and viola (viola, Herr Straus), of which the third (Moderato, con molt' espressione) was the most interesting, and a pianoforte quartet in G minor, by Mozart (violoncello, M. Vieuxtemps.) Solos were also contributed by Mr. Hallé and Madame Neruda.

BIRMINGHAM, March 26.—The Carl Rosa Opera Company are announced to give twelve evening and three morning performances at the Theatre Royal, commencing on Easter Monday, April 2. Their répertoire will include Meyerbeer's "Robert le Diable," a great novelty which our local music lovers will highly welcome, and undoubtedly will prove a source of great attraction. Another new comic opera was produced here last week by Messrs. Shiel Barry and Hogarth's Comic Opera Company, entitled "Gypsy Gabriel, the libretto by Walter Parke and Wm. Hogarth, the music by Florian Pascal. The want of originality is the chief characteristic of this romantic comic opera, founded on one of Walter Scott's novels. The comic element is developed to such a degree that it borders on pantomime business. At the Grand Theatre, Mr. Jacobowski's specially organised "Erminie Company" did capital business during the week. This charming operetta still holds its own, and the present company is in every way competent, the chief parts being taken by excellent artists, such as Miss Esmée Lee, Miss Maggie Duggan, Messrs. Tom Poulton, George Marler, &c. The Clef Club gave again an excellent Chamber Concert at their club rooms. The chief works for performance were in the hands of local able artists. Prout's Pianoforte and String Quartette No. 2 in F, recently produced at the Guild Chamber Concerts, was the opening item. Messrs. Troman, Sück, Griffin, and Owen gave a capital reading of it. A new young deep baritone, Mr. H. C. H. Peacock, was heard for the first time and created a great impression. He possesses a magnificent full and rich voice, and sings, for one so young, with remarkable self-possession. I hear that Mr. Carl Rosa has engaged him, and he is to take the part of Fernandez in "Trovatore." He is under 20 years of age, and studied with the late Mr. Welch. The Annual Invitation Concert of the Clef Club will take place at the Midland Institute Lecture Theatre on April the 10th.—O.P.

ENNISKILLEN.—A Ballad Concert was given here on March 21st, in which Miss Frederika Taylor, Mrs. H. Irvine, Mr. Drummond Hamilton, Major Irvine, and Mr. Charles Kelly took part. Mr. Charles Haydn Arnold played as pianoforte solos Mozart's Fantasia Sonata in C minor, and Mendelssohn's Capriccio in F sharp minor. Mr. Matthew Arnold conducted.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised & Improved, of
A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR
THE VOICE,
By T. A. Wallworth.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Madame Alwina Valleria, Mr. Iver M'Kay, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & CO. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER'S
ROYAL IRISH CAMBRIC POCKET-HANDKERCHIEFS.

Samples and Price Lists Post Free.

Per doz.—Children's, 1s. 2d.; Ladies', 2s. 4½d.; Gents' 3s. 6d.

Hemstitched—Ladies', 2s. 11½d.; Gents', 4s. 11d.

—:o:—

BY APPOINTMENTS TO THE QUEEN AND THE CROWN PRINCESS OF GERMANY.

ROBINSON AND CLEAVER, BELFAST.

"TUITION BY CORRESPONDENCE."
Offices—4, MONTGOMERY STREET, CARLOW.
ESTABLISHED 1885.
Candidates rapidly prepared for University, Intermediate, Civil Service, and other Examinations.

"NOTES AND QUERIES" DEPARTMENT.

STUDENTS and Others wishing to have questions answered on French, German, Latin, Greek, Irish, Spanish, or Italian, should send same with a Fee of 1s. for each question, or 5s. for six questions.

MATHEMATICAL and SCIENCE QUESTIONS solved for a Fee of 6d. each, or 2s. 6d. for six questions.

The solutions are supplied by a staff of First Class Graduates, Specialists, &c.

All inquiries and instructions should contain STAMPED ADDRESSED ENVELOPE.

Apply to the Secretary, Examination Syndicate.
THE ACADEMY, 4, MONTGOMERY STREET, CARLOW.

FOR DISEASES OF THE THROAT, CHEST, LUNGS
SODEN
MINERAL
PASTILLES
BEST REMEDY FOR COUGHS, ASTHMA,
BRONCHITIS,
SORE THROAT,
WHOOPING COUGH.

"19, Harley-street, Cavendish-square, W.
"I have watched the effects of the Soden Waters for a considerable period, and regard them as extremely valuable in OBSTINATE CATARRHAL AFFECTIONS OF THE THROAT. The small amount of Iron which they contain renders them very useful in the early stages of THROAT CONSUMPTION, and they do good in nearly all cases of relaxation of the mucous membrane. The

SODEN MINERAL PASTILLES

offer a most convenient method of using the Waters, producing both a Local and General effect. They are especially beneficial in CATARRHAL DISEASES of the air-passages. I frequently found them of great service in the case of Singers and Public Speakers. (Signed)

"MORELL MACKENZIE, M.D."

INSIST on your chemist getting you the genuine article. See that each box has Dr. W Stoeltzing's signature and our Trade Mark (Two Globes with Cross and Crescent), which is impressed on each pastille. At 1s. 1½d., of all Medicine Vendors, or post free for 15 stamps of the SODEN MINERAL PRODUCE COMPANY, Dyer's-buildings, Holborn, London, E.C.

To Musicians and Others.

For BUYING, EXCHANGING, or SELLING Books on all subjects, Art Objects, Musical Instruments, Home Pets, Domestic Appliances, or any article whatever of personal property, THE BAZAAR, EXCHANGE and MART is unequalled. It circulates largely throughout the kingdom, and private ladies and gentlemen have no difficulty in negotiating sales or exchanges without publicity and to the best advantage. Get a copy and judge for yourself. The Globe says:—"Like all grand conceptions, the process is remarkable for its simplicity." Price 2d., at all Newsagents, or copy sent for two stamps from the Office, 170, Strand, London, W.C.

DEFRIES' Safety Water White Oil.

The Purest, Whitest, and Best Burning Mineral Oil in England.

EQUAL IN QUALITY TO OILS SOLD UNDER FANCY NAMES, at from 1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d. per gall
FOR USE IN ALL LAMPS AND STOVES.

PRICE 1s. PER GALLON.

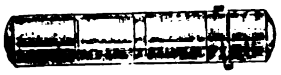
FREE DELIVERED IN LONDON AND ALL SUBURBS.

Minimum, 2 gallons. The 5 and 10 gallon drums are fitted with taps. Drums charged, and full price allowed when returned.

Terms: Cash on or before delivery. Deposit Accounts opened for Oil.

DEFRIES' SAFETY LAMP & OIL CO., LIMITED,
43 and 44, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON, E.C.

THORNHILL'S
NEW "GLOVE" BOTTLE.



FOR PERFUME & SMELLING SALTS.

Large Variety of Patterns at Various Prices

THORNHILL'S TOILET CASES
FOR LADIES AND GENTLEMEN

THORNHILL'S ARTISTIC FANS,
A LARGE and VARIED STOCK of the BEST QUALITY.

PRESENTS.

—o—

THORNHILL'S
Fully Illustrated
LIST
OF
LATEST
NOVELTIES

POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

THORNHILL'S
OPERA GLASSES.

IN GREAT VARIETY.

THORNHILL'S
Guaranteed Razors Singly or in Sets.

W. THORNHILL & CO., TO THE QUEEN & ROYAL FAMILY. 144, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON. ESTABLISHED 1734.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER'S
LINEN COLLARS, CUFFS, AND SHIRTS.

Samples and Price Lists Post Free.

COLLARS—LADIES' 3-fold, from 3s. 6d. per doz. GENTS' 4-fold, 4s. 11d. to 5s. 11d. per doz.

CUFFS—For Ladies or Gentlemen, 5s. 11d. to 10s. 6d. per doz.

SHIRTS—Best quality Long Cloth, with 4-fold Linen Fronts 35s. 6d. per half-doz. (To measure, 2s. extra.)

N.B.—OLD SHIRTS made as good as new with best materials in Neckbands, Cuffs, and Fronts, for 14s. the half-doz.

ROBINSON AND CLEAVER, BELFAST.

Dr. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For sore throat, hoarseness, and relaxed throat, also for improving the voice

FOR SINGING AND SPEAKING

without fatiguing the voice. Celebrated in every town in Europe, India, America, and the Colonies. Testimonials from Patti, Trebelli, Patey, Santley, and the most eminent medical men.

Sold in boxes; 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d.; also in bottles for abroad.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE & RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & Co.,

Manufacturers and Importers of all kinds of Strings
FOR
VIOLIN, VIOLA, CELLO, DOUBLE BASS, HARP,
ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO,
Have always in STOCK the Largest ASSORTMENT of any House in the World.

6, GOLDEN SQUARE, W.

A BLESSING IN EVERY FAMILY.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.

These Remedies have stood the test of FIFTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE and are pronounced the best medicines for family use. Tens of thousands of written testimonials bear witness to their marvellous curative properties. They are acknowledged by the whole civilised world to be the greatest efficacy in every form of disease. Sold by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors.

Manufactured only at THOMAS HOLLOWAY'S ESTABLISHMENT
78, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.
N.B.—Advice gratis at the above address, daily, between the hours of 11 and 3, or by letter

ASCHERBERG PIANOS.

"I only perform an act of justice when I ascribe my successes to a great extent to the excellent Instruments from your factory, on which I was favoured to play before the public. Remain convinced that I shall at all times and everywhere give preference to your Pianos over all others, and accept the assurance of my unbounded esteem.

Respectfully,

VLADIMIR VON PACHMANN."

ASCHERBERG PIANO DEPOT,

211, REGENT STREET, W.

Pears' Soap
A PERFECTLY PURE SOAP · IT KEEPS THE PORES OPEN, THE COMPLEXION CLEAR, AND THE HANDS AND SKIN SOFT · A VERY DURABLE SOAP +
THE WORLD RENOWNED
IN PRAISE OF PEARS' SOAP
I HAVE FOUND IT MATCH-LESS FOR THE HANDS AND COM-PLEX-ION,
Adelina Patti
SPECIALLY APPOINTED
ENGLISH COMPLEXION SOAP.
ICH DIEN
BY ROYAL WARRANT, MAKERS TO THE PRINCE OF WALES.
ESTABLISHED IN LONDON 100 YEARS, FIFTEEN INTERNATIONAL AWARDS

A BRIGHT HEALTHFUL SKIN AND COMPLEXION ENSURED BY USING

PEARS' SOAP.

AS RECOMMENDED BY THE GREATEST ENGLISH AUTHORITY ON THE SKIN,
PROF. SIR ERASMUS WILSON, F.R.S., PRES. OF THE ROYAL COL. OF SURGEONS, ENGLAND,
AND ALL OTHER LEADING AUTHORITIES ON THE SKIN.

COUNTLESS BEAUTEOUS LADIES, INCLUDING MRS. LILLIE LANGTRY, RECOMMEND ITS VIRTUES
AND PREFER PEARS' SOAP TO ANY OTHER.

The following from the world-renowned Songstress is a sample of thousands of Testimonials:

Testimonial from Madame ADELINA PATTI.

"I HAVE FOUND IT MATCHLESS FOR THE HANDS AND COMPLEXION." Adelina Patti

PEARS' SOAP IS FOR SALE THROUGHOUT THE CIVILIZED WORLD.

Printed and Published by MacRae, Curtice & Co. (Limited), 12, Catherine Street, Strand, W.C.

WEEKLY.]

The Musical World.

ESTABLISHED 1822.
REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED; IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST WEEKLY, 17/6 PER ANNUM (Payable in advance).

VOL. 67.—NO. 14. SATURDAY, APRIL 7, 1888. PRICE {3D. Unstampe {4D. By Post.

THE

KARN AMERICAN ORGANS,

Manufactured by D. W. KARN & CO.,

WOODSTOCK, ONTARIO, CANADA.

The Karn Organ is a reproduction of the Pipe Organ in miniature, of pre-eminent value as an effective music exponent for the Home.

OUR AIM has not been to see how cheaply an organ can be built, BUT HOW CHEAPLY A FIRST-CLASS ORGAN can be made.

OUR CLAIM is that we are building organs equal to, if not surpassing, all others, at the very lowest reasonable prices.

COMPARISON CHEERFULLY INVITED.

New Illustrated Catalogue & Price Lists Free of the
SOLE EUROPEAN AGENTS:

THE SCHREIBER PIANO CO.,
18, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W.

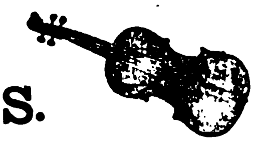
To the Trade and Profession.

OLD

VIOLINS.



MESSRS. BEARE AND SON, Manufacturers and Importers of every Description of Musical Instruments, Strings, Fittings, &c.,
34, Rathbone Place, London, W.,
Invite an inspection of their collection of old Violins,
All genuine examples of the celebrated old Masters.
Over 300 old instruments from which to select.

Old Violins from £5.
Old Tenors from £5.
Old Violoncellos from £10.
Old Double Basses from £15.

Sole Wholesale Agents for James Tubb's celebrated Bows.
Bows by the old makers also frequently in stock.
Tested strings unequalled for durability and equality of tone.
Repairs of every kind of Musical Instrument executed promptly by experienced workmen.

BEARE AND SON,
34, RATHBONE PLACE, LONDON, W.

Special Notices.

SOCIETY OF ARTS PRACTICAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.
THE NEXT EXAMINATION
will be held at the Society's house, 18, John Street, Adelphi, W.C., and will commence on THURSDAY, the 24th May.
Full particulars on application to the Secretary.
H. TRUEMAN WOOD,
Secretary.

THE GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Established by the Corporation of London.

Principal—Mr. H. WEIST HILL.

Students' Concerts will take place on April 25, May 9 and 23, June 6 and 20, and July 4.
Recitals and Lectures by Professors of the School, WEEKLY.
The Next Term will commence on Monday, April 16, 1888.
For prospectuses and all further particulars, apply to the Secretary.
By Order,
CHARLES P. SMITH,
Victoria Embankment, E.C. Secretary.

TOWN HALL, BIRMINGHAM.

AN ORGANIST is required for the BIRMINGHAM TOWN HALL. The Organ is well known as a fine instrument of four manuals and eventy-six stops, and it has been decided to expend, at an early date, a large sum in thoroughly renovating and modernising its mechanism and appliances, and adding to its resources. The Organist will, under certain conditions have the exclusive control of the Organ, and will be at liberty to give Recital for his own benefit. He will also receive the fees payable in respect o Meetings or performances at which the Organ is required. Application (marked "Town Hall Organist") are to be made, not later than May 8th, to Mr. C. G. BEALE, 3, Newhall Street, Birmingham, from whom a Schedule can be obtained by post, showing the conditions of the appointment.

DRURY LANE.—AUGUSTUS HARRIS, Lessee and Manager—A RUN OF LUCK, withdrawn in the height of its success, Dec. 11 1886, to make way for the Christmas pantomime, will be revived SATURDAY NEXT, March 31. Messrs. Harry Nicholls, Percy Lyndal, E. W. Gardiner, Victor Stevens, F. Gould, Reuben Inch, Arthur Yates, A. Collins, and Herbert Standing, &c.; Mesdames Fortescue, Edith Bruce, Blanche Massey, Minnie Inch, Marie D'Altra, Marie Williams, Millicent Mildmay, and Maud Milton, &c.—Box-office open daily, from ten to six.—DRURY-LANE.

A RUN OF LUCK, at Drury Lane, was triumphantly successful; the interest was cumulative, and the cheers increased in volume and force as the performance progressed. Each descent of the curtain was followed by the strongest proof of satisfaction that an excited audience can give. Certainly a feat in modern stage realism, and success is the emphatic result.—Daily Telegraph.

A RUN OF LUCK, at Drury Lane, embraces at once the best and most attractive features of modern melodrama and farcica comedy.—World.

TO ORGANISTS.—For Professional Practice, Teaching, or Concert purpose, and Home use, the "Bach Model" Pedal Instrument is only reliable substitute for a pipe organ. For design, improved action, connections, and tone, it embraces the merits of the highest class instruments; and without paying an exorbitant price you may have an instrument with organ measurements that removes the deficiencies hitherto experienced in pedal instruments.—Apply for illustrated lists, terms, and prices, to J. L. Scholefield, Musical Instrument Manufacturer, Huddersfield.

TO ENTREPRENEURS.—Charles Haydn Arnold, age 16, Classical Solo Pianist, is open to engagement, would tour with high-class Concert party. Terms easy. Address, ENNISKILLEN.

Institutes and Colleges.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, KENSINGTON GORE, LONDON, S.W.

Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.

President - - H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES, K.G.
Director - - Sir GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L., LL.D.

Next College Concert, May 17th, at 7.30 p.m.

The Midsummer Term will commence on April 25th, 1888.

Regulations may be obtained from the Registrar, Mr. George Watson, at the College.

CHARLES MORLEY, Honorary Secretary.

UNIVERSITY OF TRINITY COLLEGE, TORONTO. (The Church of England University of Upper Canada.)

FACULTY OF MUSIC.

The next Examinations for the degree of Bachelor of Music will be held simultaneously in Toronto and London in Easter week, 1886. Women are admissable to these examinations. For particulars apply to Rev. E. K. Kendal, D.C.L., Registrar for England, Southsea.

TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON. For MUSICAL EDUCATION and EXAMINATION, &c., and for the Granting of Certificates and Diplomas in Music. Inst. 1872

President - - The EARL of ABERDEEN.

THE NEXT STUDENTS' INVITATION CONCERT will take place on TUESDAY, May 22nd, at 7 o'clock.

The NEXT TERM commences MONDAY, April 30th, when new Students are received.

PROSPECTUSES, including list of new (reduced) fees, and all particulars can be obtained from the Secretary, Trinity College, London, W.

By Order of the Academical Board.
Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, W.

GUILD OF ORGANISTS, 35, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C.

Patron—The Right Rev. THE LORD BISHOP OF LONDON.

PRESIDENTS.
The REV. CANON SIR F. H. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., Mus. Doc.
Sir HERBERT OAKELEY, Bart., Mus. Doc.
Sir ROBERT STEWART, Mus. Doc.

Vice-President—WILLIAM PINNEY, Mus. Bac., Oxon.
Warden—CHARLES VINCENT, Mus. Doc., Oxon.

Established to advance the cause of Church music and the truest interests of its Professors, etc.

Members of the Church of England and Ireland, and the Episcopal Church of Scotland, are eligible for election. Subscription: Professional Organists (Associates) 10s. 6d. per annum; Amateurs (Members) 15s. per annum; Life subscription, 5 guineas.

Next Fellowship examination in Easter Week.

Prospectus and further particulars may be obtained from the Hon. Sec., Dr. J. H. Lewis, Staines, Middlesex.

London Organ School and International College of Music.

Established 1865, by the Rev. SCOTSON CLARK, Mus.B.
Patron—His Grace The ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY.
Principal—HENRY CLARK.

THE NEXT ORGAN RECITAL at ST. NICHOLAS COLE ABBEY, on TUESDAY, April 10th, by Miss EDROFF.

Piano, Singing, Violin, 'Cello, Flute, Harp, Organ Lessons, with Practice, and Harmony. Private Lessons and Classes.

Candidates for Musical Degrees at any of the English Universities are expressly prepared for the Matriculation Examinations by Oxford and Cambridge graduates (in honours). Branches at Kensington and St. John's Wood.

Apply to the Director of Classes, T. H. Y. TROTTER, M.A., Mus.Bac., Oxon., 3, Princes Street, Cavendish Square, W. (close to Oxford Circus).

Publishers' Announcements.

"Not difficult, but most effective. Those who knew his previous works will be delighted to see something new by this charming composer."—Court Journal.

ELEGIE. for Violin (or Violoncello) and Pianoforte. By G. SAINT-GEORGA.—Charles Woolhouse, 81, Regent Street, London, W.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised & Improved, of
A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR
THE VOICE,
By T. A. Wallworth.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Madame Alwina Valleria, Mr. Iver M'Kay, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & CO. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

The Universal Circulating Music Library
(ESTABLISHED 1854.)
IS THE LARGEST IN THE WORLD.

SUBSCRIPTION £2 2s. PER ANNUM, £1 8s. PER HALF YEAR, &c.

MUSIC can be selected at end of term, as subscribers' property, equal to one-half of their subscription at full price. All Music, English and Foreign, &c., promptly supplied.—For Prospectuses apply to
CHARLES WOOLHOUSE, Proprietor.
81, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

JUST PUBLISHED.
THE "JOLLY BRICK" POLKA.
By M. S. BARRON.
PRICE 3s.

"Is bright and danceable."—News of the World.

"This is a cheerful and sprightly piece, with well marked accentuation. It presents no difficulties of execution even to the young player."—Dundee Advertiser.

ALSO,
A TWILIGHT DREAM.
FOR PIANO.
By M. S. BARRON.
PRICE 3s.

"An interesting piece, with a melody for the left hand."—Musical Standard.

LONDON: SWAN & CO., 4, GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, W

IN SIX GRADES.
PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH.

Under the Sanction and Approval of the Rev. Sir FREDERICK A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., M.A., Mus. Doc., and of Sir G. A. MACFARREN, Mus. Doc.

THE MUSICIAN:
A GUIDE FOR PIANOFORTE STUDENTS,
By RIDLEY PRENTICE.

CONTAINS ANALYSES OF WELL-KNOWN PIECES PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED, ENABLING THE PUPIL TO UNITE A STUDY OF MUSICAL FORM WITH THE ORDINARY PIANOFORTE PRACTICE.

Saturday Review.—"We are far from suggesting that there is any royal road for acquiring technical knowledge, but we are quite certain Mr. Ridley Prentice's road is in every way the pleasantest that has yet been laid before any pianoforte student."

Academy.—"A knowledge of form is imparted in simple and pleasant language. We heartily commend it to all who desire to understand, satisfactorily interpret, and enjoy beautiful music."

Graphic.—"Written with the laudable purpose of helping the pianoforte student to understand and enjoy beautiful music."

School Board Chronicle.—"A useful book for earnest teachers."

Musical Review.—"Mr. Ridley Prentice has newly developed an important though much neglected branch of the teacher's duties."

Monthly Musical Record.—"No more valuable work of the kind is in existence."

W. SWAN SONNENSCHEIN & CO., PATERNOSTER SQUARE:
And all Book and Music Sellers.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER'S
ROYAL IRISH CAMBRIC POCKET-HANDKERCHIEFS.

Samples and Price Lists Post Free.

Per doz.—Children's, 1s. 2d.; Ladies', 2s. 4½d.; Gents 3s. 6d.
Hemstitched—Ladies', 2s. 11½d.; Gents', 4s. 11d.

—:o:—

BY APPOINTMENTS TO THE QUEEN AND THE CROWN PRINCESS OF GERMANY.

ROBINSON AND CLEAVER, BELFAST.

Professional Cards.

The subscription for a "card" space in these columns is £1 10s. for six months, and £1 per quarter—payable in advance, including copy of the paper each week. Subscriptions should be sent to the office of THE MUSICAL WORLD 12, Catherine Street, Strand, London, W.C.

Conductors and Composers.

Mr. FREDERIC H. COWEN,
73, HAMILTON TERRACE,
ST. JOHN'S WOOD, N.W.

Mr. F. KILVINGTON HATTERSLEY,
A.R.A.M.
(Professor of the Pianoforte, Composer, and Conductor),
17, FINSBURY PARK VILLAS,
GREEN LANES, N.

Mr. ALBERT VISETTI
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Conductor),
12, WESTBOURNE PARK TERRACE, W.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN
(Guitar, Concertina, and Gigelira. Wood and Straw Instrument),
22A, DORSET STREET, PORTMAN SQUARE, W.

Mr. F. ST. JOHN LACY
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Vocalist (baritone).
FITZROY MANSION, CHARLOTTE STREET,
FITZROY SQUARE, W.

Mr. H. MARTYN VAN LENNEP
(Teacher of Singing, Composer, and Conductor),
Address—7, WIMPOLE STREET,
CAVENDISH SQUARE, W.

Mr. G. ARTHUR HIGGS, F.C.O.
L. Mus. and Tallis Gold Medallist. T.C.L. Pupil of Mr. Albert Visetti. Teacher of Singing, Harmony, Conductor, and Vocalist. (Baritone.)
Address—TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON, W.

Vocalists—Sopranos.

Madame VALLERIA
(Opera and Concerts),
BOSWORTH HOUSE, HUSBAND'S BOSWORTH,
RUGBY.

Miss EDITH DESMOND
(Opera and Concerts),
c/o NOLAN & JACKSON.

Miss KATE FLINN
(Concerts and Oratorios),
41, WELBECK STREET,
CAVENDISH SQUARE, W.

Mdlle. VELMI
(Opera and Concerts),
7, CHESILTON ROAD, MUNSTER PARK,
FULHAM, S.W.

Miss AGNES LARKCOM
Has removed to
158, PORTSDOWN ROAD, W.

Madame ISABEL GEORGE, L.R.A.M.
(Concert and Oratorio),
29, ALBANY STREET, REGENT'S PARK, N.W.

Contraltos.

Miss JOSEPHINE CRAVINO
(Concerts and Oratorio),
2, SEDGMOOR VILLAS,
Private Lessons given. CAMBERWELL, S.E.

Miss MARY E. DAKIN, R.A.M.
(Mez. Sop.),
Ballads, Oratorio, &c.
31, MONMOUTH ROAD,
BAYSWATER, LONDON, W.

Miss LENA LITTLE
(Concerts),
42, NORFOLK SQUARE, HYDE PARK, W.

Contraltos.—Continued.

Madame OSCAR POLLACK
(Concerts).
56, DUCHESS ROAD,
EDGBASTON, BIRMINGHAM.

Tenors.

Mr. BARTON McGUCKIN
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
c/o MR. ALFRED MOUL,
26, OLD BOND STREET, W.,
Or, 270, ELGIN AVENUE, MAIDA VALE, W.

Mr. ARNOLD BREEDEN
(Concerts, Oratorio, and Opera),
Address—N. VERT, Esq.,
6, CORK STREET, W.

Mr. SEYMOUR JACKSON
(Concerts and Oratorio).
OLD TRAFFORD, MANCHESTER.

Mr. PAYNE CLARKE
(Concerts and Oratorio).
28, DEVONSHIRE STREET, ISLINGTON, N.

Mr. J. DALGETY HENDERSON,
GOTHIC LODGE,
LORDSHIP LANE, S.E.

Mr. REDFERN HOLLINS,
30, ST. STEPHEN'S AVENUE,
SHEPHERD'S BUSH, W.

Mr. BERNARD LANE,
60, WESTBOURNE PARK VILLAS, W.

Chevalier EDWARD SCOVEL
(Opera, Concerts, and Oratorio),
HOTEL DE L'EUROPE,
MILAN, ITALY.

Mr. W. ESMOND,
24, UPPER MOUNT STREET, DUBLIN.

Baritones.

Mr. WALTER CLIFFORD
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concerts),
c/o N. VERT, Esq.,
6, CORK STREET, W.

Mr. FREDERIC KING
(Concerts and Oratorio),
19, CANFIELD GARDENS, S. HAMPSTEAD.

Mr. NORRIS CROKER,
EGREMONT, CROXTED ROAD,
WEST DULWICH, S.E.

Mr. JOSEPH LYNDE
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concert
63, STAFFORD PL.
BUCKINGHAM GATE, S.W.

Mr. ALBERT REAKES
(Bass-Baritone, of the "London Ballad Singers," Oratorios, Concerts, &c.),
30, LANCASTER ROAD,
NOTTING HILL, W.

Herr RAGNAR GREVILLIUS
(Concerts, Oratorio, and Opera),
70, PORTSDOWN ROAD, MAIDA VALE, W.

Bass.

Mr. WATKIN MILLS requests that all communications respecting engagements be sent to his new address, Hyacinth Road, Roehampton Park, S.W.

Mr. FRANK CELLI
(Concerts and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. N. VERT, 6, CORK ST.,
BURLINGTON GARDENS, W.

Trumpet and Cornet.

Mr. THOMAS HARPER,
185, KING'S ROAD, N.W

Pianoforte.

Mr. G. PRADEAU
(Lessons and Recitals),
1, STOWE ROAD,
SHEPHERD'S BUSH, W.

Guitar.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN, Guitariste, Instructress to H.R.H. the Princess Louise, has returned to town, 22A, DORSET STREET, PORTMAN SQUARE, W., where may be had her celebrated book, "Learning the Guitar Simplified," 10s. 6d.

Violin.

Mr. ALLAN CAMPBELL
(Formerly Pupil of Mr. Henry Holmes and Dr. S. S. Wesley),
23, THICKET ROAD,
Pupils visited and received. ANERLEY, S.E.

Mr. LESLIE CROTTY and
Madame GEORGINA BURNS,
c/o Mr. ALFRED MOUL (sole agent),
26, OLD BOND STREET, W.

MISS AGNES JANSON requests that all communications respecting engagements may be sent to her new address, 36, Albion Place, Hyde Park, W.; or to Mr. N. VERT, 6, Cork Street, W.

The FRASER QUINTET. Misses Violet (Vocalist), Ida, and Ethel (Pianist, Violoncello, and Viola), Mabel and Stella Violinists), play Quartets, Solos, Duets, two Pianofortes, &c. For Engagements, for Concerts, "At Homes," Dinner and Garden Parties.—Address: 121, Adelaide Road, N.W.

MR. HEALEY'S SPECIAL LIST.

Madame LILIAN NORDICA (Soprano)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert),
Address to
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mdlle. LOUISE LABLACHE (Mez. Sop.)
(Opera and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W

Mdlle. HELENE HASTREITER (Contr.)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert)
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Madame BELLE COLE (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Miss MARGUERITE HALL (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. WILLIAM NICHOLL (Tenor)
28, BELSIZE ROAD, N.W.,
Or, Sole Agent, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. JOHN PROBERT (Tenor)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W

Mr. VAUGHAN EDWARDES (Baritone)
(Concerts and Oratorio),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. MULES BROWN (Baritone)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. HENRY POPE (Bass)
(Opera, Concerts, and Oratorio),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. T. L. CAMPION (Bass)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

"TUITION BY CORRESPONDENCE."
Offices—4, MONTGOMERY STREET, CARLOW.
ESTABLISHED 1885.
Candidates rapidly prepared for University, Intermediate, Civil Service, and other Examinations.

"NOTES AND QUERIES" DEPARTMENT.

STUDENTS and Others wishing to have questions answered on French, German, Latin, Greek, Irish, Spanish, or Italian, should send same with a Fee of 1s. for each question, or 5s. for six questions.

MATHEMATICAL and SCIENCE QUESTIONS solved for a Fee of 6d. each, or 2s. 6d. for six questions.

The solutions are supplied by a staff of First Class Graduates, Specialists, &c.

All inquiries and instructions should contain STAMPED ADDRESSED ENVELOPE.

Apply to the Secretary, Examination Syndicate.
THE ACADEMY, 4, MONTGOMERY STREET, CARLOW.

CASSON'S
PATENT
Organ-Building System

SEPARATE Pedal Organs for each Manual. Expressive and Controllable Pedal Basses. Perfect control of all Couplers. Reduction of number of Claviers without loss of efficiency, &c., &c. See testimonials from
Mr. W. T. BEST.
Rev. Sir F. A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart.
Dr. SPARK.
Dr. J. C. BRIDGE, M.A.
Dr. E. W. TAYLOR, F.C.O.
The late Mr. J. STIMPSON.
Mr. R. BARTHOLOMEW.
Mr. J. HEYWOOD, Birmingham.
Mr. G. A. AUDSLEY, F.R.I.B.A.
M. A. J. HIPKINS, F.S.A.
&c., &c.

Apply to the Secretary—
CASSON'S PATENT ORGAN CO., LIMITED
DENBIGH.

THE MUSICAL WORLD is on sale at MERRYDEW'S Library Boulogne-sur-Mer.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS.—Advertisements should be sent not later than 5 o'clock on Wednesdays, to the Office, 12, Catherine St Strand.

Facts and Comments.

The death of Mr. Bache was even more sudden and unexpected than appeared from the obituary notices. Even as late as Monday afternoon his medical man did not apprehend any immediate danger, and looked upon the case as one of simple chill, somewhat aggravated by the patient's nervousness. His sisters, who were with him in the afternoon, took a cheerful view of the case. Later in the evening, however, the symptoms became very grave, and a messenger was despatched to an intimate friend of Mr. Bache's, at a Monday Popular Concert, who, when he arrived at the house, found him dead.

By Mr. Bache's own desire, the funeral was conducted in the quietest manner, and no special invitations were issued to persons outside the family circle. Nevertheless, a numerous group of musical and personal friends assembled at the side of the grave in the Hampstead Cemetery on Saturday afternoon. The Rev. Dr. Sadler, of Rosslyn Hill Unitarian Chapel, Hampstead, officiated and delivered an address. The chief mourners were the two brothers and the two sisters of the deceased gentleman, together with Mrs. Alfred Bache, Mr. Russell Martineau, Mr. A. Higginson, Mrs. Edward Higginson, and Miss Martineau, relatives. The Royal Academy of Music, of which the deceased was a professor, was represented by Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, the new Principal, Dr. Charles Steggall, Mr. Thomas Trelfall (chairman of the committee of management), and Mr. Lamborn Cock, the treasurer; Mr. Stanley Lucas represented the Royal Society of Musicians, and amongst others present were Mr. John Francis Barnett, Mr. Franklin Taylor, Mr. Hartvigson, Mr. Carl Armbruster, Mr. Eaton Faning, Mr. W. Shakspeare, and Mr. Littleton.

Knowing it to be unfounded, we made no reference to the rumour which had been copied from the French papers into a number of English journals, to the effect that Madame Albani had been engaged by MM. Ritt and Gailhard for the Grand Opéra. That rumour is now contradicted officially, but those who set it afloat continue to assert that there "must have been something in it," and state as proof of their assertion, that M. Gailhard went to Antwerp to witness a performance of Gounod's "Romeo and Juliet," at which Madame Albani sang the heroine, and which the composer conducted, losing, by the bye, his way in the score and very nearly causing a breakdown. But, surely, between hearing a prima donna and engaging her, or even offering her an engagement, there is, as between the cup and the lip, many a slip.

The custom of giving concerts spirituels, or, as we should say, concerts of sacred music, during Holy Week, is gaining ground in Paris, and on Thursday and Saturday last week two interesting performances of that nature took place at the Opéra Comique. Two compositions by Gounod, the paraphrase of the psalm, "Super Flumina Babylonis," and a concerto for the piano pedalier, the latter neither sacred nor spirituel, were included in the programme, conducted by the composer. Verdi's "Requiem Mass" was also performed, with Mesdames Isaac and Deschamps, and MM. Talazac and Fournets as solo-quartet. This compares favourably at any rate with our eternal "Messiah," and the "Gems from the Oratorios."

In London the usual number of Good Friday concerts took place. At the Albert Hall, "The Messiah" was given in the presence of the Prince and Princess of Wales and the Royal family, Madame Nordica, Madame Belle Cole, Mr. Piercy, and Mr. Watkin Mills singing the solo parts. At the concert given under Mr. Ambrose Austin's auspices, at St. James's Hall, Rossini's "Stabat Mater" was, amongst other things, given, Mrs. Hutchinson, Madame Patey, and Messrs. Lloyd and Santley representing the solo quartet. At the Crystal Palace also the sacred concert was very numerously attended.

Following the example set by St. Anne's, Soho, St. Andrew's, Ashley Place, celebrated the evening of Good Friday by a performance of Dr. Stainer's "Crucifixion." St. Andrew's is a grand building for sound; the quality of the boys' voices was clear and bright, and the bass recitations were very finely rendered. The Easter Day services at Southwark Cathedral (which was crammed during High Mass) included Mozart's Twelfth Mass. Beethoven's Mass in C was sung at the Church of the Jesuits, Farm Street.

Bülow will not, after all, conduct the two last Philharmonic Concerts of the season. He is said to have said that he was not going to act as substitute for Mr. Cowen. He might have thought of that before, in which case he would have saved some disappointment and printer's ink.

Mr. F. K. Hattersley, the young composer, is about to start for Germany, to take lessons from Rheinberger.

Karl Formes, the veteran bass, who enchanted our forefathers and grandfathers as Sarastro, Marcel, Leporello, and the Cardinal in "La Juive," has arrived in London, and will try once more the fortune of the stage, under Mr. Harris's auspices He is seventy-two years of age. But this is not as formidable in the case of a bass as it would be in that of a tenor.

It is with mixed feelings that one comes upon the number of English names figuring in the list of those who took part in the recent examination of the Leipsic Conservatoire. Thus, Miss Mary Evans, of Brighton, played the pianoforte part of Beethoven's E flat trio; while Miss Mary Logan, of Cambridge, is said to have rendered Mozart's D minor concerto in a "neat, self-possessed manner, leaving only greater emotional depth to be desired." Miss Alice Brown, of Portsmouth, and Miss Henrietta Jonas, of Edinburgh, are also mentioned in more or less favourable terms. Why, one asks, did not these young people stop at home to get such information as can be had at a first-rate music school? Sir George Grove, Mr. Mackenzie, Mr. Weist Hill, and others whom it may concern, please make a note of this.

We have received for review that useful book of reference and mine of information on newspaper matters, "Sell's Dictionary of the World's Press, for 1888." Articles such as that relating to the law of libel in newspapers, by Blake Odgers, The Rise of Provincial Journalism, by H. R. Fox Bourne, and others, will be greatly appreciated by newspaper men; while the plentiful illustrations, and the lighter portion of the letterpress with its details of curious information, make the volume as entertaining as it is valuable.

In the slight pause or breathing space which mercifully divides the winter from the spring musical season, it will be useful to make a note of the dates of the approaching Richter Concerts. They are May 7, 14, 28; June 4, 11, 18, 25; July 2 and 9. and are held under the direction of Mr. N. Vert.

The Bath Philharmonic Society, of which Sir Arthur Sullivan is the president, and Mr. Albert Visetti the musical director, announce a Festival Concert for April 11. Mr. Cowen's "Ruth" will occupy the larger share of the programme, which is to open with Mr. J. Humphrey Anger's XCVIth Psalm, each work conducted by the composer. A strong band of instrumentalists, led by Mr. Van Praag, has been engaged, and the solo vocalists include Miss Anna Williams, Miss E. M. Walker, Miss Hope Glenn, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Watkin Mills.

The Oswestry Musical Festival, established in connection with the Oswestry School of Music, founded by Mr. Henry Leslie, was held on Monday, in Powis Hall, Oswestry. Lord Harlech presided. The banner of honour and ten pounds, with a silver medal to the conductor, were awarded to the Lodge and Bronygarth Choir. The ladies' banner was competed for by the Llanymynech Choral Society and the Llansaintffraid Choral Union. The banner and four pounds were awarded to the Llanymynech Choir. The juveniles' banner, with prize of three pounds, was awarded to the Lodge and Bronygarth Choir. The final competition was for the town banner and ten pounds, with silver medal to the conductor. This was limited to Welsh choirs; the Zion (Oswestry) Choral Society and the Oswestry Philharmonic Society competed. The Philharmonic Society were awarded the prizes. This choir having now won the town banner three years in succession, it becomes their own property. The adjudicators were Mr. Timothy, master of music at Eaton, and Mr. Mills. At night Mr. Henry Leslie conducted a performance of the "Messiah," the soloists being Miss Annie Roberts, Miss Squires, Mr. Maldwyn Humphreys, and Mr. T. Bott.

Something fresh in musical literature has reached the office in the shape of the February number of the "New Zealand Musical Monthly." It gives a great deal of information on band matters in the Colony, and we wish it all the success it deserves.

The March number of "The Cosmopolitan," an illustrated magazine published monthly in New York, contains a valuable article on the German opera in New York, by Henry T. Finck, the well-known musical critic.

The death is announced, at Paris, of Madame delle Sedie, the wife of the celebrated baritone. Her maiden name was Marguerita Tizzoni, and she was well-known on the operatic stage many years before her marriage.

Eugène d'Albert has given a recital in the Salle Erard, which proved to be one of great interest. The young pianist's execution of a Chopin polonaise and of a Liszt fantasia were especially admired.

An excellent comic opera has been produced at the Gaité, "Le Bossu," founded on Paul Féval's novel, with music by Grisart. The Gaité is not the theatre where one expects to hear the best music, so that M. Grisart's clever and characteristic score was doubly welcome as a surprise.

It seems to be a difficult matter to provide M. Massenet with a suitable libretto. M. Victorien Sardou writes to "Le Temps," saying that his first idea had been to find a subject in the Egyptian Campaign—"Kléber en Egypte"—but that the cruel necessity of cutting off the beards of the chorus singers was pointed out to him as inevitable in the representation of the clean-shaven Republican soldiers, so that, out of respect to the said beards, M. Sardou abandoned this plot. The picturesque possibilities in a subject drawn from the Conquest of Mexico by the Spaniards next occurred to the librettist, but were rejected by the composer. M. Sardou then fled to the cold shades of classic story, and is anxious to turn the whole of the Odyssey into an opera, from which scheme it may be hoped that the gods and M. Massenet will deter him.

The rehearsals of Lalo's "Roi d'Ys," and of Poise's "Carmosine" are being proceeded with every day alternately at the Opéra Comique.

The little French town of Givet, in the Ardennes, and a stone's throw from Belgium, is resolved to erect a statue of Méhul, the composer of "Joseph and his Brethren," who was born there. The initiative was taken by the Mayor of Givet, and a committee was soon formed in Paris, consisting of members of the Academy of Fine Arts, a deputation from the Ardennes, and certain composers and authors, M. Ambroise Thomas at the head of all—who have worked so well in support of the plan that the appointed sculptor, M. Croisy, is already busy with the task entrusted to him.

The soil of France appears to be more favourable to female musical genius than any other. After Mdlle. Holmès we have Mdlle. Chaminade, also honoured as a musician in Paris, but just now fêted at Marseilles, where Rougier's poetical ballet, "Callirhoë," music by the lady composer, has just been produced with brilliant success. Mdlle. Chaminade's score is said to possess distinctive charms, but the orchestral colouring is perhaps too delicate for a theatre.

Two new comic operas have been produced at the La Monnaie, Brussels. Of MM. P. and L. Hillemacher's "Une Aventure d'Arlequin," the success was great; the story or plot being of the slightest, was treated with a light and refined touch by the composers, and a smooth and spirited little work is the result. M. Leopold Wenzel's "Dragon de la Reine," at the fine new Alhambra Theatre, has less merit; the music and the story are said to be alike feeble, but the mounting is splendid.

Alas for old associations! The historical Apollo Theatre of Rome is doomed. The work of regulating the course of the Tiber necessitates the destruction of this famous house, which, since the early part of the 17th Century, under the name of the Teatro Tordinona, has brought to light the masterpieces of Pergolese, Porpora, Sacchini, and Rossini. To the interest of the Princes of Torlonia the improvements and additions in 1830 were due, and its new name, the Apollo Theatre, was a signal for renewed vigour, and a new career of glory, during which Verdi's "Trovatore" and "Un Ballo in Maschera," were produced, among other successful works.

Considerable sums have been left by the late Signor Pinsuti to various charities; £4,000 is to be divided amongst several institutions, £400 goes to the Corps de Musique, of Florence, £330 to the hospital, etc. M. Vittorio Pinsuti, the son of Domenico Pinsuti, is the residuary legatee.

Saint-Saëns's "Samson and Delilah" has been revived at Weimar, where it was first produced, ten years ago.

The succesful production at Lisbon has been announced of an opera in four acts, by a Portuguese composer, Keil's "Donna Bianca." Enthusiasm was great, the principal singers as well as Signor Mancinelli, the conductor, and the composer, as a matter of course, were recalled over and over again.

A new oratorio called "The Birth of Christ," composed by Wennerberg, has been given in one of the churches of Stockholm. Wennerberg is now a venerable old man, one of the dignitaries of the Swedish Church, and is said to regret the publication of the many students' drinking-songs which made him so popular.

The Hungarian House of Deputies has reduced the subvention of the Budapest Opera House to 210,000 florins. In consequence the solo singers are to be diminished in number from 43 to 27. There will now be twelve male voices and fifteen female. Even the ballet girls are to lose some of their numbers. Henceforth the corps will consist of 61 instead of 113 members.

The "Leipziger Tageblatt" states on good authority that the violin of Paganini, now stored in the Genoa Museum, was not a Stradivarius, but a "Joseph Guarnerius del Jesù," of the year 1743. Paganini is said to have received this instrument as a present from a French merchant, on the occasion of a concert performance at Leghorn in 1820.

Bülow has announced a concert in Berlin, on the 23rd, of Beethoven's Choral Symphony. The public are hoping that the great conductor will afford them the pleasure of hearing two performances of the work at the same concert, with half an hour's interval between each—an original idea introduced by him at Meiningen.

A Schubert museum is about to be established at Vienna, and space for a collection and exhibition of Schubert relics and mementoes has been granted by the Town Council in the Rathhaus. Schubert lovers are begged to lend or to sell to the committee objects they possess that may be considered of interest. The opening of the exhibition is fixed for November 19th, the 60th anniversary of the composer's death. The "Schubertbund," to whom this movement is due, celebrate their jubilee on November 17th and 19th.

The removal of the remains of Beethoven and of Schubert, and the unveiling of their memorials in the Central Friedhof, will be celebrated on separate occasions in the course of this summer and autumn.

THE HOUSES IN WHICH MOZART LIVED.

Readers may have noticed in recent news from Vienna, that the prize model for the Mozart monument to be erected in that city has, after further consideration, been rejected, one, and not the least important, reason being that Vienna has already two sitting musical heroes in Beethoven and Schubert. A fresh competition has therefore been decided upon, leaving the committee pro tem. without a model, without a suitable spot (to be chosen anew to suit the new design), minus about £480 paid for three rejected prize models, and only about £4,000 cash in hand, and with the realisation of the scheme relegated to a somewhat more distant future. This is much to be regretted, especially as the Viennese, with all their genuine admiration and love for the great Salzburg composer, have an omission to repair. For not only is Mozart's grave unknown, but the numerous houses where he lived and wrote some of his greatest works remain, with the two exceptions to be mentioned later on, unprovided with any memorial tablets, or other tokens to indicate the fact. It is true that the use of such tablets on private houses is of comparatively recent origin, but of late this praiseworthy custom has become pretty general in most European countries, more particularly in Italy, where not only native, but also foreign genius is honoured in this way. Thus, for instance, in the Corso at Rome, the inscription may be seen: "Here lived Wolfgang Goethe, and wrote immortal works."

Mozart spent the last ten years of his short life at Vienna. He loved its musical atmosphere, and became a Viennese to the core. Taking his first lodgings in the Deutsche Haus, in the Singerstrasse, he wrote on the 17th March, 1781, to his father: "I have a capital room in the same house, where the Archbishop lives," in whose employment he suffered so much. Here the young virtuoso had to take his meals with the staff of domestics, giving precedence to the lackeys. "I have at least the honour to sit above the cooks," he once said, with a bitter smile. Finding the brutal conduct of his said employer (Hyeronymus Colloredo) beyond what he could bear, he left his service and the Deutsche Haus, and moved in May, 1781, to the Eye of God (this emblem is still visible at the present day) on the Petersplaz, where he found, "at old Madame Weber's, a pretty room with obliging people," enjoyed all the comforts of a Viennese lodger, and finally—a not uncommon occurrence with single lodgers at Vienna or elsewhere—married Constanze, the pretty daughter of the house. There he also wrote, within about four weeks time, the first act of his first important comic opera, "Il Seraglio," and to this house, now No. 6, Tuchlauben, the same street where Franz Schubert stayed for a time, a marble slab has recently been fixed, bearing the inscription: "Mozart inhabited this house in the year 1781, and there wrote his "Entführung aus dem Serail." From the Eye of God Mozart migrated to the Graben, in September, 1781 some time before his marriage, and, indeed, for the precise object of saving his bethrothed from scandal and ill repute, and again shifted his quarters, in March, 1782, to the Hohen Brücke, Grosshaubl, formerly Grünwald House. Here he wedded his Constanze (April 4th, 1782), finished his above-named opera, and enjoyed the gratification of the successful first performance of that beautiful work.

After a fresh removal and short stay in December, 1782, at Gerberstein House, in the same street, Mozart "pitched his tent," in the following spring, at Burg House, on the Judenplaz, where he wrote chiefly pianoforte and chamber music. Here he also gave a series of private balls, the admission being two florins (about four shillings) for "The Chapeaux." After the, for Mozart, unusually long stay of about a year (it seems the Committee were right in rejecting a "sitting" Mozart), the young and happy couple took a suite of rooms at Camesina House, in the Schulerstrasse, at an annual rental of 460 florins, or about £46—no small item, having regard to the circumstances of the time, and Mozart's in particular, who, as "Imperial Chamber-virtuoso," had only 800 florins, or about £80 to reckon upon. Here he wrote sonatas and symphonies, his operetta, "Der Schauspiel Director," his comic masterpiece, "Le Nozze di Figaro," and here he conceived the first idea of his "Don Giovanni." Here likewise "all Vienna" came to his musical "at homes," on Sunday morning. Here Haydn took Mozart's father aside, and assured him, "before God and man," that "Wolfgang was the greatest musician of his time," and here young Beethoven played before Mozart, who, in his turn, whispered to the bystanders: "You mark this one, he will set the world talking some day!" In the spring of 1787, after a stay of two years and a half, these comfortable but too expensive apartments had to be relinquished for a cheaper house, with a small garden, in the suburb Landstrasse, probably No. 77, Am Rennweg, to be again exchanged, in the summer of 1788, in consequence of increasing penury, for the still cheaper quarters at the Five Stars, 135, Währingerstrasse, in the suburb, Alsergrund, where, with the brokers at the door, a sick wife, and himself in suffering health, he wrote, in rapid succession, his three symphonic masterpieces, in E flat in June, G minor in July, and C major, with the Fugue, in August, beside his opera "Cosi fan tutte."

But in spite of his deplorable pecuniary straits, the peripatetic maestro could not rest outside the walls of the "inner town," with its social and musical life. Besides, he loved the picturesquely tortuous, narrow, up-and-down hill streets and shady rooms of that ancient locality. So after a more than two years' self-imposed exile in the suburbs, we find him, in September, 1790, again settled in the heart of the city proper, namely on the first floor of Kaiserstein House, in the Rauhensteingasse, which proved his last earthly domicile — the scene of his death, the old building has since given way to the spacious "Mozarthof," being adorned with a handsome bust of Mozart, placed by the owner of the house in the centre of the hall, with the inscription: "To the immortal tone-poet, who lived here until his death, this memorial was dedicated on the rebuilding of the house, by Pietro di Galvagni." That this graceful act of homage should have been performed by an Italian is, considering that Mozart wrote some of his finest music to Italian words, not altogether inappropriate; and if Vienna is somewhat slow in following this laudable example, let us hope it will be sure in erecting a work of art, which will prove a worthy glorification of the name it is intended to commemorate. J. B. K.

Reviews.

INSTRUMENTAL.

In a batch of recent pianoforte music received from Mr. Charles Woolhouse, may be traced encouraging signs of a growing demand for native works of somewhat higher aim and quality than one is accustomed to associate with what are generally called drawing-room pieces; and also of the existence of an increasing number of English musicians able and willing to meet that demand. Among the latter may be cited as bidding fair to occupy a prominent place, Mr. Herbert F. Sharpe, who, on other occasions, has proved himself a friend of the pianoforte amateur by contributing little pieces, musicianly in tone, of not more than moderate difficulty, and marked by a pleasant originality. Whether in a clever imitation of Spanish dance music, such as "Seguidille," or in a "Bourrée Caracteristique," in graceful little efforts, like "Fünf Stücke für pianoforte," or in the two more ambitious "Musical Sketches," entitled respectively "Mignon" and "Capriccio" (the latter of which may be singled out as especially bright and taking), one is sure to come across ideas, perhaps of not more than moderately striking character, but sufficient to show vitality, and to prove that something more than mere manufacture has been aimed at by the composer. We have also "Five Character Pieces," for pianoforte duet, by the same hand ("Russisch," "Night Visions," "Marche," "Romance," and "Scherzo Furiante"), admirably written and effective. Praise of a very similar kind may be accorded to "Trois Danses de Salon," by Carl Weber, consisting of "Valse Mélancolique, "Gavotte," and "Menuet," the first of which we consider especially charming. Next in order of merit may be placed four pieces, by Sydney Shaw, "Remembrance," "Mazurka," "Dreaming," and "Melody," the two last being very flowing and melodious; and, as not less musicianly in workmanship, though certainly less original in subject, a little romance, entitled "Resignation," by Eugène Wagner. "Reveil du Printemps," an overture by G. Saint-George, which has had the honour of being arranged for full orchestra as a sextet, as a quartet, a trio, a duet for violin and piano, and also for four hands and for two hands on the piano, is a common-place production, and decidedly uninteresting in the form of a pianoforte solo. "Toujours à toi," by the same composer, is, on the other hand, a pleasing pensée, likely to find favour with drawing-room players. We may also mention a graceful little "Valse de Concert," by J. A. Orellana; a tuneful, well-written sketch, entitled "Souvenir," by Wilfred Davies; "In Olden Time," minuet, by S. Emily Oldham, a successful reproduction of the old dance measure; "In Fairyland," a bright, well-sustained "Morceau Caracteristique," by J. Cliffe Forrester, and a graceful Idyl, in waltz metre, for four hands, by Alexander S. Beaumont. (All the above, Charles Woolhouse.)

A short collection of Technical Exercises for the pianoforte on the Deppe principle, systematically arranged by C. A. Ehrenfechter (Weekes and Co.), will have interest for pianists by reason of the high position occupied now for many years by Herr Deppe abroad, his powerful personal influence over a large circle of pupils, and the many excellent performers who have been indebted to his guidance. Anything like a resumé of the system in question will not be expected from these modest eleven pages. The exercises themselves are for the most part of an elementary character, and deal with scales, octaves, chord passages, and other matters, the section relating to "tension and contraction" being perhaps the most noteworthy. Simple as are these exercises, they are evidently the fruit of much thought and experience, and only when supplemented by oral instruction will their usefulness and full significance be apprehended by the learner.

In "Le Livre des Histoires," a dainty volume published by Mr. Ricordi, an attempt has been made to add interest and suggestiveness to a collection of pianoforte pieces for four hands, by the aid of descriptive verselets and full-page tinted illustrations of an appropriate character. The experiment may be pronounced successful, the duets composed by J. Burgmein, under such fanciful titles as "Histoire d'une jeune fille," "Histoire Galante," "Histoire Valsée," "Histoire Merveilleuse," &c., being well written and effective, and with the often poetical explanatory lines contributed by Paulanges, and Alfred Montelti's whimsical designs, this book, when not in use at the music desk, may fairly claim a place upon the drawing-room table.

The third instalment of "The Skye Collection of Reels and Strathspeys," arranged for violin and piano by Keith Norman Macdonald (Paterson and Sons), contains a goodly collection of these characteristic dances, and will prove acceptable, not only to those whose predelictions are in favour of this style of music, but also to students interested in the peculiarities of rhythm and scale exhibited in the national dances of Scotland.

A little pianoforte piece, entitled "A Twilight Dream," by M. S. Barron (Swan & Co.), consists of a pleasing melody for which the left hand has the main responsibility. Being at the same time pretty and eminently playable, it is sure to find favour with pianists of moderate executive capacity.

Among recent dance music worthy of mention should be included "Elaine Waltz," by Caroline Lothian (Paterson and Sons), and "Fairest of All Waltz," by Maria Lehfeldt (Weekes and Co.).

Violin amateurs are indebted to Guido Papini for two charming transcriptions for that instrument and pianoforte accompaniment, of melodies, entitled "Reverie" and "Retour," by M. Bourne (E. Ascherberg and Co.)—pieces which will find a welcome in both drawing-room and concert-room.

We also receive a quartet in C for two violins, tenor, and violoncello, by Geo. A. Ames (London Musical Company). The composer, who has directed his attention to this class of concerted music, at present too much neglected, exhibits decided feeling for form and acquaintance with the capabilities of the instruments for which he writes; but neither the themes nor their treatment, truth to say, are distinguished by much fancy or originality. The work, however, is clear in design, and, being of only moderate difficulty, possesses features which will interest amateur performers of chamber music.

VOCAL.

"To Julia weeping" (words by Thomas Moore) and "I'll Tend thy Bower" belong to a set of six songs by Hamish MacCunn (Paterson and Sons), and have interest as coming from the pen of a young composer who has already made his mark in more ambitious works. Both are written in musicianly style; the first being in a minor key and pervaded by a vein of melancholy appropriate to the verse, and the latter possessing fair melodic interest in addition to a graceful accompaniment. Longfellow's well-known poem "The Slave singing at midnight," has been rendered with considerable musical feeling by W. H. Bentley (London Music Publishing Company). This seems to be one of those songs concerning which, by reason of the picturesque subject and its sympathetic treatment, no small measure of popularity may be safely predicted.

The "Valley of Dreams," by J. D. Havet Zuccordi (E. Ascherberg) is a drawing-room song with a waltz refrain, which will probably constitute its chief attraction. The same publishers send "Beyond the Shadows," by Carlo Ducci, a song which, in spite of its somewhat straggling design, has good qualities and is decidedly vocal.

The "Strathearn" collection of part songs contains some good arrangements of Scottish ditties by H. A. Lambert, to which choral societies should give their attention, and the same publishers (Paterson and Sons) are now issuing a "Waverley collection" of vocal trios, the first of these being a pleasing trio for female voices, entitled "Mid the Lilies," by Otto Schweitzer.

"Frühlingsleid" is a graceful melody, written for voice and violin or violoncello accompaniment, ad lib., by Alfred Gallrein (also Paterson and Sons).

BOOKS.

The fourth volume of Mr. G. H. Wilson's "Musical Year-Book of the United States," being for the season 1886-7, contains all those interesting features to which we have drawn attention on former occasions, and will be well worth preserving as a record of the continued musical progress of the most progressive of countries. The wide range covered by the united operas and concerts of various kinds, of which an evidently carefully prepared list is here given, cannot fail to again suggest comparisons not altogether in favour of the "old country." The Boston season is treated with special regard to completeness of detail, and in addition to the list of first performances there is now given, for the first time, a table of new compositions by American composers, some of whose names, hitherto little or not at all known on this side, may quite possibly be hereafter referred to with interest.

"A Series of 350 Questions and Exercises" (A. Hammond and Co.), to be used in conjunction with the "Text-Book of Musical Knowledge," by the junior candidates at the Trinity College Local Examinations, merits the attention of teachers, not only because it greatly facilitates, by formulating, their labours, but as being the result of a wide experience in selecting those aspects of the subject it has been found desirable to impress with special emphasis upon the minds of young students. The form of question and answer is well known to be one of the very best for imparting instruction, and with the aid of this guide-book, and by modifying the exercises according to individual requirements, the music-teacher will find his path made comparatively easy for him.

THERE ARE TIMES!

There are times when my scorn is deep
For this life and its daily lie,
When I mourn the chain that must still restrain
My soul till the day I die!
When the clouds I'd ride in my boundless pride,
And pierce the great mystery!
But the veil will vanish—the shackles fall,
And the loosened spirit be free of all!

There are times when I nurse my hate
For the things that are born of time,
For the fair, false smile, for the traitor's wile,
For the folly that is a crime!
When my brain's on fire with a fierce desire
For the range of a finer clime!
But the smile will pass, and the fleeting show,
And the folly, anon, into wisdom grow!

There are times when I dream of peace,
In the light of a fair young moon,
When I fain would rest with the one loved best,
In the leafy woods of June!
And would weave sweet dreams, where the winding streams
Are singing a pleasant tune.
For love will live, when the stars wax dim,
And death, the tyrant, must yield to him!

(Copyright.) F. B. D.

Music Publishers' Weekly List.

SONGS.

Beneath the Roses (C to F)	Gilbert Byass	Woolhouse.
Castle in the Air, The (B to D)	G. Saint-George	"
La Resignation (with violin obbligato, E flat to F)	Eugène Wagner	"
Plymouth Bay (C to F)	R. A. Boissier	Franklin.
Sleep (C to E)	Mrs. J. A. Vernham	Woolhouse.
Three Fishers	J. C. Forrester	"
When I survey the Wondrous Cross (D to D)	Churchill Sibley	Ambrose

CONCERTED VOCAL.

Praise Our God. Anthem	Rev. J. Cater	B. Williams.
Songs of a Summer's Day, four vocal duets	F. J. Sawyer	Novello.
Te Deum	C. T. West	"

PIANOFORTE.

Bourrée Caractéristique	H. F. Sharpe	Woolhouse
Four Pieces	S. Shaw	"
Fünf Stucke	H. F. Sharpe	"
In Fairyland	J. C. Forrester	"
In Olden Time	S. Emily Oldham	"
La Resignation	Eugène Wagner	"
Recreations	Emily Hughes	Chester, Brighton.
Reveil du Printemps	G. Saint-George	Woolhouse.
Seguidille	H. F. Sharpe	"
Sleep, sleep	A. S. Beaumont	"
Souvenir	W. Davies	"
Toujours à toi	G. Saint-George	"
Trois danses de Salon	Carl Weber	"
Two Musical Sketches	H. F. Sharpe	"
Valse de Concert	J. A. de Orellana	"

CONCERTED INSTRUMENTAL.

Four duets for two violins	H. F. Sharpe	Woolhouse
Lullaby, trio for pianoforte, violin and viola or 'cello	A. S. Beaumont	"

The Organ World.

ORGAN RECITAL PLAYING.

XII.

As Griepenkerl observes, "the art of registering is an important means of effect in securing a correct, beautiful, and distinct performance of Bach's organ works." This is no less true in these recital-playing days than it was when organ-playing was confined almost entirely to the church, and when organs possessed not many of the modern imitative and characteristic effects so abundant in our large church and concert room instruments. The great principles of stop selection remain the same, though variations of tone may be more plentiful and changes of tone-quality more frequently made. The eminent writer just named tells us that "he who has not tried the effect of single stops and their connections in twos, threes, etc., until he has exhausted all their combinations up to the full organ, has no idea of the manifold variety of organic effects." Experience in the performance of Bach's works seems to lead to the conclusion that the very last resource of the judicious organist is the effect expressed in the direction "full organ." Mistakes in this direction have unhappily tended to keep the works of the great Cantor of Leipsic from their just position as recital music, not only of the highest, but most attractive character. The power, noise, and confusion of the tone of the full organ, used out of the right place, have a repelling effect, and tend to demoralise and relax that nice sense of hearing which is absolutely essential to a just appreciation of the multiform thoughts and lace-work counterpoint of the great master of purely organic music. The chief conditions appear to be clearness without undue prominence, and decided tone-character without vulgar assertion. The recitalist must, indeed, invite the listener to listen, he must cunningly draw the attention of the auditor through clearly defined, attractive tones to the thoughts and workmanship of the composer. Now this is just what we neglect to do when we invade the hearer with a flood of indistinct, repellant sound, from which his natural inclination prompts him to retreat; a feeling which results commonly in a reduction of listening power, from a vague sense of self-protection on the part of the listener. But the recitalist who is playing Bach's music requires, if he be a true artist, all his auditor's listening powers. "He who drives his listener to the door, drives away a friend," is a saying every organist manipulating a large and powerful instrument may well take to heart. Mattheson, the contemporary of Handel and Bach, and a writer of rare judgment and skill, took pains to modify and make clear the expression "organo pleno," which Bach uses as meaning a full, clear, but always suitable volume of tone, the idea being that quality and quantity must be inseparable, and the organist must mix his stops—just as in a well-worn story the painter, Opie, asserted he mixed his colours—with brains. Mattheson excluded from his ideal "full organ," laid out for contrapuntal work, the reed stops of the great organ. "He who blindly adopts the notion that 'organo pleno,'" says a critic already freely quoted, "will often be at a loss when he finds this expression over organ pieces of very different kinds, which cannot possibly be effectively rendered by the same stops." Moderation is safety in this matter, and the real spirit of a given work can, as a rule, be best secured by an approach from the comparatively secure basis of medium tone-power. It often happens, indeed, that strength is lost by over-much noise, because the ear loses the power of concentration. Much stress has been placed upon this section of the subject of recital playing, from a conviction that the recitalist who is failing to make Bach's organ music satisfying and attractive, is not fulfilling his mission as an organ player. To return, it would be well to adopt a manner of registering for Bach's organ works which, without overlooking opportunities for effect, is never spasmodic. To this end, the various movements should be carefully dissected, and each change of manner should be regarded as an opportunity for change of manual or change of stops. Such alterations of tone quantity or quality should in no case be in violent contrast, lest the logical plan and general consistency of the movement be disturbed. Without any desire to neglect the modern organic effects, the music should be treated with what may be called historical effect; that is, reeds on heavy pressure, stops of decisive, bold tone, and imitative registers should be used with a sparing and cautious hand. Most of the effects should be based upon judicious and happily contrasted flue registers of eight and four feet, and into these the reeds and other special tone qualities, should be "infused," as it were. The full swell effect, though unknown to Bach, is not inimical to the just effect of certain of his most organic ideas, as in the few bars of common time ending the prelude in G major in three-two measure and leading into the fugue; and again in the slow ending the middle movement of the toccata in C. It is quite true, as a great organist once observed, such passages would go equally well on the diapason work, or even on a full great organ combination, but it may be well to remember that Bach finds plenty of work for these effects, and the organist, seeking to secure variety, and to use the full swell as a distinct modern power not to be overlooked, may wisely select such short and exceptional passages with artistic result, and without doing violence to the composer's ideas. Bach's music and its treatment must not be dismissed in connection with recital playing, without a few more words to be offered upon an early opportunity.

E. H. TURPIN.

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

The annual dinner of the College, fixed for Monday next, at 6.30, at the Holborn Restaurant, promises to be an occasion of interest, and a delightful re-union. Dr. E. J. Hopkins will take the chair, and he will be surrounded by distinguished members of the institution. The toast list includes "The Queen and Royal Family," "The College of Organists," "Our National Musical Institutions," "The Organists' Benevolent Society," "The Patrons (the office of president is vacant) and the Vice-Presidents of the College," "The Council," "The Treasurer and Hon. Secretary," "The Chairmen," and "The Visitors." Interesting and kindly speeches will no doubt be evolved from the interests, work, and prospects such a list brings forward, each toast being in itself a leit-motiv, so to speak. One advantage of such a meeting as the college dinner is the mutual knowledge gained by the members and their official staff. Such an exchange of thought year by year leads to hopeful encouragement and valuable friendly intercourse, alike tending to strengthen the bonds of a common interest, and to help forward the mission of an institution which has done and is doing so much good from both artistic and social points of sight. Members and friends are reminded that tickets (4s. each, exclusive of wine) may be obtained at the college. All applications should be in the secretary's hands not later than the first post on Monday morning. For the convenience of friends coming up by train on Monday, morning dress will be worn upon this occasion. As last year, the dinner will be followed by a special lecture, given by Dr. E. J. Hopkins, on the succeeding evening, Tuesday, April 10th, at eight, at the Bloomsbury Hall, Hart Street, W.C. This lecture will be, as announced, on a most interesting subject, "The English Mediæval Church Organ." Members, friends, and all interested in the history of the "king of instruments" are invited to attend. Dr. Hopkins has so long been regarded as the leading historian of the organ, his researches are known to be so extensive, and his observations are ever so instructive as well as interesting, that the lecture is sure to be one of special value.

MUSICAL ELOCUTION.

BY G. ERNEST LAKE.

SECTION II.—INSTRUMENTAL ELOCUTION.

I fancy we all know the difficulty of getting young fingers to give to notes their just time value, still less extract their full tone quality, and seeing that modern editions of the classics abound in instances of "fingering by substitution," it seems to me most advisable that pianoforte students should practice—whether upon the pianoforte, organ, or harmonium—manual exercises, such as those in the late Geo. Cooper's instruction book, or Novello's organ primer. If we could but impress upon pupils—especially female ones—that the pianoforte, if given the chance, is in a great measure a sustaining instrument, and that, in polyphonic playing, each note represents an independent voice, and that the ultimate end of performance is to please others by poetechnical utterance rather than to astonish them by pyrotechnical exhibition; if we could do this, then some folks would love, as well as admire, their playing, and the domestic orchestra cease from becoming a nuisance in the land. If I seem to refer to the pianoforte more especially, it is because of the preponderating number of its students; in reality the remarks apply to most other instruments, notably the organ. Take for instance the 3rd movement andante recitative of Mendelssohn's 1st organ sonata; the delicious dialogue demands the most careful elocution, by means of both touch and phrasing, as also with Henry Smart's slow movements, which are veritable little poems—each complete in itself, and requiring the utmost refinement of simple rehearsal. Would that some organist, in interpreting these, and such as these, would speak somewhat less with variety of organ registers, and more with their own—which are their fingers. Again there is much need for careful study of the elocution of the church service, notably in the accompaniment of the more familiar portions of it, as the responses, psalms, and hymns, and less, perhaps, by variation of tempi or of tone-colour in all cases, than by punctuation, and I refer to this more than to the illustration of varying sentiment, which has been frequently and ably treated of, particularly by Dr. Bridge in his helpful primer of organ accompaniment. His punctuation then is effected by taking the hands from the keys at such places as the laws of suspension of context demand, as at the breaking places in the psalms, in certain responses, such as "Because there is none other," where there may be a break after "fightest for us," and another after "only thou;" also in such hymns as "Just as I am," "Jesus lives," which is often rendered "Jesus lives no longer now, can thy terrors, Death, appal us?" Finally, in the arrangement of vocal compositions, as organ solo, the verbal text should always appear, in order that the performer may punctuate his melody, even as a good vocalist would be sure to do.

In brief then, my position is that for a good instrumental elocutionist two things are needful, firstly, the acquisition of the power of perfect digital expression; and secondly, a just appreciation of rhythmical verbal verse, as a necessity for interpreting sound-poetry, as also, that the first can only be obtained by the cultivation of touch and of real legato playing; and the second best supplied by the medium of the application of lyrics analagous in rhythm and sentiment. Dr. Stainer says, "Music is poetry in sounds, not prose," and also "Every musical sentence which corresponds to a verse (or line) of poetry has its cœsura, or point of division." The undying "duetto" from Mendelssohn's "Lieder ohne Worte" (if that can be termed "undying" which is always being murdered!) is an excellent illustration of the aid which applied lyrics could render to the condition of metrical compositions. They would indicate the exact rhythm or metre, prevent the use of false quantities and accents—in the occasional overlooking of notes of the two melodies and the disregarding of slurs—ensure a continuity of sound during each sentence, and also—to quit the technical for the æsthetic—indicate the sentiment of the poem and the beauty of its construction in some such way as follows. After calling attention to the delicious variety afforded by the first melody in iambic rhythm being answered—by the second in trochaic—it might be shown that supposing this to be a love duet—with the first theme that of a soprano, and the second that of a baritone—the female commences her song with iambic diffidence, and is answered by the male with trochaic firmness. Then this diffidence wearing off, the verses become shorter and more passionate, overlapping each other until they merge at last into a broad, exultant stream of melody (that, by the way, initiated by the male as being the stronger), when after a brief separation only to indulge in a tender dialogue which gradually dies away. The poem ends with the baritone's first phrase, imitated by the soprano, whom he rises to join, and as the accompaniment (which may typify the outer world) vanishes, the pair are left alone, side by side, as it were, until the sounds which represent them fade away in their turn, and we know them no more, though the remembrance that at the last the male voice was the key-note (and finality of restful harmony) and the female the third (mediant), which is its sweetness (as also the determination of its major or minor end), is full of pleasant suggestiveness.

Permit me once more very earnestly to disclaim any wish to invest the ideas of genius with a limited significance; but, as Mendelssohn himself has here given us a clue through the title "duetto," surely the embodiment of some such thoughts as the above would help to guard against the too frequent misinterpretation of one of the most perfect of instrumental poetical gems. It may be urged that every student has not a poetical mind, or that it is undeveloped, though this can never be the case with a true musician. In that case he has only to remember that the composers have, and to strive to carry out their exemplification of it by careful attention to the indicated phrasing. The poetic development will surely follow as day follows night. Even though the performer's elocution be artificial to himself, his correct elocution may yet convey a true message to his hearers. Granted the possession of perfect technique, what is the difference between one artist and another? Simply elocutionary—the "reading" of the work in the true signification of the term. The great vocalist, the great instrumentalist, the great conductor of both in plurality, all these are more or less powerful elocutionists, and their success depends upon their power of poetical interpretation, which is the true meaning of the word elocution. Why is it that good accompanying is so very, very rare? It is because pianists read not the words as well as the notes, and are not in sympathy with the vocal elocutionists, as being unaware of the nuances which good elocution dictates to the latter, and consequently failing to phrase as they do. Why is it that the composition of the symphonic form of slow movement is apparently a lost art, and that failure or success in this department is considered as a crucial test of genius? I believe that it is because the gentler influences of poetry are lost sight of in these days of force, of fiery false accents and fantastic rhythms. It would seem almost to be a case of—

> "The longer lyfe
> The more offence;
> The more offence,
> The lesser gaine," and that the multiplicity of rhythmical figures which in our compositions war against each other, defying comprehension, much more clearness of interpretation, do typify our own degrading professional jealousies, whereby we war against, instead of trying to assist and to elevate, each other. If this be so, it behoves us to strive manfully against these tendencies towards carelessness of rhythmic utterance, even as we should endeavour to march in rhythmic harmony with our brethren, so that "what we sing with our lips and interpret with our hands" "we may believe in our hearts, and what we believe in our hearts we may show forth in our lives;" whereby, having made ourselves worthy by due rehearsal here, we, when our time comes, may, like Chibiabos, "move a little nearer to the Master of all music."

GEO. ERNEST LAKE.

COMPOSITION PEDALS.

To the Editor of THE ORGAN WORLD.

SIR,—Will you allow me space for a few words on the old theme of a uniform principle in arranging the player's part of organs? The College of Organists did much by its recommendations; but new needs have arisen since its conference, especially in the matter of composition pedals. Some years ago, these appliances were clumsy and untrustworthy, and many good players avoided using them. Now they are made to work with certainty and ease, and are consequently more used and more numerous; Major Casson is putting fifteen into the organ at St. Paul's, Balsall Heath.

I submit, first, that, whether few or many, they ought to be each one in the same place in every organ, large or small, so that a pedal that draws, e.g., the full great organ, should be in the same position, whether there are four other compositions to the great stops, or no others at all. A typical plan should be made for the largest organ, fixing the positions of the pedals (though not the exact compositions drawn by them), and all smaller plans should be made by omitting, or making dummies of, certain pedals, without altering the position of those that remain.

Now this typical plan must be one that can be easily learnt, and I propose, secondly, that the plan of the composition pedals should be identical with that of the pedal clavier so that any organist who knows his way about that clavier, will be equally at home among the composition pedals, they being in arrangement and relative position the same as the pedal keys; thus one learning serves for both.

I would assure those who have never tried composition pedals in two rows, that their use requires no extra learning, and that one often hails the convenience of being able to put down two pedals almost in one movement. The upper row are made short (like some horseshoe pedals are), and the lower row long, and slightly spoon-handle-shaped at the end. They should all be ⅞ in. wide, like the pedal notes.

The use of a composition pedal might be indicated in organ music by some special signs, or else placed above the pedal stave, and signifying, respectively, increase and decrease of sound.

I hope, Sir, that I have not wearied out your patience, and that you will allow me, on a future occasion, to make a few remarks, supplementary to those of the famous conference, about the arrangement of draw stops. Yours faithfully,

STUDENT.

[The plan drawn out by "Student" could not be laid before the reader without special blocks and type arrangements, but it is hoped that the context of his letter, as here given, will convey a general idea of the nature of his proposals.—E.H.T.]

BACH'S "PASSION" AT ST. PAUL'S.

The congregation which attended the special service annually given at St. Paul's Cathedral on Tuesday in Holy Week was more than usually large. The order of service did not materially differ from that habitually used at St. Paul's upon such occasions. It began with the beautiful setting of the "Miserere," harmonised by Dr. Stainer. The Lord's Prayer was followed by some of the penitential prayers from the Commination service, and then commenced a lengthy selection from Bach's "St. Matthew" Passion. After the description of the agony in Gethsemane, a brief pause was made for private prayer, and the "Passion" music was subsequently resumed, the whole terminating with a Collect and the blessing. Dr. Stainer conducted a full orchestra; Dr. Martin, his newly appointed successor, was in the organ loft; while Mr. Fred Walker accompanied those of the speakers who sing in recitativo secco on the pianoforte, the use of which instrument instead of the clavichord at modern performances Bach's biographer Spitta so eloquently defends as most nearly approaching the composer's manifest intentions. The St. Paul's choristers were reinforced by drafts from other churches, and the various solos and recitatives were divided among Masters Cockail and Townshend; Messrs. Kenningham, Hanson, and Fryer; Messrs. Winn, Kempton, De Lacy, and Grice. The fine chorus "Have lightnings and thunders," and the shout of the populace "Barabbas!" an effect to be found in an old Latin "Passion" by Vittoria of the sixteenth century, especially made their old effect. The plan by which some of the solos were sung by several of the boys in unison may not, perhaps, be quite wholly defensible, but inasmuch as the only alternative would cause a single child's voice to be almost inaudible in so vast a space. The impressive effect when the chorales are sung (as Bach intended they should be) by the whole congregation, those who have heard the "St. Matthew" Passion under Mr. Joseph Barnby at St. Anne's, Soho, will, however, not easily forget.

CHRISTCHURCH, LANCASTER GATE.

On March 24th the annual Passiontide services at Christchuch, Lancaster Gate, which are now looked forward to in Paddington as a beautiful and impressive solemnisation of Lent, were inaugurated by the singing of Bach's "Johannis Passion" before a large and deeply-interested congregation. Certainly, the rendering given of Bach's truly spiritual work was a worthy fulfilment of the ideal—that of "aiding the deeper realisation of the tragedy commemorated by the season of Lent." The only omissions were three arias and a few incidental passages. Fortunately in the most responsible and difficult rôle of the oratorio the Christchurch choir possesses a soloist equal to the task, the part of the Narrator being taken by Mr. Gawthrop. The recitatives assigned to the bass part in the character of Christ were, in the absence of Mr. Pope, ably taken by Mr. Sutton Shepley, and those of Pilate were exceedingly well sung by Mr. Gander: Mr. Found, Mr. Turner, and Mr. Wood filled minor parts. The solo airs, which take the form of personal meditations on the narrative, were delivered with due impressiveness and feeling by Miss Philipine Siedle, Madame Helen Armstrong, and Mr. Sutton Shepley; and the congregation, generally too reticent on these occasions, took an unwonted and commendable part in the beautiful reflective chorales which intersperse the work. A closing tribute of praise to the organist, Mr. H. W Richards, who alone sustained the entire burden of the instrumental part, must not be forgotten. Mr. James Bates was again the conscientious and able conductor.

SPECIFICATIONS.

SHEFFIELD.

The scheme of the parish church organ is as follows:—

GREAT ORGAN.

Double open diapason ...	16 ft.	Grave mixture	2rks
Open diapason	8 ,,	Cornet	5 ,,
Open diapason	8 ,,	Sharp mixture	3 ,,
Höhl flöte	8 ,,	*Contra Posaune	16 ft.
Harmonic flute	4 ,,	*Tromba	8 ,,
Principal	4 ,,	*Clarion	4 ,,

Stops marked * are on heavy wind.

SWELL ORGAN.

Bourdon	16 ft.	Sesquialtra	3rks
Open diapason	8 ,,	Oboe	8 ft.
Lieblich gedact	8 ,,	Horn	8 ,,
Echo dulciana	8 ,,	Contra faggetto	16 ,,
Unda maris	8 ,,	Clarion	4 ,,
Principal	4 ,,	Voix humaine	8 ,,
Mixture	2rks

CHOIR ORGAN.

Bourdon	16 ft.	Flauto traveros	4 ft.
Salcional	8 ,,	Dulcet twelfth	3⅔,,
Dulciana	8 ,,	Piccolo	2 ,,
Lieblich gedact	8 ,,	Clarionet	8 ,,

PEDAL ORGAN.

Major bass (large scale) ...	16 ft.	Octave	8 ft.
Violon (metal)	16 ,,	Flute	8 ,,
Bourdon	16 ,,	Bombarde	16 ,,
Quint (open wood)	10⅔,,	Trompette	8 ,,

COUPLERS.

Great to pedal.
Swell to pedal.
Choir to pedal.
Swell to great.
Swell to choir.
Choir sub-octave.
Swell sub-octave.
Swell super octave.
Great super octave.
Tremulant.

The whole is on Brindley and Foster's patent tubular pneumatic action, the organ having been rebuilt by this well-known firm and the original builders. The console is of polished oak, the draw-stop knobs are of solid ivory.

The great organ reeds are on a wind pressure of 7 inches, great flue work 4½ inches, pedal organ 4¾ inches, and choir 3½ inches. The organ is blown by four three-throw cranks and fly-wheels.

There are four pneumatic pistons to great, and four to swell. Eight composition pedals, and three ventils. Balanced swell pedal.

E. H. LEMARE, Organist.

RECITAL NEWS.

ST. MARY ABBOT'S, KENSINGTON.—On March 22nd, "Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" was admirably sung under the able direction of Mr. Henry R. Bird, the organist, by a chorus of 112 voices, and accompanied by 24 stringed instruments and the organ, the latter instrument being played by Mr. Hubert Hunt, of St. Jude's, Kensington.

LYE.—A recital was given by Mr. W. T. Best (organist of St. George's Hall, Liverpool), on March 19th, at Mr. T. H. Rhodes' Music Rooms, on the occasion of opening the new organ, built by Mr. J. Clark, Bath. The programme comprised:

Organ concerto in G major (Largo—Ciaconna—Adante—Fuga)	Handel.
Andante, from the 1st Organ Sonata......	Alphonse Mailly.
Prelude and Fugue in B minor	Bach.
Andante Cantabile..............................	Th. Salomé.
Overture in E major, founded on the Austrian Hymn	Haslinger.
Andante in E major	Smart.
Introduction and Fugue on a Trumpet Far.fare	W. T. Best.
Finale—Capriccio alla Sonata	Fumagalli.

The specification was as follows:—

GREAT ORGAN.

Double diapason	16 ft.	Harmonic Flute	4 ft.
Open diapason	8 ,,	Twelfth	2⅔,,
Horn diapason	8 ,,	Fifteenth	2 ,,
Stopped diapason	8 ,,	Mixture, 4 ranks
Principal	4 ,,	Trumpet	8 ,,

SWELL ORGAN.

Bourdon	16 ft.	Sesquialtera (4 ranks) ...
Open diapason	8 ,,	Double trumpet	16 ft.
Gedact	8 ,,	Horn	8 ,,
Salicional	8 ,,	Hautboy	8 ,,
Vox Angelica	8 ,,	Vox humana...	8 ,,
Principal	4 ,,	Clarion	4 ,,

CHOIR ORGAN.

Viol de gambe	8 ft.	Flute d'amour	4 ft.
Dulciana	8 ,,	Flute à cheminée	4 ,,
Orchestral flute	8 ,,	Clarionet	8 ,,

PEDAL ORGAN.

Open diapason	16 ft.	Principal	8 ft.
Bourdon	16 ,,

COUPLERS.

Swell to great (unison).
Swell to great (super-octave).
Swell to choir (unison).
Choir to great.
Swell to pedals.
Great to pedals.
Choir to pedals.
Tremulant.

Total number of pipes, 1,926.

BOW AND BROMLEY INSTITUTE.—M. Auguste Wiegand, of Ostend, not appearing on March 24th, Mr. Fountain Meen gave a capital recital at short notice, his programme including works by Rheinberger, Silas, and Widor. On Saturday last, Mr. Henry J. Wood made a very successful first appearance, his performances being loudly applauded and twice encored. He played Fantasia in G, Krebs; Andante, Mendelssohn; Fugue in D, Bach; Entracte, Reinecke; Concert, Staz-Thiele; Intermezzo, Macbeth; Toccata, Widor; and Postlude in E Flat, Wely.

A series of organ recitals, under the direction of Mr. Edwin Bending, is now in progress at the Royal Albert Hall. The first recital (by invitation) attracted a numerous audience. To relieve the organ music, Mr. Bending had engaged several vocalists, who sang several songs to the evident satisfaction of the audience. The following compositions were rendered by Mr. Bending on the organ:—Introduction and Fugue, Krebs; "Lieder ohne Worte," Mendelssohn; "Meditation," Bending; and Overture to "Semiramide," Rossini.

BALHAM, S.W.—A recital was given by Mr. H. W. Weston, F.C.O., after Evensong on Easter Day, at the Parish Church, to a large congregation. The programme included the following:—

Festival Overture to a Sacred Cantata	Carl Loccol.
Offertoire	A. Guilmant.
La Serenata	Braga.
Tempo di Minuetto (MSS.).........................	H. W. Weston.
Andante (4th Oboe Concerto).....................	Handel.
Toccata in G	Th. Dubois.

Notes.

If possible, it would be interesting to employ at the approaching Handel Festival, Mendelssohn's obligato organ part to "Israel in Egypt," and such parts of "Solomon" and the "Dettingen Te Deum" as may be sung; though the organ part to the last two works are still in MS., there would be no difficulty in obtaining permission to use it, one would think.

A Liverpool paper observes:—"Mr. J. J. Monk's find at Liverpool of two organ works by Michael Maybrick, grandfather of "Stephen Adams" Maybrick, is an interesting matter. Michael was organist of St. Peter's, Liverpool, and was a pupil of Wainwright's, who held the post before him. Wainwright is best remembered by a florid hymn tune dear to Methodist congregations. The "works" referred to are voluntaries, eighteen in all, and I should think, with Mr. Monk, that they will bear resuscitation." These voluntaries, as before noted, were inscribed to Mr. W. Sudlow, brother of the still better known Henry Sudlow. Wainwright was not a preacher but an esteemed teacher of music and a Liverpool composer of some reputation.

The Committee of the Manchester Sunday School Union recently offered three prizes for original Sunday School Hymn tunes, suitable for their selection of "Festival Hymns for Whitsuntide, &c., 1888;" the competition being open to any person, professional or amateur, The prizes have been as follows:—The First to the Motto "Cantab," by W. H. Hannaford, Mus. Bac. (Cantab), of Stoke, Devonport, for his setting of "Saviour, now the day is ending;" the Second to "Firmum in vita nihil," by T. A. Aldridge, of Boscombe, Bournemouth, for his setting of "Who is on the Lord's side?"; and the Third to "Speranza," by Alfred King, Mus. Bac. (Oxon), F.C.O., Brighton, for his setting of "Another year has passed away." Two other tunes are accorded honourable mention, being specially suitable for the purpose required. These are—Motto, "Shanklin" ("Suppose the little cowslip") by Caleb Simper, St. George's-square, Worcester. Motto, "C. Berno" ("The beautiful bright sunshine") by R. R. Widdop, Mus. Bac., Leeds.

The Organ Concerto to be played by Mr. W. T. Best at the forthcoming Handel Festival, is interesting as containing in the simple notes of a ground bass the first and separate pedal part probably written in England, and the part of the kind penned by the composer.

Mr. H. W. Weston, F.C.A., writes:—"In reply to the note in last week's MUSICAL WORLD, re M. Guilmant's Concerts, it may interest your readers to know that I am playing the organ part in three of Mozart's Sonatas which I am introducing at my Recital on Saturday evening at S. Barnabas, Kentish Town."

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS' CALENDAR.

On Monday next, April 9th, the "Annual College Dinner;" takes place at the Holborn Restaurant, at 6.30. Dr. E. J. Hopkins will preside. On Tuesday, April 10th, the library will be opened from 7 to 8. On the same evening, Dr. E. J. Hopkins will give a special Lecture on "The English Mediæval Church Organ;" April 24th, Lecture, by Dr. F. J. Sawyer, on "The Primary Rules of Keyboard Fingering;" May 22nd, Lecture; June 26th, Lecture; July 17th, 18th, 19th, F.C.O. Examination; July 20th, Diploma Distribution: July 24th, 25th, 26th, A.C.O. Examination; July 27th, Diploma Distribution. Other arrangements and particulars will be duly announced.

E. H. TURPIN, Hon. Sec.

95, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, W.C.

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

THE PRIMA DONNA:

Her History and Surroundings, from the 17th to the 19th Century. By H. SUTHERLAND EDWARDS. Gives a picture of the life, professional and social, of every prima donna down to the present day. Two vols., demy 8vo, 24s.

"Odd corners of operatic history have been ransacked for the apt anecdotes and characteristic touches that here give life to the portrait."—Musical World.

"Volumes so full, not only of useful fact, but of pleasant anecdote and gossip, that they are sure to be read, not only with profit, but with pleasure."—Globe.

MEMOIRS of COUNT HORACE DE VIEL CASTEL.

A Chronicle of Events, Political and Social, during the reign of Napoleon III., years 1851—1864. Translated by CHARLES BOUSFIELD. Two vols., demy 8vo, 30s.

"What makes his memoirs such entertaining reading is that he has not only a good memory for bad stories, but that in his rapid portraiture he shows something of the power, of the shrewd insight, and of the graphic wit of a Saint Simon. Through the scandals are scattered curious and piquant revelations.—Times.

REMINGTON AND CO., Henrietta-street, Covent Garden.

By FREDERICK HELMORE.

Just published, price Sixpence. Dedicated to SIR ARTHUR S. SULLIVAN.

THE ITALIAN REGISTERS.

VOCE DI PETTO. VOCE DI GOLA. VOCE DI TESTA.

By the same Author.

SPEAKERS, SINGERS, AND STAMMERERS. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

SINGING METHOD. No. 1. The Little Ones' Book. Containing the Songs in "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland," and "Through the Looking Glass." Also, the Nursery Rhymes, Easy Rounds, &c., used in his "Little Ones' Classes." Fcap. 4to, 1s.

SINGING METHOD. No. 2. The First Reading Book. Containing a Catechism on the Art of Singing Music from Notes, followed by Scale and Chord Exercises, by the practice of which Pupils rapidly acquire the Knowledge and Feeling for Harmony, so necessary in PART SINGING. Illustrated by pleasant Rounds, Duets. and Trios. Fcap. 4to, 1s.

London: J. MASTERS and CO., 78, New Bond Street.

ORGANISTS AND ORGAN STUDENTS.

You are kindly requested to write for Ainsworth's "New Patent Organ Pedal Combination List." Ainsworth's "New Patent" is perfectly unique and may be combined easily with any Piano. It is the only one which may be safely combined with any Piano without deteriorating the instrument. Having put down at my works two engines and machinery of the most desirable kind, I am now supplying my goods at a price which enables every organist and organ student to have always ready for use in his Studio an

ORGAN PEDAL PIANO,

AFFORDING PERFECTLY UNIQUE PEDAL PRACTICE.

34, Sheen Park, Richmond.

DEAR SIR,—I have deferred writing to comment upon your Pedals and Action now attached to my pianoforte until I could satisfy myself of their utility and efficiency. I can now conscientiously say that they more than fulfil all my anticipations. Although I am no carpenter, aided by your lucid diagram I had little difficulty in attaching them myself, and it is impossible to over-estimate the comfort they give to me or to conceive the saving of time one experiences in one's own room.—Believe me, yours truly,

BURNHAM HORNER, F.R. Hist.S.

To Mr. Mr. Ainsworth.

DEAR SIR,—It gives me great pleasure to bear testimony to the perfection of your Invention. I am more than satisfied with your Patent Action and Organ Pedals, and consider them worth double the money. Organists and organ students who desire to improve in the Art of Pedalling, which is so essential to a good organist, will do well to procure a set. I have seen no Action half so effective, and one can sit at the Piano and play, "Fixed in his everlasting seat," or any other organ music, or organ arrangement with the greatest pleasure. The touch of pedals could not be better, and the action is as you say, "Absolutely free from annoyances." They cannot be too highly recommended, as by their use, rapid progress is certain.—Believe me, sincerely yours,

I. B. Thornton,
Organist, Birstall, Leeds.

Cologne, July 16th, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have much pleasure in informing you that your Pedals have given the fullest satisfaction. I have them combined with my practice Piano. Many of my musical friends who have seen them, as well as my organ pupils, are quite delighted with them; and I must acknowledge that I have never met with any Pedals so noiseless and pleasant to play upon as yours. The Action I consider durable, and of very good workmanship. Every organist who desires to perfect his playing will welcome your invention. I can recommend your goods in every respect.—Yours truly,

HERR J. RODENKIRCHEN.

To John Ainsworth, Esq. Organist, The Cathedral, Cologne, Germany.

TOOLS.—In order to facilite the attachment, a complete set of tools are sent (four in number) each one marked for its particular use. By the use of these tools, and following carefully the directions, ANY ONE can make a really good attachment.

On Receipt of Trade or Professional Card, you will receive List, with Liberal Terms.

AINSWORTH'S PATENT ORGAN COMBINATION WORKS
BRINSCALL, CHORLEY.

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, APRIL 7, 1888.

THE PRINCESS OF WALES AMONGST THE MUSICIANS.

On Wednesday evening, March 28th, the Princess of Wales was entertained at dinner by Madame Norman-Neruda at 20, Linden Gardens, when the following guests were invited to meet Her Royal Highness:—Madame Schumann, Lord and Lady Revelstoke, Miss Schumann, Mrs. Marcia Daylrymple, Miss Olga Neruda, Dr. Joachim, Sir Frederick Leighton, Mr. Charles Hallé, Mr. Ludwig Straus, Mr. Piatti, and Mr. L. Norman-Neruda. It will be readily imagined with what perfect taste the arrangements were carried out; but it may be mentioned that when the guests reached the dining-room there was an involuntary exclamation of delight from everyone at the sight of the table, which was decorated with the most lovely roses in full bloom and tastefully arranged. The dinner passed off delightfully. Her Royal Highness seemed to be most anxious to show her enjoyment, and it was with evident pleasure that the Princess found herself able to converse in her native tongue with Mr. L. Norman-Neruda, who escorted her to the table, and who appears to possess the gift of languages to a remarkable degree. Towards the conclusion a happy thought occurred to the Princess, who, wishing to have some souvenir of the occasion, caused her menu card to be handed in turn to each guest for the purpose of writing his or her name on it.

Later on, Madame Norman-Neruda held a reception, which was attended by their Royal Highnesses the Princesses Louise, Victoria, and Maud of Wales, the Duchesse D'Otrante, the Earl and Countess of Lathom, Lady Sandhurst, the Hon. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Spencer, the Hon. Mrs. Annie Yorke, the Hon. Mrs. Sartoris and Mr. Sartoris, Mrs. Cyril Flower, Mdlle. Janotha, Mr. Louis Ries, Mr. Ernest Clair Ford, and Mr. C. E. Hallé. A short programme of music was given. Madame Schumann played the following compositions of her husband, in a manner that is now historical, "Warum" and "Grillen" from the Fantasiestücke, and the Romanza in D minor. To say that her playing was worthy of her great reputation is hardly saying enough, for, doubtless moved by the unusual interest of the occasion, she fairly surpassed herself, and her performance will live long in the memories of those who were fortunate enough to hear it. Madame Norman-Neruda and Dr. Joachim played Bach's double concerto, Brahms's Quintet, with MM. Charles Hallé, Joachim, Ries, Straus, and Piatti as exponents followed, and then Mdlle. Janotha and Dr. Joachim played the well known Hungarian Dances. It is scarcely necessary to add that the music was listened to with the greatest delight by those assembled. As it was getting late, the company adjourned to the dining room to take some refreshment before leaving, and now happened a most charming incident. When the conversation was at its height, a sudden knocking on a table was heard, and Lady Revelstoke was seen vigorously using the handle of a knife in the conventional, but unmusical manner of demanding silence. This being obtained, Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales rose, and holding a glass of champagne high in her hand, looked towards Madame Norman-Neruda and bowing, said in English, "I propose your health." The effect was electrical! and one may doubt if even Her Royal Highness has ever surpassed this act in true grace and delicate tact. It was a noble, womanly tribute from one lady holding an exalted position in the State to another holding an equally high one in the sphere of Art, and whilst we gladly pay homage to the queenly grace of the one, we can joyfully recognise the great attainments of the other.

Altogether, the events of this evening were such as musicians have every reason to be proud of. Another step has been taken in the social advance that artists are making so steadily, and another and formidable blow has been struck at the stupid and ignorant prejudice that has so long prevailed against the followers of Art in this country, where, hitherto, a successful venture in blacking has carried with it more social consideration than the writing of a good symphony, and where a patent pill has far outweighed the value of a great picture.

E. C. F.

[The pressure on our space compels us to hold over some interesting correspondence on Counterpoint.]

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

New productions at the Haymarket Theatre have lately come to be regarded as occasions of considerable interest among literary and artistic circles, and there were several reasons why this should be the case last Saturday night, when Messrs. Wills and Grundy's historical, or semi-historical, play, "The Pompadour," was performed for the first time. It would be idle to disguise the fact that amid confident expectations of much excellent and attractive work, such as might be taken as a matter of course in a piece of this importance, written by two of the best known contemporary dramatists, and placed upon the stage by the most rising of London managers, were mingled some misgivings as to the final result of this ambitious experiment. Founded upon a French translation of a German play, which latter has a remarkable history of its own, the main incidents of "The Pompadour" were first presented to an English audience in a version (attributed to Tom Taylor) written for Herr Bandmann twenty years ago; and there is something singular in the circumstance that whereas the foremost critic of that time pronounced an opinion decidedly adverse to its chances of lasting popularity, a belief in the promising nature of the subject for dramatic purposes should have simultaneously impressed two experienced managers of the present day. It remained to be seen, therefore, how far the pungent wit of Mr. Sydney Grundy, taken in dilution with the sometimes wordy verses of his collaborator, combined with lavish scenery and able stage-management, would succeed in reversing the verdict of the past, and confirming the more sanguine views taken by some contemporary managers. A further point of interest, not unaccompanied with some degree of doubt, was suggested by yet another excursion of an actor whose remarkable talent in character parts was already established beyond dispute, into the field of more serious drama, towards which his artistic predilections are so manifestly urging him. To judge from the cordial reception given to "The Pompadour" on Saturday night, and, still better, from the continued attraction of the piece, as evidenced by the crowded state of the house on every subsequent night, there is no doubt that Mr. Beerbohm-Tree may congratulate himself, both in his capacity of actor and manager, upon a well-merited success. While a low comedian would be almost certain to lose his touch with an audience were he to attempt tragedy, there is really no incongruity in the appearance of a gifted "character actor," in parts admitting the combination of subtle delineation with emotional effect. In the case, indeed, of an artistic spirit so eminently progressive as Mr. Tree, this may be fairly considered his legitimate goal.

The story of Narcisse, the husband of La Pompadour, himself an imaginative creation of Diderot, from whose original manuscript, discovered long after his death in the Imperial library of St. Petersburg, all subsequent versions, German, French, and English, were in a strangely circuitous manner derived, has undergone further modification in the hands of the present authors; the most important of these being the introduction of a son, Eugene, whose presence in the court, while the secret of his birth remains still unknown to the noble Marquise, gives opportunity for some of the most effective situations of the piece. In the first act, the scene of which is laid in a sumptuously appointed audience chamber in the palace of Versailles, we are introduced to several historic characters, including Voltaire—a conspicuous figure cleverly represented by Mr. Brookfield—Diderot, Grimm, the Duc de Choiseul, the Marquise de Choiseul, and various ladies of the Court in picturesque dresses appropriate to the period. It is at the time when the Pompadour, in the zenith of her triumph, and just informed of the Pope's consent to the king's divorce, fancies herself already within a few steps of the throne itself. The collapse of her golden visions, on the sudden appearance upon the gay scene of the ragged, half-demented Narcisse Rameau, in whom she recognizes her own husband, brings this act to an effective conclusion. We have next a brilliant fête in the gardens of the Duc de Choiseul's chateau, with a gavotte, and a pretty dance executed by Katti Lanner's pupils, and other prolonged, but in themselves admirably arranged pictorial effects, which retard the action and leave the audience in some doubt whether they are tired or delighted. Progress, however, is at length made and further complications prepared for the identification of Eugene, the duke's secretary, as the Pompadour's son. Eugene, who is in love with one of the Queen's maids of honour, insults the Pompadour, little dreaming of the relationship between them, and by her commands is arrested and condemned to summary execution. In the succeding act Narcisse, the vagabond husband, gains admittance into the boudoir of his erring wife, and in a very prettily conceived scene (in which Mrs. Tree appears to the best advantage, and, among other things, sings a spinning song, written specially for her by Mr. Henschel) the Pompadour appears before him in her old peasant dress, and uses all the arts at her command to persuade him to depart from a place where his presence has become so dangerous. Finally, there is a "play scene"—which, like all play scenes, is suggestive of "Hamlet"—and among the actors Narcisse, placed there by Voltaire with malicious intent, after re-enacting incidents of her early life, which La Pompadour would have been better pleased to leave buried in the past, and revealing the fact that the young secretary she has just caused to be condemned is her own son, suddenly leaps upon the stage and recognises in La Pompadour his own wife. A volley of musketry is heard, and believing this to announce the death of her son, the Marquise falls to the ground, and, in defiance of history, dies from the effect of the shock. The young man subsequently enters safe and sound, and there is an effusive meeting between him and his crazy father, during which they, as well as the authors, seem to forget all about the Pompadour now lying stone dead upon the stage. After duly carping at this and some other matters, and especially at the prolixity of some of the speeches, this must nevertheless be pronounced a very picturesque, and in many parts powerful, play. Mr. Beerbohm-Tree's conception of Narcisse is a highly elaborate piece of acting, and we are inclined to think will appear to even greater advantage as time goes on. The Pompadour of Mrs. Tree, on the other hand, cannot be called an entirely satisfactory impersonation, in spite of several effective moments. Mr. Brookfield delivers the smart, cynical witticisms of Voltaire with due incisiveness, and his "make-up" for this character is a remarkable feature. Miss Janet Achurch, always a charming, sympathetic presence on the stage, seems scarcely yet at home in the larger theatre, and Miss Rose Leclerc sustains the queenly part assigned to her with remarkable dignity and grace. Minor characters of the piece were more or less meritoriously sustained by Mr. H. Ashley, Mr. Royce Carleton, Mr. C. Brookfield, Mr. Charles Allan, Mr. Vollaire, and Miss Le Thiere.

Concerts.

POPULAR CONCERTS.

(Unavoidably held over last week.)

The 30th season of these valuable concerts came to an end on Monday the 26th ult., when so attractive a programme was provided that St. James's Hall was filled to overflowing. Brahms's fine Sextet in B flat, op. 18, admirably played by MM. Joachim, Ries, Straus, Gibson, Howell, and Piatti; and Schumann's "Carnaval," played with wonderful effect by Madame Schumann, were perhaps the most important items; and it is sufficient to say that the remainder of the programme was made up of Boccherini's Sonata in A, played by Signor Piatti; Bach's Concerto in D for two violins by Madame Norman Neruda and Herr Joachim; and three of Brahms's "Hungarian Dances" by Herr Joachim. Miss Liza Lehmann sang songs by Gluck and Schubert in her charming manner, and Miss Fanny Davies, Mdlle. Janotha, and Mr. Sidney Naylor were the accompanists. Mr. Chappell may be congratulated on a successful season. As usual, there have been no daring innovations, for the rule at these concerts has been to present the well-known works of the great masters; and although a rather more liberal spirit in this particular would be welcome, still the uniform excellence of the performances goes a long way towards atoning for this defect. Amateurs will be grateful at any rate to Mr. Chappell for the opportunity of again hearing Madame Schumann, whose appearances have undoubtedly been the events of the season. The concerts will be resumed, as usual, in November.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

At last Saturday's concert, Beethoven was represented by two of his finest works—the "Leonora" Overture No. 3. and the Pianoforte Concerto No. 5. in E flat. All amateurs are familiar with these masterpieces, and with regard to the first-named, recognise in it Beethoven's indefatigable industry in working out a primary idea. The performance of this magnificent overture on Saturday could scarcely have been surpassed, every nuance and shade of expression being rendered to almost ideal perfection. In the Concerto, the pianoforte part was sustained by Miss Martha Remmert, who played with great brilliancy, but with a certain heaviness of touch, also apparent in Liszt's "Hungarian Fantasia," for pianoforte and orchestra, of which she gave a vigorous rendering. Spohr's well-known Symphony, No. 4, "Die Weihe der Töne," received a splendid interpretation from Mr. Manns's orchestra. The beauties of this work are manifold, and the composer's skill is so happily blended with inspiration, that the work constitutes one of the most perfect examples of programme music in existence. Particularly beautiful is the entry of the principal theme in the opening allegro, where, by a simple change from minor to major, the composer as it were, lifts the veil from the hidden harmonies of Nature, and evolves their latent chorus. Miss Alice Gomez, the vocalist, obtained great applause for her singing of the air "O Fatima," from Weber's "Abu Hassan," and songs by Mendelssohn and Franz, and Rossini's overture to "William Tell" concluded the concert.

The programme of the previous Saturday was, except for the appearance of that excellent artist, Madame Neruda, as solo violinist, of only ordinary interest. But Madame Neruda's playing is always a feature in any programme, and in interpreting Viotti's music she finds a task perfectly congenial to her artistic nature. Consequently her performance of that composer's Concerto in A minor left nothing to be desired, and her fine tone and certain execution were subsequently displayed in a high degree in a Larghetto by Nardini, and Paganini's "Moto Perpetuo." The instrumental portion of the programme comprised a Concert Overture in F, No. 4, by Mr. Wingham, who has previously obtained favourable notice at these concerts, and Beethoven's Symphony No. 4 in B flat, both admirably played; while the great "Trauermarsch" from the "Götterdämmerung," supplied an extremely appropriate reminiscence of the late German Emperor. Miss Anna Russell, of the Royal College of Music, made her first appearance at these concerts as a vocalist, and was very favourably received.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

Mr. Cowen's oratorio, "Ruth," grows in public estimation whenever it is heard, and the effects which, on the occasion of its first performance at Worcester Cathedral, surprised the ear as much as they pleased it—we mean the ballet music—justify their raison d'etre and are appreciated in concert-halls as fully as they deserve. On Tuesday last week the large audience at St. James's Hall seemed thoroughly to enjoy them, and were no less impressed by the quiet and peaceful close of the first part, and by the soli rendered by Miss Anna Williams (Ruth), Miss Agnes Larkcom (Orpah), Miss Hope Glenn, Mr. Edward Lloyd (who is in magnificent voice), and Mr. Watkin Mills. The chorus-singing was fairly good, and the composer conducted.

NOVELLO ORATORIO CONCERTS.

The Oratorio season proper may be said to have come to a close on the 28th ult., when Gounod's "Redemption" was given at St. James's Hall. The performance was, upon the whole, a very good one, conducted with care by Mr. Mackenzie, though in at least one number his reading of the tempo does not commend itself to us. To Mdlle. Trebelli was entrusted the soprano solo, and though she showed intelligence and care in her singing, there were several passages that called for a voice and a manner of greater solidity. The bass "narrator," Mr. Plunket Greene, is quite a new singer; he has a good voice and method, and delivered the music with real expression. The other parts were in the excellent hands of Madame Patey, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Santley.

ALBERT HALL SATURDAY CONCERTS.

A new series of concerts has been started by Mr. E. Bending, at the Albert Hall, intended to fill the gap occasioned by the cessation of the Saturday Popular Concerts. Naturally, the conditions of the place precluded any idea of a "Saturday Pop" programme, such as is the delight of so many amateurs through the winter; and the entertainment last week consisted largely of vocal numbers, varied by Mr. Bending's clever performances on the organ, and a piece or two from the band of the Grenadier Guards, all the music being of a more or less sacred character. Miss Anna Williams, who has a voice which sounds well in the vast spaces of the Albert Hall, and also the other artists who took part, were much appreciated by the large audience which was assembled. Another programme of the ballad order is promised for to-day.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A concert was given at the Kensington Town Hall, on Friday, the 23rd ult., by the members of the Kensington Amateur Choral and Orchestral Society. The society, although at the present concert not venturing upon any work of great magnitude, nevertheless showed a desire to deal with a work of some importance, and their performance of Sullivan's "Prodigal Son" was on the whole decidedly creditable, a result in considerable measure owing to the careful conducting of Mr. Buels.

We hear that Miss Winifred Robinson, violinist, will give her first concert on the afternoon of the 17th inst., and at Princes' Hall.

PROVINCIAL.

NORWICH.—The Afternoon Chamber Concert given here a short time ago by several students of the Royal College of Music, with Mr. A. C. Bent at their head, seems to have awakened in the minds of a few musical people the desire to hear more of classical works, for, except the two half-yearly Subscription Concerts given by the Philharmonic Society and one or two by individual professionals, the inhabitants of Norwich have no opportunity of hearing classical music. Therefore Mr. A. Wiseman, an energetic and enthusiastic amateur, with Messrs. F. W. B. Noverre and R. Price, organised a series of three Classical Trio Concerts, to consist of two trios with vocal and instrumental solos. The first of these was given last week (March 22nd) in Noverre's Rooms, to an audience consisting of the élite of the musical portion of this city, and fully justified the expectations of both the performers and the appreciative audience. The trios were Beethoven's in B flat (op. 11) and Saint Saëns in F (op. 18), which received a fine rendering by the organisers of the concerts, Messrs, Wiseman (piano), Noverre (violin) and Price ('cello). The vocalist was Miss Crawshay, a young lady who, although rather nervous in her first selection, showed that she had been carefully trained and that she possesses a full, rich voice of medium compass, in the following songs, "Du bist wie eine Blume," Liszt, "Frühlingsnacht," Jensen, "Is my lover on the sea?" and "Love me if I live," Cowen. Miss Eleanor Rix, a native of Norwich, and also a medalist and associate of the Royal Academy of Music, was the solo pianist. This lady shows somewhat the reverse of the old saying, "A prophet is without honour," &c., as she is always liked and thoroughly appreciated whenever she plays in her native city. She chose for her solo Chopin's Grand Polonaise in A flat (op. 53), and receiving a well-merited encore played the same composer's valse "Brilliante" in F (op. 34, No. 3.) Altogether, the first of these Trio Concerts was a great success, and the promoters deserve great credit for trying to bring the grand classical works of the great masters into the recognition of all lovers of music in Norwich.—Dr. Bunnett, the Corporation organist, gives a weekly recital on the grand organ in St. Andrew's Hall to the poorer of the population, and is assisted by various local instrumentalists and vocalists. Dr. Bates, the Cathedral organist, with the assistance of the Precentor (Rev. G. W. Barrett) and a choir composed of ladies and gentlemen of the various city choirs, has, following the example of Gloucester, been giving some very excellent "musical services for the people," which have been well appreciated by those for whom they were originated, as at the last service there were nearly 3,000 persons present. Dr. Bates is further raising a scheme for the enlargement and improvement of the Cathedral organ, which sadly needs something done to it to keep up the prestige of such a well-known cathedral as Norwich, as the present organ is one of the poorest of any in our cathedrals. The Festival Chorus is still well-banded together, despite the smart criticisms of some of the London Press, and will give a performance of the "Messiah" on Good Friday, and for Easter week we are expecting Turner's English Opera Company at our Theatre Royal.

EDINBURGH, March 27.—The musical season here is rapidly drawing to a close. Since the Reid Festival, in the second week of February, a considerable number of minor concerts, chiefly of chamber music and recitals of one sort or another, have taken place, but none of them, with the exception of the Annual Chamber Concert of the Philosophical Institution, and Mr. Carrodus's Violin, and Herr Rummel's P.F. Recitals, have been of sufficient interest or importance to call for special comment in the columns of THE MUSICAL WORLD. The Chamber Concert referred to is properly regarded as one of the great musical experiences of the year, inasmuch as it has long been customary for both Dr. Joachim and Signor Piatti to be among the executants engaged. This year, unfortunately, and to the profound regret of everyone, Dr. Joachim was unable to appear on account of a summons to Berlin to conduct, as the apology for his absence had it, a "musical ceremony" on the anniversary of the late Emperor's birthday. Nor was this the only disappointment the audience—an unusually large one—was doomed to suffer. Mdlle. Lehmann, who happens to be closely connected with a well-known and highly-respected Edinburgh family, was to have been the vocalist of the evening; but she also was unable to appear, owing to indisposition, consequent, no doubt, upon the present inclement state of the weather north of the Tweed. As it was, the burden of redeeming the promises of the programme fell upon Mdlle. Marie Soldat, Miss Fanny Davies, and Signor Piatti with Miss Bertha Moore as vocalists while Mr. H. Hartley acted as accompanist. When the announcement of Mdlle. Soldat's substitution for Dr. Joachim was made, very considerable interest was at once aroused in musical circles, and a determination to hear her widely evinced, as she had not previously appeared in Edinburgh, although the most flattering accounts of her artistic powers and unusually fair promise has already reached us. The concert took place in the music-hall on the 21st inst., and the programme was an exceedingly attractive one. It contained the following numbers: Brahms's latest P.F. Trio in C minor, op. 101; Beethoven's Grand Trio in B flat, op. 97; Spohr's Adagio in F, and two of the Brahms-Joachim Hungarian Dances for violin; Novelette in F., Schumann; and Staccato Etude, Rubinstein, for P.F; and Piatti's "Ossian's Song" for 'cello. Besides these there were also three pleasing and well-selected songs. Interest of course chiefly centred in the Brahms Trio, which was all but new to Edinburgh amateurs; and, on the whole, it received a satisfactory rendering, although it was apparent that a little additional rehearsal would not have tended to mar the general effect. The exceedingly beautiful Andante Grazioso, and the final Allegro Molto were the movements which afforded the audience the greatest satisfaction. But the entire work was received with signs of the most cordial approval. A greater familiarity with the magnificent Trio of Beethoven, with which the concert was brought to a close, and which received a really faultless interpretation, was, no doubt, the cause of the larger degree of enthusiasm with which it was welcomed. The delicious Andante Cantabile—a movement which makes one feel wishful that it should never cease—was given with the utmost persuaviness and pathetic eloquence by all concerned in its rendering. Miss Davies's pianoforte solos were by no means the least enjoyable part of the programme; indeed she fairly electrified her audience by the brilliant manner in which she disposed of Rubinstein's Etude, an ordinary rendering of which even makes severe demands upon the technique of the performer. Each successive visit of this young artist—and it is a pity they are not more frequent—tells its own tale of steady advance in true artistic power, and of a progress which if continued, as there is little doubt it will be, cannot fail but to place her eventually in the very foremost rank of living pianists. But, as has already been suggested, the deepest interest of all was centred in the début of Mdlle. Soldat; and it may be at once said that she passed through the ordeal with more than ordinary success. She displayed from the first, a tone, technique, and power of intelligent phrasing for which her audience were quite unprepared, and she easily succeeded in evoking the warmest expressions of encouragement and approval. The universal opinion seems to be that she is a pupil of whom her distinguished master, Dr. Joachim, has just reason to be proud. The Spohr Adagio was given with a sweetness and purity of expression that took the house by storm; while the facile manner in which the trying difficulties of a Bach Prelude, given as an encore, were surmounted, exhibited a mastery over the finger-board altogether surprising in so young an artist. A repetition of Mdlle. Soldat's visit will be looked forward to with no little satisfaction and much pleasurable curiosity. To Signor Piatti's solo it is needless particularly to refer, except to remark that his playing embodied, as heretofore, all those tranquil charms and depths of emotional effect which have always characterised it. On a recall, after the "Ossian Song," Signor Piatti seemed somewhat unwilling to comply with the wishes of the audience, but at last consented to satisfy the demands of a perhaps too exacting house, by treating it to an altogether acceptable rendering of one of Germiniani Gavottes. Miss Moore, who also was a stranger to Edinburgh concert rooms, was very favourably received and made an unusually good impression. Her legitimate method and pure vocalisation were greatly admired, bespeaking as they do a careful, conscientious training, which in these days of clap-trap and pretence is a thing not to be lightly esteemed. Her most successful song, and for which she received a hearty encore, was Sullivan's tuneful "Orpheus with his Lute."

LEEDS, April 2.—The tenth and last of the Leeds Popular Concerts took place on the 21st Match, and with it the season may be said to have practically come to an end. It was of a somewhat novel character, taking the form of a "drawing-room concert," to which none but the subscribers to the first seats were admitted. The programme was exceptionally short, its principal feature being a fine performance of Chopin's Pianoforte Sonata in B minor, by Miss Clotilde Kleeberg. Mr. Peiniger, who was the violinist, played some solos by modern writers, and joined Miss Kleeberg in Mozart's Sonata for violin and pianoforte in G, one of the set dedicated to the pianist, Josephine Aurnhammer. Mr. Rawlinson Ford, who, at considerable pecuniary loss to himself, has promoted and managed the Popular Concerts hitherto, does not intend to continue them during the next season, but from their ashes the "Leeds Subscription Concerts" are, Phœnix-like, to spring, under the management of a committee of gentlemen of whom Mr. Ford is the chairman. A guarantee fund has been instituted, and amounts already to something over £500, though the excellent and practical scheme which is being prepared leads to the confident hope that there will be no occasion to have recourse to the guarantors for even the smallest contribution. Mr. Edgar Haddock, a local violinist, has given during the season a series of ten "Musical Evenings," consisting of short concerts of violin and pianoforte music, in which he has been assisted by many pianists of various degrees of ability. In the last of the "evenings," which took place on the 26th ult., Mr. Haddock was assisted by Mr. W. W. Cook, a talented student of the Royal College of Music. The programme included Brahms's new sonata in A, for violin and pianoforte (op. 100), and a clever sonata in D minor for the same combination of instruments of Mr. Cook's composition. The success of the past season has been great enough to induce Mr. Haddock to contemplate an extension of his scheme for next season, by engaging some of the principal pianists of the day to assist him.

BIRMINGHAM, April 3.—Mr. Carl Rosa's Opera Company opened a successful season here last night with "Carmen; the Theatre Royal being crowded to overflowing, money had to be refused at the doors. Madame Marie Roze in the title rôle played the part of Carmen yesterday for the 350th time, I believe, and charmed and delighted the vast crowd more than ever by her charming acting, her coquettish byplay, and irresistible diablerie. Her voice seemed even richer and fuller, especially in the higher register, than when last she appeared here. The cast, on the whole, was satisfactory. Mr. Valentine Smith (José), Mr. Max Eugene (Escamillo), and Miss Kate Drew (Michaela), gave an excellent reading of their respective impersonations. The orchestra and chorus were, on the whole, the same as on former occasions. To-night Madame Roze will essay, for the first time here, Zerlina, in "Don Giovanni." The revival of "Robert le Diable" is looked for with great anticipation, and in my next report I hope to give an account of Meyerbeer's grand opera. The Midland Musical Society gave the "Redemption" on Good Friday, at the Town Hall, at popular prices, and attracted an enormous house. The performance, considering the resources available, was on the whole satisfactory. Our Amateur Operatic Company are busy rehearsing "Iolanthe." Mr. Cortes Perera has obtained permission from Mr. D'Oyly Carte for two performances. The principal part will be taken by Mrs. Cortes Perera, a clever singer and actress. The excellent Military Band Concerts came to a conclusion on Saturday last, and Mr. Alfred Gilmer promises a renewal of them early in October.—O. P.

MANCHESTER, April 3.—The Carl Rosa Opera Company has just concluded a month's visit to the Theatre Royal here, and its success has been of quite a phenomenal nature. Every night the house has been crowded almost to suffocation, and there is no doubt that, had engagements permitted it, the season might have been much further prolonged with no diminution of success. It is pleasant to add that the enthusiasm aroused was thoroughly deserved; we doubt whether we ever heard performances of such all-round excellence from this company. The number of operas performed has not been large, a fact which is to be explained by the large amount of interest displayed in the revival of one or two operas which have not been heard here for many years. The most important of these was "Robert the Devil." Meyerbeer's opera has been, and still is, the subject of such conflicting criticisms, that it is difficult to say what the final verdict will be upon it. But there can be no doubt that to many it will long prove a source of attraction, and certainly its reproduction in the present instance has been fully justified by the success which has attended it. The opportunities for scenic display have been used to the utmost; so much so that the spectacular part of the opera has largely contributed to its popularity. Fortunately, at least equal care has been bestowed upon the musical portion of the work, and from this point of view there are in the large répertoire of the company few operas which receive so excellent an interpretation. Madame Georgina Burns, Signor Runcio, and Mr. Manners, all deserve great praise for their rendering of the principal characters. The revival of Balfe's opera, "The Puritan's Daughter," has also been successful. Without any pretensions to greatness in any part of it, this opera is at least more worthy of living than the "Bohemian Girl." It would be improved if a few extensive cuts were made in the dialogue, which often fails to be interesting. Madame Burns again scored a distinct success in the title rôle, and Mr. Celli as Charles II., and Mr. Valentine Smith as the Duke of Rochester, must also be congratulated. Amongst those who have recently become members of the company, Miss Crabtree is perhaps the most promising. This young soprano is as yet far, very far, from being at home on the stage, and her singing needs more refinement; still, we shall be mistaken if she does not prove an important addition to the company.

GLASGOW, April 3.—Last Monday evening, March 26th, Herr Franz Rummel gave a pianoforte recital in the Queen's Rooms. The audience was very thin, but did not lack in enthusiasm. He performed in all fourteen pieces, by Bach, Beethoven, Chopin, Mendelssohn Bartholdy, Schubert, Schumann, Bülow, Brassin, Wagner-Brassin, Tschaikowsky, Paganini-Liszt, Rubinstein, and Liszt. At the close, Herr Rummel was repeatedly recalled.

ILFORD.—The Vocal Union gave its eighth concert in the Reading Room, on Good Friday evening, the programme consisting of Weber's Mass in G, Mozart's Mass in C, and a selection. The soloists were Madame Clara West, Miss Lottie West, Mr. Herbert Clinch, and Mr. Arthur Taylor. In the florid passages of Weber's Mass, Madame West's voice was heard to great advantage, as also in her other efforts. Miss Lottie West, Mr. H. Clinch, and Mr. Taylor also acquitted themselves admirably, as did also the chorus and band, conducted by Mr. A. Storr. There was a tolerably large and very appreciative audience.

SOUTHAMPTON, April 3rd.—A grand orchestral and vocal sacred concert was given in the Philharmonic Hall, Southampton, on Good Friday, March 30th, organised and arranged by Mr. G. Howes, and proved a splendid success. The vocalists were Mrs. Ivimey (soprano), and Mr. Charles Geddes (baritone). The orchestra, which consisted of thirty of the best selected professional instrumentalists of the town, deserved the warmest praise in the rendering of their portion of the programme, under the bâton of Mr. G. Howes, which included excerpts from the masterpieces of Handel, Bach, Rossini, Gounod, and other great composers.

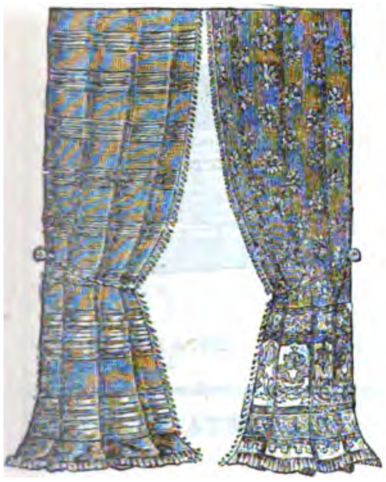
FURNISH THROUGHOUT (REGD.)

OETZMANN & CO.,

67, 69, 71, 73, 75, 77, and 79, HAMPSTEAD ROAD (Near Tottenham Court Road.)

CARPETS, FURNITURE, BEDDING, DRAPERY, FURNISHING, IRONMONGERY, CHINA, GLASS, &c.

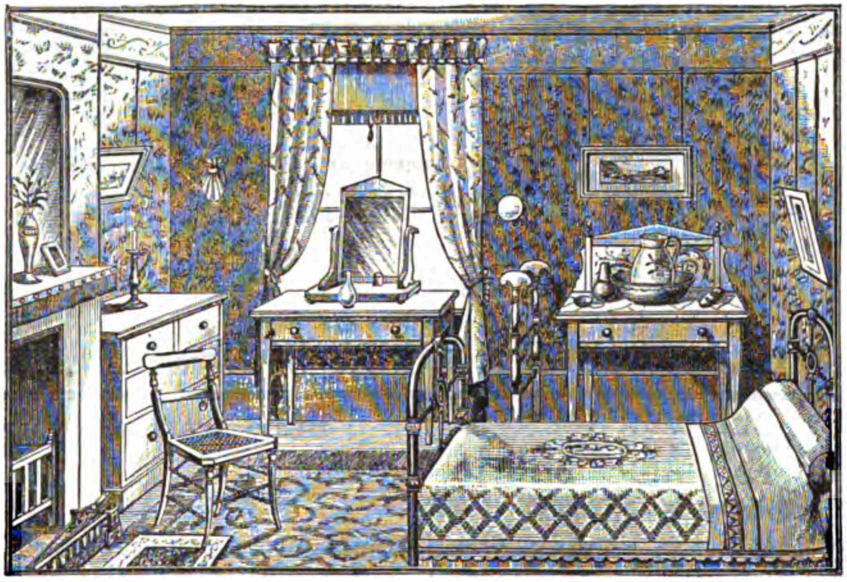
Orders per Post receive prompt and faithful attention.



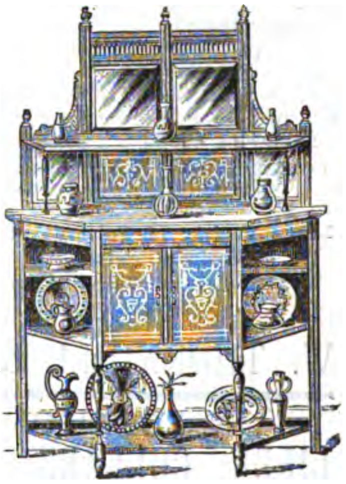
INEXPENSIVE ART TAPESTRY CURTAINS.

THE BURMESE. 7s. 6d. per pair, in all colours.

THE IMPERIAL. 38s. 6d. per pair, in all shades.



BEDROOM FURNISHED COMPLETE FOR FIVE GUINEAS.



EBONIZED CABINET.

Four bevelled silvered plates at back, 4 feet wide,

75s.

Consisting of Chest of Drawers, Toilet Table, Washstand with marble top and tiled back, Toilet Glass, Towel Airer, in plain art colours or in imitation of various woods. Strong Iron French Bedstead, Palliasse, Top Mattress, Bolster, Pillow, Toilet Set, Water Bottle and Tumbler, Fender, Fire Irons, Carpet (9 ft. by 6 ft.), and Rug. Five Guineas Complete.

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE, THE BEST FURNISHING GUIDE EXTANT, POST FREE.

To Musicians and Others.

For BUYING, EXCHANGING, or SELLING Books on all subjects, Art Objects, Musical Instruments, Home Pets, Domestic Appliances, or any article whatever of personal property, THE BAZAAR, EXCHANGE and MART is unequalled. It circulates largely throughout the kingdom, and private ladies and gentlemen have no difficulty in negotiating sales or exchanges without publicity and to the best advantage. Get a copy and judge for yourself. The Globe says:—"Like all grand conceptions, the process is remarkable for its simplicity." Price 2d., at all Newsagents, or copy sent for two stamps from the Office, 170, Strand, London, W.C.

DEFRIES' Safety Water White Oil.

The Purest, Whitest, and Best Burning Mineral Oil in England.

EQUAL IN QUALITY TO OILS SOLD UNDER FANCY NAMES, at from 1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d. per gall
FOR USE IN ALL LAMPS AND STOVES.

PRICE 1s. PER GALLON.

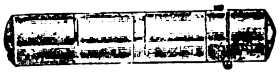
FREE DELIVERED IN LONDON AND ALL SUBURBS.

Minimum, 2 gallons. The 5 and 10 gallon drums are fitted with taps. Drums charged, and full price allowed when returned.

Terms: Cash on or before delivery. Deposit Accounts opened for Oil.

DEFRIES' SAFETY LAMP & OIL CO., LIMITED,
43 and 44, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON, E.C.

THORNHILL'S NEW "GLOVE" BOTTLE.



FOR PERFUME & SMELLING SALTS.

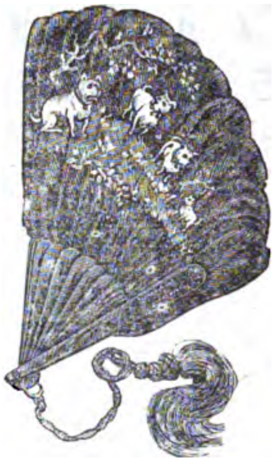
Large Variety of Patterns at Various Prices

THORNHILL'S TOILET CASES FOR LADIES AND GENTLEMEN

THORNHILL'S ARTISTIC FANS,
A LARGE and VARIED STOCK of the BEST QUALITY.

PRESENTS.

THORNHILL'S
Fully Illustrated
LIST
OF
LATEST
NOVELTIES



POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

THORNHILL'S OPERA GLASSES.

IN GREAT VARIETY.

THORNHILL'S
Guaranteed Razors Singly or in Sets.

W. THORNHILL & CO., TO THE QUEEN & ROYAL FAMILY. 144, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON. ESTABLISHED 1734.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER'S
LINEN COLLARS, CUFFS, AND SHIRTS.

Samples and Price Lists Post Free.

COLLARS—LADIES' 3-fold, from 3s. 6d. per doz. GENTS' 4-fold, 4s. 11d. to 5s. 11d. per doz.

CUFFS—For Ladies or Gentlemen, 5s. 11d. to 10s. 6d. per doz.

SHIRTS—Best quality Long Cloth, with 4-fold Linen Fronts 35s. 6d. per half-doz. (To measure, 2s. extra.)

N.B.—OLD SHIRTS made as good as new with best materials in Neckbands, Cuffs, and Fronts, for 14s. the half-doz.

ROBINSON AND CLEAVER, BELFAST.

Dr. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For sore throat, hoarseness, and relaxed throat, also for improving the voice

FOR SINGING AND SPEAKING

without fatiguing the voice. Celebrated in every town in Europe, India, America, and the Colonies. Testimonials from Patti, Trebelli, Patey, Santley, and the most eminent medical men.

Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d.; also in bottles for abroad.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE & RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & CO.,

Manufacturers and Importers of all kinds of Strings
FOR
VIOLIN, VIOLA, CELLO, DOUBLE BASS, HARP,
ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO,
Have always in STOCK the Largest ASSORTMENT of any House in the World.

6, GOLDEN SQUARE, W.

A BLESSING IN EVERY FAMILY.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.

These Remedies have stood the test of FIFTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE and are pronounced the best medicines for family use. Tens of thousands of written testimonials bear witness to their marvellous curative properties. They are acknowledged by the whole civilised world to be the greatest efficacy in every form of disease. Sold by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors.

Manufactured only at THOMAS HOLLOWAY'S ESTABLISHMENT
78, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.
N.B.—Advice gratis at the above address, daily, between the hours of 11 and 2, or by letter

ASCHERBERG PIANOS.

"I only perform an act of justice when I ascribe my successes to a great extent to the excellent Instruments from your factory, on which I was favoured to play before the public. Remain convinced that I shall at all times and everywhere give preference to your Pianos over all others, and accept the assurance of my unbounded esteem.

Respectfully,

VLADIMIR VON PACHMANN."

ASCHERBERG PIANO DEPOT,

211, REGENT STREET, W.

FOR SINGERS AND TEACHERS.

THE "MITRE" LOZENGE.

CONTAINS NO OPIATE.

TRADE MARK

PLEASANT TO THE TASTE

For Voice, Throat, & Coughs.

TESTIMONIALS.

"They are the very best I have ever used; they give an undoubted freedom and freshness to the voice."
VERNON RIGBY.

"I never experienced so much and marked benefit as I did last Sunday from your Mitre Lozenges."
T. MAJOR LESTER, Hon. Canon of Liverpool.

"The effect produced upon the voice is excellent. Please send another box."
H. SAYERS, Chaplain of Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford.

"Having had occasion to try the Mitre Lozenges for a severe hoarseness, I am pleased to say they have afforded me the desired relief."
BASSETT ROE.

"For clearing and strengthening the voice, I consider your Mitre Lozenges the best I have ever tried."
ELIZA THOMAS.

"Having found your Lozenges very good for the voice in singing, I shall have great pleasure in recommending them to my pupils."
ELLEN SAUNDERS, from the London Academy of Music.

"I have pleasure in testifying to the excellence of your Mitre Lozenges. As a vocalist and teacher of singing I have found them of great benefit to myself and pupils."
KATHERINE WALLACE.

"Miss Eldena Eldon was suffering from a most irritable throat, which the Lozenges instantly relieved."

"I have experienced great relief and assistance from your Mitre Lozenges."
GEO. GIDDENS, (Criterion Theatre.)

"I know the Mitre Lozenges well, and think them excellent."
GEO. GROSSMITH.

"They are very agreeable and effective."
STANLEY LEATHES, D.D., Prebendary of St. Paul's.

"They are the best Lozenges extant."
CHARLES STRONG,
Choirmaster St. Augustine and Christ Church, Highbury, & Teacher of Singing.

Dear Sirs,—"I have tried your Mitre Lozenges and consider them invaluable to Vocalists, or to anyone who has to exercise the voice much. Having found them so efficacious I have already recommended them to several of my pupils." Yours truly,
G. CARAVOGLIA.

"They are the best I ever used."
EGBERT ROBERTS,

"I have found the Mitre Lozenges very efficacious in restoring the voice, when impaired from the effects of cough and cold.
FREDERIC PENNA, Professor of Singing and Elocution.

"I find the Mitre Lozenges very palatable and efficacious."
SINCLAIR DUNN, (The Scottish Tenor.)

"The Mitre Lozenges arrived most opportunely as I was suffering from a severe cough and cold. I feel it was through them that I was enabled to sing that morning."
LIONEL DAVIS.

"I found great relief in clearing the voice when hoarse from your valuable Mitre Lozenges, and shall recommend them to my friends."
THORNBER ROE.

Sold by all Chemists at 1s. 1½d, and 2s. 9d.

Made for the Proprietors, J. & G. HAWKE, by ALLEN & HANBURYS, Plough Court, Lombard-St., London, E.C.
POST FREE ON RECEIPT OF STAMPS.

Printed and Published by MacRae, Curtice & Co. (Limited), 12, Catherine Street, Strand, W.C.

WEEKLY.]

The Musical World.

ESTABLISHED 1822.
REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED; IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST WEEKLY, 17/6 PER ANNUM (Payable in advance).

VOL. 67.—NO. 15. SATURDAY, APRIL 14, 1888. PRICE {3D. Unstamped. {4D. By Post.

THE

KARN AMERICAN ORGANS,

Manufactured by D. W. KARN & CO.,

WOODSTOCK, ONTARIO, CANADA.

The Karn Organ is a reproduction of the Pipe Organ in miniature, of pre-eminent value as an effective music exponent for the Home.

OUR AIM has not been to see how cheaply an organ can be built, BUT HOW CHEAPLY A FIRST-CLASS ORGAN can be made.

OUR CLAIM is that we are building organs equal to, if not surpassing, all others, at the very lowest reasonable prices.

COMPARISON CHEERFULLY INVITED.

New Illustrated Catalogue & Price Lists Free of the
SOLE EUROPEAN AGENTS:

THE SCHREIBER PIANO CO.,
18, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W.

To the Trade and Profession.

OLD

VIOLINS.

MESSRS. BEARE AND SON, Manufacturers and Importers of every Description of Musical Instruments, Strings, Fittings, &c.,
34, Rathbone Place, London, W.,
Invite an inspection of their collection of old Violins,
All genuine examples of the celebrated old Masters.
Over 300 old instruments from which to select.

Old Violins from £5.
Old Tenors from £5.
Old Violoncellos from £10.
Old Double Basses from £15.

Sole Wholesale Agents for James Tubb's celebrated Bows.
Bows by the old makers also frequently in stock.
Tested strings unequalled for durability and equality of tone.
Repairs of every kind of Musical Instrument executed promptly by experienced workmen.

BEARE AND SON,
34, RATHBONE PLACE, LONDON, W.

Special Notices.

The Musical World,
12, Catherine Street, Strand, London.

AN ORIGINAL DRAWING,

BY

PROF. HUBERT HERKOMER, A.R.A.,

Will form the Supplement to the "MUSICAL WORLD" of April 21.

Orders for copies should be sent early to this office, together with 4d. in stamps for each copy required.

TOWN HALL, BIRMINGHAM.

AN ORGANIST is required for the BIRMINGHAM TOWN HALL. The Organ is well known as a fine instrument of four manuals and seventy-six stops, and it has been decided to expend, at an early date, a large sum in thoroughly renovating and modernising its mechanism and appliances, and adding to its resources. The Organist will, under certain conditions, have the exclusive control of the Organ, and will be at liberty to give Recitals for his own benefit. He will also receive the fees payable in respect of Meetings or performances at which the Organ is required. Applications (marked "Town Hall Organist") are to be made, not later than May 8th, to Mr. C. G. BEALE, 3, Newhall Street, Birmingham, from whom a Schedule can be obtained by post, showing the conditions of the appointment.

DRURY LANE.—AUGUSTUS HARRIS, Lessee and Manager. EVERY EVENING, at 7.30, the great sporting drama, A RUN OF LUCK. Written by Henry Pettit and Augustus Harris.—Box-office open daily from ten to six.

A RUN OF LUCK.—Miss FORTESCUE.—DRURY LANE.

A RUN OF LUCK.—Miss Maud Milton, Misses Edith Bruce, Blanche Massey, Minnie Inch, Marie D'Altra, Marie Williams, Millicent Mildmay, &c.—DRURY LANE.

A RUN OF LUCK, at DRURY LANE.—"14, George-street, Mansion House, London, E.C., Nov. 15, 1886. To Augustus Harris, Esq., Drury-lane Theatre, W.C.—We have examined the books of Drury-lane Theatre for the period of your management (1879-1886), and we find that the receipts of the present drama, 'A Run of Luck,' exceed those of any drama produced at this theatre during your management.—(Signed) COOPER BROTHERS and Co., Chartered Accountants."

TO ORGANISTS.—For Professional Practice, Teaching, or Concert purpose, and Home use, the "Bach Model" Pedal Instrument is only reliable substitute for a pipe organ. For design, improved action, connections, and tone, it embraces the merits of the highest class instruments; and without paying an exorbitant price you may have an instrument with organ measurements that removes the deficiencies hitherto experienced in pedal instruments.—Apply for illustrated lists, terms, and prices, to J. L. Scholefield, Musical Instrument Manufacturer, Huddersfield.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised & Improved, of
A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR
THE VOICE,
By T. A. Wallworth.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Madame Alwina Valleria, Mr. Iver M'Kay, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & CO. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

Institutes and Colleges.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, KENSINGTON GORE, LONDON, S.W.

Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.

President - - H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES, K.G.
Director - - Sir GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L., LL.D.

Next College Concert, May 17th, at 7.30 p.m.

The Midsummer Term will commence on April 25th, 1888.

Regulations may be obtained from the Registrar, Mr. George Watson, at the College.

CHARLES MORLEY, Honorary Secretary.

UNIVERSITY OF TRINITY COLLEGE, TORONTO. (The Church of England University of Upper Canada.)

FACULTY OF MUSIC.

The next Examinations for the degree of Bachelor of Music will be held simultaneously in Toronto and London in Easter week, 1888. Women are admissable to these examinations. For particulars apply to Rev. E. K. Kendal, D.C.L., Registrar for England, Southsea.

TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON. For MUSICAL EDUCATION and EXAMINATION, &c., and for the Granting of Certificates and Diplomas in Music. Inst. 1872

President - - The EARL of ABERDEEN.

THE NEXT TERM COMMENCES APRIL 30, when new students are received. The following is a list of subjects taught and professors: Harmony, Counterpoint, Form and Orchestration, Composition, Musical Acoustics, Pianoforte, Organ, Solo Singing, Violin, Violoncello, Sight Singing, Flute, Oboe, Clarionet, etc. Vocal and Aural Physiology, Voice Production, Lectures, Elocution.

Professors Higgs, Saunders, Turpin, and Turner; MM. Bambridge, Barrett, Benthin, Bolton, Carrodus, Cole, Corder, Dubrucq, Fry, Gibson, Goodworth, Lazarus, Lockwood, Malsch, Manu, Mount, Nappi, Ogbourne, Pumey, Radcliff, Reynolds Semple, Stone, Szczepanowski, Visetti, Wells, Willing. and Woolhouse.

PROSPECTUSES, including list of new (reduced) fees, and all particulars can be obtained from the Secretary, Trinity College, London, W.

By Order of the Academical Board.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, W.

GUILD OF ORGANISTS, 35, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C.

Patron—The Right Rev. THE LORD BISHOP OF LONDON.

PRESIDENTS.
The REV. CANON SIR F. H. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., Mus. Doc.
Sir HERBERT OAKELEY, Bart., Mus. Doc.
Sir ROBERT STEWART, Mus. Doc.

Vice-President—WILLIAM PINNEY, Mus. Bac., Oxon.
Warden—CHARLES VINCENT, Mus. Doc., Oxon.

Established to advance the cause of Church music and the truest interests of its Professors, etc.

Members of the Church of England and Ireland, and the Episcopal Church of Scotland, are eligible for election. Subscription: Professional Organists (Associates) 10s. 6d. per annum; Amateurs (Members) 15s. per annum; Life subscription, 5 guineas.

Next Fellowship examination in Easter Week.

Prospectus and further particulars may be obtained from the Hon. Sec., Dr. J. H. Lewis, Staines, Middlesex.

London Organ School and International College of Music.

Established 1865, by the Rev. SCOTSON CLARK, Mus.B.
Patron—His Grace The ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY.
Principal—HENRY CLARK.

ORGAN RECITAL, by Miss EDROFF, assisted by Miss ETHEL BEVANS, (vocal), will take place, at 4 p.m. to-day.

Piano, Singing, Violin, 'Cello, Flute, Harp, Organ Lessons, with Practice, and Harmony. Private Lessons and Classes.

Candidates for Musical Degrees at any of the English Universities are expressly prepared for the Matriculation Examinations by Oxford and Cambridge graduates (in honours). Branches at Kensington and St. John's Wood.

Apply to the Director of Classes, T. H. Y. TROTTER, M.A., Mus.Bac., Oxon., 3, Princes Street, Cavendish Square, W. (close to Oxford Circus).

Publishers' Announcements.

NEW ISSUE, in MONTHLY PARTS, price 7d., of

THE HISTORY OF MUSIC.

BY EMIL NAUMANN.

Translated by FERDINAND PRAEGER. With Notes and Additional Chapters, by the Rev. SIR F. A. GORE OUSELEY, BART., M.A., Mus. D, Professor of Music in the University of Oxford. Illustrated throughout.

"A comprehensive 'History of Music' was wanted, and here is the want amply supplied."—Morning Post.

"Amongst the excellent illustrations scattered throughout its pages are not only quaint and authentic portraits of eminent artists, but minutely executed drawings of musical instruments in use at all times and in all countries, and fac-similes of composers' manuscripts and letters."—Musical Times.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED, Ludgate Hill, London.

"A perfect little gem of a composition."—Truth, 22nd Dec., 1887.
"A richly-harmonised melody."—Court and Society.
"An elegant piano romance."—Standard.
"A charming little sketch."—Court Journal.

RESIGNATION. Pianoforte solo. By EUGENE WAGNER. Post free 1s. 6d.—Charles Woolhouse, 81, Regent Street, London, W.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE "JOLLY BRICK" POLKA.

By M. S. BARRON.

PRICE 3s.

"Is bright and danceable."—News of the World.

"This is a cheerful and sprightly piece, with well marked accentuation. It presents no difficulties of execution even to the young player."—Dundee Advertiser.

ALSO,

A TWILIGHT DREAM.

FOR PIANO.

By M. S. BARRON.

PRICE 3s.

"An interesting piece, with a melody for the left hand."—Musical Standard.

LONDON: SWAN & CO., 4, GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, W

IN SIX GRADES.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH.

Under the Sanction and Approval of the Rev. Sir FREDERICK A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., M.A., Mus. Doc., and of Sir G. A. MACFARREN, Mus. Doc.

THE MUSICIAN:

A GUIDE FOR PIANOFORTE STUDENTS,

By RIDLEY PRENTICE.

CONTAINS ANALYSES OF WELL-KNOWN PIECES PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED, ENABLING THE PUPIL TO UNITE A STUDY OF MUSICAL FORM WITH THE ORDINARY PIANOFORTE PRACTICE.

Saturday Review.—"We are far from suggesting that there is any royal road for acquiring technical knowledge, but we are quite certain Mr. Ridley Prentice's road is in every way the pleasantest that has yet been laid before any pianoforte student."

Academy.—"A knowledge of form is imparted in simple and pleasant language. We heartily commend it to all who desire to understand, satisfactorily interpret, and enjoy beautiful music."

Graphic.—"Written with the laudable purpose of helping the pianoforte student to understand and enjoy beautiful music."

School Board Chronicle.—"A useful book for earnest teachers."

Musical Review.—"Mr. Ridley Prentice has newly developed an important though much neglected branch of the teacher's duties."

Monthly Musical Record.—"No more valuable work of the kind is in existence."

W. SWAN SONNENSCHEIN & CO., PATERNOSTER SQUARE:
And all Book and Music Sellers.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER'S

ROYAL IRISH CAMBRIC POCKET-HANDKERCHIEFS.

Samples and Price Lists Post Free.

Per doz.—Children's, 1s. 2d.; Ladies', 2s. 4½d.; Gents 3s. 6d.

Hemstitched—Ladies', 2s. 11½d.; Gents', 4s. 11d.

—:o:—

BY APPOINTMENTS TO THE QUEEN AND THE CROWN PRINCESS OF GERMANY.

ROBINSON AND CLEAVER, BELFAST.

Professional Cards.

The subscription for a "card" space in these columns is £1 10s. for six months, and £1 per quarter—payable in advance, including copy of the paper each week. Subscriptions should be sent to the office of THE MUSICAL WORLD 12, Catherine Street, Strand, London, W.C.

Conductors and Composers.

Mr. FREDERIC H. COWEN,
73, HAMILTON TERRACE,
ST. JOHN'S WOOD, N.W.

Mr. F. KILVINGTON HATTERSLEY,
A.R.A.M.
(Professor of the Pianoforte, Composer, and Conductor),
17, FINSBURY PARK VILLAS,
GREEN LANES, N.

Mr. ALBERT VISETTI
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Conductor),
12, WESTBOURNE PARK TERRACE, W.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN
(Guitar, Concertina, and Gigelira. Wood and Straw Instrument),
22A, DORSET STREET, PORTMAN SQUARE, W.

Mr. F. ST. JOHN LACY
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Vocalist; (baritone),
FITZROY MANSION, CHARLOTTE STREET,
FITZROY SQUARE, W.

Mr. H. MARTYN VAN LENNEP
(Teacher of Singing, Composer, and Conductor),
Address—7, WIMPOLE STREET,
CAVENDISH SQUARE, W.

Mr. G. ARTHUR HIGGS, F.C.O.
L. Mus. and Tallis Gold Medallist. T.C.L. Pupil of Mr. Albert Visetti. Teacher of Singing, Harmony, Conductor, and Vocalist. (Baritone.)
Address—TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON, W.

Vocalists—Sopranos.

Madame VALLERIA
(Opera and Concerts),
BOSWORTH HOUSE, HUSBAND'S BOSWORTH,
RUGBY.

Miss EDITH DESMOND
(Opera and Concerts),
c/o NOLAN & JACKSON.

Miss KATE FLINN
(Concerts and Oratorios),
41, WELBECK STREET,
CAVENDISH SQUARE, W.

Mdlle. VELMI
(Opera and Concerts),
7, CHESILTON ROAD, MUNSTER PARK,
FULHAM, S.W.

Miss AGNES LARKCOM
Has removed to
158, PORTSDOWN ROAD, W.

Madame ISABEL GEORGE, L.R.A.M.
(Concert and Oratorio),
29, ALBANY STREET, REGENT'S PARK, N.W.

Contraltos.

Miss JOSEPHINE CRAVINO
(Concerts and Oratorio),
2, SEDGMOOR VILLAS,
lvate Lessons given. CAMBERWELL, S.E.

Miss MARY E. DAKIN, R.A.M.
(Mez. Sop.),
Ballads, Oratorio, &c.
31, MONMOUTH ROAD,
BAYSWATER, LONDON, W.

Miss LENA LITTLE
(Concerts),
42, NORFOLK SQUARE, HYDE PARK, W.

Contraltos.—Continued.

Madame OSCAR POLLACK
(Concerts).
56, DUCHESS ROAD,
EDGBASTON, BIRMINGHAM.

Tenors.

Mr. BARTON McGUCKIN
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
c/o MR. ALFRED MOUL,
26, OLD BOND STREET, W.,
Or, 270, ELGIN AVENUE, MAIDA VALE, W.

Mr. ARNOLD BREEDEN
(Concerts, Oratorio, and Opera),
Address—N. VERT, Esq.,
6, CORK STREET, W.

Mr. SEYMOUR JACKSON
(Concerts and Oratorio),
OLD TRAFFORD, MANCHESTER.

Mr. PAYNE CLARKE
(Concerts and Oratorio).
28, DEVONSHIRE STREET, ISLINGTON, N.

Mr. J. DALGETY HENDERSON,
GOTHIC LODGE,
LORDSHIP LANE, S.E.

Mr. REDFERN HOLLINS,
30, ST. STEPHEN'S AVENUE,
SHEPHERD'S BUSH, W.

Mr. BERNARD LANE,
60, WESTBOURNE PARK VILLAS, W.

Chevalier EDWARD SCOVEL
(Opera, Concerts, and Oratorio),
HOTEL DE L'EUROPE,
MILAN, ITALY.

Mr. W. ESMOND,
24, UPPER MOUNT STREET, DUBLIN.

Baritones.

Mr. WALTER CLIFFORD
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concerts),
c/o N. VERT, Esq.,
6, CORK STREET, W.

Mr. FREDERIC KING
(Concerts and Oratorio),
19, CANFIELD GARDENS, S. HAMPSTEAD.

Mr. NORRIS CROKER,
EGREMONT, CROXTED ROAD,
WEST DULWICH, S.E.

Mr. JOSEPH LYNDE
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concert
63, STAFFORD PL.
BUCKINGHAM GATE, S.W.

Mr. ALBERT REAKES
(Bass-Baritone, of the "London Ballad Singers," Oratorios, Concerts, &c.),
30, LANCASTER ROAD,
NOTTING HILL, W.

Herr RAGNAR GREVILLIUS
(Concerts, Oratorio, and Opera),
70, PORTSDOWN ROAD, MAIDA VALE, W.

Bass.

Mr. WATKIN MILLS requests that all communications respecting engagements be sent to his new address, Hyacinth Road, Roehampton Park, S.W.

Mr. FRANK CELLI
(Concerts and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. N. VERT, 6, CORK ST.,
BURLINGTON GARDENS, W.

Trumpet and Cornet.

Mr. THOMAS HARPER,
185, KING'S ROAD, N.W

Pianoforte.

Mr. G. PRADEAU
(Lessons and Recitals),
1, STOWE ROAD,
SHEPHERD'S BUSH, W.

Guitar.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN, Guitariste, Instructress to H.R.H. the Princess Louise, has returned to town, 22A, DORSET STREET, PORTMAN SQUARE, W., where may be had her celebrated book, "Learning the Guitar Simplified," 10s. 6d.

Violin.

Mr. ALLAN CAMPBELL
(Formerly Pupil of Mr. Henry Holmes and Dr. S. S. Wesley),
23, THICKET ROAD,
Pupils visited and received. ANERLEY, S.E.

Mr. LESLIE CROTTY and
Madame GEORGINA BURNS,
c/o Mr. ALFRED MOUL (sole agent),
26, OLD BOND STREET, W.

Miss AGNES JANSON requests that all communications respecting engagements may be sent to her new address, 36, Albion Place, Hyde Park, W.; or to Mr. N. VERT, 6, Cork Street, W.

The FRASER QUINTET. Misses Violet (Vocalist), Ida, and Ethel (Pianist, Violoncello, and Viola), Mabel and Stella Violinists), play Quartets, Solos, Duets, two Pianofortes, &c. For Engagements, for Concerts, "At Homes," Dinner and Garden Parties.—Address: 121, Adelaide Road, N.W.

MR. HEALEY'S SPECIAL LIST.

Madame LILIAN NORDICA (Soprano)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert,
Address to
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mdlle. LOUISE LABLACHE (Mez. Sop.)
(Opera and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W

Mdlle. HELENE HASTREITER (Contr.)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert)
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Madame BELLE COLE (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Miss MARGUERITE HALL (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. WILLIAM NICHOLL (Tenor)
28, BELSIZE ROAD, N.W.,
Or, Sole Agent, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. JOHN PROBERT (Tenor)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W

Mr. VAUGHAN EDWARDES (Baritone)
(Concerts and Oratorio),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. MULES BROWN (Baritone)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. HENRY POPE (Bass)
(Opera, Concerts, and Oratorio),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

Mr. T. L. CAMPION (Bass)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. HEALEY,
10A, WARWICK STREET, W.

"TUITION BY CORRESPONDENCE."
Offices–4, MONTGOMERY STREET, CARLOW.
ESTABLISHED 1885.
Candidates rapidly prepared for University, Intermediate, Civil Service, and other Examinations.

"NOTES AND QUERIES" DEPARTMENT.

STUDENTS and Others wishing to have questions answered on French, German, Latin, Greek, Irish, Spanish, or Italian, should send same with a Fee of 1s. for each question, or 5s for six questions.

MATHEMATICAL and SCIENCE QUESTIONS solved for a Fee of 6d. each, or 2s. 6d. for six questions.

The solutions are supplied by a staff of First Class Graduates, Specialists, &c.

All inquiries and instructions should contain STAMPED ADDRESSED ENVELOPE.

Apply to the Secretary, Examination Syndicate.
THE ACADEMY, 4, MONTGOMERY STREET, CARLOW.

CASSON'S
PATENT
Organ - Building System

SEPARATE Pedal Organs for each Manual. Expressive and Controllable Pedal Basses. Perfect control of all Couplers. Reduction of number of Claviers without loss of efficiency, &c., &c. See testimonials from

Mr. W. T. BEST.
Rev. Sir F. A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart.
Dr. SPARK.
Dr. J. C. BRIDGE, M.A.
Dr. E. W. TAYLOR, F.C.O.
The late Mr. J. STIMPSON.
Mr. R. BARTHOLOMEW.
Mr. J. HEYWOOD, Birmingham.
Mr. G. A. AUDSLEY, F.R.I.B.A.
M. A. J. HIPKINS, F.S.A.
&c., &c.

Apply to the Secretary—
CASSON'S PATENT ORGAN CO., LIMITED,
DENBIGH.

THE MUSICAL WORLD is on sale at MERRYDEW'S Library Boulogne-sur-Mer.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS.—Advertisements should be sent not later than 5 o'clock on Wednesdays, to the Office, 12, Catherine St., Strand.

Facts and Comments.

The Emperor Frederick III. has conferred upon Sir Morell the Grand Cross and Star of the Hohenzollern Order, and by thus honouring the first English throat-doctor, to whom he owes his life and his throne, has honoured himself. His Majesty, in presenting the insignia of the Order to Sir Morell Mackenzie, said :—"When you first came to attend me I had confidence in you because you were recommended to me by my German physicians. I myself have since learned to highly value your ability, and it now gives me great pleasure to be able to give you this Order in acknowledgment of your valuable services, and in remembrance of my accession to the throne."

Every musician, and especially every vocalist, will share in the joy and pride which the members of Sir Morell's profession feel, or should feel, at this announcement. For is he not the generous friend and guide and philosopher of all singers, great and small, who have come to him for advice, and do not many of our leading primadonnas owe him a debt of gratitude almost as great as that of the Emperor himself?

It is announced from Bayreuth that the official programme for the coming season was issued on April 6th. Seventeen performances are promised, the first being on July 22nd, and the last on August 19th. The repertoire will include "Parsifal" and "Die Meistersinger."

It is said that Madame Wagner wished to include in the programme "Tannhäuser," with the new first scene written for Paris, and some Wagnerites clamoured for "Tristan," which they considered (rightly, we think) to be the master's masterpiece, while others again asserted the claims of "The Ring of the Nibelung," which was really the first cause of the theatre. Fortunately, there will be time to carry out all these suggestions in due course. There is a guarantee fund sufficient to cover expenses for five years to come, and amongst the chief subscribers to that fund is the present Crown Prince of Germany.

With a few unimportant amendments, the Government will accept the Musical Copyright Bill which has been brought in by Mr. Addison, Mr. Bartley, Mr. Dillwyn, and Mr. Lawson. The object of the measure is to protect the public from vexatious proceedings for the recovery of penalties for the unauthorised performance of copyright musical compositions. A bad look out for Harry Wall!

Native talent is making its way abroad. It is pleasant to read of the decided success which Mr. Frederick Lamond, the young Scotchman, has recently had at Berlin, both as a composer and a pianist. At the third and last of a series of concerts given at the Singakademie of that city, he produced three pieces of his own composition, a pianoforte trio, a sonata for pianoforte and violoncello, and two pieces for the first-named instrument. All of these are well spoken of by the critics, although the influence of Brahms is said to be paramount. Mr. Lamond also played Beethoven's A flat sonata, opus 110, as well as pieces by Chopin, Mendelssohn, Liszt, and Tausig.

We regret very much to hear that Mrs. Henschel has been taken ill at St. Petersburg, so seriously that there is no hope of her being able to continue her Russian concert tour. It is doubtful even whether the vocal recitals contemplated by Mr. and Mrs. Henschel for May, in London, will take place.

The illness from which Mr. Oluf Svendsen the flautist, has for long been suffering, has, we regret to say, taken so serious a turn that a speedy recovery cannot be hoped for. Mr. Svendsen's engagements for the season have therefore been cancelled, excepting that for the Birmingham Festival in the autumn. In the meantime the familiar figure of the popular and distinguished musician will be missed from the ranks of the Philharmonic and Richter orchestras, for this season, but, we hope, for this season only.

Madame Albani will take part in one of the Richter concerts, when probably "Lohengrin," or at least "Elsa," will be in the ascendant, and when amateurs will be able to get an idea of the lingua tedesca in bocca Americana.

The prospectus issued by the Royal Institution for the season, announces amongst other lectures, a series of seven by Mr. Carl Armbruster on the later works of Richard Wagner. They are fixed for Saturday afternoons, April 14, 21, 28, and May 5, 12, 19, and 26.

The Municipal Council of Cologne has recently authorised the foundation of a Town Orchestra, which is to play at the theatre, at various concerts, and at civic celebrations. The step is an excellent one, and not even a very expensive one, as the following figures will show. The orchestra consists of 41 members and 12 "aspirants" or articled pupils, as we might say, and the total expenditure amounts to £4,354 10s. The incomings, on the other hand, are to the following effect. From the theatre: £2,566; from the Concert Society, £510; from probable receipts of the summer concerts, £800, and £50 more for smaller items. The total expense incurred by the town amounts therefore to the moderate sum of £428 10s.

In England all things, and especially all musical things, are dearer than in Germany; but supposing even that they were exactly double, what would a small item like £900 in the Budget of Liverpool or of Glasgow be, compared to the enormous boon which all classes of society would derive from a fine standing orchestra?

Madame Gaylord has taken the final step that severs her from the lyrical stage. This actress, till very recently a popular and successful member of Mr. Carl Rosa's English Opera Company, has appeared at the Lyceum in legitimate drama acting in a play which makes no demands on her capacities as a singer, for the three songs introduced into Mr. Delille's drama for "Lily" are a "far cry" from the music of "Mignon," among other operas in which Madame Gaylord excelled.

Concert-givers, artists, and members of the musical profession generally, will be pleased to learn that a Musical and Dramatic Agency, worked on the same principles as those already established in London, has at last been opened in Manchester. Our only wonder is that, in such a musical district, with Manchester for its centre, this has never been done before. The head offices of the Northern Musical and Dramatic Agency are at 15, Princess Street, Manchester, under the direction of Mr. Frank de Jong, who is well-known to the members of the musical profession.

Last week the Bradford Old Choral Society ventured, after an interval of two years, upon another concert, and presented a very attractive programme. The most considerable item on their programme was J. F. Barnett's cantata bearing the same title as Schumann's better-known "Paradise and the Peri." The principal vocalists wereMr. H. Waddington, Mrs. Stevenson Arnold, Mrs. Ashcroft Clarke, and Mr. W. Thornton. Mr. Thomas Ward conducted the performance.

The contradictory rumours as to the state of German opera in America, which are of more than ordinary importance, because that opera is partly representative of the progress of Wagnerian art in the New World, are dealt with in a straightforward and satisfactory manner by Madame Lilli Lehmann, one of the bright particular stars of that opera, who has written a letter to one of the German papers on the subject. Artists, as a rule, should not write to newspapers, but when they do, it would be at least well if all their letters were as sensible and to the point as that of Madame Lehmann. The lady admits that there is a deficit every year, but then she points out that such a deficit is absolutely unavoidable in the circumstances. There are 73 boxes in the theatre, each with comfortable seats for six persons, and these, as well as a good many stalls, are at the disposal of the stockholders free, gratis, and for nothing. The remainder of the house, even if absolutely sold out, as it was during the last four weeks on every evening, would not be sufficient to cover expenses, and the matter simply comes to this, that the shareholders receive their dividends in seats instead of in cash.

That they are well-satisfied with this arrangement was proved at their final meeting, when there were 35 votes for, and only 2 against the continuation of the opera for another season. Mr. Stanton has started for Germany to enlist fresh recruits. According to Madame Lehmann's calculation, a box for 66 performances, and accommodating, as we said, six persons, costs its occupant about £400, which is not excessive.

The death is announced of Mrs. Amelia Lewis Freund, an able writer on social, musical, and other subjects, and the mother of John Freund and Harry Freund, both well-known journalists in America.

Mr. Alfred Hollins, of the Royal Normal College, London, made a successful appearance at Boston on Saturday.

Mr. Barton McGuckin has made a favourable impression in New York, where he appeared for the first time in "Faust" and "Lohengrin."

"Freund's Music and Drama" says: "Now that his concert season is drawing to a close, Signor Campanini is devoting his attention to the production of Verdi's latest and greatest work, 'Otello.' The opera will be presented for the first time outside of Europe at the Academy of Music on April 9th, and will be repeated a number of times thereafter. Signor Marconi, a tenor whose reputation in Europe is uncommonly high, will be the 'Otello.' Signoria Tetrazzini, the wife of Cleofonte Campanini, who is to be the conductor of the performances, will sing 'Desdemona.' These three artists sailed for this city from Havre on the French steamship La Champagne last Saturday. Rehearsals of the opera will be actively pushed forward as soon as they arrive. M. Victor Maurel, the noted French baritone, is to have the important rôle of Iago, which he sang at the original production of the opera at La Scala, Milan, to the entire satisfaction of Verdi. M. Maurel's presence during the preliminary rehearsals, owing to his familiarity with his rôle, is unnecessary, and he only sailed yesterday. The new scenery and costumes, made expressly for the American representations in Milan, are on their way hither. The orchestra, which will be largely composed of members of the Metropolitan Opera House band, has been engaged, and the chorus is already rehearsing under Signor de Rialp. Only six performances of 'Otello' can be given owing to engagements in the West."

Herr Seidl's Second Symphony Concert introduced the "new Venusberg music" in connection with the "Tannhäuser" overture for the first time to New York. The scene between Venus and Tannhäuser followed, and, sung by Frau Lilli Lehmann and Herr Kalisch, her husband, created something like a sensation.

We regret to anounce the death, at Frankfort-on-the-Maine, last Monday, of Herr F. A. Garbe, at the advanced age of 81. Herr Garbe was for nearly 30 years musical director at the Bad Homburg, where he became well-known amongst the foreign as well as the German visitors to the Kurhaus.

A curious revival from old times will be presented at the old theatre of Morlaix (Lower Brittany) on the 14th of April, namely, the performance of the Breton Mystery Play, "La vie de Sainte Tryphine." The actors in this play are to be the local tailors, shoemakers, masons, labourers, blacksmiths, etc. It is expected that many Parisians will go down to Brittany to witness this spectacle.

M. Bourgault-Ducoudray, whose interesting edition of modern Greek songs we had recently occasion to mention, has just had the order of knighthood conferred upon him by the King of Greece. A more appropriate distinction has seldom been granted to a more deserving object.

The death is announced of M. Jean Conte, the well-known violinist and Grand Prix de Rome at the Paris Conservatoire in 1854. He was a pupil of Carafa, and composed several operas; but with the exception of a short comic opera in one act, which was produced at the Opéra Comique some years ago, not one of his larger works has ever been performed on the stage or in the concert-room.

MM. Jaime and Duval have just completed the libretto of a new grand opera in four acts, entitled "Ivanhoé."

M. Alexander Guilmant's first organ and orchestral concert of the season was given at the Trocadero on the 5th of April. M. Colonne was the conductor.

The following new works were performed for the first time in public at M. Montardon's concert at the Château-d'Eau, last Sunday afternoon: "La Légende de l'Ondine," by M. Rosenleker; a new violoncello concerto, by M. Hollmann, performed by the composer; an ouverture dramatique, by M. Charles Dancla, and part of "Renaud," by M. G. des Roches.

M. Haberl, of Ratisbon, has accomplished a task which must, to him, have been a labour of love. The results of his researches in the Vatican libraries, so rich in works of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, are published in a volume by Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel: "A Bibliographical and Thematic Catalogue of Music in the Archives of the Papal Choir."

A graceful ceremony was enacted at Milan when, on the afternoon of March 24, Pagliano's portrait of Amilcare Ponchielli was uncovered in the foyer of La Scala. The Syndic and the Councillors of the City, a representative from Cremona, and several musicians, artists, and ladies were present. The accomplished and genial Mayor made an eloquent speech, and the proceedings closed with the performance of excerpts from Ponchielli's "Marion Delorme" and "Promessi Sposi," by the Scala Orchestra under Signor Faccio.

STAGE FAVOURITES.

Among those attractions incidental to theatrical life which go so far towards compensating the arduous nature of an actor's calling, one of the pleasantest to contemplate is that intimate relation, ripening into positive friendship, which in the course of time comes to be established between acknowledged stage-favourites and the theatre-going public. As year after year passes, and the same familiar figure is seen nightly strutting his or her brief hour upon the mimic stage, a feeling springs up between actor and audience of an altogether personal nature, and quite irrespective of admiration inspired by a mere display of talent, however remarkable; so that there is no danger of confounding the hearty ring of recognition which follows as a matter of course upon the appearance of an old favourite, with the applause, however enthusiastic, of the most gifted new-comer.

And when the player has grown old with his audience, when his industrious and often chequered career has been pursued under the very eyes sometimes of more than one generation, there seems little cause to wonder at the tenacity, in spite of failing strength and waning talent, with which he lingers upon the scene of his former struggles and triumphs, as loath to utter as his old and faithful friends are to hear, those words of farewell which he nevertheless feels must soon be inevitable. Many a playgoer and opera-goer too, will be able to call to mind not a few incidents connected with this often pathetic phase of the actor's career. On recollections of this sort, however, we have now no occasion to dwell, but rather to draw attention to the appearance of an interesting and charming addition to modern theatrical literature, lately contributed by two artists who have lived long enough, and done good service enough in their profession, to earn the title of "stage favourites" in a very special sense, while, if they chose to cancel the leave-taking of a few years ago, they would still be young enough to look forward with justifiable confidence, to many a repetition in the future of their former triumphs. As, however, there seems to be little or no prospect of such an event, this temporary renewal of relations between Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft and their old friend, the public, will not fail to have a hearty welcome, especially in view of the attractive form in which it comes. For rarely, if ever, has the reading world been presented with so goodly a compost of professional anecdote, kindly criticism, and interesting personal reminiscence, as is to be found in these two chatty volumes. Before now Mrs. Bancroft has given proof of the possession of gifts which would doubtless have enabled her to make her mark had she chosen to follow a literary career, and these have stood her in good stead in the part contributed by her under the heading of "My Narrative." Her lively, unaffected style and quick faculty of observation; her descriptive power, both humorous and pathetic; her happy knack of characterisation, and, not least, her generous sympathies, serve to make this one of the most fascinating of theatrical biographies, and go far also towards explaining the secret of her success in the art to which she devoted her life. As will be expected, the rise and gradual growth of the Robertsonian School, with which the Bancrofts were so intimately associated, the youthful actors, such as the Kendals, Hare, Clayton, and others who co-operated with them in promoting a change in public taste destined to serve as a landmark in the history of nineteenth century dramatic Art, and, not least, "Tom Robertson himself," have received their due share of attention in these volumes. As a matter of course, also, we have an authentic history, enlivened by many a good story and entertaining digression, of the little theatre in Tottenham Court Road; its speedy rise to fortune under the new management, and the ultimate transfer of its triumphs to the Haymarket. But this is not a review of the book, and it calls for mention here only as emphasising in a record of the career of two essentially typical "stage favourites," that pleasing feature in the actor's calling already adverted to. From such a mass of material it would be difficult, even if space admitted, to make such a selection as could be deemed in any way representative. For the present, therefore, readers who wish to see how generally and wittily Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft can discourse of their past experiences on and off the stage, must be referred to the pages of the book itself, with an assurance that, bulky as it is, they are not likely to find in it one page too many.

MUSICAL COPYRIGHT BILL.

It will interest many of our readers to know the exact purport of the Musical Copyright Bill which has been prepared and brought in by Messrs. Addison, Bartley, Dillwyn, and Lawson, and which, as we state elsewhere, the Government has accepted. We print the draft of the Bill in extenso, leaving further comment till after it has become law, which may be expected at an early date.

A Bill to amend the law relating to the Recovery of Penalties for the unauthorised Performance of Copyright Musical Compositions.

Whereas it is expedient to further amend the law relating to copyright in musical compositions, and to further protect the public from vexatious proceedings for the recovery of penalties for the unauthorised performance of the same:

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

1. Notwithstanding the provisions of the Act passed in the third and fourth years of His Majesty King William the Fourth, chapter fifteen, to amend the law relating to dramatic literary property, or any other Act in which those provisions are incorporated, the penalty or damages to be awarded upon any action or proceedings in respect of each and every unauthorised representation or performance of any musical composition, whether published before or after the passing of this Act, shall be such a sum or sums as shall, in the discretion of the court or judge before whom such action or proceedings shall be tried, be reasonable, and the court or judge before whom such action or proceedings shall be tried may award a less sum than forty shillings in respect of each and every such unauthorised representation or performance as aforesaid, or a nominal penalty or nominal damages as the justice of the case may require.

2. The costs of all such actions or proceedings as aforesaid shall be in the absolute discretion of the judge before whom such actions and proceedings shall be tried.

3. The proprietor, tenant, or occupier of any place or places of dramatic entertainment, or other place or places at which any unauthorised representation or performance of any musical composition, whether published before or after the passing of this Act, shall take place, shall not by reason of such representation or performance be liable to any penalty or damages in respect thereof (unless he shall wilfully cause or permit such unauthorised representation or performance).

4. In this Act words denoting a male shall include a female, and words denoting the singular number shall include the plural, and the word court shall include any tribunal before which such actions or proceedings may now be lawfully tried.

5. This Act may be cited as the Copyright (Musical Compositions) Act, 1888.

6. This Act shall extend only to England and Wales.

Reviews.

VOCAL.

After examining some of Mr. Charles Woolhouse's recent publications, a disposition on the part of this firm may be easily discerned to give encouragement to compositions of a higher quality than English publishers, for some mysterious reason, have for the most part shown any inclination to favour; and in this laudable endeavour they are sure to have the good wishes of educated amateurs in this country—a class, it should be remembered, which has of late days greatly increased both in numbers and intelligence. We believe it to be a fact not altogether significant of the actual state of musical culture in England, that singers and pianists desiring to obtain smaller works written in any form more pretentious than, as it were, in words of one or two syllables, should so long have found it necessary to search abroad for their supply, often obtaining, be it said, little better than educated common-place for their pains. There can be little doubt that when English publishers generally show greater disposition to make comparison possible, and to give native composers who have something to say an opportunity of saying it, this overweening respect for foreign brands—leaving of course as quite outside the question those great names which belong to all time and all countries—will have to be considerably modified. A collection of songs in sheet form lately to hand suggests remarks very similar to those made in our columns last week in connection with some pianoforte music issued by the same publisher. Without advancing any exaggerated claims for these, it may fairly be said that they all, in greater or less degree, exhibit signs of having been written with a distinct aim, that aim being something higher than merely to swell the flood of feeble musical literature with which the English market has so long been deluged. In three songs, for instance, by S. Emily Oldham, there is considerable charm of musical feeling, coupled with truthful expression, notably in "Guardami" (words from Metastasio), which, with its pure melody and thoroughly vocal character, might—barring an occasionally modern flavour—easily pass muster in a selection from some of the older Italian composers. "Loyal and true," a song of different description, also shows refinement, and even a refrain suggestive of the ordinary ballad style is redeemed from common-place by its fanciful and appropriate melody. "Love's return," by the same composer, has less individuality, but possesses, nevertheless, decidedly pleasing qualities. In "Serenade" and "The Three Fishers," by J. Cliffe Forrester, the familiar words chosen by the composer place him under a certain disadvantage, by compelling him, especially in the latter case, to disturb well settled associations. His treatment, however, of Kingsley's verses differs materially from that in Hullah's well-known song, and though less catching, is not unlikely to be preferred by some by reason of the clever descriptiveness of the accompaniment, and of his successful endeavours to convey musically the contrasts and various shades of expression contained in the poem. One is less baulked in the setting of Longfellow's Serenade, which has already been set by so many composers in so many ways, that the thought of making comparisons scarcely now occurs. Suffice it to say that this latest version is a very pleasing one. There is an agreeable melodic flow in "Sleep," by Mrs. J. E. Vernham, and "Twilight" (Longfellow's words), by the same composer, though a song of slighter texture than some of the above, contains a pretty musical idea, and may be, perhaps, compared to what the drawing-room song may be expected or hoped to be, in the better days to come. "The Aureola," by Gilbert Byass, on the other hand, is in some respects more like what they really are, and may be said to belong to a class of songs dating from the days of the "Lost Chord"—which might not inappropriately be distinguished as "Choir Songs;" songs, that is, dealing with fancies and emotions supposed to be inspired by the sound of Cathedral music, and by the sight of dim chancels, stained-glass windows, and the like. "Beneath the Roses" by the same composer, is a pretty trifle, and ought to become popular. "The Castle in the Air," by G. Saint George, is well written and fluent, but of somewhat conventional type. "Sleep, sleep, O, my pretty one, sleep" is a very pretty lullaby, by Alex. S. Beaumont, with words by Longfellow, and this has been effectively arranged also as a trio for violin, viola (or violoncello), and harmonium. "The Angel and the Child," by Sidney Shaw, is a setting of some fanciful verses by Lord Lytton, here treated with considerable feeling and imagination, both in the voice part and in the descriptive accompaniments, the latter containing some excellent effects of an almost orchestral character. "Can you forget?" a song of lighter calibre, by the same composer, has also good qualities, the subject when repeated being pleasantly varied in the pianoforte part. (All the above, Charles Woolhouse.)

"Song of the Arab Maid," by Marian Davis (E. Ascherberg and Co.), is a moderately interesting rendering of words by Thomas Moore. "Plymouth Bay," by R. A. Boissier, a spirited nautical song (Charles Franklyn). Also connected with the deep, but in a more serious manner, is "Give up thy Dead, oh Sea," by John J. Dymond (Robert Crout), an altogether sentimental song of moderate merit. A sacred song entitled, "When I survey the wondrous Cross," by Churchill Sibley (Ambrose and Co.), is a fair specimen of its class.

"Songs of a Summer's Day," a collection of four vocal duets by Frank J. Sawyer (Novello, Ewer, and Co.), and entitled respectively "Dawn," "Noon," "Twilight," and "Night," is a pretty notion prettily carried out. The composer's associations with the various divisions of the day are evidently all cheerful ones, that character being imparted to "Night" by the tripping of merry elves. Perhaps, for the sake of a contrast, this last subject might have been treated more quietly with advantage; but these duets, as they stand, are interesting and effective, and possess qualities to recommend them to the attention of vocalists.

"My Country" is a pleasing part song by George Staker, with words of patriotic import by Tom Moore (London Music Publishing Company). Among recent church music worthy of attention is a well-written anthem for general use, "Praise our God," by Rev. J. Cater (B. Williams), and a clever "Te Deum," set to music in the key of B flat on the melody of the chimes, by Charles T. West. (Novello, Ewer, and Co).

INSTRUMENTAL.

Some excellent and musicianly contributions to chamber music have lately appeared by Mr. Herbert F. Sharpe, in a taking little "Idylle" for flute (or violin) and pianoforte;

"Legende," for pianoforte and violin (a piece containing interesting matter for both instruments); and four duets for two violins with pianoforte accompaniment. The latter, entitled respectively, "Ballade," "Bourrée Caracteristique," "Barcarolle," and "Hornpipe," are full of character, and well worthy of the attention of violinists. We have also a graceful "Romance" for violoncello (or violin) and piano, by Sydney Shaw. An arrangement for voice and pianoforte, with obbligato violin, has been made by Alexander L. Beaumont, of Eugene Wagner's "La Resignation," a charming melody which grows on acquaintance, and appears to advantage in its present form. G. Saint George in "Feuilles d'Automne," has written six pleasing morceaux for violin or violoncello, with pianoforte accompaniment ("Romance," "Chanson d'Amour, Meditation du soir," "Gavotte," "Bien aimée," and "Gondoliera"), all of which, as well as an "Elegie" for the same instruments, show considerable facility, and are likely to find favour with amateurs. (All the above, Charles Woolhouse). "Recreations," a little pianoforte impromptu, written at the instigation of the "Pen and Pencil Club," by Emily Hughes (J. and W. Chester, Brighton) is a piece of small pretensions, but light and pretty, especially as regards its closing theme, and no doubt well serves its purpose.

Among recent dance music "Hermione," a waltz by Gilbert Byass should have special chance of popularity on account of its dreamy and taking melody. (Charles Woolhouse.) "Margaret," another waltz by the same composer, and "The Sylvan Glen" polka mazurka, and "Merry Voices" polka, both by Carl Kiefert, are also excellent dance tunes. (All same publisher.)

ROBERT FRANZ'S SONGS.

By William W. Waldmann.

When the excitement was at its height in Bayreuth, and the attention of the world was directed to what was going on there, it was whispered in musical circles that Richard Wagner esteemed the songs of Robert Franz very highly, and frequently had them sung at his house.

Richard Wagner and Robert Franz!

People, unable to account for it, let the report go unheeded. Then again, after Wagner's death, it appeared in the Leipzig Tageblatt, that Wagner thought very highly of the song-writer, Lœwe, and had studied his works assiduously; also the songs of Robert Franz! Was it the perfect antithesis which caught Wagner's attention, and afforded him pleasure in listening to these songs? Wagner's passionate music, with its bold modulations and the alluring charm of its orchestration; and then Franz's songs, so pure and carefully written, which meets one unacquainted with them rather coyly, awakening no sensual feelings, standing there as pure and as white as marble.

The writer once asked Franz what he thought of the report, and he said: "During a visit to Switzerland, I called upon Wagner, who then lived in Zurich. In course of the conversation he opened his music case and pointing to it, said: 'There are all the musical works I possess.' They stood there—Bach, Beethoven, and my songs. What could I say to that? I then considered it merely as an act of courtesy, and attached no importance to it—now it is easily understood; and it may well be true that Wagner took a lively interest in my songs. I have already shown you, how, here, the music and the text are adapted to each other, and that the music comes naturally from the text. Wagner himself works upon this principle. Why our forms of expression differ there is good reason, and, should we use the same subject, the results would differ."

In a few words Franz gives a solution of the riddle.

What is meant, now, by the rendering of the text through music?

Realistic painting in a musical sense, it is not; but it is the plastic representation of musical ideas which the text creates in us.

In every moving phenomenon in the physical world one recognises the reflection of certain emotions and the emotion is the direct witness of life. But life, to put it in an artistic sense, is the theme of music. Here lies the true so-called imitation of the bubbling of the spring, the surging of the waves, the rustling of the leaves, etc.

That is, to express it more clearly, one should not try to imitate Nature and its impressions, but he should rather take these impressions to himself, live through them, and then reproduce them in a new form. So originates a work of art.

As men sympathise more or less in their feelings, so shall we find ourselves more or less pleased when listening to different motives. To impress a fixed character upon musical thoughts by means of rhythmic, harmonic, and melodic forms, and to adapt it intimately to the text—this power of execution belongs to none of the song-writers in such measure as to Robert Franz, and here is the point of similarity to Richard Wagner. Samples from Franz's songs could be given by the hundred. Indeed from such an abundance it is difficult to select the most characteristic. Look at his "Herbstsorge," op. 4, one of his most beautiful songs.

Deep grief covers us—all like a fearful dream comes the thought, "She whom you love is lost to you;" "The summer comes back, it brings us new songs." Calmed, as if for a moment, all care were forgotten, comes the motive in D major instead of minor, with the words, "Bring us new songs." The song, "Ye Heights on the Beautiful Don," by Burns, contrasts cheerful nature with a heart torn with anguish. The heights are green and blooming; the birds sing so joyously. "Of my love sang I; and there remained of my rosy youth only a thorn in my heart." In the prelude, we see height above height rise distinctly. Melodious changes point to the flowery ornaments; then the birds begin to sing in constant emulation, until the minor motive of the voice—the real point of the song—returns. One sees for himself that here lies a beautiful example of Franz's musical feeling. Then see "Meerfahrt," op. 18, No. 4. The tone pictures here rise intuitively. Especially interesting is the close of op. 48, No. 1, a poem from Heine, "When two part asunder." One can here see how different the dramatic treatment is from the lyrical, as Franz, corresponding to the words, "The tears and sighs which came afterward," closes with an effective finale. Without the aid of various instruments, he produces a sufficient effect by means of rhythm. In op. 30, No. 6, Franz has very forcibly described the restless emotion of a distressed heart, which finds its confederate in the roaring of the thunderstorm. With the words "Then flash, all ye lightnings," the musical expression is simply frightening; one sees the dazzling, quivering lightning flashing across the sky. According to the contents, at the close of each verse the form of the accompaniment is changed. The unrest in Nature serves as a background for the voice, and, in contrast to it, anger and resentment break forth over the unfaithfulness of the loved one.

Let one study Franz's songs with the unity of the poetry and the music in view, then it is as if light were thrown on darkness, and the barrier which has obstructed us were taken away. Of all the emotions which men possess, even though they lie dormant, Franz's songs ignore none. Music can awaken the noblest part of man's nature, and this in the truest sense do these characteristic songs.—From the Boston Musical Record.

Next Week's Music.

THIS DAY (SATURDAY).

Afternoon Concert.. Crystal Palace. 3

TUESDAY, 17.

Miss Winifrid Robinson .... Princes' Hall. 3

THURSDAY, 19.

Philharmonic Society ....St. James's Hall 8

Glasgow, 10th April.—The fourth and last of a series of Chamber Concerts took place on Friday evening 6th inst., in the Berkeley Hall. The hall was comfortably well filled. The performers were Mr. W. H. Cole (first violin), Mr. John Daly (second violin), Mr. Frank A. Baker (viola), and Mr. John Walton ('cello). Among the works performed were Mozart's string quartet in F major, and Bennett's trio for pianoforte, violin, and 'cello, op. 26. Mr. H. A. L. Seligmann was the vocalist, and sang songs by Schubert, etc., and for the first time a new song by Hamish M'Cunn, entitled "I'll tend thy bower, my bonnie May."

The Organ World.

THE ORGAN WITH ADDITIONAL INSTRUMENTS.

A recent conversation on this topic—a not uninteresting one in these days of choral festivals in church—presented thoughts which the writer feels justified in placing second-hand before the reader. There seems to be a tendency to turn back to an ancient practice—through the medium of what may be regarded as modern equivalents—the practice of enforcing vocal music in church by the use of powerful wind instruments. In the olden time, the now obsolete cornets or Zinken and trombones were constantly employed to strengthen the vocal parts, and now we are returning to the practice, in a sense, by the use of cornet-à-pistons, euphonium, etc., and trombones with organ. This return to an ancient method is, however, less a question of fashion than a matter of conviction, with regard to effect. The organ, with its fixed wind pressure and even tones, it seems to be discovered, needs accent when external additions by means of orchestral instruments are made to its accompanying resources; and, no doubt, a small group of brass instruments not only produces the most emphatic additional sounds, but, especially if supplemented, as is the fashion, by drums, will supply the most brilliant and powerful accents. In the seventeenth century when stringed instruments first secured their seemingly never more to be disturbed orchestral supremacy, it became the fashion to score largely for strings and organ, with occasional additions to the orchestral resources in the shape of oboes, bassoons, horns, and even trumpets and drums. Now, in the conversation first alluded to at the beginning of this article, the proposal was made to institute a return to the practice, so largely prevailing from about the middle of the seventeenth century onwards, of using the stringed mass with the organ. Truly a mass of stringed instruments makes eloquent music in combination with the organ; but, curiously enough, seems to minimise the orchestral impulses of the organ, and to deprive its imitative effects of their colour and phrasing powers. This is easily to be understood. When heard with strings, the imitative wind instrument effects of the organ become pale, and show very plainly the fixity of their tones; consequently, the strings, while enriching the organ in one direction, actually impoverish its powers as a producer of wind tone effects. Then the addition of a few typical wind instruments, wood and brass, again make the imitative stops of the organ so colourless, as to be mischievous rather than useful in effect. Such results bring one to the question, is it possible to stop half way in the work of building up combined orchestral and organ tone? Further, is it not wise to aim at securing a complete and at least fairly balanced orchestra, banishing altogether in orchestral and organ combination, all the imitative organ presumptions, and confining the king of instruments to its finest orchestral functions, the supplying of a deep, massive, pedal bass when wanted, and the judicious use of its grand, permeating eight feet diapason work? But lacking the full use of orchestral and organic effects in combination, other questions arise. May it not be a justifiable economy to extend the use of the organ, employing that portion of the orchestra not only capable of yielding such characteristic accents as organ tone seems to lack, on bright occasions of festival display, but which also comes least into collision with the assumed orchestration and imitative effects of the organ itself? Regarding the question in part as one of economy in expense, required space, etc., it seems to be a growing opinion that a sufficiently complete group of brass instruments supplemented with drums, possibly, naturally forms the most convenient and, in proportion, effective addition to the organ for festival purposes. This is not a mere question of vulgar noise, but a matter in which certain requirements of the organ are most economically supplied, and in which the collision of real with imitative effects is avoided. These observations do not bear upon the possibility of effectively using obbligato single instruments with the organ, but upon the question of obtaining broad effects upon economical principles. One would be sorry again to deter young composers from making experiments in the way of combining strings with organ. The whole question of orchestral and organic combination is indeed one worthy of serious attention on the part of those best able to form sound, serviceable opinions, and who are in the position to make useful and extensive practical experiments. E. H. TURPIN.

ANNUAL DINNER OF THE COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

This enjoyable celebration took place at the Holborn Restaurant, on April 9th. A large company assembled, under the presidency of Dr. E. J. Hopkins. About eighty gentlemen were present, and there were several letters of apology for absence placed in the chairman's hands. Easter being early this year, and teaching terms ending and beginning at various dates during the month, a number of the College members found themselves placed between two fires, and were reluctantly compelled to resign a pleasant social gathering under pressure of business arrangements. Perhaps some fixed date, or approximate date, such as the third Monday in April might be brought before the College authorities as a remedy for inconveniences arising from the acceptance of a given day, dependent upon a great movable feast. Among the company of F.C.O.'s and A.C.O.'s, members and friends, were the following:—Messrs. H. P. Allen, J. J. Adams, J. Belcher, O. D. Belsham, H. R. Bird, Dr. J. Bradford, H. D. Callow, J. Crapps, A. S. Cooper, A. J. Dye, C. Davison, F. D. G. English, B.A, H. F. Frost, J. Flint, J. L. Gregory, Dr. F. E. Gladstone, A. J. Greenish, Mus. Bac., W. S. Hoyte, H. S. Hume, G. F. Huntley, C. King Hall, G. J. Hall, Ivimey, F. A. Jewson, Dr. C. Warwick Jordan, J. E. Jeffries, E. Kiver, Dr. H. Walmsley Little, Dr. W. H. Longhurst, G. Ernest Lake, G. A. Osborne, J. M. Pritchard, S. J. Preston, T. Pettit, F. J. Read, Mus. Bac., Rev. Dr. Ross, C. E. Stephens, T. L. Southgate, B. H. Steane, W. H. Stocks, H. W. Stocks, W. F. Schwier, F. G. Shinn, J. H. Slape, A. Trickett, Mus. Bac., Rev. C. R. Taylor, J. Turpin, Mus. Bac., E. H. Turpin, Dr. C. G. Verrinder, H. D. Wetton, J. C. Warren, W. G. Wood, J. Warriner, Mus. Bac., J. Walsh, Weekes, Watt, A. A. Yeatmann, etc. Grace was said before and after dinner by the Rev. Dr. Ross and the Rev. C. R. Taylor. The "Queen and the Royal Family," the first toast, was given in suitable terms by the Chairman, who next proposed the "College of Organists," dwelling upon the position and success of the institution as facts patent to all. "Success to our National Educational Musical Institutions," was proposed by Mr. C. E. Stephens, who pointed out the value of these institutions, and the large attendance of their students at the College of Organists' Examinations. Mr. Jewson, of the Royal Academy of Music, replied on behalf of that institution, the Royal College of Music, Trinity College, London, the Guildhall School, etc.; those institutions were also represented by various gentlemen present. "Success to the Organists' Benevolent Society" was proposed by Mr. E. H. Turpin, in the absence of the esteemed Hon. Treasurer, Mr. M. E. Wesley. The position of the scheme and hopes for its future were expressed by the speaker, who earnestly pleaded for the support and sympathy of all. "The Patrons and Vice-Presidents" were toasted by Mr. James Higgs, who spoke in warm terms of the distinguished persons in question. This was replied to by Dr. Hopkins as a vice-president. Mr. G. A. Osborne, in a very humorous and pleasing speech, proposed the "Council," whose labours and responsibilities he referred to at length. "The Hon. Treasurer and Hon. Secretary" were proposed in kindly and appreciative terms by Mr. C. E. Stephens. Mr. E. H. Turpin replied for

Mr. M. E. Wesley and himself. "The Chairman" was proposed in happy terms by Mr. F. Watt, who alluded to Dr. Hopkins's widely recognised talents and popularity. The chairman replied in an interesting speech, and was warmly received by the company. "The Vice-chairmen, Dr. W. H. Longhurst and Mr. O. D. Belsham," were proposed by Mr. J. Turpin, and those gentlemen suitably responded. "The Visitors" were proposed by Mr. W. S. Hoyte, and Mr. T. L. Southgate replied, offering his testimony regarding the good work of the College, and pointing out the responsibility and power of the members to advance the best interests of the art. After this toast Dr. Hopkins vacated the chair, and soon after the pleasant meeting came to an end; but not before groups of friends were formed, many of whom came from long distances and rejoiced in the perhaps too rare opportunity afforded for an interchange of artistic opinions and friendly greetings. It is hoped that a complete digest of the various speeches will be placed before the members of the College in course of time.

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

On April 10th Dr. E. J. Hopkins gave a special lecture to the members and friends, on that interesting but too little investigated subject, "The Mediæval English Church Organ." The learned lecturer is recognised as a pre-eminent authority on this subject, and his very valuable and able paper at once claimed and held the attention of his listeners, among whom were some of our leading musical men and organists. The chair was taken by Mr. E. H. Turpin. Upon the proposal of Mr. Jas. Higgs, the meeting closed with a cordial vote of thanks to the esteemed lecturer. The paper will, in due course, occupy the reader's attention in print, when a still better estimate will be formed of its extensive research, antiquarian enthusiasm, and of the solution it affords of many perplexing difficulties accompanying the study of a comparatively unexplored subject.

Stourbridge.—At Mr. T. H. Rhodes' Music Room, Lye, the opening of the new organ was celebrated by a recital given by Mr. W. T. Best, organist of St. George's Hall, Liverpool, on March 19th.

Programme.

Organ Concerto, G minor	Handel.
Andante, from the First Organ Sonata	Alphonse Mailly.
Prelude and Fugue, B minor	Bach.
Andante Cantabile	Th. Salomé.
Overture in E major, founded on the Austrian Hymn	Haslinger.
Andante, A major	H. Smart.
Introduction and Fugue on a Trumpet Fanfare	W. T. Best.
Finale—Cappriccio alla Sonata	Fumagalli.

DESCRIPTION OF THE ORGAN.

(Built by Mr. J. Clark, Bath.)

Great Organ.

Double diapason	16 ft.	Harmonic flute	4 ft.
Open diapason	8 ,,	Twelfth	2⅔ ,,
Horn diapason	8 ,,	Fifteenth	2 ,,
Stopped diapason	8 ,,	Mixture, four ranks	—
Principal	4 ,,	Trumpet	8 ,,

Swell Organ.

Bourdon	16 ft.	Sesquialtera, four ranks	—
Open diapason	8 ,,	Double Trumpet	16 ft.
Gedact	8 ,,	Horn	8 ,,
Salicional	8 ,,	Hautboy	8 ,,
Vox Angelica	8 ,,	Vox Humana	8 ,,
Principal	4 ,,	Clarion	4 ,,

Choir Organ.

Viol de Gambe	8 ft.	Flute d'amour	4 ft.
Dulciana	8 ,,	Flute a cheminée	4 ,,
Orchestral flute	8 ,,	Clarionet	8 ,,

Pedal Organ.

Open Diapason	16 ft.	Principal	8 ft.
Bourdon	16 ,,

Couplers.

Swell to great (unison)	Great to pedals.
Swell to great (superoctave)	Swell to pedals.
Swell to choir (unison)	Choir to pedals.
Choir to great	Tremulant.

Total number of pipes, 1,926.

"FALSE RELATIONS."

A paper read before the Members of the College of Organists, by James Turpin, Mus. Bac. Cantab, F.C.O., etc.

Part I.

If the experience of musical students generally coincides with that which was my own, no part of the theoretical study of music presents so many difficulties in the earlier stages of their progress as that portion of the subject which is proposed for our consideration this evening. These difficulties—so it appears to me—arise from faulty definition, and brief, dogmatic, and arbitrary laws for the avoidance of so-called false relationship by theoretical writers, which are often broken in the examples given as models. Further, the student who is endowed with observation is still more confused by the apparent disregard to those rules by composers of all ages; because the rules have been laid down by the theorists in that unreasoning, dogmatic spirit, which appears to be peculiar to the lawgivers of musical science only, and with a narrowness of vision which could not embrace all the situations in which the interdicted proximity of certain degrees of the scale must occur.

Juliet asked, "What's in a name?" We may accept her own reply to the question, so far as it concerned the object of her inquiry. For certainly a rose would smell as sweet, and Romeo might be equally attractive to Juliet under any other name; but the definition of a matter of fact technical subject may be much obscured by a misleading appellation applied to it.

As a definition, False Relationship would seem to indicate an appearance of relationship which was deceptive. Whereas it should rather be understood to be complete non-relationship between two chords. Again, False Relationship, as a name of definition, might be understood to be an ambiguity in the nature of adjacent chords. Now, ambiguity in harmony is a most useful and effective means for the composer's use, as seen in a marked degree, and in the most commonly recognised form, in enharmonic modulation. To clear away doubt, and an undeniable source of misunderstanding in the minds of students on first approaching the study of the divine art, arising from the use of a misleading term, let us call want of connection between two harmonies, non-relationship. After continuous and universal use of a term amongst musicians for a lengthened period of time, I am afraid this is too great a task to be accomplished by one stroke of a pen. Of the value of such a change of name I am fully persuaded.

If the principles by which relationship between given harmonies can be defined and proved to exist, we may, by a process of negative reasoning, determine when chords are disconnected from each other by non-relationship.

The late John Hullah said, in one of those brief and effective sentences in which he frequently conveyed much instruction:—

> "If there be any one principle which more strongly governs a modern musician than another, it is this—that those combinations follow one another with the best effect which are, or might be, connected by common notes."

The full force and breadth of this comprehensive sentence cannot be appreciated at once. From this we learn that all chords which have notes common to each other are, and must be, relative and connected harmonies. Again, the words "or might be" are full of meaning. They may, perhaps, be expanded thus:—

All chords which by the ambiguity of their nature may be assigned to more than one derivation, may be connected with two or more harmonies. To some this may appear to be a new principle in harmony; but such is not the case, as will be seen by the recollection that it is from ambiguity of character that enharmonic modulation derives its changeful nature. This will be the guiding principle by which relationship or non-relationship of adjacent harmonies will be determined during the course of these remarks.

After we have carefully examined some of the leading authorities upon counterpoint and harmony, such as Fux, Albrechtsberger and Cherubini, what a limited amount of knowledge we gain upon so-called False Relationship and with what fetters have we been manacled. The sum of what we learn concerning so-called False Relationship is, that we are to avoid Mi contra Fa, or, in modern language, the incidence of the subdominant and the leading note appearing in two adjacent chords; also, that an accidently altered note should not be heard in proximity with an unaltered note of the same name. Let us take each of these arbitary rules separately and consider, in the first place, how far they are in accordance with true science; secondly, how the great masters have, with beneficial results, purposely broken the law. From their works let us endeavour to ascertain some principle which has guided them in emancipating themselves from a narrow dictum of the theorists. Cherubini, who may be considered the most generally accepted authority on counterpoint, says—"All successions of chords, of which one contains an F, and the other a B, and vice-versa, indisputably bring about the false relation of the Tritone."

If we turn to the example of the theorists, we see what must be self-evident to even a tyro at the art of counterpoint, that such a law cannot be maintained.

Immediately after enunciating this sweeping rule, Cherubini gives the familiar two-part example in the first species, in the last three bars of which the tritone is formed by the canto—in the bass—descending from the fourth to the second of the scale, and by the upper part by moving from the sixth to the seventh of the scale, thus:—

A B C
F D C

After this, the learned contrapuntist congratulates himself on his performance in two-part counterpoint in the first species, with a self complacency which is refreshing. Observe, however, he has not one word for a direct breach of the law which he has just previously enunciated, although the instance referred to is only the obverse of the last example he gives of interdicted progressions. Albrechtsberger, after a dissertation upon the false relation of Mi contra Fa, adds:—

"In a cadence of three or more parts, two major thirds, ascending a whole tone, are permitted, as may be seen in these examples," given in the key of G, in three and in four parts:—

Canto	C	A	G		C	A	G
	E	F	G		E	F	G
					A	A	B
	C	D	G		C	D	G

This is an acknowledgment that when the canto proceeds to the final cadence by the following succession of notes, viz.: subdominant, supertonic, and tonic, the tritone cannot be avoided, and is therefore accepted.

REVIEWS.

The Music of the Bible, J. Stainer, Mus. Doc., M.A., F.C.O. (Novello, Ewer & Co.; Cassell, Petter and Galpin). A valuable and interesting work, for the most part a reprint of Dr. Stainer's articles on the same subject in the "Bible Educator." The subject is treated with musicianly method. After an interesting introduction, the main divisions are "stringed instruments," "wind instruments," "instruments of percussion," and "vocal music." To organists and church musicians, not the least interesting portions of the book are the useful investigations concerning the origin of the organ and the vocal music of the Jews, though this last named subject is clouded with doubt and difficulty, and consequently open to speculative, rather than assured description. The account of the musical accents, neumes, and ancient scales, are also valuable; but, in truth, the entire work is deserving of attention and study. Festival "Te Deum" in C, C. Warwick Jordan, Mus. Doc., F.C.O., etc. (Novello & Co.) This effective work has been scored, not only for full orchestra, but for brass instruments and drums. Those who know the value of the accents which judiciously used brass and drums bestow upon organ tone, will well understand how effective such a musicianly work as this is in its more available form; and as these instruments are ad libitum accompaniments, the work is highly effective, even for organ alone as the accompaniment medium. The setting contains well contrasted passages of jubilance and solemnity. The contrasts are all skilfully brought within one well-framed plan. The more striking effects are often attained by the most simple means, as in the subdued sentence, "We believe that Thou shalt come," and the resonant jubilance of such passages as "Day by day." Dr. Jordan's setting of the fine old hymn will be of special value at festivals, where the growing orthodox fashion of using the "Te Deum" prevails, and it will also be found an effective and useful setting in the ordinary service course.

RECITALS AND OTHER MUSICAL OFFICES IN CHURCH.

The following is the text of the Bishop of Rochester's recent letter on the subject of organ recitals and other musical performances in parish churches:—"An incumbent in this diocese has claimed my direction on a question which has lately stirred some brisk and not unimportant discussion—that of the legality of using parish churches for musical entertainments with payment charged for admission. The suitableness of raising money by such a method is a distinct matter. It may be of service that I should publish an opinion communicated to me by the Chancellor of the diocese. 'The question of the legality of demanding a money payment for admission to a service or other function held in a church has not, I believe, been thoroughly discussed in a contested case. But it seems to me that such a demand violates the right of parishioners to attend the services of their parish church without payment, subject, as to certain parts of certain churches, to a liability to pew rents defined by statute. I cannot conceive that it is possible to use a church for public purposes which do not transgress the 88th canon and are yet independent of this right of the parishioners. I think that the function in question must either itself be illegal as an act of desecration, or the parishioners have a right to be present without payment.' Hitherto whenever notice has been sent to me (the Bishop), of course with corroborative evidence that a musical entertainment is contemplated in a church, to which admission is charged by a money payment, I have distinctly forbidden it, and for any inconvenience or disappointment caused thereby those who violate the law must be held chargeable—not he who protects it. Moreover, I wish it to be clearly understood that under similar circumstances I shall do the same again. The House of God must not be lightly degraded into a concert room merely because it may be found a convenient place for making money. But there is a way out of the difficulty which neither violates the rights of the parishioners nor disturbs the associations of the devout. Let some Collects with a brief address be said at the beginning; then let the music, of course of a sacred character, follow; the Benediction will conclude the service, with the taking of an offertory for whatever object is desired, either at the doors or from seat to seat. By this arrangement, which is now constantly carried out, and so far as I know, generally sanctioned, no injury is done to anybody; and I should be sorry for the person to whom the opportunity of listening to sacred music, devoutly performed by a competent choir in church, is not only joy but a help, should be deprived of that opportunity."

On Easter Day, a silver mounted ivory batôn of exquisite workmanship was presented to Mr. Ernest N. Cullum, the choirmaster of Holy Trinity, Charlton, S.E., on the occasion of his leaving England for Switzerland, where he has been appointed organist for the summer season, at the English Church, Lucerne. The presentation was made by the Incumbent, in the presence of a number of the members of the congregation.

RECITAL NEWS.

Godalming Parish Church.—An organ recital was given on April 4th, by F. de G. English, Esq., B.A., A.C.O. Programme:—

Allegro Maestoso (Sonata I.)	Mendelssohn.
Andante con Moto in F	Smart.
Postlude on Plain Song Hymn "Urbs Beata, Hierusalem"	Dr. C. W. Pearce.
Andante (Violin Concerto)	Mendelssohn.
Adagio in D	Smart.
Nazareth	Gounod.
Sonata in A. No. 9.	Corelli.
Fugue in E flat "St. Ann"	Bach.
Grand Solemn March in E flat	Smart.

Christ Church, Hendon.—On Sunday last, April 1st, a recital was given in the above church by the organist, Mr. H. A. Wheeldon, F.C.O. The programme included:—

Hallelujah Chorus ("Messiah")	Handel.
Pastorale	Deshayes.
"Praise His Awful Name" ("Last Judgment")	Spohr.
"Angelus"	Massenet.
March—Postlude	H. A. Wheeldon.

Brighton.—At the Dome, Royal Pavilion, organ recitals were given by Mr. A. King, Mus. Bac., Oxon., F.C.O. (Hon. Organist to the Corporation), on March 17th and 24th. Mr. King was assisted by Miss Ada Moore (vocalist), Mr. W. M. Quirke (violin), and Mr. H. Davey (pianoforte). Programme:—

March 17th.

Concertstuck	Töpfer.
Adagio from Quintet	Spohr.
Song, "Farewell"	Bache.
Toccata and Fugue in D minor	Bach.
Violin Solo, "Romance in F"	Beethoven.
Descriptive Fantasia, "The Storm"	Lemmens.
Song. "Fettered"	Watson.
Cantilene Pastorale	Guilmant.
Coronation March, "Le Prophète"	Best-Meyerbeer.
Violin Solo, "Nuit etoilée," "Saltarella"	Papini.
"Chorus of Angels"	S. Clarke.
March from S. Elizabeth	Liszt.

March 24th.

Concert Fantasia	Best.
Andante from 3rd Symphony "The Surprise"	Haydn.
Song, "To Chloe"	Bennett.
Andante, Allegretto, and Vivace, 4th Organ Sonata	Mendelssohn.
"Ave Maria D'Arkadelt"	Liszt.
Violin Solo, "Andante and Finale from Concerto"	Mendelssohn.
"Marche Funebre etchant Seraphique	Guilmant.
Song, "My Lady's Bower"	H. Temple.
"Ave Maria"	Schubert.
Schiller March	Best-Meyerbeer.

Morningside Parish Church. — A recital of sacred music was given on March 13th, 1888. Organist, Mr. W. H. Hopkinson, A.C.O. Programme:—

Organ Solo	Chorale in E minor Choral fugue in G major	J. S. Bach.
Soprano Solo, from the Passion according to St. Matthew, "Jesus, Saviour, I am Thine"		J. S. Bach.
Organ Solo, Fugue in D minor, "The Giant"		"
Bass Solo, "Pro peccatis" from the Stabat Mater		Rossini.
Anthem, "Sweet is Thy Mercy, Lord!"		J. Barnby.
Organ Solo	Andante in G minor	A. P. F. Boely.
	Allegreto in C	Niels W. Gade.
	Allegro in A minor	"
Motett, "Hear my prayer"		Mendelssohn.
Organ Solo	Andante in F	W. Rea.
	Adagio in D	Dr. E. J. Hopkins.
Anthem, "Seek ye the Lord while He may be found"		Dr. J. V. Roberts.
Organ Solo, Cantilene, Marche Solenelle		Alphonse Mailly.
Choral Hymn, "The strain upraise of joy and praise. Alleluia!"		A. Sullivan.

St. Columba's, Belgravia.—The St. Columba's Choral Society gave two recitals of sacred music in St. Columba's (Church of Scotland), on March 21st and 28th. The specially engaged soloists were, in "Hear my Prayer," Miss Ethel Bowra, and in "Crucifixion," Mr. Gregory Haste (tenor), and Mr. Arthur Taylor (bass). Organist, Mr. Henry A. Evans; conductor, Mr. John Lowe, organist and choirmaster of the church. These artistes did their work with care and artistic power. The order of recital was as follows:—Organ prelude, "The Crucifixion," by J. Stainer, Mus. Doc., and motett, "Hear my Prayer" (Mendelssohn).

Paris.—M. Alexandre Guilmant s Organ Concerts at the Trocadero, with organ and orchestra, are fixed for April 5th, 12th, 19th, and 26th. The organ pieces on the first occasion include Sonata No. 3, Guilmant; Sonata in C for organ and orchestra, Mozart; Fantasia in G, Bach; Meditation (organ and orchestra), C. Lefebvre; Concert in F, Handel; Grand Chœur, Deshayes. Organ lovers here may well envy such concerts, and wonder something of the kind cannot be attempted in the Albert Hall. M. Guilmant deserves every success for inaugurating performances for organ and orchestra.

Notes.

Mr. Geo. Dodds, the organist of the Elswick-road Wesleyan Church, Newcastle-on-Tyne, has been writing (for the Newcastle Weekly Courant) a series of interesting sketches on "Passion Music" with illustrations from the works of various composers. Appearing as they have been doing weekly, during Lent, the articles have been most appropriate to the season, and the selections from the works of Handel, Bach, Beethoven, Graun, Haydn, Paisiello, Jomelli, Clarke, Whitfield, &c. have been exceedingly well chosen, and have caused a considerable amount of attention in the district. The concluding paper was announced to appear on the 31st of March.

The choir of St. Paul's Church, Galashiels, presented to their organist and choirmaster, Mr. J. W. Oxley, A.Mus.T.C.L., who is leaving for Dumfries, a very handsome writing desk. Mr. Stirling, who made the presentation in name of the choir, said the present was designed as a memorial of the pleasant intercourse between the choir and Mr. Oxley for the past six years, and they wished him every success in the situation he was about to fill.

The fine organ at Sheffield Parish Church has been rebuilt by the original builders, Messrs. Brindley and Foster, upon their tubular pneumatic system, and now forms a perfect illustration of the application of that method, and is a very fine instrument. Mr. E. H. Lemare, F.C.O., presided with great effect at the opening service on April 3rd.

Beckenham Parish Church.—A special Lenten service was recently held in the parish church, at which Mendelssohn s "Christus" was sung. The service commenced with the anthem, "O Saviour of the World" (Goss), after which an eloquent sermon was preached by the Rev. Donald MacArthur. The oratorio then followed, and Mendelssohn's music, rendered by the fine choir of the church, was listened to with deep attention, the magnificent edifice allowing every note to be distinctly heard. Great praise is due to Mr. Hall for his careful and thoroughly conscientious conducting. Mr. E. Scovell sang the tenor recitatives with much feeling and expression, and Dr. Warwick Jordan presided at the organ with his accustomed ability. The service concluded with Gounod's "Marche Solennelle," splendidly played by the orchestra and organ.

Walsall.—After evensong on Easter Day, at St. Matthew's Parish Church, the 2nd part of Gounod's "Redemption" was given. There was a full orchestra, the leader of which was Mr. F. Ward of Birmingham, and the choir was largely augmented for the occasion. The soprano solo "From thy love as a Father," was well rendered by Miss Mives, who, with Miss Clarke and Mrs. Beech, took part also in the trios, "Who shall roll away the stone?" and "The Lord he is risen again," the latter being led by Miss Clarke. The narrators were Messrs. C. Bruce (tenor) and D. Evans (bass), both of whom acquitted themselves remarkably well. The choruses were sung in a manner which proved that great pains had been taken at the rehearsals. Mention must be made of the finale, "Unfold, ye portals everlasting," with the glorious theme typical of the Redeemer, played by all the orchestra in unison, and supported by the full power of the organ. The "Redemption" was preceded by the "Adagio" from the "Scotch Symphony," Mendelssohn, which was indeed finely played, and after the blessing, Handel's Overture to the "Occasional Oratorio" took the place of the usual concluding voluntary. Mr. Hórace Chant, R.C.M., gave most valuable help at the organ, which, by the way, is a fine instrument of Bishop's, containing three manuals and 44 stops. Mr. John E. Jeffries, F.C.O. (organist of the church) conducted. The church, which seats 2,200, was filled to overflowing, hundreds being unable to gain admission. The service was indeed a great treat, and the reverent attention given to it by the immense congregation was very impressive.

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS' CALENDAR.

On Tuesday, April 17th, the library will be opened from 7 to 10. April 24th, Lecture, by Dr. F. J. Sawyer, on "The Primary Rules of Keyboard Fingering;" May 22nd, Lecture; June 26th, Lecture; July 17th, 18th, 19th, F.C.O. Examination July 20th, Diploma Distribution; July 24th, 25th, 26th, A.C.O. Examination; July 27th, Diploma Distribution. Other arrangements and particulars will be duly announced.

E. H. TURPIN, Hon. Sec.

95, Great Russell-street, Blooomsbury, W.C.

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

THE PRIMA DONNA:

Her History and Surroundings, from the 17th to the 19th Century. By H. SUTHERLAND EDWARDS. Gives a picture of the life, professional and social, of every prima donna down to the present day. Two vols., demy 8vo, 24s.

"Odd corners of operatic history have been ransacked for the apt anecdotes and characteristic touches that here give life to the portrait."—Musical World.

"Volumes so full, not only of useful fact, but of pleasant anecdote and gossip, that they are sure to be read, not only with profit, but with pleasure."—Globe.

MEMOIRS of COUNT HORACE DE VIEL CASTEL.

A Chronicle of Events, Political and Social, during the reign of Napoleon III., years 1851—1864. Translated by CHARLES BOUSFIELD. Two vols., demy 8vo, 30s.

"What makes his memoirs such entertaining reading is that he has not only a good memory for bad stories, but that in his rapid portraiture he shows something of the power, of the shrewd insight, and of the graphic wit of a Saint Simon. Through the scandals are scattered curious and piquant revelations.—Times.

REMINGTON AND CO., Henrietta-street, Covent Garden.

By FREDERICK HELMORE.

Just published, price Sixpence. Dedicated to SIR ARTHUR S. SULLIVAN.

THE ITALIAN REGISTERS.

VOCE DI PETTO. VOCE DI GOLA. VOCE DI TESTA.

By the same Author.

SPEAKERS, SINGERS, AND STAMMERERS. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

SINGING METHOD. No. 1. The Little Ones' Book. Containing the Songs in "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland," and "Through the Looking Glass." Also, the Nursery Rhymes, Easy Rounds, &c., used in his "Little Ones' Classes." Fcap. 4to, 1s.

SINGING METHOD. No. 2. The First Reading Book. Containing a Catechism on the Art of Singing Music from Notes, followed by Scale and Chord Exercises, by the practice of which Pupils rapidly acquire the Knowledge and Feeling for Harmony, so necessary in PART SINGING. Illustrated by pleasant Rounds, Duets, and Trios. Fcap. 4to, 1s.

London: J. MASTERS and CO., 78, New Bond Street.

ORGANISTS AND ORGAN STUDENTS.

You are kindly requested to write for Ainsworth's "New Patent Organ Pedal Combination List." Ainsworth's "New Patent" is perfectly unique and may be combined easily with any Piano. It is the only one which may be safely combined with any Piano without deteriorating the instrument. Having put down at my works two engines and machinery of the most desirable kind, I am now supplying my goods at a price which enables every organist and organ student to have always ready for use in his Studio an

ORGAN PEDAL PIANO,

AFFORDING PERFECTLY UNIQUE PEDAL PRACTICE.

34, Sheen Park, Richmond.

DEAR SIR,—I have deferred writing to comment upon your Pedals and Action now attached to my pianoforte until I could satisfy myself of their utility and efficiency. I can now conscientiously say that they more than fulfil all my anticipations. Although I am no carpenter, aided by your lucid diagram I had little difficulty in attaching them myself, and it is impossible to over-estimate the comfort they give to me or to conceive the saving of time one experiences in one's own room.—Believe me, yours truly,

BURNHAM HORNER, F.R. Hist.S.

To Mr. Mr. Ainsworth.

DEAR SIR,—It gives me great pleasure to bear testimony to the perfection of your Invention. I am more than satisfied with your Patent Action and Organ Pedals, and consider them worth double the money. Organists and organ students who desire to improve in the Art of Pedalling, which is so essential to a good organist, will do well to procure a set. I have seen no Action half so effective, and one can sit at the Piano and play, "Fixed in his everlasting seat," or any other organ music, or organ arrangement with the greatest pleasure. The touch of pedals could not be better, and the action is as you say, "Absolutely free from annoyances." They cannot be too highly recommended, as by their use, rapid progress is certain.—Believe me, sincerely yours,

I. B. Thornton,
Organist, Birstall, Leeds.

Cologne, July 16th, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have much pleasure in informing you that your Pedals have given the fullest satisfaction. I have them combined with my practice Piano. Many of my musical friends who have seen them, as well as my organ pupils, are quite delighted with them; and I must acknowledge that I have never met with any Pedals so noiseless and pleasant to play upon as yours. The Action I consider durable, and of very good workmanship. Every organist who desires to perfect his playing will welcome your invention. I can recommend your goods in every respect.—Yours truly,

HERR J. RODENKIRCHEN.

To John Ainsworth, Esq. Organist, The Cathedral, Cologne, Germany.

TOOLS.—In order to facilite the attachment, a complete set of tools are sent (four in number) each one marked for its particular use. By the use of these tools, and following carefully the directions, ANY ONE can make a really good attachment.

On Receipt of Trade or Professional Card, you will receive List, with Liberal Terms.

AINSWORTH'S PATENT ORGAN COMBINATION WORKS
BRINSCALL, CHORLEY.

The Musical World.
LONDON: SATURDAY, APRIL 14, 1888.

"Musical World" Portraits.

ANGELO TESSARO.

Signor Angelo Tessaro, the inventor of the "Tachigrafo Musicale"—a new method of printing music which is to bring about a revolution in the music trade of the world—was born at Padua, Italy, in the year 1849, of a wealthy family of merchants. He learnt music from his childhood, by means of a peculiar system based on alphabetic letters, something like the "Methode Chevé," and was educated at a college in his native town. At the age of 19 he obtained the highest University Degree in Mathematics. While looking after the business of his father, Signor Tessaro found time to devote himself to music, in which field he has succeeded in becoming very well known in Italy. He has composed a great deal of music of all kinds, and several of his sacred compositions have been highly praised by the critics and rewarded with prizes. At present, Signor Tessaro is engaged in finishing the score of a grand opera "Giovanni Huss," to a libretto by Angelo Zanardini, which deals with the most important period of the troubled life of the celebrated religious reformer. This opera, though composed to Italian words, is to be shortly brought out at Prague in the Czech language. Signor Tessaro is a member of the Santa Cecilia Academy of Rome, and of that called the "Dotti" of Rovigo, and belongs also to the committee for the International Exhibition of Music, to be held this year in Bologna, under the high auspices of Verdi and Boito.

It is interesting to learn that the invention of the "Tachigrafo Musicale," which, as we have already said, is likely to produce a revolution in the musical trade of the world, is due to the refusal of a publisher to print in a very short time some of Signor Tessaro's compositions. Feeling disappointed, the composer, instead of trying another printer, thought of discovering a simple and cheap method of bringing out his music without the help of any publisher whatever; and after many trials and struggles he could exclaim, like Archimedes: Eureka! Nothing can be simpler in its construction and more easily managed than the elegant machine invented by Signor Tessaro to carry out his system, and which is worked entirely by young girls.

The patent for this new invention, which reduces to one-third the cost of the printing of music, has been bought by Messrs. G. Ricordi & Co., of Milan, for Italy; by Messrs. Lahure, of the Imprimerie Générale of Paris, for France; by Messrs. Home & Son, of Edinburgh, in association with Messrs. Novello & Co., of London, for England and the British Colonies; and by Messrs. Roeder, of Leipsic, for Germany. Signor Tessaro intends to apply his "tachigraphic system" to typography, in substitution to the ordinary movable types, and it is said that he has likewise solved the very difficult problem of the application of steam power to the perfectly safe locomotion of carriages through the streets of busy towns.

Signor Tessaro, who, like most Italians of his time, fought for the liberty of his beloved country when still a boy, as a volunteer in the famous Garibaldinian legion called the "Carabinieri Genovesi," is a true and fine specimen of the Italian type. A brilliant career is evidently opening for him, and Italy may feel proud to add the name of Angelo Tessaro to the long list of artists and inventors which constitutes her chief glory. C. Lisei.

Correspondence.

COUNTERPOINT.

To the Editor of The Musical World.

Sir,—Though not without sympathy with some of the complaints advanced by your correspondent, "E. P.," I cannot but feel that the general tenor of his diatribe against Counterpoint, in spite of an incidental acknowledgment of the value of this study for educational purposes, is calculated to suggest, especially in the minds of young musicians, several erroneous and highly mischievous notions. Without, I suspect, altogether intending it, he has made himself in some measure the spokesman of an increasing class—the outcome of a natural and inevitable reaction against much that is cramped and soul-killing in the old school of music—who are inclined nowadays to scout the idea of discipline, taken in any real and serious sense, as unnecessary either for the raw student or for the full-blown composer. At no time than at the present has a word on the other side become more necessary, by way of corrective to certain widespread misconceptions as to the real significance of some later phases of musical development. It is easy to see how these notions have arisen. The spirit which animated the older devotees of fugal and other scholastic forms died out long before those forms were themselves abandoned. The first fugue, whoever wrote it, was, in respect even of the very form of it, an invention — a veritable inspiration, owing its origin, no doubt, to disciplinary contrapuntal exercises, which in those times were deemed to be indispensable, as, with modifications, they will prove to be in the present and in all times, for the effectual cultivation of musical gift. No one, I suppose, will pretend to deny the existence of imagination of a high order in countless masterpieces of fugal writing bequeathed to us by former generations. But fancy, working within the limits of circumscribed law, brightly though it may burn for a time, must by the very nature of things grow gradually dim, and eventually go out altogether, leaving nothing but the empty shell behind. That empty shell has, it must be allowed, been again and again presented to us by manufacturers of the imitative order, in these latter days, until the very sight of it has been sufficient to provoke open revolt among those who look for something beyond the mere display of mechanical or mathematical skill in a musical composition. Thus far, then, your correspondent and I are at one in believing that the days of fugue are over: we want no more exercises out of school, now that those exercises have lost their power of suggestion and stimulus.

But while the laws of arbitrary form are by their very nature fleeting—being, in fact, not laws at all, but fashions—while modes of expression change with the aspirations, tastes, and general conditions of culture in each succeeding age, there is another law, intimately connected with our nature, which will have to be regarded as immutable so long as the human mind remains what it is; i.e., the necessity of discipline for the effectual development of the artistic as of all other faculties. Such training of the mind and ear, by means of which the musical student—beginning with the simplest combinations of sound and working always under severe restriction to more complex forms—is helped to gain gradual mastery over the resources of his art, has been devised and carefully formulated by the teachers of old, whose united efforts have formulated a system so logical and sensible, that the master capable of suggesting any better suited for the purpose, is still to come. Counterpoint of secondary importance! Why, the thorough control over material it alone is capable of placing in the hands of a musician were never more needed than now. If in the phases of modern musical development there is an apparently greater liberty of treatment, we find likewise more extended development, more elaboration, and immeasurably greater demands upon the composer's skill. For, in order to realise even approximately the ideal of music which has arisen in modern times, the composer of to-day must possess a complete command over the movement of parts, a knowledge of harmony so far-reaching that it will enable him to press forward into the hitherto unknown, a freedom of fancy and insight into the secrets of rhythm—in short, all the learning, with many other qualifications superadded, which went to make the successful fugue-writer of the past. The rigid contrapuntal system has, in short, been replaced, or perhaps I might say developed, by a still more complex system of Polyphony, the successful application of which, in spite of its apparently greater freedom, exacts not less, but more command over the technical resources of the musical art. On examination it will be found that the greatest innovators have been those who, in their time, worked hardest on orthodox lines, and the composer who hopes to wing his flight in the higher regions, without first acquiring the strength which steady contrapuntal training alone can give, will soon find himself fluttering back to the ground. I have said nothing concerning the important æsthetic advantages to the composer of contemplating the purity, simplicity, and massive dignity characteristic of the diatonic style; nor have I adverted to what seems to me a curious phenomenon in the more chromatic music of the present day, viz., that it is precisely that style of simple grandeur which is chosen by our great modern composers in the introduction of their rarest and choicest effects upon an ornate background. But I have said enough, I hope, to refute your correspondent's assertion that "the dead can do no more for us," and to show that, on the contrary, it is by the reverent and assiduous study of past achievements that we can alone hope to succeed in the more venturesome flights. Some great composer used to say, "Study hard to write a fugue, and when you have done so, make a vow never to write one again." This advice, in my opinion, accurately describes the mental attitude it behoves ambitious composers to adopt towards those styles and forms of other times they aspire to supersede.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant, T.S.

ST. ANDREWS UNIVERSITY AND MUSICAL DEGREES.

To the Editor of The Musical World.

Edinburgh, April 7, 1888.

Sir,—Perhaps I may be permitted to draw public attention to a university matter which urgently demands reform.

The University of St. Andrews has, I am told, the power of conferring musical degrees. My informant, however, is not a legal authority, and, moreover, he was inspired by those who shape the policy of that university. Let me contrast the state of affairs at St. Andrews with that which obtains at universities where candidates can honourably graduate in music.

At Oxford and at Cambridge (I take these universities as typical examples), there is not only a Professor of Music, but there is also a Faculty of Music. Thus equipped, these universities hold periodical examinations and confer degrees upon such candidates as actually make good their claim to them. The action of these universties in granting musical degrees is, therefore, at once legal and honest. At the University of Edinburgh, although there is a Professor of Music, there is no Faculty of Music; and, accordingly, the degree is not conferred. How, on the other hand, is St. Andrews constituted? In the University of St. Andrews not only is there no Faculty of Music, but there is not even a Professor of Music. There is, in short, not a man about the place who is competent to test the technical skill of candidates for musical degrees. What would be the honest course for a university thus circumstanced? Clearly to have nothing to do with musical degrees. What is the course which it is actually pursuing? It is granting them—has granted them. Apart from being honest, is such procedure even legal? I greatly question it. If it be, there is no reason why the Society of Accountants should not be empowered to confer the diploma of Dental Surgeon.

Nothing need be said as to the gross injustice which such action on the part of St. Andrews University entails upon men who have obtained their degrees by submitting to the examinations held at Oxford and at Cambridge. Universities with duly constituted Musical Faculties sometimes confer degrees honoris causa; but degrees thus conferred by these universities cannot, for a moment, be dragged down to the level of such as are conferred by a university without a Faculty—without even a Professor of Music.

The valuation which men place upon their own musicianship by accepting, under these circumstances, laureation from St. Andrews is doubtless perfectly correct. At all events, as it would be discourteous to dispute it, let us readily endorse the estimate, and admit that the musicianship and the laureation are thoroughly worthy of each other.—I am, &c.,

John Greig,
Queen's College, Oxford.

Concerts.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

At last Saturday's concert the promised Symphony by Dvorak was performed for the first time. Although styled No. 3 in F, op. 76, it is in reality an early work; Dvorak himself has recently referred to it as op. 24, and has fixed the date of its composition as 1875. The form of the work is somewhat peculiar. In the first two movements the composer has evidently felt the restraint of the classical trammels he has imposed upon himself, and the result is not entirely favourable; the instrumentation is at times somewhat noisy, and the themes do not possess great originality or striking interest. In the scherzo and allegro molto we get somewhat more of the natural Dvorak; the former movement is marked by a striking dance rhythm vigorously sustained, while the finale may be taken as a species of Bacchanalia, worked out with great power and vigour. Altogether, the work is full of interest, and received a very fine interpretation from Mr. Manns's orchestra. A new comer, Herr Hans Wessely, made a good impression as a solo violinist in Spohr's rather tame concerto in E minor, op. 38, and Wieniawski's fantasia on Gounod's "Faust." His tone and intonation at first seemed affected by nervousness, but he subsequently warmed to his work, and played with excellent breadth of phrasing and artistic instinct, winning a very favourable reception. Madame Valleria was the vocalist, singing "Elsa's Dream," from "Lohengrin" (in which, by the way, the orchestra were curiously at fault), and songs by Mendelssohn and Schumann, in her well-known manner. Weber's "Oberon" overture opened, and a really magnificent performance of Wagner's overture to "Tannhäuser" concluded, the concert.

ROYAL ARTILLERY CONCERTS.

Perhaps no military band holds so high a position amongst music-lovers as the string band of the Royal Artillery. It was not this reputation only, however, that tempted us to the uttermost parts of the metropolis on the afternoon of the Wednesday before last, but the performance, for the first time, of a new symphony by the popular conductor, Cavaliere L. Zavertal. Uninviting as the suburb of Woolwich is, however, the music was of a sufficiently high quality to repay us for the journey. The symphony, which is in D minor, is composed in the orthodox four movements, an introductory andante followed by an allegro, an andante proper, a scherzo and trio, and an allegro con fuoco. The first few bars of the andante contain the leit-motive, which re-appears in divers ways throughout the work, and forms the basis of the movement. The allegro is musicianly, and prepares the listener for the subdued grace and peaceful subtlety of the andante proper. The scherzo is a quaintly original movement, written chiefly for the strings, and the finale an allegro con fuoco, opens with an industrious bee-like theme, the intermezzo being fugal in form, and culuminating in a rich, full ending. The whole work is far above the average, as was to have been expected from a musician of Mr. Zavertal's evident earnestness. Mr. Zavertal is the composer of several operas, and the experienced hand could be detected in the skilful orchestration. It is to be hoped that an opportunity will shortly be afforded, at the Philharmonic Concerts for instance, of hearing this symphony in London.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The students of Trinity College gave an orchestral concert on Monday evening last, at Princes' Hall, to a large and friendly audience. The orchestra, which included several of the professors, played Schubert's overture to "Rosamunde," two movements from J. F. Barnett's suite, "Lay of the Last Minstrel," and the War March from "Athalie" in a very creditable manner, also playing various accompaniments and a MS. overture of Mr. Frank Swinford, a student. Though it cannot truly be said that any great originality is displayed in this work, it nevertheless shows that the composer has not studied his counterpoint in vain. He seems to have taken Mozart for a model, the overture resembling that to the "Zauberflöte" in form, while he has relied more on fugal and contrapuntal devices than orchestration for his effects. Miss Blanche St. Clair, Miss Emily Rivett, and Mr. R. W. Lewis played various pianoforte pieces with orchestral accompaniment, the former displaying by far the best style and finish, and Mr. J. H. Callcott performed on the violoncello in a manner that showed he has made considerable progress on that instrument. The vocalists cannot be spoken of in so favourable a manner. Their production was in almost every instance faulty, and the tone emitted throaty in quality. This is a matter to which the professors will do well to pay great attention. Miss Bowley, who sang "With verdure clad," has a pleasing soprano voice, but must be careful to avoid a tremolo. Two songs by students—J. S. Ford and Miss Marie Brooke—were in the second part, and showed a very fair amount of inventive faculty in their composers.

The Anerley Musical Society may fairly claim recognition as an existing institution, and an active one. Its sphere is naturally limited to its own neighbourhood, where, conducted by Mr. C. H. Cellier, it does a great deal to foster the best interests of music. The Society gave its twelfth concert on Tuesday evening last, at the Vestry Hall, in a room completely filled. Gade's "Psyche" was the principal work rendered, and it was followed by a miscellaneous selection. The principal parts in "Psyche" were taken by Mrs. Mason, Mr. Randolph L. Coward, and Mrs. Surridge; minor ones being allotted to Miss Huston, Miss Fisher, and Mr. J. T. Morrell. A capital band of strings, led by Mr. Allan Campbell, joined with Miss Annie Gruzelier, who is a good pianist, in rendering the orchestral accompaniments, and the general arrangements were superintended by Mr. W. Surridge, the society's popular hon. secretary. "Psyche" went well; with very little exception, soloists, chorus, band, and conductor are alike to be congratulated, and the same remarks apply to the latter part of the programme, which included solos for the principals and other interesting items, inter alia "The Miller's Wooing," by Eaton Faning.

Mr. Sinclair Dunn gave one of his successful ballad concerts last week, at the Cavendish Rooms, giving himself, "I'll sing thee songs of Araby," and joining Miss Susetta Fenn in the duet "Huntingtower." Miss Kate Fusselle, Mr. Frederick King, Miss Gyde, Mr. Fox (at the piano), also took part in the concert.

Miss Millington Synge's last pianoforte recital at the Portman rooms, we are glad to learn, was a success in every way. Miss Synge is a musician of undoubted ability, and the reception of her song "Time and Eternity," and of her playing of Grieg's sonata was most enthusiastic. We understand that Miss Synge's song is to be performed at the next concert of the Musical Artists' Society, on the 28th of this month.

Music Publishers' Weekly List.

VOCAL.

Fruitless Question, A (part song) ...	F. A. Onslow ...	Novello.
I am sitting so sad (D to F) ...	J. J. Dymond ...	Grout, Walthamstow.
Thou art gone where Spirits blest (D sharp to E)	Methfessel ...	Andrews, Manchester.
What matters it how we die? (E flat to F)	U. R. Jones ...	London Music Publishing Company.
Who is Sylvia? duet (contralto and baritone)	Erskine Allon ...	London Music Publishing Company.

VOCAL SCORES.

Golden Isle, Cantata	F. Pascal	J. Williams.
John and Angelina, Operetta ...	L. Elliott	„
Sang-Azure	F. Pascal	„

INSTRUMENTAL.

Entr'acte March for piano	Massenet	J. Williams.
Four little pieces, violin and pianoforte	C. Zoellner ...	„
Idyl, pianoforte duet	A. S. Beaumont ...	Woolhouse
Le Libelle	F. Leideritz ...	J. Williams.
Organists' Quarterly Journal, Part 78	Ed. by Jas. Spark	Novello.
Reveil du Printemps, violin and pianoforte	G. Saint-George ...	Woolhouse

BOOKS, ETC.

History of Music, The	Naumann-Praeger	Cassell.
La Musique aux Pays-Bas, vol. 8 ...	Ed. van der Straeten	Schott.

PROVINCIAL.

BIRMINGHAM, April 9.—Our Theatre Royal last week has been the place of rendezvous of all who are musical and art-loving, and more or less crowded houses welcomed nightly Carl Rosa's Operatic Company. The revival of Meyerbeer's "Robert le Diable" has proved here, as it did in Liverpool and Manchester, a great success. Whatever Carl Rosa undertakes is done with a view to maintain the high and well-deserved reputation he enjoys, and for which he has sacrificed the best part of his life. That he has reached that coveted goal, "brilliant success," cannot be doubted, and the crowds which nightly besiege the theatres where his company play, are sufficient proof thereof. Mr. Mercer H. Simpson, the lessee and manager of our Theatre Royal, has mounted Meyerbeer's romantic opera in truly magnificent style. The mise en scène, especially in the incantation scene, was graphic in the extreme, and the dresses and appointments magnificent. The performance on the whole had an artistic stamp, and too much cannot be said in praise of the artists who constituted the admirable cast. Madame Burns as Isabella looked well, and sang the difficult music in her usual facile manner. She was, however, not in good voice. The famous Aria, "Robert, toi que j'aime," lacked sympathetic sentiment. Miss Fanny Moody (Alice) perfectly charmed the vast audience by her graceful simplicity, intense pathos, and highly refined singing. The part of Robert suited Signor Francesco Runcio, both his acting and singing being distinguished by artistic conception. His voice seemed to have gained in roundness. A better stage presence than that of Mr. Charles Manners as Bertram would be difficult to find. I have had opportunities of seeing the rôle of Bertram on the principal stages in Europe, but cannot recall to my mind a finer impersonation. The orchestra and chorus so ably controlled under Mr. Goossens's bâton deserve a word of high approval. The répertoire this week will include "Faust," "Robert le Diable," "Bohemian Girl," "Galatea," "Carmen." Mr. Stockley's last Subscription Concert takes place on the 19th April, Mr. Edward Lloyd and Madame Helene Trust being the soloists. The principal orchestral item will be Mendelssohn's Scotch Symphony. Our local tenor, Mr. Lloyd James, is about leaving Birmingham for London. He possesses an admirable voice of sympathetic timbre, and is likely to become a valuable acquisition to the concert platform. The Birmingham and Midland Musical Guild announce their third Classical Chamber Concert for Thursday next.—O.P.

MANCHESTER, April 10.—On Saturday last Mr. Seymour Jackson gave his annual benefit concert at the Free Trade Hall. Our local tenor has so many admirers here as to make it a matter of course that the hall should be well filled. The programme was of a popular kind, such as would be most likely to appeal to those present. Mr. Jackson's efforts were warmly and deservedly applauded, and he was ably seconded by the artists whose services he had secured. Amongst the vocalists the most noteworthy was Miss Conway, a lady who has been mentioned on previous occasions as possessing a beautiful soprano voice. She has rarely been heard to such advantage as on Saturday in Mozart's "Dove Sono," and Haydn's "My mother bids me bind my hair." The instrumental solos formed by no means the least interesting part of the programme. Amongst these must be especially mentioned two by Mr. de Jong, our eminent flautist. Opportunities of hearing this gentleman come only too rarely. Mr. Thorley Brown created a most favourable impression by his rendering of Chopin's "Polonaise" in A flat. The season of the Gentlemen's Concerts was concluded on Monday afternoon, April 9, by a recital given by Mr. Hallé. The programme opened with a most interesting novelty in the form of a Capriccio by Bach which has never before been given in Manchester. It is a charming specimen of programme music, depicting in six movements Sebastian's regrets at the departure of his brother. Three delightful harpsichord lessons by Scarlatti followed. Then came two sonatas of Beethoven—the first and the last. Mr. Hallé's playing of Beethoven is always an education to those who carefully listen to him; and on this occasion it was most instructive to note how wide an interval of progress separates op. 111 from op 2. The recital was concluded by an admirable performance of Chopin's Polonaise in F sharp minor, op. 44.

BRADFORD.—The expiring season brings forward the St. Cecilia Society, a select body who make their meetings pleasing re-unions, with music as a motive. They held their open meeting of the season on Tuesday, the 10th instant, and gave a fairly good performance of Gade's "Crusaders," without extraneous aid or either soli or choruses. A better proportion of voices to each part would have improved the choral singing, in which, however, there was no lack of zeal. Mrs. Wehner, Rev. E. W. Easton, and Mr. J. H. Dixon were the solo members, and Herr Adolph Beyschlag conducted at the pianoforte. The latter gentleman also played solos, Mrs. Rudolf Delius, Miss Marie Lummert, Mr. M. Bonsor, and Mr. Younghusband singing songs. A fortnight ago the Old Choral Society, the first-established of the Bradford vocal societies, and which also boasts of an orchestra and a good library, gave a creditable performance of Barnett's "Paradise and the Peri." Another of the recent amateur concerts was promoted by the Shipley Choral Society, under Mr. J. H. Rook. Their essay was Barnett's "Building of the Ship."

To Musicians and Others.

For BUYING, EXCHANGING, or SELLING Books on all subjects, Art Objects, Musical Instruments, Home Pets, Domestic Appliances, or any article whatever of personal property, THE BAZAAR, EXCHANGE and MART is unequalled. It circulates largely throughout the kingdom, and private ladies and gentlemen have no difficulty in negotiating sales or exchanges without publicity and to the best advantage. Get a copy and Judge for yourself. The Globe says:—"Like all grand conceptions, the process is remarkable for its simplicity." Price 2d., at all Newsagents, or copy sent for two stamps from the Office, 170, Strand, London, W.C.

A LUXURY

A LUXURY
A LUXURY
A LUXURY
A LUXURY

NO LONGER UNKNOWN IN ENGLAND.
BARBER & COMPANY'S
FRENCH COFFEE,
As used in Paris.
In its Highest Perfection.
TENPENCE PER POUND.
("See that you have none other.")
2lb. (sample) in tins sent free per
Parcels Post for 2s. 4d.,
Or 5lb. for 5s. 6d.
Postal Orders from 1s. 6d. to 10s. 6d.
May now be had from all Post Offices.

A LUXURY
A LUXURY
A LUXURY
A LUXURY

This is the choicest and most carefully selected Coffee, "Roasted on the French Principle," and mixed with the Finest Bruges Chicory.

2 lb. Sample Tins sent per Parcels Post to any Post Town in the United Kingdom for 2s. 4d.; 5 lb. in Tins for 5s. 6d.

ONFA CONGO

ONFA
ONFA
ONFA
ONFA

NEVER Sold in England before at the price.
The Pick of the Season's Growth.
BARBER & CO.'S
RICH SIRUPY
Onfa Congo.

ONFA
ONFA
ONFA
ONFA

ONE SHILLING & SIXPENCE PER POUND.

A TEA abounding in Strength and High Quality. Never Sold before in England at the Price.

COMPARE
It with that sold by others at Two Shillings.

6½ lb. sent by Parcels Post for 10s. 9d. to any Post Town in the United Kingdom and Channel Islands.
4½ lb. for 7s. 6d.; 2½ lb. Samples for 4s. 3d.

BARBER AND COMPANY,

274, Regent Circus, Oxford Street, W.
61, Bishopsgate Street, City.
11, Boro' High Street, S.E.
102, Westbourne Grove, W.
42, Great Titchfield Street, W.
King's Cross, N.

ALSO

BRIGHTON, HASTINGS, MANCHESTER, BRISTOL, LIVERPOOL, PRESTON, AND BIRMINGHAM

Postal Orders, from 2s. 6d. to 10s. 6d., may now be had for One Penny from all Post Offices.
Cheques to be crossed "London and Westminster."

DEFRIES' Safety Water White Oil.

The Purest, Whitest, and Best Burning Mineral Oil in England.

EQUAL IN QUALITY TO OILS SOLD UNDER FANCY NAMES, at from 1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d. per gall
FOR USE IN ALL LAMPS AND STOVES.

PRICE 1s. PER GALLON.

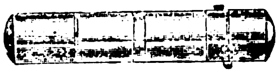
FREE DELIVERED IN LONDON AND ALL SUBURBS.

Minimum, 2 gallons. The 5 and 10 gallon drums are fitted with taps. Drums charged, and full price allowed when returned.

Terms: Cash on or before delivery. Deposit Accounts opened for Oil.

DEFRIES' SAFETY LAMP & OIL CO., LIMITED,
43 and 44, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON, E.C.

THORNHILL'S
NEW "GLOVE" BOTTLE.



FOR PERFUME & SMELLING SALTS.

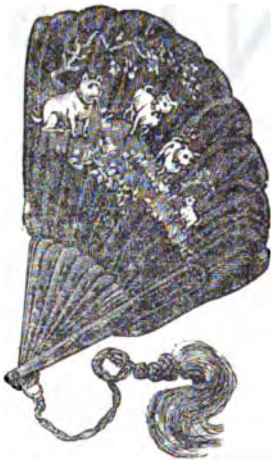
Large Variety of Patterns at Various Prices

THORNHILL'S ARTISTIC FANS,
A LARGE and VARIED STOCK of the BEST QUALITY.

THORNHILL'S
TOILET CASES
FOR LADIES AND GENTLEMEN

PRESENTS.

THORNHILL'S
Fully Illustrated
LIST
OF
LATEST
NOVELTIES

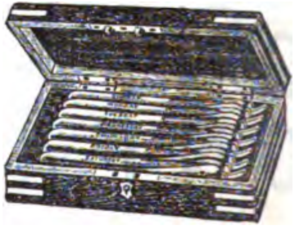


POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

THORNHILL'S
OPERA GLASSES.

IN GREAT VARIETY.

THORNHILL'S
Guaranteed Razors Singly or in Sets.



W. THORNHILL & CO., TO THE QUEEN & ROYAL FAMILY. 144, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON. ESTABLISHED 1734.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER'S
LINEN COLLARS, CUFFS, AND SHIRTS.

Samples and Price Lists Post Free.

COLLARS—LADIES' 3-fold, from 3s. 6d. per doz. GENTS' 4-fold, 4s. 11d. to 5s. 11d. per doz.

CUFFS—For Ladies or Gentlemen, 5s. 11d. to 10s. 6d. per doz.

SHIRTS—Best quality Long Cloth, with 4-fold Linen Fronts 35s. 6d. per half-doz. (To measure, 2s. extra.)

N.B.—OLD SHIRTS made as good as new with best materials in Neckbands, Cuffs, and Fronts, for 14s. the half-doz.

ROBINSON AND CLEAVER, BELFAST.

Dr. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For sore throat, hoarseness, and relaxed throat, also for improving the voice

FOR SINGING AND SPEAKING

without fatiguing the voice. Celebrated in every town in Europe, India, America, and the Colonies. Testimonials from Patti, Trebelli, Patey, Santley, and the most eminent medical men.

Sold in boxes; 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d.; also in bottles for abroad.

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE & RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & CO.,

Manufacturers and Importers of all kinds of Strings
FOR
VIOLIN, VIOLA, CELLO, DOUBLE BASS, HARP,
ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO,
Have always in STOCK the Largest ASSORTMENT of any House in the World.

6, GOLDEN SQUARE, W.

A BLESSING IN EVERY FAMILY.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.

These Remedies have stood the test of FIFTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE and are pronounced the best medicines for family use. Tens of thousands of written testimonials bear witness to their marvellous curative properties. They are acknowledged by the whole civilised world to be the greatest efficacy in every form of disease. Sold by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors.

Manufactured only at THOMAS HOLLOWAY'S ESTABLISHMENT
78, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.
N.B.—Advice gratis at the above address, daily, between the hours of 11 and 4, or by letter

ASCHERBERG PIANOS.

"I only perform an act of justice when I ascribe my successes to a great extent to the excellent Instruments from your factory, on which I was favoured to play before the public. Remain convinced that I shall at all times and everywhere give preference to your Pianos over all others, and accept the assurance of my unbounded esteem.

Respectfully,

VLADIMIR VON PACHMANN."

ASCHERBERG PIANO DEPOT,

211, REGENT STREET, W.

Pears' Soap
The World Renowned
A Perfectly Pure Soap · It keeps the pores open, the complexion clear, and the hands and skin soft · A very durable soap.
In Praise of Pears' Soap
I have found it match-less for the hands and com-plex-ion,
Adelina Patti
Specially Appointed
Ich Dien
English Complexion Soap.
By Royal Warrant, Makers to the Prince of Wales.
Established in London 100 Years, Fifteen International Awards

A BRIGHT HEALTHFUL SKIN AND COMPLEXION ENSURED BY USING

PEARS' SOAP.

AS RECOMMENDED BY THE GREATEST ENGLISH AUTHORITY ON THE SKIN,
PROF. SIR ERASMUS WILSON, F.R.S., PRES. OF THE ROYAL COL. OF SURGEONS, ENGLAND,
AND ALL OTHER LEADING AUTHORITIES ON THE SKIN.

COUNTLESS BEAUTEOUS LADIES, INCLUDING MRS. LILLIE LANGTRY, RECOMMEND ITS VIRTUES
AND PREFER PEARS' SOAP TO ANY OTHER.

The following from the world-renowned Songstress is a sample of thousands of Testimonials:
Testimonial from Madame ADELINA PATTI.

"I HAVE FOUND IT MATCHLESS FOR THE HANDS AND COMPLEXION." Adelina Patti

PEARS' SOAP IS FOR SALE THROUGHOUT THE CIVILIZED WORLD.

Printed and Published by MACRAE, CURTICE & Co. (LIMITED), 12, Catherine Street, Strand, W.C.

WEEKLY.]

The Musical World.

ESTABLISHED 1822.
REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED; IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST WEEKLY, 17/6 PER ANNUM (Payable in advance).

VOL. 67.—No. 16. SATURDAY, APRIL 21, 1888. PRICE {3D. Unstamped. 4D. By Post.

THE

KARN AMERICAN ORGANS,

Manufactured by D. W. KARN & CO.,

WOODSTOCK, ONTARIO, CANADA.

The Karn Organ is a reproduction of the Pipe Organ in miniature, of pre-eminent value as an effective music exponent for the Home.

OUR AIM has not been to see how cheaply an organ can be built, BUT HOW CHEAPLY A FIRST-CLASS ORGAN can be made.

OUR CLAIM is that we are building organs equal to, if not surpassing, all others, at the very lowest reasonable prices.

COMPARISON CHEERFULLY INVITED.

New Illustrated Catalogue & Price Lists Free of the
SOLE EUROPEAN AGENTS:

THE SCHREIBER PIANO CO.,
18, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W.

To the Trade and Profession.

OLD VIOLINS.

MESSRS. BEARE AND SON, Manufacturers and Importers of every Description of Musical Instruments, Strings, Fittings, &c.,
34, Rathbone Place, London, W.,
Invite an inspection of their collection of old Violins,
All genuine examples of the celebrated old Masters.
Over 300 old instruments from which to select.

Old Violins from £5.
Old Tenors from £5.
Old Violoncellos from £10.
Old Double Basses from £15.

Sole Wholesale Agents for James Tubb's celebrated Bows.
Bows by the old makers also frequently in stock.
Tested strings unequalled for durability and equality of tone.
Repairs of every kind of Musical Instrument executed promptly by experienced workmen.

BEARE AND SON,
34, RATHBONE PLACE, LONDON, W.

Special Notices.

SOCIETY OF ARTS PRACTICAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.
THE NEXT EXAMINATION
will be held at the Society's house, 18, John Street, Adelphi, W.C., and will commence on THURSDAY, the 24th May.
Full particulars on application to the Secretary.
H. TRUEMAN WOOD,
Secretary.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL CHORAL SOCIETY,
Patron—Her Majesty the QUEEN.
President—H.R.H. the Duke of EDINBURGH, K.G.
Conductor—Mr. BARNBY.

Mendelssohn's ELIJAH on Saturday Afternoon, April 21st, at 3. Artists: Madame Nordica, Miss Julia Neilson, Madame Belle Cole, Madame Florence Winn, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Arthur Thompson, Mr. Henry Cross, and Mr. Watkin Mills. Organist, Dr. Stainer. Prices, 10s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 5s., 4s., and gallery promenade, 2s.

TOWN HALL, BIRMINGHAM.

AN ORGANIST is required for the BIRMINGHAM TOWN HALL. The Organ is well known as a fine instrument of four manuals and seventy-six stops, and it has been decided to expend, at an early date, a large sum in thoroughly renovating and modernising its mechanism and appliances, and adding to its resources. The Organist will, under certain conditions, have the exclusive control of the Organ, and will be at liberty to give Recitals for his own benefit. He will also receive the fees payable in respect of Meetings or performances at which the Organ is required. Applications (marked "Town Hall Organist") are to be made, not later than May 8th, to Mr. C. G. BEALE, 3, Newhall Street, Birmingham, from whom a Schedule can be obtained by post, showing the conditions of the appointment.

DRURY LANE.—AUGUSTUS HARRIS, Lessee and Manager. EVERY EVEVING, at 7.30, the great sporting drama, A RUN OF LUCK. Written by Henry Pettit and Augustus Harris.—Box-office open daily from ten to six.

A RUN OF LUCK.—Miss FORTESCUE.—DRURY LANE.

A RUN OF LUCK.—Miss Maud Milton, Misses Edith Bruce, Blanche Massey, Minnie Inch, Marie D'Altra, Marie Williams, Millicent Mildmay, &c.—DRURY LANE.

A RUN OF LUCK, at DRURY LANE.—"14, George-street, Mansion House, London, E.C., Nov. 15, 1886. To Augustus Harris, Esq., Drury-lane Theatre, W.C.—We have examined the books of Drury-lane Theatre for the period of your management (1879-1886), and we find that the receipts of the present drama, 'A Run of Luck,' exceed those of any drama produced at this theatre during your management.—(Signed) COOPER BROTHERS and Co., Chartered Accountants."

TO ORGANISTS.—For Professional Practice, Teaching, or Concert purpose, and Home use, the "Bach Model" Pedal Instrument is only reliable substitute for a pipe organ. For design, improved action, connections, and tone, it embraces the merits of the highest class instruments; and without paying an exorbitant price you may have an instrument with organ measurements that removes the deficiencies hitherto experienced in pedal instruments.—Apply for illustrated lists, terms, and prices, to J. L. Scholefield, Musical Instrument Manufacturer, Huddersfield.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised & Improved, of
A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR
THE VOICE,
By T. A. Wallworth.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Madame Alwina Valleria, Mr. Iver M'Kay, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.
London: HAMMOND & CO. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

Institutes and Colleges.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, KENSINGTON GORE, LONDON, S.W.

Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.

President - H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES, K.G.
Director - - Sir GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L., LL.D.

Next College Concert, May 17th, at 7.30 p.m.

The Midsummer Term will commence on April 25th, 1888.

Regulations may be obtained from the Registrar, Mr. George Watson, at the College.

CHARLES MORLEY, Honorary Secretary.

UNIVERSITY OF TRINITY COLLEGE, TORONTO. (The Church of England University of Upper Canada.)

FACULTY OF MUSIC.

The next Examinations for the degree of Bachelor of Music will be held simultaneously in Toronto and London in Easter week, 1888. Women are admissable to these examinations. For particulars apply to Rev. E. K. Kendal, D.C.L., Registrar for England, Southsea.

TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON. For MUSICAL EDUCATION and Examination, &c., and for the Granting of Certificates and Diplomas in Music. Inst. 1872.

President - - The EARL of ABERDEEN.

THE NEXT TERM COMMENCES APRIL 30, when new students are received. The following is a list of subjects taught and professors: Harmony, Counterpoint, Form and Orchestration, Composition, Musical Acoustics, Pianoforte, Organ, Solo Singing, Violin, Violoncello, Sight Singing, Flute, Oboe, Clarionet, etc. Vocal and Aural Physiology, Voice Production, Lectures, Elocution, Italian, French, and German.

Professors Higgs, Hunt, Saunders, Turpin, and Turner; MM. Bambridge, Barrett, Beuthin, Bolton, Carrodus, Cole, Corder, Dornbusch, Dubrucq, Farmelli, Fry, Gibson, Goodworth, Hovelacque, Lazarus, Lockwood, Malsch, Mann, Mount, Nappi, Ogbourne, Pinney, Radcliff, Reynolds Semple, Stone, Szczepanowski, Visetti, Wells, Willing, and Woolhouse.

PROSPECTUSES, including list of new (reduced) fees, and all particulars can be obtained from the Secretary, Trinity College, London, W.

By Order of the Academical Board.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, W.

GUILD OF ORGANISTS, 35, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C.

Patron—The Right Rev. THE LORD BISHOP OF LONDON.

PRESIDENTS.
The REV. CANON SIR F. H. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., Mus. Doc.
Sir HERBERT OAKELEY, Bart., Mus. Doc.
Sir ROBERT STEWART, Mus. Doc.

Vice-President—WILLIAM PINNEY, Mus. Bac., Oxon.
Warden—CHARLES VINCENT, Mus. Doc., Oxon.

Established to advance the cause of Church music and the truest interests of its Professors, etc.

Members of the Church of England and Ireland, and the Episcopal Church of Scotland, are eligible for election. Subscription: Professional Organists (Associates) 10s. 6d. per annum; Amateurs (Members) 15s. per annum; Life subscription, 5 guineas.

Next Fellowship examination in Easter Week.

Prospectus and further particulars may be obtained from the Hon. Sec., Dr. J. H. Lewis, Staines, Middlesex.

London Organ School and International College of Music.

Established 1865, by the Rev. SCOTSON CLARK, Mus.B.
Patron—His Grace The ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY.
Principal—HENRY CLARK.

THE NEXT STUDENTS' MATINEE MUSICALE will take place SATURDAY, April 28, at four p.m.

Piano, Singing, Violin, 'Cello, Flute, Harp, Organ Lessons, with Practice, and Harmony. Private Lessons and Classes.

Candidates for Musical Degrees at any of the English Universities are expressly prepared for the Matriculation Examinations by Oxford and Cambridge graduates (in honours). Branches at Kensington and St. John's Wood.

Apply to the Director of Classes, T. H. Y. TROTTER M.A., Mus. Bac., Oxon., 3, Princes Street, Cavendish Square, W. (close to Oxford Circus).

Publishers' Announcements.

"Not difficult, but most effective. Those who knew his previous works will be delighted to see something new by this charming composer."—Court Journal.

ELEGIE, for Violin (or Violoncello) and Pianoforte. By G. SAINT-GEORGE.—Charles Woolhouse, 81, Regent Street, London, W.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TECHNICAL EXERCISES for the Pianoforte, on the Deppe principle, systematically arranged by C. A. Ehrenfechter. Price, 2s. 6d., net.

London: WEEKES & Co., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W.

The Universal Circulating Music Library

(ESTABLISHED 1854.)

IS THE LARGEST IN THE WORLD.

SUBSCRIPTION £2 2s. PER ANNUM, £1 8s. PER HALF YEAR, &c.

MUSIC can be selected at end of term, as subscribers' property, equal to one-half of their subscription at full price. All Music, English and Foreign, &c., promptly supplied.—For Prospectuses apply to

CHARLES WOOLHOUSE, Proprietor.
81, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE "JOLLY BRICK" POLKA.

By M. S. BARRON.

PRICE 3s.

"Is bright and danceable."—News of the World.

"This is a cheerful and sprightly piece, with well marked accentuation. It presents no difficulties of execution even to the young player."—Dundee Advertiser.

ALSO,

A TWILIGHT DREAM.

FOR PIANO.

By M. S. BARRON.

PRICE 3s.

"An interesting piece, with a melody for the left hand."—Musical Standard.

LONDON: SWAN & CO., 4, GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, W

IN SIX GRADES.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH.

Under the Sanction and Approval of the Rev. Sir FREDERICK A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., M.A., Mus. Doc., and of Sir G. A. MACFARREN, Mus. Doc.

THE MUSICIAN:

A GUIDE FOR PIANOFORTE STUDENTS,

By RIDLEY PRENTICE.

CONTAINS ANALYSES OF WELL-KNOWN PIECES PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED, ENABLING THE PUPIL TO UNITE A STUDY OF MUSICAL FORM WITH THE ORDINARY PIANOFORTE PRACTICE.

Saturday Review.—"We are far from suggesting that there is any royal road for acquiring technical knowledge, but we are quite certain Mr. Ridley Prentice's road is in every way the pleasantest that has yet been laid before any pianoforte student."

Academy.—"A knowledge of form is imparted in simple and pleasant language. We heartily commend it to all who desire to understand, satisfactorily interpret, and enjoy beautiful music."

Graphic.—"Written with the laudable purpose of helping the pianoforte student to understand and enjoy beautiful music."

School Board Chronicle.—"A useful book for earnest teachers."

Musical Review.—"Mr. Ridley Prentice has newly developed an important though much neglected branch of the teacher's duties."

Monthly Musical Record.—"No more valuable work of the kind is in existence."

W. SWAN SONNENSCHEIN & CO., PATERNOSTER SQUARE:
And all Book and Music Sellers.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER'S

ROYAL IRISH CAMBRIC POCKET-HANDKERCHIEFS.

Samples and Price Lists Post Free.

Per doz.—Children's, 1s. 2d.; Ladies', 2s. 4½d.; Gents 3s. 6d.

Hemstitched—Ladies', 2s. 11½d.; Gents', 4s. 11d.

—:o:—

BY APPOINTMENTS TO THE QUEEN AND THE CROWN PRINCESS OF GERMANY.

ROBINSON AND CLEAVER, BELFAST.

Professional Cards.

The subscription for a "card" space in these columns is £1 10s. for six months, and £1 per quarter—payable in advance, including copy of the paper each week. Subscriptions should be sent to the office of The Musical World 12, Catherine Street, Strand, London, W.C.

Conductors and Composers.

Mr. FREDERIC H. COWEN,
73, Hamilton Terrace,
St. John's Wood, N.W.

Mr. F. KILVINGTON HATTERSLEY,
A.R.A.M.
(Professor of the Pianoforte, Composer, and Conductor),
17, Finsbury Park Villas,
Green Lanes, N.

Mr. ALBERT VISETTI
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Conductor),
12, Westbourne Park Terrace, W.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN
(Guitar, Concertina, and Gigelira. Wood and Straw Instrument),
22A, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W.

Mr. F. St. JOHN LACY
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Vocalist) (baritone).
Fitzroy Mansion, Charlotte Street,
Fitzroy Square, W.

Mr. H. MARTYN VAN LENNEP
(Teacher of Singing, Composer, and Conductor),
Address—7, Wimpole Street,
Cavendish Square, W.

Mr. G. ARTHUR HIGGS, F.C.O.
L. Mus. and Tallis Gold Medallist. T.C.L. Pupil of Mr. Albert Visetti. Teacher of Singing, Harmony, Conductor, and Vocalist. (Baritone.)
Address—Trinity College, London, W.

Vocalists—Sopranos.

Madame VALLERIA
(Opera and Concerts),
Bosworth House, Husband's Bosworth,
Rugby.

Miss EDITH DESMOND
(Opera and Concerts),
c/o Nolan & Jackson.

Miss KATE FLINN
(Concerts and Oratorios),
41, Welbeck Street,
Cavendish Square, W.

Mdlle. VELMI
(Opera and Concerts),
7, Chesilton Road, Munster Park,
Fulham, S.W.

Miss AGNES LARKCOM
Has removed to
158, Portsdown Road, W.

Madame ISABEL GEORGE, L.R.A.M.
(Concert and Oratorio),
29, Albany Street, Regent's Park, N.W.

Contraltos.

Miss JOSEPHINE CRAVINO
(Concerts and Oratorio),
2, Sedgmoor Villas,
ivate Lessons given. Camberwell, S.E.

Miss MARY E. DAKIN, R.A.M.
(Mez. Sop.),
Ballads, Oratorio, &c.
31, Monmouth Road,
Bayswater, London, W.

Miss LENA LITTLE
(Concerts),
42, Norfolk Square, Hyde Park, W.

Contraltos.—Continued.

Madame OSCAR POLLACK
(Concerts).
56, Duchess Road,
Edgbaston, Birmingham.

Tenors.

Mr. BARTON McGUCKIN
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. Alfred Moul,
26, Old Bond Street, W.,
Or, 270, Elgin Avenue, Maida Vale, W.

Mr. ARNOLD BREEDEN
(Concerts, Oratorio, and Opera),
Address—N. Vert, Esq.,
6, Cork Street, W.

Mr. SEYMOUR JACKSON
(Concerts and Oratorio).
Old Trafford, Manchester.

Mr. PAYNE CLARKE
(Concerts and Oratorio).
28, Devonshire Street, Islington, N.

Mr. J. DALGETY HENDERSON,
Gothic Lodge,
Lordship Lane, S.E.

Mr. REDFERN HOLLINS,
30, St. Stephen's Avenue,
Shepherd's Bush, W.

Mr. BERNARD LANE,
60, Westbourne Park Villas, W.

Chevalier EDWARD SCOVEL
(Opera, Concerts, and Oratorio),
Hotel de L'Europe,
Milan, Italy.

Mr. W. ESMOND,
24, Upper Mount Street, Dublin.

Baritones.

Mr. WALTER CLIFFORD
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concerts),
c/o N. Vert, Esq.,
6, Cork Street, W.

Mr. FREDERIC KING
(Concerts and Oratorio),
19, Canfield Gardens, S. Hampstead.

Mr. NORRIS CROKER,
Egremont, Croxted Road,
West Dulwich, S.E.

Mr. JOSEPH LYNDE
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concert
63, Stafford Pl.
Buckingham Gate, S.W.

Mr. ALBERT REAKES
(Bass-Baritone, of the "London Ballad Singers," Oratorios, Concerts, &c.),
30, Lancaster Road,
Notting Hill, W.

Herr RAGNAR GREVILLIUS
(Concerts, Oratorio, and Opera),
70, Portsdown Road, Maida Vale, W.

Bass.

Mr. WATKIN MILLS requests that all communications respecting engagements be sent to his new address, Hyacinth Road, Roehampton Park, S.W.

Mr. FRANK CELLI
(Concerts and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. N. Vert, 6, Cork St.,
Burlington Gardens, W.

Trumpet and Cornet.

Mr. THOMAS HARPER,
185, King's Road, N.W

Pianoforte.

Mr. G. PRADEAU
(Lessons and Recitals),
1, Stowe Road,
Shepherd's Bush, W.

Guitar.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN, Guitariste, Instructress to H.R.H. the Princess Louise, has returned to town, 22A, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W., where may be had her celebrated book, "Learning the Guitar Simplified," 10s. 6d.

Violin.

Mr. ALLAN CAMPBELL
(Formerly Pupil of Mr. Henry Holmes and Dr. S. S. Wesley),
23, Thicket Road,
Pupils visited and received. Anerley, S.E.

Mr. LESLIE CROTTY and
Madame GEORGINA BURNS,
c/o Mr. Alfred Moul (sole agent),
26, Old Bond Street, W.

Miss AGNES JANSON requests that all communications respecting engagements may be sent to her new address, 36, Albion Place, Hyde Park, W.; or to Mr. N. Vert, 6, Cork Street, W.

The FRASER QUINTET. Misses Violet (Vocalist), Ida, and Ethel (Pianist, Violoncello, and Viola), Mabel and Stella Violinists), play Quartets, Solos, Duets, two Pianofortes, &c. For Engagements, for Concerts, "At Homes," Dinner and Garden Parties.—Address: 121, Adelaide Road, N.W.

MR. HEALEY'S SPECIAL LIST.

Madame LILIAN NORDICA (Soprano)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert,
Address to
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mdlle. LOUISE LABLACHE (Mez. Sop.)
(Opera and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W

Mdlle. HELENE HASTREITER (Contr.)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert)
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Madame BELLE COLE (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Miss MARGUERITE HALL (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. WILLIAM NICHOLL (Tenor)
28, Belsize Road, N.W.,
Or, Sole Agent, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. JOHN PROBERT (Tenor)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W

Mr. VAUGHAN EDWARDES (Baritone)
(Concerts and Oratorio),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. MULES BROWN (Baritone)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. HENRY POPE (Bass)
(Opera, Concerts, and Oratorio),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. T. L. CAMPION (Bass)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10a, Warwick Street, W.

"TUITION BY CORRESPONDENCE.'
Offices—4, MONTGOMERY STREET, CARLOW.
ESTABLISHED 1885.
Candidates rapidly prepared for University, Intermediate, Civil Service, and other Examinations.

"NOTES AND QUERIES" DEPARTMENT.

STUDENTS and Others wishing to have questions answered on French, German, Latin, Greek, Irish, Spanish, or Italian, should send same with a Fee of 1s. for each question, or 5s. for six questions.

MATHEMATICAL and SCIENCE QUESTIONS solved for a Fee of 6d. each, or 2s. 6d. for six questions.

The solutions are supplied by a staff of First Class Graduates, Specialists, &c.

All inquiries and instructions should contain STAMPED ADDRESSED ENVELOPE.

Apply to the Secretary, Examination Syndicate.
THE ACADEMY, 4, MONTGOMERY STREET, CARLOW.

CASSON'S
PATENT
Organ - Building System

SEPARATE Pedal Organs for each Manual. Expressive and Controllable Pedal Basses. Perfect control of all Couplers. Reduction of number of Claviers without loss of efficiency, &c., &c. See testimonials from

Mr. W. T. BEST.
Rev. Sir F. A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart.
Dr. SPARK.
Dr. J. C. BRIDGE, M.A.
Dr. E. W. TAYLOR, F.C.O.
The late Mr. J. STIMPSON.
Mr. R. BARTHOLOMEW.
Mr. J. HEYWOOD, Birmingham.
Mr. G. A. AUDSLEY, F.R.I.B.A.
M. A. J. HIPKINS, F.S.A.
&c., &c.

Apply to the Secretary—
CASSON'S PATENT ORGAN CO., LIMITED,
DENBIGH.

THE MUSICAL WORLD is on sale at MERRYDEW'S Library Boulogne-sur-Mer.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS.—Advertisements should be sent not later than 5 o'clock on Wednesdays, to the Office, 12, Catherine St., Strand.

Facts and Comments.

We are glad to hear from St. Petersburg that Mrs. Henschel is much better.

Mr. Cowen's short work, "A Song of Thanksgiving," for chorus and orchestra, for the opening of the Melbourne exhibition, is now finished and printed.

Madame Minnie Hauk has just received from the Duke of Saxe-Meiningen the Cross of Merit, in recognition of her distinguished achievements as an artist.

Mr. Edward Lloyd sails for America on Saturday week. He will sing at the Cincinnati Festival in "St. Paul," "The Spectre's Bride," Rubinstein's "Paradise Lost," the Prize Song from "The Meistersinger," &c.

At the London Court of Bankruptcy, on Tuesday, the accounts, accompanied by the Official Receiver's observations, were issued in the case of James Henry Mapleson, late of the Royal Italian Opera House, Covent Garden, and Her Majesty's Theatre, Haymarket, operatic manager. The liabilities are £42,410, of which £40,100 are expected to rank, and no available assets. Mr. Mapleson attributes his failure to the non completion of the National Opera House, whereby he estimates he has lost about £30,000. He expresses his intention of submitting a scheme of arrangement whereby claims for £25,000 will be withdrawn, and the sum of £500 be provided for the benefit of the other creditors.

Mr. Goldberg, for a number of years professor of singing at the Royal Academy of Music, has been elected an honorary member of that institution. Professor Goldberg was introduced to the Royal Academy by the founder, the Earl of Westmoreland.

At an examination held in London, on April 3rd and 4th, for Fellowship of the Guild of Organists, the following candidates were successful:—William E. Neck, London; R. J. Pitcher, Devonport; W. H Stocks, L.R.A.M., London; Albert Whipp, Rochdale; J. F. Fricker, Swansea; Charles C. Byers, London; Thomas Foulston, Sheffield; Thomas Davies, Crickhowel; F. E. Hillman, Wallington. Fourteen candidates presented themselves for examination. The examiners were: William Pinney, Mus. Bac., Oxon., William S. Vinning, Mus. Bac., Cantab.

The following paragraph is going the round of the newspapers: "Josef Hofmann is in Berlin with his mother. The father has gone on a fortnight's visit to Warsaw, and on his return will take Josef to Eisenach for a little diversion and for the benefit of his health. The boy is now in the best of spirits and full of fun, but certainly shows signs of nervous exhaustion. It is fully expected that by the autumn he will have regained his natural robustness, and should that be the case he will resume his public appearances, commencing in all probability in England." We thought as much, the story of the American millionaire having turned out moonshine.

"Indophilus" writes to The Times, "It was notified in The Times last week that the Archbishop of Canterbury is about to bestow the degree of Doctor in Music on an accomplished English musician. I hope this gentleman is in easy circumstances, or he is likely to be horrified when he comes to pay the fees required on such occasions at Lambeth." And he goes on complaining that a poor Indian clergyman had lately been prevented from accepting the honorary degree of Bachelor of Divinity, because he was informed by His Grace's secretary that the fees would be £57. Apart from this, the degree of Mus. Doc., conferred by the Archbishop of Canterbury, is a mere farce, not worth 57 farthings. That dignitary, as a rule, knows nothing about music, and, like most English gentlemen, glories in the fact, considering it a most excellent joke that one unable, like himself, to distinguish "God save the Queen," or the "Old Hundredth" from "Yankee Doodle," or a Salvation Army hymn, should be called upon to mete out musical honours with a perfectly impartial hand.

What could have induced Messrs. Horace Lennard and Oscar Barrett to bring their Crystal Palace failure to a London theatre is hard to understand. There is not a single feature about "Too Lovely Black-ey'd Susan" to merit its repetition, so utterly unmeaning and unmitigatedly vulgar as the piece is. That the Strand Theatre was crowded on the afternoon of Wednesday week goes for little; there are so many ways of filling a theatre, and the army of regular matinée goers is immense. It is a pity, therefore, that the two gentlemen, responsible for there production of the "Crystal Palace Burlesque," should have descended so low in the walks of dramatic art.

The burlesque, it is hardly necessary to state, is a perverted version of Douglas Jerrold's immortal story of "Black-eyed Susan," with a musical accompaniment by Mr. Oscar Barrett. Since the play was originally produced within the great "cucumber frame" on Sydenham Hill, the libretto has been lightened, the business added to, and the action quickened. All this is very well, and it is a lamentable fact that so much good material has been applied to the elucidation of so weak a plot, to the exhibition of so vulgar a play.

It is not, perhaps, that the joint authors are responsible entirely for the want of refinement that is the characteristic feature of the burlesque. The play-going public are more to blame. The introduction of the music-hall element into the legitimate drama would seem to be, just at present, most what latter day audiences demand. To put a male actor into female attire introduces an unpleasant element at all times, and the "goings-on" of "Susan"—it is Douglas Jerrold's fault that she has no other name—when interpreted by a man, are not likely to appeal to the better side of human nature. It is really time that some protest was made against this class of performance. The music oftentimes is tuneful, but when set to such lyrics as the song which Gnatbrain sings, with a refrain of "Buy my blooming flowers,"—the double meaning of the adjective not escaping the quick perception of the audience—one is filled with regret at the waste of such good material. Nor is the music-hall character of the piece lessened by the appearance of so well known a star as Miss Dot Mario. A great deal of the business, moreover, is sufficiently good to merit its appearance in better company. Too much praise, however, cannot be bestowed on the actors; Miss Fannie Leslie, who took the part of the ill-used William, playing with excellent spirit, and Mr. Dan Leno, a "comic" actor of the Arthur Roberts type, was admirable, despite the fact that at the time he was in anything but good health. Miss Kate James, as Gnatbrain, sang admirably. It must not be supposed that our severe strictures are in any way directed at the authors of this latest example of modern burlesque, but rather at the unfortunate state of affairs which permits of the favourable reception of so much that is vulgar on the London stage.

The Royal Society of Musicians attains this year a very remarkable old age: its 150th anniversary festival will take place on the evening of May 8th, at St. James's Hall, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor. Being a real old British institution, it demands nothing less than a dinner to celebrate this occasion. Music will, however, not be absent from the scene, and ladies may be admitted to the gallery after the dinner.

The committee of the Royal Naval and Military Bazaar, to be held in the Whitehall Rooms of the Hôtel Métropole, in the third week of May, are already preparing the list of attractions. The musical department includes daily performances by military string bands, and short concerts of good music to be given at intervals in the large Music Room.

A violin of clay, or terra cotta, is now being exhibited at Berlin. In shape it is identical with the ordinary instrument; the neck is of wood, and it is said to emit flute-like tones of good quality. The inventor is Mr. Rohrmann of Moscow. An instrument of a similar kind was some years ago exhibited in a shop window in Leicester-square, but whether it emitted flute-like music or any music at all, we cannot tell.

The Bristol Musical Festival, with Mr. Charles Hallé as conductor, is fixed for the week beginning Oct. 15 next. The following works will be performed: Gluck's "Iphigenia," Mackenzie's "Rose of Sharon," Berlioz's "Romeo and Juliet," Sullivan's "Golden Legend," Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night," and Handel's "Messiah." There will be two miscellaneous concerts. The following principal artists have already been engaged: Madame Albani, Madame Trebelli, Madame Patey, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Banks, and Mr. Santley.

At the Chester Musical Festival, of 1888, the following works are to be performed in the Cathedral;—Wednesday morning, July 25th, "Elijah;" Thursday morning, July 26th, Verdi's "Requiem," Beethoven's symphony in C minor, and two motetts, by Mr. Oliver King (written expressly for the festival), "By the waters of Babylon," and "O sing unto the Lord," for solo and chorus; Friday morning, July 27th, Beethoven's "Engedi," Schubert's Symphony in B minor, and Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise;" Friday evening, Gounod's "Redemption." There will be given in the Music Hall, on Wednesday evening, "The Golden Legend," and on Thursday evening a miscellaneous concert. Dr. Joseph C. Bridge is the conductor, Herr Straus the leader. A band and chorus of 300 performers will be provided.

Within a short time Rossini's dream of a haven of rest for superannuated singers and musicians, Italian and French, bids fair to be realized in Paris in a manner altogether consonant with the benevolent intentions of the composer. The latter, it will be remembered, bequeathed the munificent sum of five millions of francs, to be applied to that purpose after accumulating at compound interest for five years. Fortunately, l'Assistance publique already possessed a plot of ground—a large garden behind Sainte-Périne—admirably adapted for the project, and this can be utilized without trenching upon capital, the annual proceeds of which will thus be applied exclusively to maintenance. The building itself is completed, and a commission of architects already busily planning furniture and other matters connected with the comfort of the future inmates.

The details of his scheme had been thought out by Rossini with much care and precision. Each inmate of the asylum (which will be open to aged musicians of both sexes) is to have a separate apartment, with permission to engage separate attendance when this is desired and can be afforded. The first floor is devoted to dormitories, the ground floor to the reception room, dining-room, and general offices of the establishment. There will be no unnecessary restrictions, and the pensioners will be free, either to sally forth into the busy world, or, if they prefer, to dream away their years of retirement beneath the shades of the large garden reserved for their exclusive use.

It would be possible to conjure up many a pleasant picture in connection with this scheme when the instructions of its founder shall have been finally carried out, as there is every probability of their being by the first of October next. Looking at home, we find important services in the same direction rendered by the Royal Society of Musicians, the value of which none will be inclined to underrate but room also for individual effort and for institutions conceived in a similar spirit to that which is to bear the name of the eminent Italian composer. We may not have a Rossini among us, but in England there are among professionals a few, and among amateurs many persons blest at the same time with long purses and large hearts, and upon whom the example may not be thrown away.

Good help to the cause of necessitous artists was rendered in another form by the performance given on Tuesday, last week, at Notre-Dame, of Gounod's commemorative mass, "Jeanne d'Arc," the receipts accruing from which went to the Paris Association of Musical Artists, and netted over 8,500 francs. The composer conducted in person, and the effect of the work, as scored for chorus, grand organ, organ accompaniment, trumpets, trombones, and harps, is described as admirable, the support given by the organ to the wind instruments in the triumphal fanfare, no less than M. Paul Viardot's rendering, at the offertory, of the Vision de Jeanne d'Arc being especially impressive.

M. Massenet has undertaken to furnish the Opéra Comique with an opera to be produced next spring, during the Exhibition, and Mdlle. Sanderson is engaged for the principal rôle. The subject of the new work is stated in some continental papers to have been borrowed from Shakespeare, and is to bear the not very Shakespearean title of "Pertinax." Perhaps there has been some confusion as to the source of inspiration. Should it have been, peradventure, George Coleman the younger?

By the death of the well-known pianist, Charles-Valentin Alkan, an income of 1,250 francs reverts to "l'Association des Artistes Musiciens," in accordance with the will of his brother, Maxime Alkan, by which a life interest in the fund was bequeathed to Charles-Valentin.

M. Talazac, the well-known tenor, has received from the King of Portugal the decoration of the Order of Christ.

The inauguration of a statute to Dalayrac recently took place, amid great rejoicings, at Muret (Haute-Garonne), the native town of the composer. The Mayor, M. Niel, delivered an oration, describing the life and works of the celebrated composer, and complimented the sculptor, M. Saint-Jean, who is a native of the same town. The statute represents Dalayrac seated, and holding a roll of music.

A curious musical lawsuit recently took place at the Tribunal of Rouen. M. Massenet, who attended the rehearsals of the "Cid," at the Théâtre des Arts, was far from being satisfied with the principal tenor, Signor Bucognani, and M. Miral, the manager, therefore entrusted the rôle of Rodrique to a new tenor, M. Gibert, who was well received by the public. The cast-off Signor Bucognani, however, brought an action against the manager, claiming 25,000 francs damages, on the plea that he was engaged expressly for the "Cid" performances. The manager in a counter action demanded 1,000 francs damages, but the judge dismissed both summonses with costs.

Signor Frederici, who was formerly well-known as a vocalist, but had more recently taken to acting, died quite suddenly at the Princess's Theatre, Melbourne, during a performance of "Faust," Goethe's "Faust," not Gounod's. His real name was Frederick Baker.

It is stated that Alberto Franchetti, the composer of "Asrael," has been commissioned to set to music Henrico Panzacchi's hymn written especially for the fêtes to be held in commemoration of the eighth centenary of the foundation of the Bologna University. The same promising young composer has also on hand a new opera, the libretto of which has been supplied by F. Fontana.

A decision has at length been arrived at in connection with the vacancy created by Ponchielli's death, in the class for composition at the Milan Conservatory; and the post is to be filled by Signor Catalini. The young composer has already made his mark with the operas "Falce," "Edmea," and "Dejanice."

Out of 74 MSS. submitted for the musical competition at Bologna, not a single one appears to have been deemed worthy of a prize; but two received more or less favourable mention. This is better than nothing; and the composers of the quasi successful works may be considered, in a sense, to have saved their country.

CHARLES WIDOR.

The promised performance at last Thursday's Philharmonic Concert of Charles Widor's music to "A Walpurgis Night," composed expressly for that Society, will, unfortunately, have taken place too late for notice in the present issue. A few important instrumental works, however, by this, one of the most distinguished of French composers, and just now the centre of interest in London musical circles, have recently and opportunely reached our hands from the well-known publishing firm, J. Hamelle, of Paris. The name of Charles Widor is by no means unknown to concert goers in England. It has been made familiar to cultivated amateurs by the charm of many of his songs, which from time to time find their way to the concert platform; it became invested with still further interest when one of his symphonies—that in A—was performed in March last year at the Crystal Palace. But in spite of all this, there are probably many on our side of the channel who still remain more or less ignorant of the high position occupied by Widor in his own country as a composer and a musician, and of the large amount of admirable work by means of which this position has been achieved. Widor, who was born at Lyons in 1845, came of a musical stock, his father being organist at St. François. He obtained the best part of his education in Belgium, where he studied the organ under Lemmens, and composition under Fétis. Returning subsequently to Lyons, he was appointed in January, 1870, to the post of organist of St. Sulpice, Paris. But his energetic character and the bent of his genius urged him into a wider field of work, and, besides organ compositions, songs, chamber music, masses, important orchestral pieces, and eventually an opera, came from his pen. Among his works which have attracted greatest attention may be mentioned a Mass for two choirs and two organs, a Symphony in F, a Symphony in A, a ballet in two acts, "La Korrigane," produced in 1880 with great success, and subsequently the opera "Maître Ambros," which was received with somewhat less favour. Like many French composers, Widor was not deterred by the work entailed in original production from joining the ranks of musical critics. Berlioz did so in the Journal des Débats, Saint-Saëns in Le Voltaire, and Widor in L'Estafette. Compared with one long, but by no means complete list of M. Widor's published works, including concerted pieces, pianoforte and organ solos, not to mention many songs of exceptional beauty and originality, the specimens at present under consideration might at first be thought scarcely numerous enough to be regarded as representative. But closer acquaintance with them will speedily show that we are dealing with a musician who always composes in earnest, and throws so much of himself into every one of his efforts, that it is quite possible, even with the aid of this restricted material, to form some notion of his genius and individuality. Especially, perhaps, is this the case with the trio in B flat for piano, violin, and violoncello (opus. 19), a work presenting difficulties of execution that are likely to warn off all but proficent amateurs, but full of charming melody, fanciful treatment, bold progressions, and combinations of the instruments employed in a manner admirably adapted to bring out their orchestral effects. Unmistakeably modern in character while preserving, in all essential particulars, the recognised sonata form, this trio shows, among other things, how possible it is for a really musical mind to work within the limits prescribed by classical models, and yet to speak in the musical dialect of his day. Full of spirit and cheerful promise, the opening theme, first announced by strings, and subsequently taken up by the pianoforte part, duly speeds its way (in quick common time) with many a glittering pendant, and through sundry quaint progressions and harmonic surprises, to its more gentle "heroine"—as the second subject has sometimes been fancifully described—in F, a melody of considerable beauty, and presenting a pleasant contrast in its unequal rhythm; both re-emerging, after the trouble and turmoil to which all musical heroes and heroines are heirs to, in the second part, and obtaining new and still more vigorous significance in the coda which ends this movement. The composition is throughout written in a cheerful strain, with episodes of intensity, so that instead of a slow movement we have to follow an "andante con moto quasi moderato" in the key of the subdominant, the pianoforte, which throughout this movement is given many opportunities, opening with a bright motive, afterwards taken up by the companion instruments. The movement is full of interest, and a charming effect is produced at the close by a repetition of its opening theme, now given by the piano with full chords but pianissimo, and with a sort of tremolo accompaniment by the strings. A scherzo of rare piquancy in the relative minor is coupled with an equally dainty trio, placed first in the startling key of E minor, but soon transferred and thereafter continued in E flat minor. Bewitching, too, is the joyous refrain in the final presto, rippled off in the first instance by the piano, with here and there a note from the other instruments, who join in as though caught in spite of themselves by the prevailing spirit of merriment. The movement is full of interesting matter, and closes brilliantly a work which has not a dull moment from first to last. Two pianoforte suites ("Suite en si mineur" and "Suite Polonaise") will command the attention of pianists, who, together with sympathy with modern developments of style, are prepared to bring—at any rate in regard to the first-named—control of considerable technical resources. The majestic, indeed solemn, character of the opening melody—a sort of chorale enunciated with full chords that give full occupation to both hands—makes itself felt not only in the variations and other outcomes of it, but also in the scherzo, and even in the impetuous final number. The "Suite Polonaise," of lighter texture, but quite as musicianly in workmanship, contains five numbers, not of inordinate difficulty, each of which makes by itself an attractive and superior pianoforte piece, viz., "Polonaise," "Scherzando," "Romanza," "Volkslied," and "Appassionato." The less elaborate beauties of the "Romanza," and "Volkslied" will speak for themselves. To this pianoforte music must be added a selection of waltzes, full of characteristic ideas—some quaint, some charmingly melodious—and conceived in so many different moods that the question of preference may be fairly left to the individual taste. The introduction, however, and Nos. 1, 7, and 9, will be sure to find favour.

As would be expected, so fertile a worker has found an important field for the exercise of his talents in the instrument which may be regarded as specially his own, and, in fact, in the two series of organ symphonies (op. 13 and 42), organists have a veritable treasure house of musical thought ranging from the fugue to the "Andante Cantabile," while even with regard to the most lightsome of the numbers contained in this handsome collection, it may be said that in no case has the dignity of style appropriate to this class of music been departed from. For the rest, the composer's aim has been not only to produce music suitable for the instrument with its latest improvements of construction, but, while retaining whatever was of solid worth in the older styles, to free himself of many of their trammels, and to infuse into his work the freer and more imaginative spirit belonging to modern ideals.

MUSIC IN ITALY.

Milan, 13th April, 1888.

The season ended at our grand Scala, when "Lohengrin" drew a full house for the clôture. Had this masterpiece been properly set up, I cannot say what warm and steady success it would have met with. The last performance of "Lohengrin," however, proved a very artistic one, and the artists and orchestra were frantically applauded.

The other novelties at the same theatre were the ballet "Amadriade," by Signor Danesi, music by Maestro Venanzi, and the opera "Nestorio," by young Gallignani, Maestro di Cappella at our magnificent and famous cathedral, the Duomo. The new ballet has proved pleasing in style, costumes, and brilliancy, thanks to that gifted artist, Edel, but it was musically a failure.

As to "Nestorio," I am sorry to give you an unfavourable account. The piece found the audience very cold, and created no interest. Signor Gallignani has done all he could, I am sure, and much technique and some talent are to be found in his young head; but, alas! how much less than what we might expect of him! All the texture of his score is heavy work, not comprehensible except in a few passages, after which you feel once more plunged in darkness. I must, however, add that the performance of the lengthy and monotonous work was not all the author might have expected, that the libretto of the poet, Fulvio Fulgonio, was poor; and that the mise en scène did not do justice to the beautiful drawings of the already named Signor Edel, and to the fame of La Scala.

Some days after the close of the season, La Scala's portals re-opened for a great event. The celebrated Männerchor of Zurich, combined with our Società Orchestrale, gave a series of vocal and instrumental concerts which attracted crowded houses. The Männerchor came over here to sing for the benefit of some of our charitable institutions, and exchange the visit of the Società during the Zurich Exhibition. Milan and the Milanese did honour to the brethren of free Switzerland, and the Männerchor met with a most enthusiastic reception. La Scala has been gorgeous for two consecutive days and nights, 8th and 9th inst., and all the best Milan was present, in social and artistic life. This male choir I may state, is unrivalled for unity, harmony, and perfection of intonation. Those healthy, sound mountaineers, rather square, rather solid, sang gloriously a dozen choruses, a novelty for us. Under the bâton of Herr Attenhofer, they did wonders.

Among the charming songs, of several composers, sung in German, there were two Italian: "La rondinella d'amore," a Lombard popular song adapted for chorus, and "O mia madre, lasciami andare," another song of the Abruzzi. Their excellent accent, their expressive and fresh singing of these slight, graceful songs, made the house ring with applause. A remarkable item was the "Todtenvolk" (words by J. V. Widmann, music by F. Hegar), referring to the famous crossing of the Swedish General Arnfield, with his army, from Norway into Sweden (1719), when about 10,000 soldiers fell dead, frozen, on the Tidal mountains. Herr Hegar set this tragic story to music in a most admirable way. The narrative flows in well written descriptive verses, and the musical work is beautiful and touching. Until one had heard these 350 people sing, without accompaniment of any instrument, you would not have believed human voices could combine in such a portentous ensemble of the most melodious sounds, perfect in harmony, and so grandly musical. The day before yesterday the Zurich Männerchor met with a grand reception at Teatro Castelli (of the "Pro Patria," Società gimnastica) and there was an exchange of speeches and toasts, among which was one from Signor Negri, our Syndic, always perfect as an orator.

The Zurighesi have left for their Vaterland, and our heart goes with them, the good, brave people!

Guilio A. Manzoni.

THE VISUAL ASPECTS OF VIRTUOSITY.

Many a well-worn joke has been aired at the expense of performers who by dint of various expedients, legitimate or illegitimate, succeed from time to time in attracting a large share of public attention to their own personality. Eccentricities of manner, of facial expression, of musical rendering, and even of hair-dressing, have on occasions been credited with securing for their happy possessors an amount of celebrity undesirable in the best interests of art, and altogether out of proportion to the intrinsic worth of their attainments. Strictures such as these give, perhaps not unnaturally, wide opportunity for moralisings of a more or less pessimistic kind among others whose less obtrusive talents, often admirable in their way, have failed to secure for them the sweets and attendant emoluments of notoriety. Sometimes these criticisms are just, sometimes unjust; more often still they occupy a middle position between the two. For apart from the humorous aspect of the subject — a sufficiently obvious one, and capable of being enlarged upon ad nauseam—there is yet another, involving questions which, if followed far enough, might possibly be found to lead to unforeseen depths of speculation in relation to certain hitherto little appreciated phenomona of the musical instinct. Without venturing into such regions of abstruse analysis, the question seems to be worth a moment's reflection, whether, after all, music appeals exclusively to the sense of hearing? Most persons will be disposed to answer this with an unhesitating affirmative. That it does so appeal, primarily and chiefly, is a fact too self-evident to need mention, but that the influence exercised upon the human mind by a musical performance goes farther than this, will not be considered too startling an assertion, if regard is had to one of the earliest manifestations of this musical instinct—viz., rhythm, with its suggestions of movement, and incidently therefore of the sight of movement. How powerful this suggestion is, may be easily observed in almost any concert room, classical or very much the reverse, where, whenever a lively scherzo or a strongly marked dance-tune is struck up, a certain number among the listeners will always be impelled to follow the beat and swing of it, by some bodily action—the well-bred with a sleepy nod, the more demonstrative with jerks and spasms of more or less acuteness, or with stampings of feet and stick and umbrella. With musical organisations of the lowest order this may, perhaps, be the only feature of the piece they are capable of really comprehending. In the case of more refined sensibilities, persons may often be seen to express in their countenances sympathy with the pathetic strains of an adagio in minor key; while perhaps in the very midst of their unconscious grimacings they are mentally criticising a similar "affectation" on the part of the player. Facial contortion of this sort, it is true, may be regarded in this instance as the natural expression of emotion aroused by music, but not otherwise connected with the music itself. Directly or indirectly, however, there would seem to be really some intimate association between musical sounds of various kinds, and other matters which, at first sight, might be deemed as quite outside its scope and meaning. Other relations are more obvious. Lightness and weight, height and depth, weakness and strength, all have their correspondences and modes of expression in the virtuoso's art. When his hand, raised high as if for a sledge-hammer blow, falls light as a snowflake upon a high treble note, it is impossible to deny, whether the trick be approved of or not, that it has contributed, in a very appreciable degree, by the very revulsion of feeling thus brought about, to the sense of extreme pianissimo. When, on the other hand, the promise of a forcible attack is fulfilled in a full-resounding chord, the effect has been unmistakeably heightened by suiting the action to the promise. The notion of power in music is perhaps peculiarly susceptible of the sort of emphasis to be obtained from external appearance. A lady performer, play she ever so vigorously, can never vie with the sterner sex in furious movements when all is "storm and stress." The actual sounds she produces may be equally loud, but they still lack something, in the opinion of that large majority of her audience who will never be able to disabuse their minds of the prejudice that the sign ff is, and ever will be, more appropriately suggestive, even in its very shape, of coat-tails than of petticoats. Thus would it be possible to go through the whole gamut of moods and passion, and to trace in their various grades a subtle relation between what is seen and what is heard. How far, then, is the virtuoso justified in taking advantage of such associations? The best and common-sense answer to this question is: let him conscientiously avoid any attempt at simulating emotions he does not really feel, for thus only can he hope to steer clear of the grotesque; let him, in a word, avoid artificiality and strive to be himself, so far as is consistent with his duties as an interpreter, taking care that the self in question shall have been duly qualified by study and culture and long familiarity with the highest musical ideals, for the responsibilities of the virtuoso's calling.

Correspondence.

MUSICAL DEGREES.

To the Editor of THE MUSICAL WORLD.

SIR,—I believe the whole of the remarks made by your correspondent about the University of St. Andrews and Musical Degrees, would apply equally to the University of Durham, inasmuch as it has neither a Professor nor a Faculty of Music, yet occasionally has granted honorary degrees in music, notably to the late Dr. J. B. Dykes, and Dr. Wm. Rea.—Yours truly,

PULSATOR ORGANORUM.

THE VOICE AND THE WEATHER.

To the Editor of THE MUSICAL WORLD.

SIR,—As "Novelist's Music" has from time to time been made the subject of comment in your columns, perhaps I may be permitted to draw attention to a little bit of conversation I lately came across in a work by a well-known French author, with a hope that it may be the means of eliciting an expression of opinion from some authoritative quarter. In the book in question, "Monsieur Le Curé," when asked whether he thinks rain may be shortly expected, is made to say: "To answer your question properly, I ought to have heard my choir girls sing this morning. It's a very simple matter. I find, as a rule, that when the atmosphere is surcharged with moisture, their vocal chords are relaxed, and they sing rather flatter than the organ. On the other hand, in dry weather they show a tendency to sing too high." Is this fact or fiction? My own experiences as a teacher of singing have been, I confess, of a somewhat confusing kind, and scarcely calculated to warrant my appearing in the capacity of a second Admiral Fitzroy. Often, indeed, have I had occasion to note decided indications of "set fair" and "very wet" on one and the same morning. But if some among your numerous correspondents happen to have made a special study, medically or musically, of the vocal barometer, the result of their observations will doubtless prove interesting to many besides, sir, you most obedient servant,

LARYNX.

Music Publishers' Weekly List.

VOCAL.

Dreams of Thee (with 'cello obbligato, E flat to F)	F. Leeds	Weekes.
Evening Service (for four voices)	H. Smith	Hart.
Lark, The (A to E, and higher key)	Jessie Botterill	Lucas Weber.
Magyar's Home, The (D sharp to D)	G. Saint George	Woolhouse.
Proud Maisie (D to G)	Moir Clark	„
Rosebud, A (E to G)	J. J. Haakman	„
Sae far awa' (C to F)	„	„
There was a jolly miller (part song)	F. L. Moir	Lucas Weber.
Twilight Visions (A to D, and higher key)	H. F. Sharpe	Woolhouse.

INSTRUMENTAL.

Caprice	W. Davis	Woolhouse.
Easy Classics, No. 1 Moderato from Haydn's quartet, in G, No 29	Oscar Beringer	Lucas Weber.
Reveil du Printemps, overture (orchestral score)	G. Saint George.	Woolhouse.
Silver Wedding March	Frances Coplestone	„
Souvenir	W. Davis.	„

The Organ World.

ON HYMN TUNES.

I.

Anything like an attempt to deal fairly with so great and important a subject as hymn tunes would occupy a volume at least; and the present purpose is to call attention to a gratifying growth of opinion in favour of what may be called purity of style, with regard to the composition of our hymn tunes. This opinion, it is proper to add, goes farther than the musical question; for one hears not only feeble part-song harmony and secular rhythmical impulses condemned, but sentimental words and far-fetched verbal platitudes are likewise being more sharply criticised from day to day. Doubtless the issue of various collections and the attempts to meet varied requirements, have tended to bring the whole subject of hymn and hymn-tune writing before the public. Then, again, the subject has received some, though perhaps not adequate consideration, at Church Congress and other meetings; and the church playing tests of such examinations as those of the College of Organists have tended to turn artistic attention to the better performance and, indirectly, to the observance of more judicious rules for the composition of hymn tunes.

The distinguished poet and eminent essayist, the late Matthew Arnold, whose sad and recent death the world now so greatly laments, did not take a very active interest in musical matters, though his finely cultivated, æsthetic taste and critical acumen naturally turned from time to time to the consideration of all art questions of interest and importance. In one of his writings a passage occurs bearing upon the present topic which is worthy of quotation, even though his critical denunciation may be regarded by many as too sweeping in character remembering the eminently practical and popular character of the subject being dealt with. The words in question are these:

"Taking man in his totality and in the long run, bad music and bad poetry, to whatever good and useful purposes a man may often manage to turn them, are in themselves mischievous and deteriorating to him. Somewhere and somehow, and at some time or other, he has to pay a penalty and to suffer a loss for taking delight in them. It is bad for people to hear such words and such a tune as the words or tune of "O happy place! when shall I be, my God, with thee, to see thy face?"—worse for them to take pleasure in it. And the time will come, I hope, when we shall feel the unsatisfactoriness of our present hymns, and they will disappear from our religious services."

An attempt to analyse these not untimely and certainly decisive words would bring to the surface a sharp denunciation of verbal and musical jingle, of measured trifling with things sacred, of a too prevalent tendency to bring heavenly visions within the range of worldly imagery and associations, and of a corresponding tendency to destroy purity of style by breaking down barrier lines between the sacred and secular art.

Not the least encouraging sign of the present advance of public opinion regarding hymns and hymn-tunes is the wholesome criticism many of the clergy are bringing to the various questions at issue. Such action from well-informed, earnest men in the position of gauging public opinion, and at the same time guiding the public mind, must result in an all-round gain. Musically the subject would seem to call for considerations in widely different directions, from the ancient simple plain-song unison tune, to the ecclesiastical types of the sixteenth century, onwards to the German choral, with its massive foundation of chord-roots changed at almost every slow pulsation, to the eighteenth century illustration of overgrown detail; and including the various types of good, bad, and indifferent character to be found in the manifold collections the modern revival of church art not to add religious thought, has brought before the religious world.

E. H. TURPIN.

AN APPEAL.

The figure of a veteran organist and widely-known and greatly-esteemed teacher of music stricken down with paralysis is one which will not—it is to be hoped—appeal in vain to the good-will and charitable aspirations of readers. The sufferer is Mr. Constantine, who, as far back as "forty-two" began to work, under the influence of the late John Hullah, in Lancashire and Cumberland. A graphic account of the unselfish labours of Mr. Constantine appears in "All the Year Round" of January 5th, 1861, from which we learn of weekly journeys between Ulverstone, Ambleside, Morecombe Bay, Kendal, Preston, Blackburn, etc., undertaken in all sorts of weather; of unremitting labour, which, rewarded with success, improved the church choirs, created musical societies, and to use the late Matthew Arnold's expression, brought "sweetness and light" into many a household and many a community. Some forty-two years ago this enthusiastic worker in the cause of choral music came to London, where he has continued to labour as a public instructor and private teacher, until stricken down by illness. From a desire to render timely aid, and to evince the respect due to a very deserving and unselfish artistic labourer, a committee is being formed to gather in subscriptions, and with the aid of distinguished executants to give a concert on behalf of the sufferer. The committee already includes the names of Sir J. Somers Vine, Messrs, W. A. Barrett, Mus. Bac., G. Grossmith, E. H. Turpin, J. Radcliff, and others well known in the artistic and literary world. The concert will take place shortly, at Princes' Hall, and will be supported by Madame Patey, G. Grossmith, J. Radcliffe, Beerbohm-Tree, and other well-known executants. The hon. secretary of the fund is A. R. Rogers, Esq., Crichton Club, Adelphi, W.C., to whom communications may be made. Mr. Constantine has a wife and family depending upon his support. His son by a former marriage, Mr. A. W. Constantine, an able and esteemed organist and teacher, has been, and is, giving all assistance in his power to aid the stricken artist, and to assist the committee in process of formation. That organists will assist in the good work is a foregone conclusion. But no aid is so valuabe as prompt assistance, and the unfailing benevolence of the musical profession is hereby earnestly claimed, not only for a case calling for kindly aid, but in recognition of the self-denying labour of one who has done much for the spread of musical education and for the advancement of church and choral music.

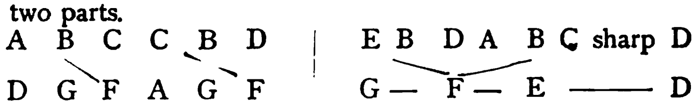
E. H. T.

"FALSE RELATIONS."

A paper read before the Members of the College of Organists, by JAMES TURPIN, Mus. Bac. Cantab, F.C.O., etc.

PART II.

There are, however, other positions in which the tritone cannot be avoided, in which these writers offer no help to the student; as in the following specimens taken from "Gradus ad Parnassum," by Fux, in the first and in the second species, in two parts.



Dr. Bridge, in his excellent Primer "Counterpoint," gives on page 34, an example in the key of C minor, in the first species and in three parts; upon which the author remarks, "Between the bars 4 and 6 it is possible a false relation may be considered to exist; the major third on the dominant is, however, so welcome that the author does not hesitate to use it here."

So clever a contrapuntist as Dr. Bridge cannot possibly have failed to observe the very palpable tritone in the above example, between bars 5 and 6, and 6 and 7, on which he makes no remark. Although neither of the parts in which the objectionable notes appear, skip, which is a method of palliation of the harshness of the non-relationship suggested by him, and to which allusion will shortly be made, it is, I think, quite clear that Dr. Bridge refers in his subsequent remarks upon this passage, to the supposed false relationship between the B flat in the fourth bar, which he has marked, and the B natural in the sixth, not to the tritone between the fourth and fifth bars to which I have alluded, brought about by the introduction of the major third of the dominant.

With this difficulty before us, let us turn to more recent writers on counterpoint to see what progress has been made in clearing away this terror to the young musician. The treatise on counterpoint by the Oxford Professor is avowedly based upon that of Cherubini, therefore calls for no present consideration. Sir G. A. Macfarren takes us no farther on our way than did Albrechtsberger. My learned friend, Dr. Bridge, in his admirable Primer, with which many of you are familiar, in an attempt to overcome an inevitable tritone, directs the student thus:—

"Above all, if he makes one of the notes in the first chord proceed by skip, as in the following example, he will have little trouble with that bête noire of young contrapuntists, the tritone."

A B ‖ F D
F D ‖ A B

It may be observed that these examples exactly coincide with two bars preceding the close of the two model examples in two-part counterpoint in the first species given by Cherubini, therefore, presumably are copied from these examples; and as Cherubini says they are good, the skip in one of the parts appears to be taken as the reason why they are acceptable. But see, however, that in the last specimen of interdicted harmonies in which the tritone is present, given by Cherubini, one of the notes of the tritone does skip, so this is no exemption in the mind of the original author. We are not much in advance of Cherubini, then, as yet, and it must be that the following:—

C A B C
E F D E etc.

is an objectionable form of the false relation of the tritone, although one of the parts skips, i.e., so far as we have learned at present, or had any reason given us to consider otherwise.

Another writer on counterpoint in Stainer and Barrett's Dictionary of Musical Terms, in remarking upon the rule against the false relationship of the tritone, says that—

B C
G F

"is unpleasant to the ear," whereas

A B C
F E A

"is certainly not so unpleasant, though equally forbidden by strict contrapuntists." In the suggested mitigation of the tritone in this example it must be understood as applicable to the key of C, in which the previous example is undoubtedly placed, and for which the second example is the proposed amelioration. As this seems to be merely a matter of taste with the writer, we cannot, following Horace's maxim, quarrel with him; but, to my mind, this is, indeed, figuratively speaking, jumping out of the pan into the fire, because a connection between the chords of the mediant and sub-dominant cannot be so readily established as between the sub-dominant and dominant, and both are adjacent harmonies. Failing to have discovered any way out of the difficult position of an inevitable tritone, founded upon a recognisable method, we will attempt to discover some means by which the non-relationship of the tritone in successive chords may be overcome upon the principle already enunciated.

Dr. Calcott, in his Grammar of Music, defines gradual motion, or conjunct motion, as we understand it now, of the radical bases or roots of chords as being irregular, because the chords have no connection with each other. This is not strictly true. When a chord appears as an uninverted triad the ear naturally accepts the chord as being unquestionably founded upon its apparent bass. This is more definitely felt when it is either tonic or dominant of the key, and in these cases Dr. Calcott may be right. This idea is mentioned because I believe it is commonly felt to be a truism. How far I accept it as truth will be presently seen. When a chord, however, is in its first inversion, its derivation is not as well defined.

CLERGYMEN AND ORGANISTS.

To the Editor of THE ORGAN WORLD.

SIR,—It is proposed, as far as may be possible in a limited space, to take a somewhat comprehensive view of a subject, which, though often discussed, has generally been regarded from one-sided points of sight, and by persons whose feelings have unabled them to see the thing in its various aspects. Misunderstandings between clergymen and organists about the choice of the music sung in the church services and the management of the music are not now of very frequent occurrence; still, they occur, and are sometimes attended with unhappy consequences. Organs have been closed, and congregations deprived of instrumental music; parishes have been in an uproar; rival organists have struggled for the possession of an organ-stool; and, in one of our colonies, an organ is actually said to have been gas-tarred —things which, while they seem ludicrous enough to all who are not concerned in them, are, doubtless, felt to be most unpleasant by the disputants themselves. A slight want of judgment on the part of the clergyman or the organist may bring on a misunderstanding, which may rapidly become a very serious affair. Sometimes organists, forgetting the position of their clergymen, have looked with mistrust upon the interest they take in the church music, and have been too ready to misconstrue a kindly meant suggestion into an act of interference; and clergymen, ignoring the superior musical attainments of their organists, have not always treated these servants of the church considerately. And so, a coldness has arisen between those who should have worked together in harmony. Indeed, it has been said that some clergymen prefer non-professional or lady organists, because they are "more manageable" than professional men.

The problem to be solved is this: How shall it be arranged that the organist shall, in a proper and responsible manner, be allowed to fully direct the music, and yet the clergyman maintain his position in the church? Here are two parties concerned, and if a right understanding between them is ever to be arrived at, any arrangement that may be suggested must clearly meet the views of both. The question is of such importance that it ought to be seriously discussed.

In his own church the clergyman's power is absolute: it is indeed so great that it cannot be greater. All the organist's power is derived from the clergyman, and it is a mistake to suppose that an organist has any power or authority whatever by virtue of his office. A clergyman can say whether certain parts of the service shall be sung or not; and as the clergyman is responsible for the proper performance of divine service, it is reasonable that he should have this power. The law therefore is good; for it strengthens the hands of the clergyman, when he most needs support. But surely it can never have been intended by the framers that clergymen should direct and choose the music in their churches, without having the necessary musical qualification for so doing. Much less could they have contemplated that clergymen, practically ignorant of music, would perform the duties of musical directors, when churches were supplied with trained artists of skill and culture. However, the law places a great power in the hands of the clergyman, which he may use either for good or for evil. If applied to control a foolish organist, who was disposed to give way to his extravagant fancies, it would be a wise use of the power. No doubt, there have been organists who would have chosen very unsuitable music—perhaps merely to show off their choirs —and given annoyance to the congregation, if there had not been a power to control them. But, on the other hand, it is a foolish abuse of power to parade it on every occasion and apply it where its exhibition is uncalled for.

Since the law, then, gives power to the clergyman and none to the organist, it must be evident that contention with a clergyman about the choice of the tunes or the direction of the music is useless. A clergyman, if his organist persisted in disobeying him, might stop the contention by closing the organ, and (if the appointment rested solely with him) he might dismiss the organist. If the appointment rested with others, the result would be a very painful controversy, in which the organist, if a good man, would have the sympathy of the congregation generally, and probably of the wardens, while the clergyman would be supported by his own more intimate friends. If the well-wishers of the organist gained the day, their victory would be fruitless, for the clergyman could order the organ to be kept closed. The organist must be worsted in an encounter with the clergyman, and contention is to be deprecated. The resignation of his appointment (if it cannot be retained with comfort) is better than resisting the lawful authority of the clergyman, even if that authority be misused. A qualified and conscientious artist, if he found himself the organist of a certain kind of clergyman, would feel disgusted and unhappy. It would be painful to the man and degrading to the artist, to be forced to teach and play music which his educated musical taste could not approve. He would not work con amore; his capacity for usefulness would be largely destroyed; and, his merit purposely underrated and his talent unacknowledged, his experience held at nothing, himself neglected and treated as a mere tool in the hands of a clergyman whose crude musical ideas he could not put up with, he would probably be glad to be rid of his appointment at almost any sacrifice. But if unable from pecuniary considerations to resign, he must sink the artist and quietly do the clergyman's bidding. The position of this worthy man now is truly deplorable. His principle prompts him to throw up his situation, but want of means compels him, if possible, to retain it. He is, of course, dissatisfied and unhappy; perhaps he murmurs, and the clergyman is told of it by some one who courts his favour. Our worthy organist may try as far as possible to make the best of his position, and go on quietly; but his temper, if too much tried, may at last break down, and an explosion will probably be remembered against him. If, presently, he gives up his appointment, his chances of securing another depend, in no small measure, upon the reference his clergyman gives him. This reference is written and read in confidence, and if the clergyman has brought himself to believe his organist to be an assuming, troublesome fellow, our organist may find himself awkwardly placed. It is impossible to say how many good men have been libelled "in confidence." Doubtless applications for vacant situations have often been set aside without further inquiry, simply because the latest employer's reference was "not quite satisfactory." A clergyman, when he receives an answer to his inquiries, unsuspectingly believes what he reads therein, and it never occurs to him that perhaps an injustice is being done.

The uselessness having been shown of contending with a clergyman determined to "have his own way," and some of the probable results of such contention touched upon, it may be asked how it comes about that some clergymen, when they have able and tried organists, in whom confidence might safely be placed, nevertheless direct and choose the music themselves. There have been clergymen distinguished in the art. The first organ-builders and organists were priests, and among illustrious clerical theorists, composers, and organists, may be mentioned the names of Martini, Volger, Stadler, Steffani, and our own Aldrich. Clergymen may also point with pride to an eminent living clerical musician. Doubtless there are clergymen with good musical taste, as there are organists without it, but as only very few clergymen have had a musical training, the great body are necessarily unfit to direct musical operations, much more so to direct musicians. It is very right that the clergymen should determine how much music shall be sung in the service, but if the organist be competent and trustworthy, the choice of that music should be left to him. Who so likely to judge of the merits and effectiveness of a musical composition, and the ability of the choir to sing it? Surely the organist, for he has given his time to the study of such matters, with which the clergyman is practically unacquainted. The clergyman would decide whether an anthem were verbally suitable to the occasion, or not; but there his knowledge would end. If the clergyman chose the anthem without consultation with the organist, then it might happen that an anthem which required a fine and well-balanced choir to render it properly, might have to be done by an inferior choir: the result being torture to the musical portion of the congregation, and general dissatisfaction: the organist, who from the first had foreseen the failure and pointed out the impracticability of the attempt, being blamed. Again, simply because some clergymen believe that solo anthems are objectionable, nothing but full anthems are allowed in their churches. It seems hard to believe that any arguments could show the undesirableness or impropriety of an exquisite and devotional rendering in church of such solos as "O rest in the Lord," or "I know that my Redeemer." The question is not whether anthems shall be sung, or not: that is for the clergyman to decide. But a clergyman having decided that an anthem may be sung, it is hard to understand why one that requires twenty voices to render it, should be considered admissible, and another, simply because it must be sung by only one voice, discarded, granting it to be sung by a proper and duly qualified person. In almost every case musical clergymen, by troubling themselves about the music, defeat their own purposes. Unquestionably, they would best insure having good music by securing the services of good and reliable organists, and then leaving the choir and direction of the music in their hands. If clergymen say that their organists are unqualified, it may be replied that the fault is, perhaps, their own. From motives of benevolence, or personal regard, or a desire to reward a person who has helped in a parish, or with a view to saving the church the salary a good organist ought to have, they appoint persons whose general artistic incapacity and ignorance of the duties of an organist render them unfit for the post. It is then found necessary that some one be appointed choirmaster, and probably the clergyman or some member of his family chooses the music. The curate does all he can to help, and ladies in the congregation give the church the benefit of their knowledge. The result, in such cases, is bad or lukewarm singing, to the feeble, expressionless accompaniment of a sadly ill-used organ. What one good head could have done proves to be too much for all this host. Not only is it unnecessary for a clergyman who has a good organist to trouble himself with the music, but a good organist will work all the better if made responsible for the music and allowed to manage it methodically. But, remembering the clergyman's position, an organist should not be too ready to take offence at any kindly-meant suggestions he may offer from time to time, or look upon such as interference. Most clergymen have their favourite tunes, and it would be a compliment to the clergyman and a good thing in itself, if the organist could now and then introduce these into the services. To say that a tune is bad or unsuitable, simply because the clergyman likes it, is mere pettishness, and likely to lead to speedy trouble.

If their love of music prompts some clergymen to trouble themselves about the music in their churches, others are led to do so by a feeling that they are responsible for the services. A clergyman who was an excellent preacher and an excellent man, but only a poor musician, once said that he so strongly felt this responsibility that it was a matter of principle with him to choose all the music himself that was used in his church; and added, quite seriously, that so far from being disposed to concede any power to another, he would not allow his organist to choose the chants or hymn-tunes, or to alter them, when chosen, without his express permission. A clergyman may be responsible for the music in his church, but surely a "cure of souls" implies other and far greater responsibilities. Would not a clergyman best fulfil all his responsibilities by devoting himself to clerical work, strictly so-called, and placing the musical arrangements in the hands of a good and reliable organist, who would best know how to deal with purely musical matters? Such an organist would not be likely to introduce anything unseemly or unsuitable into the church services, and might safely be made "responsible" for the musical portion proper of the services.

Sometimes an organist's exertions have been so amply rewarded that the result has been a perceptible increase in the attendance at church, and the clergyman has discovered that this increase is due to the improved music. It might be supposed that all clergymen would be glad to see this improvement in the attendance, and feel obliged to the man who had been instrumental in bringing it about. But some clergymen there are who think that a congregation may feel too much interest in the music, and a few, naturally wishing their sermons to be properly valued, and seeing in the music a counter attraction, are so unreasonable as to be annoyed, when, on the contrary, they should rejoice, in the effective labours of their successful musical assistants.

Besides the clergyman himself, there are sometimes others who are interested in the music, and firmly persuaded that their suggestions ought to be acceptable to the organist. The authority of the clergyman the organist is bound to recognise, but attempts at interference on the part of ladies and curates ought to be respectfully, but firmly, protested against. A good organist, when he needs help or advice, will not shrink to ask for it; but he cannot effectually perform his duty if he allows himself to be led by the whims and wishes of these would-be advisers. (At the same time, it would be difficult to know how to act if the interfering person were very much in the good graces of the clergyman; such a person, if disobliged, might make much mischief.) "In the multitude of counsellors there is safety"; but Scott pointed out that sometimes the safety that lies in a multitude is for the counsellors, and not for the counselled. If an organist, from a fear of disobliging, tries to please everyone, he will, like the man in the fable, end with satisfying nobody. Ritter, in his History of Music, says truly: "How often are they (able organists) not urged to perform, against their own better conviction, the very things against which their understanding and their honour as artists must revolt. It is not with the organist, generally, that the clergyman consults about the introduction of this or that contemplated change which effects the musical part of the service. He whose musical knowledge and taste stand, in most instances, below zero, is willingly led by some fashionable musical amateur—an influential member of the church, who considers the organist his servant—the man to whom he dictates his unchangeable will. A man of character and sound art principles will not and cannot submit to such despotic treatment, and prefers to retire from such a degrading position. Thus it happens that unprincipled ignoramuses, through base flattery and servile submission, preside in responsible places, to the dishonour and demoralisation of true church art."

These five are the principal arrangements that obtain in churches, respecting the choice of the tunes: (1) the clergyman leaves the choice of them to the organist; (2) the clergyman and the organist together choose them; (3) they are chosen by the clergyman; (4) by a precentor; and (5) by a choirmaster. The first arrangement is in every way the most satisfactory, supposing the organist to be thoroughly competent, and possessed of the requisite taste and judgment—mere skill in playing would not be a sufficient qualification. But if the organist were untried and inexperienced, and there were reason to fear that he might introduce unsuitable music if full power were conceded to him, the second arrangement might be preferred, and the clergyman and organist would chose the tunes in consultation. The clergyman, no doubt, would be guided by the organist in purely musical questions, and in most cases look upon his own share of the work as a mere matter of form, though he might think it desirable to keep up the form. Indeed it would be merely a precautionary measure on the part of the clergyman, which need not be made galling to the organist, or felt to be such by him. While allowing his organist all reasonable latitude, the clergyman would retain the power of control, and, like another Æolus,

*Et premere, et laxas sciret dare * habenas.*

Of couse he would use the power of control only when it was really necessary to do so. This arrangement has its faults, but it is infinitely preferable to those that follow. According to the third arrangement, the clergyman chooses the tunes without consulting the organist. This arrangement can only be required on very extraordinary occasions. It might be called for, if the organist had proved himself to be wanting in judgment, and disposed to make himself offensive, and the authorities did not wish to dismiss him. But it need not be discussed, as few clergymen would be so unreasonable as to treat good men and intelligent artists as mere machines. The Precentor or the Choirmaster might be of use at churches, where the organist was unfit, and the clergyman felt unable, to choose the music. But where the organist is a good general practitioner, he should be his own precentor and choirmaster.

To sum up. It ought to be left to the organist, if he be a man of proved taste and judgment, to choose his own church music. Such an organist would have more pleasure in his work and perform it more effectually, if his clergyman placed the direction of the music in his hands. But when there is a doubt, or the organist is inexperienced and untried, and the clergyman shrinks from conceding full power to him, the organist and clergyman together might select the music. The clergyman would, in most cases, look upon his own part in this arrangement as a matter of reserved power, to be used only when he found it to be really necessary.

If organists remembered the authority of their clergymen, and clergymen showed deference to the superior musical knowledge of their organists, and protected them from the interference of meddlesome persons, each would respect the other, and there could not fail to be a good understanding between them.—Yours, etc.,

Ecclesiasticus.

RECITAL NEWS.

Bow and Bromley Institute.—The following pieces were admirably executed by Dr. Peace, of Glasgow, on Saturday last: Overture, "Samson," Handel; very much applauded; "Mache aux Flambeaux," Guilmant, recalled; Prelude and Fugue in G, Bacn, encored; Fantasia, A. L. Peace, a musicianly and interesting piece, recalled; and Overture, "L'Etoile du Nord," Meyerbeer. Mdlle. Louise Lablache was the talented and successful vocalist. M. Gigout, of Paris, plays to-night, and the season closes on the 28th, when Mr. E. H. Lemare, F.C.O., of Sheffield, will be the soloist.

Notes.

At Fakenham, Dr. Stainer's "Daughter of Jairus," and a miscellaneous selection has been well given by the local society, under the painstaking conductorship of Mr. Loraine Holloway, A.C.O.

It is mentioned in connection with the lamented death of the late popular actor, Mr. W. J. Hill, that he began life as a church organist, and that his fellow comedian in "The Private Secretary," Mr. W. S. Penley, commenced it as a church choir boy.

Among the unhappy reports of the Easter vestries it is said of one well-known City church, "that as neither the curate nor the organist would condescend to meet each other, there was a deadlock in the matter of hymns."

Organ music forms a feature of no small importance at Masonic gatherings. At the solemn ceremony in mourning celebration of the late German Emperor at the Freemasons' Hall, Great Queen-street, the other evening, Herr Wilhelm Ganz presided at the organ, according to the daily papers.

Some years ago, in 1848, Mr. N. S. Heineken invented a means of opening swell shutters by a movable back to the organ-seat acting on rods and levers, &c. Inquirers regarding mechanical appliances to open the swell, would perhaps do well to seek information regarding what was then considered an ingenious contrivance.

Several fragments of ancient ecclesiastical music have been discovered by Mr. A. H. Miller, in the Charter-room at Dundee. The sheets appear to have been printed about 1500, and are probably parts of the vocal service used by the choristers of St. Mary's, Dundee, in pre-Reformation times. These interesting fragments will be subjected, it is to be hoped, to a close technical inspection, as they belong to a period of transition from Plain Song to harmonised or rather contrapuntal music, about which evidence of any kind must be valuable.

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS' CALENDAR.

On Tuesday, April 24th, the library will be opened from 7 to 8. On the same evening, at 8, lecture by Dr. F. J. Sawyer, on "The Primary Rules of Keyboard Fingering;" May 22nd, Lecture; June 26th, Lecture by Dr. C. W. Pearce; July 17th, 18th, 19th, F.C.O. Examination; July 20th, Diploma Distribution; July 24th, 25th, 26th, A.C.O. Examination; July 27th, Diploma Distribution. Other arrangements and particulars will be duly announced.

E. H. TURPIN, Hon. Sec.

95, Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury, W.C.

Supplement to the Musical World, April 21st, 1888.

“THE SORCERESS.”

BY PROFESSOR HUBERT HERKOMER, A.R.A

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

THE PRIMA DONNA:

Her History and Surroundings, from the 17th to the 19th Century. By H. SUTHERLAND EDWARDS. Gives a picture of the life, professional and social, of every prima donna down to the present day. Two vols., demy 8vo, 24s.

"Odd corners of operatic history have been ransacked for the apt anecdotes and characteristic touches that here give life to the portrait."—Musical World.

"Volumes so full, not only of useful fact, but of pleasant anecdote and gossip, that they are sure to be read, not only with profit, but with pleasure."—Globe.

MEMOIRS of COUNT HORACE DE VIEL CASTEL.

A Chronicle of Events, Political and Social, during the reign of Napoleon III., years 1851—1864. Translated by CHARLES BOUSFIELD. Two vols., demy 8vo, 30s.

"What makes his memoirs such entertaining reading is that he has not only a good memory for bad stories, but that in his rapid portraiture he shows something of the power, of the shrewd insight, and of the graphic wit of a Saint Simon. Through the scandals are scattered curious and piquant revelations.—Times.

REMINGTON AND CO., Henrietta-street, Covent Garden.

By FREDERICK HELMORE.

Just published, price Sixpence. Dedicated to SIR ARTHUR S. SULLIVAN.

THE ITALIAN REGISTERS.

VOCE DI PETTO. VOCE DI GOLA. VOCE DI TESTA.

By the same Author.

SPEAKERS, SINGERS, AND STAMMERERS. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

SINGING METHOD. No. 1. The Little Ones' Book. Containing the Songs in "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland," and "Through the Looking Glass." Also, the Nursery Rhymes, Easy Rounds, &c., used in his "Little Ones' Classes." Fcap. 4to, 1s.

SINGING METHOD. No. 2. The First Reading Book. Containing a Catechism on the Art of Singing Music from Notes, followed by Scale and Chord Exercises, by the practice of which Pupils rapidly acquire the Knowledge and Feeling for Harmony, so necessary in PART SINGING. Illustrated by pleasant Rounds, Duets. and Trios. Fcap 4to, 1s.

London: J. MASTERS and CO., 78, New Bond Street.

ORGANISTS AND ORGAN STUDENTS.

You are kindly requested to write for Ainsworth's "New Patent Organ Pedal Combination List." Ainsworth's "New Patent" is perfectly unique and may be combined easily with any Piano. It is the only one which may be safely combined with any Piano without deteriorating the instrument. Having put down at my works two engines and machinery of the most desirable kind, I am now supplying my goods at a price which enables every organist and organ student to have always ready for use in his Studio an

ORGAN PEDAL PIANO,

AFFORDING PERFECTLY UNIQUE PEDAL PRACTICE.

34, Sheen Park, Richmond.

DEAR SIR,—I have deferred writing to comment upon your Pedals and Action now attached to my pianoforte until I could satisfy myself of their utility and efficiency. I can now conscientiously say that they more than fulfil all my anticipations. Although I am no carpenter, aided by your lucid diagram I had little difficulty in attaching them myself, and it is impossible to over-estimate the comfort they give to me or to conceive the saving of time one experiences in one's own room.—Believe me, yours truly,

BURNHAM HORNER, F.R. Hist.S.

To Mr. Mr. Ainsworth.

DEAR SIR,—It gives me great pleasure to bear testimony to the perfection of your Invention. I am more than satisfied with your Patent Action and Organ Pedals, and consider them worth double the money. Organists and organ students who desire to improve in the Art of Pedalling, which is so essential to a good organist, will do well to procure a set. I have seen no Action half so effective, and one can sit at the Piano and play, "Fixed in his everlasting seat," or any other organ music, or organ arrangement with the greatest pleasure. The touch of pedals could not be better, and the action is as you say, "Absolutely free from annoyances." They cannot be too highly recommended, as by their use, rapid progress is certain.—Believe me, sincerely yours,

I. B. Thornton,
Organist, Birstall, Leeds.

Cologne, July 16th, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have much pleasure in informing you that your Pedals have given the fullest satisfaction. I have them combined with my practice Piano. Many of my musical friends who have seen them, as well as my organ pupils, are quite delighted with them; and I must acknowledge that I have never met with any Pedals so noiseless and pleasant to play upon as yours. The Action I consider durable, and of very good workmanship. Every organist who desires to perfect his playing will welcome your invention. I can recommend your goods in every respect.—Yours truly,

HERR J. RODENKIRCHEN.

To John Ainsworth, Esq. Organist, The Cathedral, Cologne, Germany.

TOOLS.—In order to facilite the attachment, a complete set of tools are sent (four in number) each one marked for its particular use. By the use of these tools, and following carefully the directions, ANY ONE can make a really good attachment.

On Receipt of Trade or Professional Card, you will receive List, with Liberal Terms.

AINSWORTH'S PATENT ORGAN COMBINATION WORKS
BRINSCALL, CHORLEY,

The Musical World.
LONDON: SATURDAY, APRIL 21, 1888.

A PAINTER'S MUSIC.

"THE TRIUMPH OF THE SORCERESS."
BY PROF. HUBERT HERKOMER, A.R.A.

A writer with a turn for what Shelley calls "subtle-souled psychology," pointed out in these columns not long ago, that the musical gift was found more frequently in combination with the pictorial than with the poetic gift, for the reason that the word-melody which is at the bottom of all good poetry, to some extent anticipates the tone-melody of the musician, while the same quality in the painter finds its expression in visible forms, and therefore does not interfere with any feeling for melody proper which the same artist may possess. This theory finds a curious and interesting illustration in the musical play or pantomimic action which Mr. Herkomer, one of our leading painters, has written, and will produce on Tuesday next at his little theatre in Bushey, Herts. That theatre is in itself a marvel of artistic industry and ingenuity, and forms part of a great scheme which the master has initiated, and of which he is the heart and soul and moving spirit. The Herkomer School, perhaps we should say the Herkomer Colony, in the pleasant but, artistically speaking, not very fertile county of Hertfordshire, is a unique thing of its kind. Here, Art in the proper sense, and Art as applied to industry, appear in the combination which Japan has known for a thousand years, but which England and Europe generally have still to learn. Everything here is done on the premises; in one building the young pupils, ladies and gentlemen, are hard at work in commodious studios, drawing from the life and from the antique. Elsewhere wood-carvers execute the most elaborate and beautiful designs, and the painter's venerable father, a Tyrolese wood-carver of the old stock, still occasionally is seen handling the delicate tools of his craft. Elsewhere modern machinery of the latest pattern is at work; iron is welded, and takes beautiful and fantastic shapes; etchings are prepared and finished, and the house, perhaps we should say the palace, which the painter is building for himself, is rising from the ground. Needless to add that the force produced by powerful machinery is not wasted, but takes the luminous shape of the electric light.

But the principle of self-help and of association does not end here. A man so eminently gifted with the dramatic instinct as the painter of "The Last Roll Call," was compelled almost by a natural necessity to include a theatre amongst his various schemes, and that theatre has accordingly been erected, and shows on a small scale what a theatre should be. Some of the ideas of Bayreuth have evidently been adopted; there are no boxes, and only one gallery; the angles have been carefully calculated so as to secure a perfect view of the stage from every stall, and the orchestra is invisible. Some of the innovations on the stage are even of a more startling nature; there are no footlights, and therefore none of the unnatural glare which, at the ordinary theatre, as a Methodist preacher remarked, "comes from below"; indeed, all the light there is issues from such luminous bodies, be they stars, or the moon, or a camp fire, or a torch, as are accounted for by the physical phenomena pertaining to the scene. Those luminous bodies are managed in a truly marvellous fashion; the moon is not the reflection of a magic lantern, as on most stages, neither is it a dark satellite as in nature; it has its own innate light, and that light is thrown on the stage through gauze hangings, the hills and trees of the background, and the phenomena of the sky being seen through those hangings in exactly the dim outline which is characteristic of a clear summer night. The moon, we should add, has a neat little railway of her own, on which she moves with the regularity of clockwork.

But enough of these mechanical appliances. At Mr. Herkomer's, as at every other theatre, the play's the thing, and to that play, with its musical accompaniment, we must now draw the reader's attention. Its name is "The Sorceress," and Mr. Herkomer describes it as a "romantic fragment." Perhaps "a musical and symbolic miracle play" would have been a more appropriate title, for it should be understood that there is no dialogue spoken or sung, and that the play is carried on by pantomimic action, accompanied and intensified by means of music. In one respect Mr. Herkomer's play differs from dramas and operas and miracle-plays ancient and modern. It has, and designedly has, no story. The curtain rises on a gipsy encampment in a dense forest. A child has been stolen from its parents, and on its arrival in camp is subjected to a potent charm by the Gipsy Queen or Sorceress. The tribe look upon the infant as the guardian and pledge of their safety and prosperity. They worship it as it lies in the arms of their Queen, as shown in the masterly sketch which Mr. Herkomer has drawn for us. Dances and rejoicings, and the songs the gipsy youth Jack, who loves the Queen with an ardent and shy devotion, follow in due course. A hermit walking through the wood comes upon the group, and his pious chant mingles strangely with the wild wood notes of the gipsy music. At last day begins to dawn, the encampment is broken up, and the gipsies go on their way. As the sounds of their music die away in the background, a shepherd and shepherdess appear on the scene, and their songs and simple bagpipe tunes take the place of the weird strains heard before; they greet the rising sun, and the curtain drops, or rather is closed, on their simple merry-making, the impression left on the mind being that the wood does not after all belong to the mysterious creatures of the night, who fly before the dawn, as evil flies from good. With this harmonious note, which is anything but a pointed moral, but nevertheless adorns the simple tale, the action comes to a close.

Upon such a subject different people would look in a very different light. The dramatist would see little in it, and the ordinary musician scarcely anything beyond a good opportunity for a ballet or a brindisi. But it is different with the painter. He likes the want of violent dramatic action, the immovableness of the scene which, when once fixed on canvas or in the shapes of solid trees and rocks, serves as the background for no end of picturesque and various groupings and combinations, to say nothing of the changes of light which Mr. Herkomer has rung with masterly skill. As a pictorial thing, embodying no end of pictorial possibilities, "The Sorceress" then should be considered; and what may be said of the dramatic design applies even more forcibly to the music.

That music—true painter's music—has been entirely written by Mr. Herkomer himself, and even the instrumentation, which has been skilfully carried out for small orchestra by Mr. Carl Armbruster, is distinctly foreshadowed, and in many places actually indicated in the pianoforte score. Indeed it has been designed for the orchestra, although the painter's lack of experience in the matter of clefs and other grammatical details, has wisely left the actual scoring to a more practised hand. Our remarks sufficiently indicate the point of view from which this music should be judged. Absolutely speaking, it shows, no doubt, remarkable talent and an agreeable gift of spontaneous melody; but its true significance it gains only when it is applied to the pictorial motive which, it cannot be repeated too often, is the moving principle of this interesting work.

Pictorial or applied music is of its essence, symbolic. Every tune, almost every harmonic combination, has a meaning to it; in other words it becomes, in a certain sense, a leitmotive. Of such leitmotives there are essentially two in the score. The first and most important of these is the song of the Gipsy Queen, accompanying the charm which brings the child within her power, and identified therefore with the superstitious awe with which that child is regarded by the tribe. It takes the form of a simple ballad, too simple, perhaps, if judged on its own absolute merits, but serving the aforesaid pictorial or symbolic object excellently well. It appears at first in the key of D minor, the harp playing an important part in the accompaniment. But subsequently it undergoes many modifications, as the situation to which it applies varies. There is yet another leitmotive, identified with the child in what one may call its human aspect; this is given out for the first time by flutes, oboes, and strings in unison, as, according to the stage direction, "enter a gipsy woman from the right, carrying a child, which is wrapped up; Queen meets her, the woman drops on one knee, Queen eagerly uncovers face of child, and scans it with delight." Subsequently the same theme in F, instead of the initiatory A flat, becomes the theme of the lullaby sung by the gipsy woman, and in this fact we discover a subtle hint of the "human aspect" of the child as above indicated. These two important themes are, of course, heard over and over again, and serve to bring home the action to the spectator with singular vividness. But there are other supplementary motives which gain considerable significance in a pictorial sense. Take for example the lively theme in F, with its dotted quaver at the outset, which illustrates, as it were, the bustle of the gipsy camp, being now heard in the orchestra, now in sonorous four-part chorus. Again there is a weird chromatic motive, which plays an important part in the various functions of incantation. Most of these themes are heard in succession, for example, when the gipsies disappear, the idea being cleverly conveyed by their gradual dying away. Very ingenious also is the use to which the motive of the gipsy dance proper is put. When the shepherd enters, this is heard once more in the orchestra, and he begins to dance to it even as the gipsy maidens had gracefully moved to it before. The meaning is that the shepherd has probably watched their merry gambols from a safe retreat, and that now, when he is left alone on the scene, the music is in his mind, and sets his feet in motion. Many similar points might be insisted upon, but we must fear to exceed the limits of our space and of the patience of the intelligent reader, especially if that reader should be fortunate enough to witness the performance, and thus be able to judge for himself.

We should add that several ballads and songs have been inserted, a serenade sung by the love-sick Jack, "Lad and lass walk hand in hand," being the prettiest amongst these, unless readers fond of pastoral music should prefer the shepherd's song, in which Mr. Herkomer himself displays a pleasant tenor voice. All the other actors and actresses belong also to the Bushey settlement, and the lady who enacts the title part is the painter's sister-in-law, whose expressive form and features singularly fit her for her task.

Altogether, the occasion will be one of singular interest, presenting, as it does, the old problem of a combination of all the arts in a somewhat novel form. Stage managers and actors and poets and literary men who journey to Bushey will be able to learn something that is new to them, and so, in a certain sense, will musicians.

Concerts.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

The fact that the popularity of Berlioz's dramatic legend, "La Damnation de Faust," is in no present danger of diminishing was sufficiently proved by the size of the audience which assembled at last Saturday's concert, the last of the regular series. Considerable interest attached to the performance, as it was the first time that the work had been presented at the Crystal Palace, and amateurs were justified in expecting a very fine rendering of its many beauties. Unfortunately, these expectations, if they existed, were doomed to disappointment, for although in many particulars the performance was worthy of praise, the effect of the work as a whole was utterly spoiled by the wretched singing of the chorus. Want of attack and nervous uncertainty were the prevailing characteristics of the Crystal Palace Choir on this occasion, and in charity we refrain from making further comment. Of the soloists, Mr. Barrington Foote, as Mephistopheles, sang admirably throughout, with excellent quality of voice and plenty of diablerie, and was unfortunate in having the effect of the celebrated "Serenade" marred by the chorus. Madame Nordica won great applause in the music allotted to Margaret, a character in which she has previously won success at the Albert Hall. Mr. Charles Banks (replacing Mr. E. Lloyd, unfortunately indisposed) as Faust was rather too unsparing of his voice in the earlier portions of the work, with a result that towards the end he exhibited unmistakeable signs of tiring, while Mr. R. Hilton was quite equal to the exigencies of the small part of Brander. The orchestra was, as usual, admirable, and Mr. Manns did his utmost to redeem the work from what, at times, seemed inevitable disaster.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A successful concert was given, under distinguished patronage, at the Forest Hill Baths, on the 12th inst., when a most attractive programme was provided by the following artists:—Miss Alice Gomes, Miss Amy Avant, Miss Jessie Hotine, Mr. Alfred Nicol, Mr. J. Dalgety Henderson, Herr Posnanski (solo violinist), Herr Georg Enzel (solo violoncellist), Mr. T. Avant (solo pianist), and Mr. Alfred Allen, the latter officiating as accompanist.

The Maidenhead Philharmonic Society brought their season to a close with a fine performance of Bennett's "May Queen," on Tuesday, the 20th inst. The principal artists were Madame Lita Jarratt, Mr. Dyved Lewys, and Mr. David Hughes. Conductor, Mr. J. G. Wrigley, Mus. Bac., Oxon. A short miscellaneous selection formed the second part of programme.

On Thursday, 12th April, Mr. J. H. E. Ashworth, Organist of St. Margaret's, Wandsworth Common, gave his First Popular Concert in St. Andrew's Hall, Balham, at which he directed a very creditable performance of Beethoven's C minor Symphony, and Schubert's "Rosamunde" Overture. The orchestra was represented by two grand pianos, played by Mme. Ashworth, Misses Whiteside, M. Smith, and Grace Withall, and a large American organ, with which the concert-giver produced some capital effects, particularly in the sustained "wood-wind" parts, and in the fortissimo passages. Mr. Ashworth, in his prospectus, deprecated any comparison with an orchestral performance, but sought, with such means as were at his disposal, "to make more familiar the finest instrumental works of the great musicians." The large audience showed by their attention and hearty applause their appreciation of Mr. Ashworth's praiseworthy endeavours. Mention must be made of the artistic singing of Mme. Ashworth, Mme. Rich, and Mr. Ager Grover, who contributed largely to the success of the evening.

The gentlemen connected with Magdalen College, Oxford, who have formed a choir under the title of "Magdalen Vagabonds," after gaining for themselves a considerable reputation in the provinces for their music and their charity, made their first appearance before a London audience at the Princes' Hall on Thursday last week. Their singing of glees and part-songs by Webbe, Spofforth, Horsley, etc., was good in its way, albeit a way not expected from real live vagabonds; and the ladies might have been assured that the performers would roar like any sucking doves. The solo singing was even more decorous and mild, especially the comfortable utterance by a good-natured gentleman of Gounod's impassioned song, "Maid of Athens." In short, the Magdalen Vagabonds displayed a degree of respectability, in more than one sense of the word, which would have pacified the severest representative of Bumbledom in days gone by.

At a time when juvenile performances succeed in attracting so much interest, and few artists above the witching age of 15 have much chance of a hearing, the claims on public attention of Master Harold Bauer and his sisters must not be overlooked. These children are receiving a steady musical education in our midst, and their appearances before the public are at such regular, but infrequent intervals, as may serve to further fit them for their profession. The Princes' Hall was fairly well filled on Tuesday evening for their concert, many young people being amongst the audience. The rendering of the pieces was, in every case, very creditable, and, in some cases, even artistically meritorious. Master Harold Bauer gave the Adagio from Spohr's 9th Violin Concerto with musicianly feeling, and sustained his part in the concerted music with admirable steadiness. Miss Ethel (pianoforte), worked well in conjunction with her brother, only now and then showing traces of the flurry or slipshod haste which marred her rendering of Schuman's "Carnaval;" her most successful effort was Grieg's Ballade in G minor, into the introductory and closing bars of which she infused some charm of expression. Little Miss Winifred played the second violin part in the trio remarkably well. Miss Marguerite Hall, who was in excellent voice, and sang from memory, gave Schubert's "Die junge Nonne," and Kjerulf's "Love voices," and "On the Ling ho!"

Mr. Arthur Walenn's concert at the Athenæum, Camden Road, on Wednesday, April 11th, was exceedingly well attended. The Walenn quartet of strings has already been frequently heard, and on this occasion was heard to particular advantage, the accompaniment for quartet of strings to a manuscript song by the late gifted musician, M. Farquharson Walenn, arranged by Mr. Arthur Walenn, being so well rendered as to necessitate an encore. Madame Belle Cole sang the solo part. Master Gerald Walenn, an infant prodigy, played Sainton's "Romance," and the "Hungarian Dance, No. 2," by Brahms-Joachim, with excellent tone and precision. The string quartet in B flat, by Dittersdorf, obtained an enthusiastic recall for the talented Walenn family.

A feature of Mr. George Leake's annual concerts has been their high class character, and the standard of excellence was maintained on April 5th, when the Town Hall, Halstead, Essex, was again crowded by a fashionable and appreciative audience. The concert took the form of a "chamber" concert. The programme opened with "Sonata in D" (Niels Gade), for violin (Mr. Armfield) and piano (Mr. Leake). Mr. A. R. Blagrove, who is a medalist of the Royal College of Music, gave the "Nocturne in E flat" (Chopin), with fine effect. The gem of the evening was the "Concerto in A minor" (De Beriot), by Mr. H. Armfield. Every passage was truthfully rendered, and the bowing was perfection. Mr. Armfield was encored, and substituted "Le Carnaval de Venise." The second part commenced with the pianoforte solo, "Grand Sonata Pathétique" (Beethoven), which could not fail at the hands of a performer like Mr. Leake, to be given with effect. The violoncello solos "Pensée Melancolique" (Ersfield) and "Etude de Concert" (Dunkler) were given by Mr. Blagrove. The latter was cleverly executed, and provoked a warm encore. Mr. Armfield next gave the unaccompanied violin solos "Siciliano" (Bach) and "Les Arpéges" (Paganini). Both were remarkable performances, though differing widely in character. The concert concluded with the "Trio in D" for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello (F. E. Bache); it consisted of three movements, and was brilliantly executed. The vocal music, which formed a minor portion of the programme was entrusted to Mrs. Carlisle. We understand that Mr. Armfield has received the decoration usually conferred by the Berlin Philharmonic Society upon those who particularly distinguish themselves as soloists. The decoration consists of a clasp, bearing the words, "Causa honoris."

Following, but only to a certain extent, in the steps of St. Anne's, Soho, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, St. Andrew's, Ashley Place, and other churches, the choir of St. John's, Waterloo Road, gave, two Sundays ago, an oratorio performance, the work selected being Benedict's "St. Peter." As a whole, the performance was creditable, though the basses and tenors were lamentably wanting in force and precision in counterpoint passages like that which occurs in No. 5, the chorus "The Lord will not turn His face." The solos were well rendered, and the organ accompaniment was admirable. The fact that the organ of St. John's Church is rich only in reeds, and poor in diapasons, was a decided advantage on this occasion, as it enabled the organist to cover, in some measure, the lack of an orchestra.

Next Week's Music.

THIS DAY (SATURDAY).

Mr. Manns's Benefit	Crystal Palace.	3
"Elijah"	Albert Hall.	3
Otto Hegner	Princes' Hall.	3

THURSDAY, 26.

Finsbury Choral Association	Holloway Hall.	7.30

FOREIGN.

DEATHS.—At Baltimore, aged 64, Ernest Szemelenyi, pianist, &c. —At Mannheim, aged 73, Joseph Schlosser, for many years tenor of the Mannheim Court Theatre.—At Milan, Antonio Picasso, ispettore d'orchestra at the Scala, and singer.—At Paris, aged 74, Charles Valentin Alkan (Alkan aîné) whose real surname was Morhange, composer and professor; also Jean Conte, aged 58, violinist and composer; also Jacques Hochstetter, choirmaster of Saint-Augustin; also Victor Herpin, aged 42, conductor and composer.—At Syracuse, aged 68, Guiseppe Privitera, composer, conductor, and author.

GEORGETOWN, DEMERARA, March 16.—A very delightful evening with "Home Music" was provided by the Honourable J. H. Webb for the delectation of the members and friends of the Churchmen's Union on the night of the 5th inst., at the parochial room in the basement of St. Philip's Parsonage. In the absence of the Honourable Charles Bruce, Mr. G. H. Hawtayne, C M.G., presided. The treatise on "Home Music' prepared by the lecturer was appropriately illustrated by vocal contributions from Mr. and Mrs. Webb, Mrs. Vyfhuis, Mrs. James, the Rev. Canon Castell, Messrs. Hughes and H. G. Williams, Master Smellie proving an efficient accompanist and interpreter of the instrumental illustrations.

PROVINCIAL.

CHELTENHAM.—Two sacred concerts were given at the Winter Gardens recently, in aid of the funds of the Cheltenham General Hospital. In both, the five sisters who form the Fraser quintet were deservedly successful, being re-called to the platform after their appearances in solo and concerted music. Miss Violet sang Gounod's "Ave Maria," with a violin obbligato supplied by her sister, "Angels ever bright and fair," and other sacred songs; Miss Stella gave a violin soli by Vieuxtemps, and Papini; and Miss Mabel, Ernst's "Elégie." All four instrumentalists combined in a Mendelssohn sacred quartet, arranged from the "Elijah," and other music.

BIRMINGHAM, April 16.—Mr. Carl Rosa's Opera Company terminated a successful season of English Opera on Saturday, when "Robert le Diable" was given. The Theatre Royal was more or less crowded nightly, and seats were at a premium. Madame Georgina Burns created quite a sensation as Isabella. From all parts of the house floral offerings were showered on the stage. Equally enthusiastic was the demonstration on Friday night, when Madame Marie Roze appeared for the only time as Galatea in Victor Massé's opera. The annual Clef Club Concert attracted a crowded assembly, including the Mayor (Mr. Councillor Maurice Pollack), Madame Marie Roze, Colonel Mapleson, &c. The programme, though of too lengthy a character, was not devoid of merit. Several novelties were introduced, as. for instance Dr. Bridge's part song "The Festival" (Ballad of Haroun al Raschid) for male choir and soli. Dr. Herbert Wareing also produced a new song and a motett for full choir. The instrumental items were, Schubert's beautiful octet for string and wind instruments, given in an exquisite manner by local performers, and Goetz's quintet for piano and strings. The principal vocalists were: Miss Adelaide Mullen, Mr. Bragg, Mr. Mobberley, Mr. G. Brewerton, Mr. Percy R. Taunton. Solo violinist Mr. T. M. Abbott, and solo pianist Mr. W. A. Brewerton. The last chamber concert organised by the Birmingham and Midland Musical Guild was the best of the series. Beethoven's difficult string quartet in F major, op 59, the first of a set of three dedicated to Count Rasoumowski, was magnificently played by Messrs. Abbott (père et fils) and Messrs. A. J. and E. W. Priestley. Rubinstein's charming pianoforte trio in B flat, op. 62, formed the concluding item. Dr. R. M. Winn was the pianist, and played with masterly skill an etude of Chopin and a barcarolle in G, by Rubinstein, also distinguishing himself in the trio. The vocalist was Mdlle. Marie Luisa Ratto; the accompanist Mr. T. Troman, Mus. Bac.—O. P.

MANCHESTER, April 16.—The musical season here is now over, and in all probability there will be little worth recording during the summer months. Until recently we could generally count on one or two recitals as a break in the long monotony, but latterly virtuosi have given us a wide berth in the summer. Herr Stavenhagen was expected to give two concerts here this month, but unfortunately his triumphant Russian tour has made such demands on his health that he has been ordered to cancel all engagements for the present, and to seek rest at Weimar. The absence of the exhibition too will be greatly felt by many who recall the delightful evenings spent there last year. Fortunately, an effort is to be made to supply the want thus created The committee of the Botanical Gardens, where the exhibition was held, propose to make a bid for popularity by instituting, during the summer, open air concerts of the same nature as those which were so much appreciated last year. Some of the best bands in Europe are to be engaged, and no efforts are being spared to make the project a success. Weekly concerts will also be given in the Concert Hall. Hitherto no undertaking of a similar nature has been attempted in Manchester, and we have little doubt that the result will be a substantial addition to the present number of subscribers. This week Mr. Leslie's Opera Company has been appearing at the Prince's Theatre in "Dorothy." It is very evident that Cellier's opera is in no present danger of losing its popularity, for the house has been crowded every night by highly appreciative audiences. The company is much the same as that which has appeared here on previous occasions, and all the members are perfectly familiar with their parts. Indeed the performance is in almost all respects a most admirable one, and the excellent way in which the piece is mounted contributes materially to the total effect.

CIRENCESTER.—The Cirencester Choral Society gave a successful concert at the Town Hall last week. Dr. Stainer's "Daughter of Jairus" formed the first part of the programme, and selections from Haydn's "Creation" followed. The principals were Miss Kate Fusselle, Madame De Lisle, Mr. Albert G. Bailey, principal tenor at New College, Oxford, and Mr. Woodward, principal bass of Gloucester Cathedral. A small orchestra, with the aid of Mr. W. A. Gardner at the piano and Mr. Miller at the American organ, rendered the accompaniments, and the members of the Cirencester Choral Society sang the choruses with steadiness and intelligence, Mr. Edward Brind conducting.

GLASGOW, April 17.—The Carl Rosa Opera Company entered on a six nights' engagement at the Grand, last night, the opera selected for the opening being the English version of "Le Nozze de Figaro." The house was crowded. Mr. Leslie Crotty appeared as Figaro, Madame Georgina Burns, the Countess, and instead of Miss Kate Drew Miss Fanny Moody as Susannah; Cherubino was played by Madame Marie Roze, the Count by Mr. F. H. Celli. The minor parts were in the capable hands of Messrs. Aynsley Cook, W. Esmond, C. Campbell, and Miss Annie Cook. The other operas announced are "Carmen," "Maritana," "Don Giovanni," "Faust," a repetition of "Figaro," and the "Bohemian Girl."—E. J. R. B.

NEW YORK.

The monument to the author of the "Star-Spangled Banner" arrived in San Francisco from Italy recently, after a voyage of 187 days from Genoa.

Among the bequests of James Lick was one of 60,000 dollars for the erection of a monument to the author of the national hymn, the "Star-Spangled Banner." The contract for construction was awarded Feb. 7, 1885, and the eminent American sculptor, W. W. Story, was selected to design and construct the monument. Mr. Story went to Rome, and for two years toiled upon his task in the Barberi palace. The statue will be set up in the children's playground at the park, south of the conservatory valley, San Francisco. It will be placed on level ground, where a fine view of it can be had.

The two main statues and bas-reliefs are of bronze, while the monument proper is carved out of travertine, a calcareous stone, sometimes known as Tufacco marble. It is a reddish-yellow, slightly variegated with dark-blue lines, and its durability is amply attested by St. Peter's Cathedral at Rome, portions of the Coliseum, and the Porta Civita Vecchia, all of which are in a perfect state of preservation. Mr. Story suggested travertine because its yellowish tone is more agreeable to the eye and it was susceptible of the most delicate artistic finish.

The monument is 51 feet from the base to the top of the flag. The figure of America surmounting the flag, 8 feet in height, and that of Key little larger than life-size. The figure of America stands out in bold attitude, and embodies the spirit of patriotic freedom. In her right hand she holds the Star-Spangled Banner, the folds gently drooping over her back. The pedestal upon which America rests is a delicately beautiful block of marble, each corner of which is surmounted by a miniature eagle. The figure of Key is one of peaceful pensiveness, with a very thoughtful look on his face. The bas-reliefs on the sides of the monument are 4 feet in height and of bronze.

Francis Scott Key was not only a poet, but an eloquent lawyer, and he was honoured by the generation who knew him as a worthy citizen. He died suddenly on Jan. 11, 1843, in Baltimore, and was buried in the Mount Olivet Cemetery. Years after, a plain marble slab was placed at the head of his grave by George H. Pendleton, who married the poet's daughter. Some attempts have been made to erect a more fitting monument to the poet in Baltimore, but they have been unsuccessful. A Bill was introduced in Congress by Congressman Unger, of Maryland, for this purpose, but nothing came of it. Afterwards a Bill was introduced in the Maryland Legislature providing for the donation of 5,000 dols. for a monument, but the measure failed of passage. It is more than likely that the name of the author of the "Star-Spangled Banner" would have gradually faded from memory but for the patriotism of James Lick.—American Art Journal.

A concert was given under the patronage of their Royal Highnesses Princess Beatrice and Prince Henry of Battenberg, at the Sala Filarmonica, Florence, last week, by Miss Marguerite Hall and Mr. William Nicholl. The programme included songs and duets by Beethoven, A. Goring-Thomas, Schubert, Mary Carmichael, Luzzi, Hackensöllner, Alice Mary Smith, Maude Valerie White, Balfe, and Kjerulf. Miss Mary Carmichael was the pianist. The concert was a success; the artists and the music were much appreciated.

Mr. Frederic Lamond, who made such a good impression by his compositions and his performances at Berlin, has followed up his success in Frankfort-on-the-Maine, Dresden, and Leipsic, where he has been giving concerts.

M. de Pachmann is on his way to Denmark. Madame Albani has started for Norway. Madame Sembrich will be heard at San Remo before she comes to London for the season.

The inhabitants of Douglas and Peel, Isle of Man, are much indebted to Miss M. L. Wood, A.C.O., for her labours in the cause of music; and recently that lady arranged for an excellent rendering of a large selection from "St. Paul," at Peel New Church, where she is organist.

To Musicians and Others.

For BUYING, EXCHANGING, or SELLING Books on all subjects, Art Objects, Musical Instruments, Home Pets, Domestic Appliances, or any article whatever of personal property, THE BAZAAR, EXCHANGE and MART is unequalled. It circulates largely throughout the kingdom, and private ladies and gentlemen have no difficulty in negotiating sales or exchanges without publicity and to the best advantage. Get a copy and judge for yourself. The Globe says:—"Like all grand conceptions, the process is remarkable for its simplicity." Price 2d., at all Newsagents, or copy sent for two stamps from the Office, 170, Strand, London, W.C.

Patent Warm, Noiseless, Non-Slippery, Non-Fading, Plain and Ornamental

TESSELLATED PAVEMENTS,

For Churches, Halls, Passages, &c.

More substantial than Sheet Linoleum, and less expensive than Ceramic Tiles. The Patterns are Ineffaceable. They can be laid and are ready for use in one day. No mortar or loose boards required. They are highly approved in London, and in all the Home Counties.

Patent Parquetry Borders of the same material for surrounding bed and other rooms, in colours to harmonise with decorations, centre carpets, and furniture. Should be chosen simultaneously with the Decorations.

SAMPLES AND ESTIMATES SENT FREE BY

G. CHILES, WHOLESALE UPHOLSTERER,

89, Dynevor Road, Stoke Newington, London, N.

DEFRIES' Safety Water White Oil.

The Purest, Whitest, and Best Burning Mineral Oil in England.

EQUAL IN QUALITY TO OILS SOLD UNDER FANCY NAMES, at from 1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d. per gall
FOR USE IN ALL LAMPS AND STOVES.

PRICE 1s. PER GALLON.

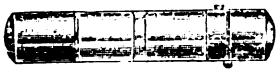
FREE DELIVERED IN LONDON AND ALL SUBURBS.

Minimum, 2 gallons. The 5 and 10 gallon drums are fitted with taps. Drums charged, and full price allowed when returned.

Terms: Cash on or before delivery. Deposit Accounts opened for Oil.

DEFRIES' SAFETY LAMP & OIL CO., LIMITED,
43 and 44, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON, E.C.

THORNHILL'S
NEW "GLOVE" BOTTLE.



FOR PERFUME & SMELLING SALTS.

Large Variety of Patterns at Various Prices

THORNHILL'S TOILET CASES FOR LADIES AND GENTLEMEN

THORNHILL'S ARTISTIC FANS.

A LARGE and VARIED STOCK of the BEST QUALITY.

PRESENTS.

—o—

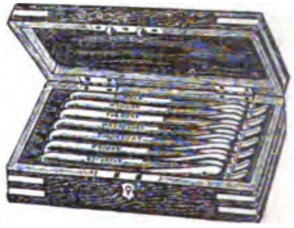
THORNHILL'S
Fully Illustrated
LIST
OF
LATEST
NOVELTIES

POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

THORNHILL'S
OPERA GLASSES.

IN GREAT VARIETY.

THORNHILL'S
Guaranteed Razors Singly or in Sets.



W. THORNHILL & CO., TO THE QUEEN & ROYAL FAMILY. 144, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON. ESTABLISHED 1734.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER'S

LINEN COLLARS, CUFFS, AND SHIRTS.

Samples and Price Lists Post Free.

COLLARS—LADIES' 3-fold, from 3s. 6d. per doz. GENTS' 4-fold, 4s. 11d. to 5s. 11d. per doz.

CUFFS—For Ladies or Gentlemen, 5s. 11d. to 10s. 6d. per doz.

SHIRTS—Best quality Long Cloth, with 4-fold Linen Fronts 35s. 6d per half-doz. (To measure, 2s. extra.)

N.B.—OLD SHIRTS made as good as new with best materials in Neckbands, Cuffs, and Fronts, for 14s. the half-doz.

ROBINSON AND CLEAVER, BELFAST.

Dr. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE.

For sore throat, hoarseness, and relaxed throat, also for improving the voice

FOR SINGING AND SPEAKING

without fatiguing the voice. Celebrated in every town in Europe, India, America, and the Colonies. Testimonials from Patti, Trebelli, Patey, Santley, and the most eminent medical men.

Sold in boxes; 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d.; also in bottles for abroad,

MUSIC STRINGS—WHOLESALE & RETAIL.

J. P. GUIVIER & Co.,

Manufacturers and Importers of all kinds of Strings
FOR
VIOLIN, VIOLA, CELLO, DOUBLE BASS, HARP,
ZITHER, GUITAR, BANJO,
Have always in STOCK the Largest ASSORTMENT of any House in the World.

6, GOLDEN SQUARE, W.

A BLESSING IN EVERY FAMILY.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.

These Remedies have stood the test of FIFTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE and are pronounced the best medicines for family use. Tens of thousands of written testimonials bear witness to their marvellous curative properties. They are acknowledged by the whole civilised world to be the greatest efficacy in every form of disease.
Sold by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors.

Manufactured only at THOMAS HOLLOWAY'S ESTABLISHMENT
78, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.
N.B.—Advice gratis at the above address, daily, between the hours of 11 and 3, or by letter.

ASCHERBERG PIANOS.

"I only perform an act of justice when I ascribe my successes to a great extent to the excellent Instruments from your factory, on which I was favoured to play before the public. Remain convinced that I shall at all times and everywhere give preference to your Pianos over all others, and accept the assurance of my unbounded esteem.

Respectfully,

VLADIMIR VON PACHMANN."

ASCHERBERG PIANO DEPOT,

211, REGENT STREET, W.

FOR SINGERS AND TEACHERS.

THE "MITRE" LOZENGE.

CONTAINS NO OPIATE.

PLEASANT TO THE TASTE

TRADE MARK

For Voice, Throat, & Coughs.

TESTIMONIALS.

"They are the very best I have ever used; they give an undoubted freedom and freshness to the voice."
VERNON RIGBY.

"I never experienced so much and marked benefit as I did last Sunday from your Mitre Lozenges."
T. MAJOR LESTER, Hon. Canon of Liverpool.

"The effect produced upon the voice is excellent. Please send another box."
H. SAYERS, Chaplain of Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford.

"Having had occasion to try the Mitre Lozenges for a severe hoarseness, I am pleased to say they have afforded me the desired relief."
BASSETT ROE.

"For clearing and strengthening the voice, I consider your Mitre Lozenges the best I have ever tried."
ELIZA THOMAS.

"Having found your Lozenges very good for the voice in singing, I shall have great pleasure in recommending them to my pupils."
ELLEN SAUNDERS, from the London Academy of Music.

"I have pleasure in testifying to the excellence of your Mitre Lozenges. As a vocalist and teacher of singing I have found them of great benefit to myself and pupils."
KATHERINE WALLACE.

"Miss Eldena Eldon was suffering from a most irritable throat, which the Lozenges instantly relieved."

"I have experienced great relief and assistance from your Mitre Lozenges."
GEO. GIDDENS, (Criterion Theatre.)

"I know the Mitre Lozenges well, and think them excellent."
GEO. GROSSMITH.

"They are very agreeable and effective."
STANLEY LEATHES, D.D., Prebendary of St. Paul's.

"They are the best Lozenges extant."
CHARLES STRONG,
Choirmaster St. Augustine and Christ Church, Highbury, & Teacher of Singing.

Dear Sirs,—"I have tried your Mitre Lozenges and consider them invaluable to Vocalists, or to anyone who has to exercise the voice much. Having found them so efficacious I have already recommended them to several of my pupils." Yours truly,
G. CARAVOGLIA.

"They are the best I ever used."
EGBERT ROBERTS,

"I have found the Mitre Lozenges very efficacious in restoring the voice, when impaired from the effects of cough and cold.
FREDERIC PENNA, Professor of Singing and Elocution.

"I find the Mitre Lozenges very palatable and efficacious."
SINCLAIR DUNN, (The Scottish Tenor.)

"The Mitre Lozenges arrived most opportunely as I was suffering from a severe cough and cold. I feel it was through them that I was enabled to sing that morning."
LIONEL DAVIS.

"I found great relief in clearing the voice when hoarse from your valuable Mitre Lozenges, and shall recommend them to my friends."
THORNBER ROE.

Sold by all Chemists at 1s. 1½d, and 2s. 9d.

Made for the Proprietors, J. & G. HAWKE, by ALLEN & HANBURYS, Plough Court, Lombard-St., London, E.C
POST FREE ON RECEIPT OF STAMPS.

Printed and Published by MacRae, Curtice & Co. (Limited), 12, Catherine Street, Strand, W.C.

WEEKLY.]

The Musical World.

ESTABLISHED 1822.
REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED; IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST WEEKLY, 17/6 PER ANNUM (Payable in advance).

VOL. 67.—NO. 17. SATURDAY, APRIL 28, 1888. PRICE {3D. Unstamped. 4D. By Post.

THE

KARN AMERICAN ORGANS,

Manufactured by D. W. KARN & CO.,

WOODSTOCK, ONTARIO, CANADA.

The Karn Organ is a reproduction of the Pipe Organ in miniature, of pre-eminent value as an effective music exponent for the Home.

OUR AIM has not been to see how cheaply an organ can be built, BUT HOW CHEAPLY A FIRST-CLASS ORGAN can be made.

OUR CLAIM is that we are building organs equal to, if not surpassing, all others, at the very lowest reasonable prices.

COMPARISON CHEERFULLY INVITED.

New Illustrated Catalogue & Price Lists Free of the
SOLE EUROPEAN AGENTS:

THE SCHREIBER PIANO CO.,
18, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W.

To the Trade and Profession.

OLD VIOLINS.

MESSRS. BEARE AND SON, Manufacturers and Importers of every Description of Musical Instruments, Strings, Fittings, &c.,
34, Rathbone Place, London, W.,
Invite an inspection of their collection of old Violins,
All genuine examples of the celebrated old Masters.
Over 300 old instruments from which to select.

Old Violins from £5.
Old Tenors from £5.
Old Violoncellos from £10.
Old Double Basses from £15.

Sole Wholesale Agents for James Tubb's celebrated Bows.
Bows by the old makers also frequently in stock.
Tested strings unequalled for durability and equality of tone.
Repairs of every kind of Musical Instrument executed promptly by experienced workmen.

BEARE AND SON,
34, RATHBONE PLACE, LONDON, W.

Special Notices.

MR. THEODORE WERNER'S ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—MONDAY EVENING NEXT, April 30; Tuesday Evenings, May 15 and 29, at 8.30, in St. James's Hall. The programmes will include the following important works: Beethoven's Concerto, Spohr's 9th Concerto, Joachim's Hungarian Concerto, Paganini's Concerto, Wienfawski's Concerto, and Vieuxtemps's Concerto for violin, with orchestral accompaniments. An orchestra of 60 performers, selected and conducted by Mr. August Manns.—Tickets, 10s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 3s., and 1s., at Chappell and Co.'s; usual Agents; Austin's Ticket Office; and of Mr. T. Werner, 175, New Bond-street.

BEETHOVEN'S VIOLIN CONCERTO, with Cadenzas by Dr. Joachim.

VIEUXTEMPS'S VIOLIN CONCERTO.

PAGANINI'S VIOLIN CONCERTO.

MR. THEODORE WERNER will PERFORM the above Violin Concertos at his FIRST ORCHESTRAL CONCERT, MONDAY EVENING NEXT, April 30th, at ST. JAMES'S HALL. Conductor, Mr. August Manns.—Tickets, 10s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 3s., 1s., at Chappell and Co.'s, and Austin's Ticket Office.

OTTO HEGNER'S GRAND ORCHESTRAL CONCERT, at ST. JAMES'S HALL, on MONDAY NEXT, at three o'clock.—Conductor, Mr. F. H. Cowen.

OTTO HEGNER, on this occasion, besides pianoforte solos, will PLAY, accompanied by orchestra, Beethoven's Concerto No. 1 in C, and Mendelssohn's Capriccio in B minor.

OTTO HEGNER'S PROGRAMME, ST. JAMES'S HALL, MONDAY AFTERNOON NEXT, at three: Overture, "Nozze de Figaro" (Mozart); Concerto for pianoforte and orchestra, No. 1 in C (Beethoven); Symphony in B minor (unfinished) (Schubert); Etude A flat, Valse A flat (Chopin), Otto Hegner; Gavotte, "Yellow Jasmine," (F. H. Cowen); Capriccio, pianoforte, in B minor (Mendelssohn), Otto Hegner.—Tickets, 7s. 6d., 3s., and 1s., at Chappell & Co.'s, New Bond Street, and Austin's Office, St. James's Hall.

TOWN HALL, BIRMINGHAM.

AN ORGANIST is required for the BIRMINGHAM TOWN HALL. The Organ is well known as a fine instrument of four manuals and eventy-six stops, and it has been decided to expend, at an early date, a large sum in thoroughly renovating and modernising its mechanism and appliances, and adding to its resources. The Organist will, under certain conditions, have the exclusive control of the Organ, and will be at liberty to give Recitals for his own benefit. He will also receive the fees payable in respect of Meetings or performances at which the Organ is required. Applications (marked "Town Hall Organist") are to be made, not later than May 8th, to Mr. C. G. BEALE, 3, Newhall Street, Birmingham, from whom a Schedule can be obtained by post, showing the conditions of the appointment.

DRURY LANE.—AUGUSTUS HARRIS, Lessee and Manager. EVERY EVEVING, at 7.30, the great sporting drama, A RUN OF LUCK. Written by Henry Pettit and Augustus Harris.—Box-office open daily from ten to six.

A RUN OF LUCK, at DRURY LANE.—"14, George-street Mansion House, London, E.C., Nov. 15, 1886. To Augustus Harris, Esq., Drury-lane Theatre, W.C.—We have examined the books of Drury-lane Theatre for the period of your management (1879-1886), and we find that the receipts of the present drama, 'A Run of Luck,' exceed those of any drama produced at this theatre during your management.—(Signed) COOPER BROTHERS and Co., Chartered Accountants."

TO ORGANISTS.—For Professional Practice, Teaching, or Concert purpose, and Home use, the "Bach Model" Pedal Instrument is only reliable substitute for a pipe organ. For design, improved action, connections, and tone, it embraces the merits of the highest class instruments; and without paying an exorbitant price you may have an instrument with organ measurements that removes the deficiencies hitherto experienced in pedal instruments.—Apply for illustrated lists, terms, and prices, to J. L Scholefield, Musical Instrument Manufacturer, Huddersfield.

Institutes and Colleges.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, KENSINGTON GORE, LONDON, S.W.

Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.

President - - H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES, K G.
Director - - Sir GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L., LL.D.

Next College Concert, May 24th, at 7.30 p.m.

The Half Term will commence on June 6th, 1888.

Regulations may be obtained from the Registrar, Mr. George Watson, at the College.

CHARLES MORLEY, Honorary Secretary.

UNIVERSITY OF TRINITY COLLEGE, TORONTO. (The Church of England University of Upper Canada.)

FACULTY OF MUSIC.

The next Examinations for the degree of Bachelor of Music will be held simultaneously in Toronto and London in Easter week, 1888. Women are admissable to these examinations. For particulars apply to Rev. E. K. Kendal, D.C.L., Registrar for England, Southsea.

TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON. For MUSICAL EDUCATION and Examination, &c., and for the Granting of Certificates and Diplomas in Music. Inst. 1872

President - - The EARL of ABERDEEN.

THE NEXT TERM COMMENCES APRIL 30, when new students are received. The following is a list of subjects taught and professors: Harmony, Counterpoint, Form and Orchestration, Composition, Musical Acoustics, Pianoforte, Organ, Solo Singing, Violin, Violoncello, Sight Singing, Flute, Oboe, Clarionet, etc. Vocal and Aural Physiology, Voice Production, Lectures, Elocution, Italian, French, and German.

Professors Higgs, Hunt, Saunders, Turpin, and Turner; MM. Bambridge, Barrett, Beuthin, Bolton, Carrodus, Cole, Corder, Dornbusch, Dubrucq, Farmelli, Fry, Gibson, Goodworth, Hovelacque, Lazarus, Lockwood, Malsch, Mann, Mount, Nappi, Ogbourne, Pinney, Radcliff, Reynolds Semple, Stone, Szczepanowski, Visetti, Wells, Willing, and Woolhouse.

PROSPECTUSES, including list of new (reduced) fees, and all particulars can be obtained from the Secretary, Trinity College, London, W.

By Order of the Academical Board.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, W.

GUILD OF ORGANISTS, 35, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C.

Patron—The Right Rev. THE LORD BISHOP OF LONDON.

PRESIDENTS.
The REV. CANON SIR F. H. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., Mus. Doc.
Sir HERBERT OAKELEY, Bart., Mus. Doc.
Sir ROBERT STEWART, Mus. Doc.

Vice-President—WILLIAM PINNEY, Mus. Bac., Oxon.

Warden—CHARLES VINCENT, Mus. Doc., Oxon.

Established to advance the cause of Church music and the truest interests of its Professors, etc.

Members of the Church of England and Ireland, and the Episcopal Church of Scotland, are eligible for election. Subscription: Professional Organists (Associates) 10s. 6d. per annum; Amateurs (Members) 15s. per annum; Life subscription, 5 guineas.

Next Fellowship examination in Easter Week.

Prospectus and further particulars may be obtained from the Hon. Sec., Dr. J. H. Lewis, Staines, Middlesex.

London Organ School and International College of Music.

Established 1865, by the Rev. SCOTSON CLARK, Mus.B.
Patron—His Grace The ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY.
Principal—HENRY CLARK.

THE NEXT STUDENTS' MATINEE MUSICALE will take place SATURDAY, April 28, at four p.m.

Piano, Singing, Violin, 'Cello, Flute, Harp, Organ Lessons, with Practice, and Harmony. Private Lessons and Classes.

Candidates for Musical Degrees at any of the English Universities are expressly prepared for the Matriculation Examinations by Oxford and Cambridge graduates (in honours). Branches at Kensington and St. John's Wood.

Apply to the Director of Classes, T. H. Y. TROTTER M.A., Mus. Bac., Oxon., 3, Princes Street, Cavendish Square. W. (close to Oxford Circus).

SINGING LESSONS.—CAREFUL TRAINING OF THE VOICE.—DR. ARTHUR HELBIG has a few vacancies for Professional or Amateur Students. Education in Dramatic and Concert Singing.—Address 4, New Bond-street, W.

Publishers' Announcements.

"A perfect little gem of a composition."—Truth, 22nd Dec., 1887.
"A richly-harmonised melody."—Court and Society.
"An elegant piano romance."—Standard.
"A charming little sketch."—Court Journal.

RESIGNATION. Pianoforte solo. By EUGENE WAGNER. Post free 1s. 6d.—Charles Woolhouse, 81, Regent Street, London, W.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TECHNICAL EXERCISES for the Pianoforte, on the Deppe principle, systematically arranged by C. A. Ehrenfechter. Price, 2s. 6d., net.

London: WEEKES & Co., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W.

The Universal Circulating Music Library

(ESTABLISHED 1854.)

IS THE LARGEST IN THE WORLD.

SUBSCRIPTION £2 2s. PER ANNUM, £1 8s. PER HALF YEAR, &c.

MUSIC can be selected at end of term, as subscribers' property, equal to one-half of their subscription at full price. All Music, English and Foreign, &c., promptly supplied.—For Prospectuses apply to
CHARLES WOOLHOUSE, Proprietor.
81, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised & Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR THE VOICE,

By T. A. Wallworth.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Madame Alwina Valleria, Mr. Iver M'Kay, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & CO. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

IN SIX GRADES.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH.

Under the Sanction and Approval of the Rev. Sir FREDERICK A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., M.A., Mus. Doc., and of Sir G. A. MACFARREN, Mus. Doc.

THE MUSICIAN:

A GUIDE FOR PIANOFORTE STUDENTS,

By RIDLEY PRENTICE.

CONTAINS ANALYSES OF WELL-KNOWN PIECES PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED, ENABLING THE PUPIL TO UNITE A STUDY OF MUSICAL FORM WITH THE ORDINARY PIANOFORTE PRACTICE.

Saturday Review.—"We are far from suggesting that there is any royal road for acquiring technical knowledge, but we are quite certain Mr. Ridley Prentice's road is in every way the pleasantest that has yet been laid before any pianoforte student."

Academy.—"A knowledge of form is imparted in simple and pleasant language. We heartily commend it to all who desire to understand, satisfactorily interpret, and enjoy beautiful music."

Graphic.—"Written with the laudable purpose of helping the pianoforte student to understand and enjoy beautiful music."

School Board Chronicle.—"A useful book for earnest teachers."

Musical Review.—"Mr. Ridley Prentice has newly developed an important though much neglected branch of the teacher's duties."

Monthly Musical Record.—"No more valuable work of the kind is in existence."

W. SWAN SONNENSCHEIN & CO., PATERNOSTER SQUARE:
And all Book and Music Sellers.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER'S

ROYAL IRISH CAMBRIC POCKET-HANDKERCHIEFS.

Samples and Price Lists Post Free.

Per doz.—Children's, 1s. 3d.; Ladies', 2s. 4½d.; Gents 3s. 6d.

Hemstitched—Ladies', 2s. 11½d.; Gents', 4s. 11d.

—:0:—

BY APPOINTMENTS TO THE QUEEN AND THE CROWN PRINCESS OF GERMANY.

ROBINSON AND CLEAVER, BELFAST.

Professional Cards.

The subscription for a "card" space in these columns is £1 10s. for six months, and £1 per quarter—payable in advance, including copy of the paper each week. Subscriptions should be sent to the office of The Musical World 12, Catherine Street, Strand, London, W.C.

Conductors and Composers.

Mr. FREDERIC H. COWEN,
73, Hamilton Terrace,
St. John's Wood, N.W.

Mr. F. KILVINGTON HATTERSLEY,
A.R.A.M.
(Professor of the Pianoforte, Composer, and Conductor),
17, Finsbury Park Villas,
Green Lanes, N.

Mr. ALBERT VISETTI
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Conductor),
12, Westbourne Park Terrace, W.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN
(Guitar, Concertina, and Gigelira. Wood and Straw Instrument),
22A, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W.

Mr. F. St. JOHN LACY
(Professor of Singing, Composer, and Vocalist, (baritone),
Fitzroy Mansion, Charlotte Street,
Fitzroy Square, W.

Mr. H. MARTYN VAN LENNEP
(Teacher of Singing, Composer, and Conductor),
Address—7, Wimpole Street,
Cavendish Square, W.

Mr. G. ARTHUR HIGGS, F.C.O.
L. Mus. and Tallis Gold Medallist. T.C.L. Pupil of Mr. Albert Visetti. Teacher of Singing, Harmony, Conductor, and Vocalist. (Baritone.)
Address—Trinity College, London, W.

Vocalists—Sopranos.

Madame VALLERIA
(Opera and Concerts),
Bosworth House, Husband's Bosworth,
Rugby.

Miss EDITH DESMOND
(Opera and Concerts),
c/o Nolan & Jackson.

Miss KATE FLINN
(Concerts and Oratorios),
41, Welbeck Street,
Cavendish Square, W.

Mdlle. VELMI
(Opera and Concerts),
17, Chesilton Road, Munster Park,
Fulham, S.W.

Miss AGNES LARKCOM
Has removed to
158, Portsdown Road, W.

Madame ISABEL GEORGE, L.R.A.M.
(Concert and Oratorio),
29, Albany Street, Regent's Park, N.W.

Contraltos.

Miss JOSEPHINE CRAVINO
(Concerts and Oratorio),
2, Sedgmoor Villas,
ivate Lessons given. Camberwell, S.E.

Miss MARY E. DAKIN, R.A.M.
(Mez. Sop.),
Ballads, Oratorio, &c.
31, Monmouth Road,
Bayswater, London, W.

Miss LENA LITTLE
(Concerts),
42, Norfolk Square, Hyde Park, W.

Contraltos.—Continued.

Madame OSCAR POLLACK
(Concerts),
56, Duchess Road,
Edgbaston, Birmingham.

Tenors.

Mr. BARTON McGUCKIN
(Operas, Concerts, and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. Alfred Moul,
26, Old Bond Street, W.,
Or, 270, Elgin Avenue, Maida Vale, W.

Mr. ARNOLD BREEDEN
(Concerts, Oratorio, and Opera),
Address—N. Vert, Esq.,
6, Cork Street, W.

Mr. SEYMOUR JACKSON
(Concerts and Oratorio),
Old Trafford, Manchester.

Mr. PAYNE CLARKE
(Concerts and Oratorio),
28, Devonshire Street, Islington, N.

Mr. J. DALGETY HENDERSON,
Gothic Lodge,
Lordship Lane, S.E.

Mr. REDFERN HOLLINS,
30, St. Stephen's Avenue,
Shepherd's Bush, W.

Mr. BERNARD LANE,
60, Westbourne Park Villas, W.

Chevalier EDWARD SCOVEL
(Opera, Concerts, and Oratorio),
Hotel de L'Europe,
Milan, Italy.

Mr. W. ESMOND,
24, Upper Mount Street, Dublin.

Baritones.

Mr. WALTER CLIFFORD
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concerts),
c/o N. Vert, Esq.,
6, Cork Street, W.

Mr. FREDERIC KING
(Concerts and Oratorio),
19, Canfield Gardens, S. Hampstead.

Mr. NORRIS CROKER,
Egremont, Croxted Road,
West Dulwich, S.E.

Mr. JOSEPH LYNDE
(Oratorio, Opera, and Concert
63, Stafford Place
Buckingham Gate, S.W.

Mr. ALBERT REAKES
(Bass-Baritone, of the "London Ballad Singers," Oratorios, Concerts, &c.),
30, Lancaster Road,
Notting Hill, W.

Herr RAGNAR GREVILLIUS
(Concerts, Oratorio, and Opera),
70, Portsdown Road, Maida Vale, W.

Bass.

Mr. WATKIN MILLS requests that all communications respecting engagements be sent to his new address, Hyacinth Road, Roehampton Park, S.W.

Mr. FRANK CELLI
(Concerts and Oratorio),
c/o Mr. N. Vert, 6, Cork St.,
Burlington Gardens, W.

Trumpet and Cornet.

Mr. THOMAS HARPER,
185, King's Road, N.W

Pianoforte.

Mr. G. PRADEAU
(Lessons and Recitals),
1, Stowe Road,
Shepherd's Bush, W.

Guitar.

Madame SIDNEY PRATTEN, Guitariste, Instructress to H.R.H. the Princess Louise, has returned to town, 22A, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W., where may be had her celebrated book, "Learning the Guitar Simplified," 10s. 6d.

Violin.

Mr. ALLAN CAMPBELL
(Formerly Pupil of Mr. Henry Holmes and Dr. S. S. Wesley),
23, Thicket Road,
Pupils visited and received. Anerley, S.E.

Mr. LESLIE CROTTY and
Madame GEORGINA BURNS,
c/o Mr. Alfred Moul (sole agent),
26, Old Bond Street, W.

Miss AGNES JANSON requests that all communications respecting engagements may be sent to her new address, 36, Albion Place, Hyde Park, W.; or to Mr. N. Vert, 6, Cork Street, W.

The FRASER QUINTET. Misses Violet (Vocalist), Ida, and Ethel (Pianist, Violoncello, and Viola), Mabel and Stella Violinists), play Quartets, Solos, Duets, two Pianofortes, &c. For Engagements, for Concerts, "At Homes," Dinner and Garden Parties.—Address: 121, Adelaide Road, N.W.

MR. HEALEY'S SPECIAL LIST.

Madame LILIAN NORDICA (Soprano)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert),
Address to
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10A, Warwick Street, W.

Mdlle. LOUISE LABLACHE (Mez. Sop.)
(Opera and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10A, Warwick Street, W

Mdlle. HELENE HASTREITER (Contr.)
(Opera, Oratorio, and Concert)
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10A, Warwick Street, W.

Madame BELLE COLE (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10A, Warwick Street, W.

Miss MARGUERITE HALL (Contralto)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10A, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. WILLIAM NICHOLL (Tenor)
28, Belsize Road, N.W.,
Or, Sole Agent, W. B. Healey,
10A, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. JOHN PROBERT (Tenor)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10A, Warwick Street, W

Mr. VAUGHAN EDWARDES (Baritone)
(Concerts and Oratorio),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10A, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. MULES BROWN (Baritone)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10A, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. HENRY POPE (Bass)
(Opera, Concerts, and Oratorio),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10A, Warwick Street, W.

Mr. T. L. CAMPION (Bass)
(Oratorio and Concert),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10A, Warwick Street, W.

Herr WALDEMAR MEYER (Solo Vlnst.)
(Concerts, At Homes, &c.),
Business Manager, W. B. Healey,
10A, Warwick Street.
Regent Street, W.

"TUITION BY CORRESPONDENCE."
Offices—4, MONTGOMERY STREET, CARLOW.
ESTABLISHED 1885.
Candidates rapidly prepared for University, Intermediate, Civil Service, and other Examinations.

"NOTES AND QUERIES" DEPARTMENT.
STUDENTS and Others wishing to have questions answered on French, German, Latin, Greek, Irish, Spanish, or Italian, should send same with a Fee of 1s. for each question, or 5s. for six questions.
MATHEMATICAL and SCIENCE QUESTIONS solved for a Fee of 6d. each, or 2s. 6d. for six questions.
The solutions are supplied by a staff of First Class Graduates, Specialists, &c.
All inquiries and instructions should contain STAMPED ADDRESSED ENVELOPE.

Apply to the Secretary, Examination Syndicate.
THE ACADEMY, 4, MONTGOMERY STREET, CARLOW.

CASSON'S
PATENT
Organ - Building System

SEPARATE Pedal Organs for each Manual. Expressive and Controllable Pedal Basses. Perfect control of all Couplers. Reduction of number of Claviers without loss of efficiency, &c., &c. See testimonials from
Mr. W. T. BEST.
Rev. Sir F. A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart.
Dr. SPARK.
Dr. J. C. BRIDGE, M.A.
Dr. E. W. TAYLOR, F.C.O.
The late Mr. J. STIMPSON.
Mr. R. BARTHOLOMEW.
Mr. J. HEYWOOD, Birmingham.
Mr. G. A. AUDSLEY, F.R.I.B.A.
M. A. J. HIPKINS, F.S.A.
&c., &c.

Apply to the Secretary—
CASSON'S PATENT ORGAN CO., LIMITED,
DENBIGH.

THE MUSICAL WORLD is on sale at MERRYDEW'S Library Boulogne-sur-Mer.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS.—Advertisements should be sent not later than 5 o'clock on Wednesdays, to the Office, 12, Catherine St., Strand.

Facts and Comments.

The Festival performances at Bayreuth commence with "Parsifal" on Sunday, July 22. "Parsifal" will be repeated every following Wednesday and Sunday (July 25, 29, August 1, 5, 8, 12, 15 and 19), the 19th August being the last day of the Festival. The first performance of "Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg" takes place on Monday, July 23, and will be repeated every Thursday and Monday (July 26, 30, August 2, 6, 9, 13, 16) during the four weeks. Seats may be booked at Messrs. Chappell's, Bond Street.

The new symphony by Mr. L. Zavertal, to which we referred recently, will be performed for the first time in London at the Princes' Hall, on the afternoon of April 30th.

It has been decided to close the Macfarren Scholarship Fund on May 19th, by which time it is anticipated that the subscription list will amount to about £1,400. As soon as it is known what is the actual amount which will be available, the general committee, which includes over 200 names of prominent musicians, will be convened in order to determine the conditions of the Scholarship.

The Royal Academy of Music competition for the Llewellyn Thomas gold medal took place on Saturday. The examiners were Messrs. Henry Guy Vernon Rigby and John Bridson (chairman). There were 18 candidates, and the prize was awarded to Kate Norman. The competition for the Evill prize also took place. There were four candidates, and the prize was awarded to William E. Helliwell. The Santley Prize was also competed for. There were two candidates, and the prize was awarded to Arthur Godfrey. On Monday the competition for the Lady Goldsmid Scholarship was held. The examiners were Messrs. Oscar Beringer, Walter Macfarren, A. S. Schloesser, F. Westlake, and A. C. Mackenzie (chairman). There were 29 candidates. The Scholarship was awarded to Catherine Rodbard. The competition for the Sterndale Bennett Scholarship also took place, the examiners being Messrs. Oscar Beringer, F. B. Jewson, Walter Macfarren, A. Schloesser, and A. C. Mackenzie (chairman). There were four candidates, and the scholarship was awarded to Cuthbert Nunn.

A monthly meeting of the Cremona Society was held at the Rooms of the Royal Society of Musicians, No. 12, Lisle-street, Leicester-square, on the evening of April 24th, when a paper on the new instrument, the claviharp, was read by Mr. W. H. Cummings. The President (Mr. E. J. Payne) was in the chair.

In the somewhat sensational case, Bruce v. Musgrove, which had been adjourned for the attendance of the defendant, a member of the firm of Williamson, Garner, and Musgrove, and residing in Australia, an application was made, last week, to the Judge of the Westminster County Court to allow the hearing to stand over for two months to enable the defendant to communicate with his legal advisers. The application was granted, being unopposed by the plaintiff, who was represented by Mr. Austin Metcalfe, Q.C., instructed by Mr. J. Algernon Latham.

The Theatre Royal at Grantham has been totally destroyed by fire. The building was locked up in safety on Saturday evening, preparations having then been in progress for a great meeting of the Salvation Army to be held therein the following day, on the occasion of a visit from Mrs. Bramwell Booth. Between two and three o'clock on Sunday morning a policeman on duty in the neighbourhood raised an alarm of fire, whereupon the Volunteer Fire Brigade promptly turned out and were soon joined in their efforts by a private brigade from the works of Messrs. Hornsby, at Spittlegate, whose engine was manned by employés of the firm. Within twenty minutes of the first alarm, however, the roof of the building fell in with a crash, sending into the sky showers of sparks, which were driven in all directions by a strong wind which blew. It at once became evident that it was impossible to save the building, and the brigades successfully turned their attention towards saving the adjoining dwelling-houses. The damage is estimated at £5,000, the loss being partly covered by insurance in the Phœnix Fire Office.

The committee of the Birmingham Festival, in view of the disappointment caused them by Dvorak, and of other similar mishaps, again applied to Mr. Mackenzie, who has promised to come to the rescue with a choral setting of Burns's "Cottar's Saturday night."

Mr. Goring Thomas's opera, "Nadeshda," has been accepted by Mr. Hofmann, the manager of the Cologne Opera House, and will be performed there in the course of next autumn.

Madame Sofie Menter is to be the pianist at the Philharmonic Concert, 17th May, shortly after which she will give two pianoforte recitals.

Mr. G. H. Wilson writes in the "Boston Traveller" of the performance at a Symphony Concert of Saint-Saëns's Concerto in G minor:—"Mr. Alfred Hollins, of the Royal College for the Blind, London, played the pianoforte part of the concerto, having learned it at the suggestion of Mr. Gericke, we are told. At no point in the interpretation was the player's lack of sight apparent; it was honest and correct pianoforte playing. We thought after the first movement that Mr. Hollins had acquired power somewhat at the sacrifice of delicacy, but the performance of the allegro had so much elasticity and sparkle that we finally concluded he had made an advance without any corresponding loss. The style in which the brilliant finale was played would have been creditable in any of the very first artists. Mr. Hollins's achievements in his profession against apparently impossible odds are wonderful. His success with his audience was instant and gratifying, two hearty recalls being given him."

Other interesting features of the programme were Goldmark's 2nd Symphony in E flat, and F. Korbay's "Nuptiale," the work of a New York professor—a pleasant bit of festival music. Boston is to hear Verdi's "Otello" on the 30th.

Mr. Wilson points out that the recent performance in the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, of Schumann's "Manfred" was not, as stated in the MUSICAL WORLD, the first given in America. "The Cecilia Club gave it in its integrity in Boston in 1880, and we are not sure that this was the first time Boston heard it."

The "American Art Journal" thinks that a certain singer who took part in a Boston performance (long ago) of "Judas Maccabæus," "must have been an Englishwoman, for it is noted down that she sang 'hile' for 'hail.'" We rather think the lady must have been a German thinking of the "Heil" of the Fatherland.

The announcement of the impending production at the Grand Opéra of Saint-Saëns's "Henry VIII." has been hailed with satisfaction by a large number of Parisian opera-goers, who have had good warrant for their complaint of the tardy encouragement to important works of modern composers by the directors of what ought to be in reality as well as in name, their representative lyric theatre. The unavoidable absence of the author, now deep in composition in Algiers, will naturally add to the difficulty of attaining an adequate interpretation of this interesting work.

When after a period of remissness a step is at last made in the right direction, the opportunity is often seized for opening grievances afresh, and mingling with words of congratulation upon the new departure, a note of complaint and demands for still further evidences of intended reform. Thus M. M. Ritt and Gailhard are now called to task for not also giving "Sigurd," and some remarks in this connection of "Le Ménestrel" are singularly in accord with what our correspondent, "Classicus," writes on the subject of subventions in his letter inserted to-day. "The money of the State," says our contemporary, "is not contributed with the sole intention of filling the directors' pockets. Its object is also to enable them to further the higher interests of art."

The death is announced of M. Théophile Semet, the well-known composer. He was a pupil of Halévy, at the Paris Conservatoire, and during his pupillage supported himself by playing the kettle-drums in the orchestra of the Grand Opéra. The titles of his most important operas are: "Les Nuits d'Espagne," "La Demoiselle d'Honneur," "Gil Blas," "Ondine," and "La Petite Fadette."

Madame de Pachmann will shortly give some pianoforte recitals at Salle Erard.

A selection of Glinka's works was performed at the Trocadéro, by the Russian Imperial Musical Society on the 20th.

A grand performance of Gounod's "Mors et Vita," was given at the Trocadéro on the 25th, under the composer's direction.

Following the example of Mr. Carl Rosa, M. Paravey, the manager of the Opéra Comique, has turned himself into a limited liability company, or, as they say in France, "Une societé en nom collectif," which is going to work the state-subventioned theatre with a capital of 300,000 francs.

The offer of a Professorship at the Imperial Conservatoire, St. Petersburg, has, it is said, been offered to Madame Carlotta Patti, who, however, prefers the attractions of Paris to those of the more northern capital.

Mdlle. Sigrid Arnoldson has gone to Rome and conquered, and from there she will proceed to La Haye for appearances in "Mignon" and "Lakmé," returning to London in time for the Covent Garden season.

An excellent performance of Verdi's "Othello" has been given at Cologne. Zöllner's "Faust" has scored a success at Bonn.

Some first-rate artists are engaged for the three days' Music Festival of Aix la Chapelle. Frau Moran-Olten, Fräulein Hermine Spiess, Herr Max Mikorey, and Herr Carl Peron, will be the vocalists, and the co-operation of Herren Joachim and Hausmann is secured for instrumental solos. Hans Richter will conduct. The preliminary rehearsals are being held under Herr Schwickerath.

Madame Adelina Patti appears to have commenced a right royal progress through the Southern States of America. At her first performance in Buenos Ayres the theatre was crowded to overflowing, and the receipts netted 22,000 dollars.

Ernest Van Dyck, who sang in "Lohengrin," at the Eden theatre, will undertake the part of Walther in "Die Meistersinger" at the forthcoming Bayreuth festival, and his time for the next five years will be filled up by an engagement he lately signed at the Imperial Opera, Vienna, where he is to appear in operas of Gluck, Weber, and Wagner. The trial which resulted in this engagement took place before a formidable array of judges, including Hans Richter, conductor; Jahn, director; and Prince Hohenlohe, intendant of the theatre.

THE TREASURES OF AN OLD CHEST.

The Vienna "Neue Freie Presse" relates that a journalist of that city recently purchased an old chest, and having removed that venerable object to his "cinquième" (for journalists in Vienna live "au cinquième," provided there is no "sixième") was surprised and delighted to find in one of the drawers a bundle of musty old manuscripts, which turned out to be letters dated from 1836 to about 1846, written partly in French but mostly in Italian, and nearly all of them addressed "Al pregiatissimo Signor Carlo Balocchino," Lessee and Impresario of the Imperial Opera, by such historic notables as Rossini, Donizetti, Meyerbeer, Persiani, Rubini, Donzelli, Ronconi, Taglioni, Fanny Elssler, and others. Although of a business character almost throughout, these letters, apart from their autographic value, afford many glimpses of the operatic conditions of that period which are not without general interest. Such are the terms granted to the famous Italian composers of the day. Bellini died in 1835, and nothing could induce Rossini, the idol of the Italian party (for to the credit of the Viennese it must be remembered that a large section of the musical public of the Kaiserstadt remained true to the standard of German music, and that the worship of Italian sing song in that city never reached that paroxysm of fever heat which it attained in Paris, London, and St. Petersburg), at the early age of 41 to write another note for the stage. Consequently, Donizetti, had to do duty as the chief and almost sole manufacturer and purveyor of operatic novelty. Thus, in 1842, he wrote at and for Vienna, three operas, the price for an opera buffa in 1837 being 4,000 francs, which rose to 5,000, 12,000, and 16,000 francs later on, besides board and lodging, and going shares with the impresario in the sale of the scores, to say nothing of some presents, such as a diamond pin costing 275 florins, or about £27, in the case of "Dom Sebastian," thrown in by way of bonne bouche. These terms, although simply ridiculous as compared to the emoluments secured by prominent living composers, were far in excess of those paid to Rossini, who received next to nothing for his "Barbiere," 1,500 francs and free board for his "Cenerentola," and 1,000 ducats or about £200 (the maximum ever paid to young Rossini) for his "Otello." In wholesale "writing against time," even Rossini, who composed six operas in 1812, four in 1816, including "Il Barbiere and "Otello"; four in 1818; four in 1819, and from two to three in each of the intervening years, was scarcely a match for the younger composer, who wrote six operas in 1829, three in 1833, four in 1834, five in 1836, and never less than two to three per annum after 1818, ending his career in a madhouse, which, by the way, may serve as a warning to some over-prolific musical men of genius of the present day. It may be noted, however, that, technically speaking, there are probably more notes in one act of the "Nibelungen" than in a whole opera of Italian manufacture, and that the writer was assured that Donizetti used occasionally to refer the copyist of a new opera to number so and so of one of his previous works for the orchestral accompaniments.

That executive had the better of creative talent or genius, and that an established reputation was everything (as it is now, and probably ever will be), may be taken for granted. Thus the pay to the beginner Rubini was about £10 per month, to be increased to about £3,000 for the following season, when his fame had begun to spread. According to a letter from Signora Rubini, Madame Garcia-Viardot received, at St. Petersburg 50,000 roubles for a few months, in addition to 12,000 roubles, for her benefit, and numerous valuable presents. Rubini himself earned about £2,500 at one concert in the Russian capital, and from £8,000 to £9,000 season after season in London, besides his engagement for the early stagione at Vienna, for the comparatively small sum of about £600 for the first year (1841), about £800 and £1,000 for the two following seasons, besides travelling and hotel expenses paid, and the engagement of the famous tenor's wife, whom nobody cared to hear, just as the operatic scores ("Il Fantasma," &c.) by Signora Persiani's husband had as a sine qua non to be taken for performance along with the great prima donna herself, by the reluctant but helpless impresario. Dancers were even more exacting than singers. Thus the celebrated Maria Taglioni received (April, 1839) for each of ten representations, about £80—with an increase to £90 and £100—in the two succeeding years, and two stalls for each performance, with a box on off nights; the artist choosing her own ballets, and the exact time for her own pas, as well as her male and female associates. Besides this, various sums, ranging from about £65 to £240, had to be paid to Taglioni père, a fertile choreographer for a new ballet with each contract; emergencies of force majeure, such as war, fire, public mourning, etc., to remain without effect, the salary being due, quand même! Little wonder that the Neapolitan Impresario, Salvatore Taglioni (a younger brother of Maria's father) gives vent to his feelings in one of these letters respecting the spaventevoli, spaventevolissime inchieste degli artisti. Yet Balocchino signed Maria's contract with alacrity for London, paying £150 per night and more. That other terpsichorean luminary, Fanny Elssler (whose style of handwriting, by the way, like that of Maria Taglioni's, seems to have been as light and airy as the movements of her fantastic toes) on the other hand, received generally only about £60 for each performance, her sudden demand for about £200 (autumn, 1843) per night having been politely declined by the startled Signor Balocchino. This manager seems to have enjoyed an enviable reputation for good faith and solvency, for in a slip included in those papers he begs Fräulein Elssler to withdraw a sum of about £360, which had been held in readiness for some time, "as he dislikes being indebted to his artists in money matters!" That even those spaventevolissime inchieste were, however, as nothing compared to the enormous sums extorted by modern vocalists need not be mentioned, and a proof of the hard work done by some of the great artists of bygone days may be gathered from a letter from the last-named entrepreneur to Rossini at Bologna (1844): "To give you an idea of the overwhelming amount of labour got through by Tadolini, you should know that she sang yesterday for the first time in Verdi's "Ernani," which had a great success, and that she has next month not only to study the five new operas, but must at the same time sing five times each week in very exacting rôles." The exuberance of praise bestowed upon Maria Taglioni, in a cutting from the English journal John Bull, dated 1839, and found amongst those letters, equals and perhaps surpasses anything that can be quoted in this sense, even from modern Americanism: "Taglioni dances Shakespeare for the English, as Elssler dances Goethe for the Germans. Who has not seen Taglioni does not know what life is. To see Taglioni and live! . . . The spectator, if young, must go raving mad, or he is unworthy of the name of man. The old . . . but in seeing Taglioni there is no such thing as being old," etc. A strange contrast to the boundless enthusiasm inspired by these artists, is the matter of fact style already referred to, which characterises their own style of correspondence, placing Art (with the solitary exception of a letter by Signora Persiani in reference to Rubini's and Tamburini's vocal triumphs at St. Petersburg) on the level of a pure "métier" of the most prosaically commercial description, and not containing one single expression of sympathy with the great patriotic movement which, with the watchword "Italia una," absorbed the minds and souls of their oppressed countrymen, at that time "Ubi bene," that is, where money flows most freely, "ibi patria," seems to have been their motto. Apropos of the Italian Revolution (1848), an extraordinary mishap which befell the above-named Impresario, Salvatore Taglioni, may here be mentioned. Being, through a somewhat awkward quid pro quo, taken prisoner, the luckless Neapolitan was, by the uncompromising soldiery, not only sentenced to death, but actually executed along with a number of other unfortunate victims. At the moment when the corpses were being thrown into the sea, a workman at the arsenal, and ex-super of the Naples Opera, "San Carlo," chanced to identify what he thought was the dead body of his late director, pierced by twelve balls, none of which had, however, caused a mortal wound. He was restored to consciousness and lived for twenty years afterwards the happy life of an operatic manager.

Another feature of interest in connection with these artists is the variety both of time and circumstances which marked the retirement of some of them from their public career. Thus Maria Taglioni took leave of the footlights in full possession of her elastic powers in 1847, and died the wealthy possessor of numerous Venetian palaces, 80 years of age, in 1884. Pasta, on the other hand, having lost the whole of her fortune through the failure of the Vienna banker, Geymüller, had to return to the boards at a comparatively advanced period of life. The spendthrift, Giorgio Ronconi, perhaps the best Figaro produced by Italy, had to remain in harness to a ripe old age, whereas Rubini left a fortune of four to five million francs. As one of the most notable rentrées in operatic history may here be mentioned the promised re-appearance at our Italian Opera during the coming season of the German basso, Karl Formes, aged 72, whom the writer heard in his prime at the Opera in 1848, and frequently met as Captain of the Students' Corps and Commander of a Barricade, during that year of revolution in the Austrian capital. J. B. K.

COPYRIGHT (MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS) BILL.

The Earl of Onslow, in moving the second reading of this Bill in the House of Lords on Tuesday, said that it was not a Government measure, being introduced into the other House of Parliament by a private member. The Attorney-General, however, made some modifications in it and accepted it, and for that reason he was intrusted with the charge of it in their lordships' House. It was a very short Bill, and was intended to remove what was now a very great abuse. Under the existing law of copyright the person owning the copyright of any musical composition might sue for the performance of it without his leave and permission, and was entitled to obtain a minimum penalty of 40s. and costs. That had been found to operate very harshly, more particularly in respect of copyright obtained under an old Act of Parliament. It was customary in former days to divorce the copyright of the piece and the right of performing the piece, the consequence of which had been that where a person had parted with the copyright of his piece he still retained the right of performing it. This right he might sell, and the purchaser might sue all over the country and obtain large costs, with 40s. damages at least, from any person performing the piece. He was informed that costs had been obtained not only against the persons who sang the song, but against the person who played the piano and the person who got up the concert. In one instance a penalty had been exacted from a child of 13, who had sung at a concert given in aid of a charity, and all the proceeds of the concert were absorbed in the costs of the prosecution. The Bill provided that in future the amount of damages to be awarded in respect of each unauthorised representation should be such a sum as the court or judge might award, and the second clause left the costs of the action or proceedings in the absolute discretion of the judge. The result would be to meet the justice of every case, and to prevent what had hitherto amounted to a gross system of blackmailing. The subject was dealt with by the Royal Commission on Copyright which sat in 1878, which recommended that the owner of the composition should only be entitled to recover damages or compensation according to the damage sustained, and that there should be no minimum penalty for an unauthorised performance. It was that recommendation which the Bill now sought to carry into effect.

Lord Bramwell moved that the Bill be read a second time that day six months. He said that the object of the Bill was to confiscate certain rights which certain people now possessed. At the present time a man might compose a song and might retain the right of publishing it or he might part with it, but in addition to that he had the exclusive right of representation, and anyone who represented or sang the song without the permission of the owner was liable to pay the owner a minimum amount of £2 for damages. Whoever had composed the song and retained the exclusive right of representation, and whoever purchased that exclusive right, could proceed against any one who infringed it to recover the liquidated sum of £2 at least and any further damages he could prove. In this Bill this £2 was called a penalty, but it was not. That was proved by the case of "Fitzball v. Brook" (6 Q.B., p. 873). It was incorrect to say that it was a penalty. It was a stipulated debt which the owner of the right could recover from anybody who sang a song without his licence. If their lordships would look at the Statute-book they would not find a word about a penalty mentioned in it. The case stood thus. Every man who had the right of representation, either because he had composed a song or purchased the right from the composer, was entitled to recover £2 every time the song was sung without his consent. Why should this right be taken from him? If this Bill were only prospective the case might perhaps be different, but it was applicable to existing rights. He submitted that those rights ought not to be taken away, and that the Bill would establish a mischievous precedent. The Bill was wrong in taking away from people a right which they at present possessed and for which they had paid money. With regard to the cost of these proceedings, he should say that they ought to be like the costs of all other proceedings, and therefore it would be as well that some such provision as that contained in section 2 of the Bill should exist. Again, the Bill provided that the proprietor of a place of entertainment should not be liable for the singing of a song unless it could be shown that he had wilfully caused it to be sung. He thought that was a very reasonable proposition, and, indeed, he doubted whether the Courts had not sometimes said that people were liable who ought not to have been made liable.

The Earl of Selborne thought the noble and learned lord had rather argued against his own motion, inasmuch as he admitted that two out of the four clauses in the Bill were very good clauses indeed.

Lord Herschell pointed out that the changes embodied in the Bill were recommended by persons who had not the reputation of disregarding rights of property. Among the members of the Royal Commission appointed to consider the subject were the Duke of Rutland, the Earl of Devon, the present Secretary of State for the Colonies, and other highly-respectable persons, who certainly were not disposed to interfere with rights of property. He supported the provisions in this Bill, inasmuch as he was himself on the Commission which recommended the change in the law.

The Lord Chancellor confessed that this was a matter in regard to which there was a divided opinion. It was not necessary for the Legislature absolutely to fix what the damages ought to be; the existence of a right to these damages ought to be treated as property. The product of a man's brain ought to be protected as much as any other kind of property. If without some such provisions as were contained in the Bill a man were to bring his action, it would be argued that it was idle to suppose that any damages had been suffered from the singing of a particular song on a particular occasion. In most cases it would be true. (Laughter.) But it would be a different thing to say that this property should be left without any protection at all.

Lord Knutsford did not care whether it was called penalty or damages, but the Bill left it to the County Court Judge to decide what compensation should be given to the composer. Before the Commission Sir Arthur Sullivan and other composers were unanimous that the existing Act required amendment, and Sir Arthur Sullivan and persons representing Messrs. Boosey thought that the highest damages might be assessed at 6d., and it was even suggested that the amount should be fixed at 6d. If the noble and learned lord opposite had taken the trouble to read the evidence given before the Commission he would have seen that his client was a Mr. Wall (laughter), who called himself "The Authors' and Composers' Copyright and Dramatic Office." (Laughter.) This gentleman had three clients, and his plan was to watch the occasions on which these songs were sung, and then to pounce down on the giver of the entertainment or proprietor of the hall where the song was sung. It was very desirable that the depredations of this musical hawk should be stopped. (Hear, hear.)

The amendment was negatived, and the Bill was read a second time.

PAGANINI'S VIOLIN.

From the Pall Mall Gazette.

It is now exactly fifty years since Camillo Sivori finished his studies in musical composition under Giovanni Serra, and began, as a violinist, that distinguished career which has continued to the present day. Probably for some reason such as that the municipal authorities of Genoa have, for at least the second time, permitted the tones of Paganini's favourite violin to respond to the touch of his favourite pupil. There is a kind of sentimental fitness in choosing the occasion of this renowned modern player's professional jubilee as a suitable one for listening to the long-silent voice of his master's fiddle, for the influence of the dead Genoese was exerted very early on the living one, seeing that Camillo Sivori narrowly escaped—only by about half an hour, in fact—being born in a box of the theatre Sant' Agostino, in Genoa, while Paganini was playing one of his marvellous solos on this very violin. It is an instrument which was presented by a French gentleman named Livron to the great virtuoso somewhere between 1801 and 1804, on an occasion when he was to perform at Leghorn, and had gambled away, not only his money and trinkets, but also the violin which he used then. In his difficulty he applied to this amateur, who was known to possess a fine "Guarnerius," for the loan of his instrument, and after the enthusiastic owner heard him play upon it he declined to take it back, saying that he could not dream of "profaning the strings which Paganini's fingers had touched." The value of the instrument then was probably only some twenty or thirty pounds —if even so much—because it was comparatively new, and its maker not so widely celebrated as he is now. But Paganini would appreciate the worth of the gift by another standard, for he of all men then living knew the enormous value to a violinist of its sonorous quality of tone.

This same violin became the means of saving the gifted musician from the degrading fascinations of the gaming table, and to his dying day he naturally retained a lively recollection of the circumstance. A certain exalted personage who was exceedingly anxious to possess it, after pressing Paganini to fix a price, offered him one day 2,000 francs if he would relinquish it. It so happened that on that very day its owner was greatly embarrassed for money to pay a debt incurred at play on the previous evening. He had only thirty francs in his possession, and he nearly yielded. He did not consent, however, but determined once more to try his luck with the small sum left. He sat down that evening and his thirty francs speedily fell to three, when, as suddenly, the chance came, and his half-crown became about six pounds. The gain was a trifling one in the matter of coin, but along with it came the greater gain of a permanent distaste for gambling. One can estimate to a certain extent the degree of his attachment to this violin when it is remembered that although he had just been offered £80 for it, he himself admitted that his little stroke of luck at play saved it, and set him on his legs again. It will undoubtedly be for ever associated with the reformation which his love for it effected in his own habits. In relating this incident to one of his early biographers, he said, "From that moment, in the conviction that a gambler is universally despised, I abandoned for ever the fatal passion." And throughout the rest of his life his "Cannon," as he used to call it, remained his constant companion, and he bequeathed it to the city of Genoa. He must have loved it not merely because it was a violin, but because it was that violin. He frequently purchased other violins, and was always on the look-out for good examples by the greatest of all makers, the celebrated Stradivari. Some of these he sold or exchanged, and some of them he kept, but he never lost sight of his "Joseph del Jesu." It went with him wherever he went, and its condition became as momentous to him as that of his own health. Like himself, however, it had its fits of indisposition, and on one exceptional occasion, when it appeared suddenly to lose all its quality, he consulted the French violin maker and repairer, G. B. Vuillaume, who was then known as the most skilful man in Europe in the matter of fiddles. When this expert saw it, he convinced Paganini that it was necessary to open it in order to get at the defect, but the latter insisted that it should be done in his own apartments and in his own presence. On the following day Vuillaume brought his implements, and while taking off the upper table he observed the effect on the artist, who was sitting on a chair and holding his knees tightly. Vuillaume related that on the first crack sounding when he inserted the thin knife between the ribs and top, the virtuoso started in his chair as if the blade had been buried in his own bosom. There is probably no colouring whatever in this description, for his subsequent conduct shows that his gratitude to Vuillaume was clearly emotional, when that gentleman, after taking the violin to his workshop, restored it in perfect order. For repairing the instrument Vuillaume received from Paganini a beautiful gold box set with precious stones, and was informed that it was exactly the same as one which he meant to give to the physician of his body, and indicated that his thankfulness to the doctor of his fiddle was of equal degree. This box was valued by an eminent Paris jeweller at £70, being probably ten times the original sum paid to Joseph Guarnerius, called Del Jesu, for the fiddle when it was brand new. A magnificent sum, truly, for repairing a fiddle.

But the clever French maker had also, unknown to Paganini, taken all the dimensions of the instrument when he had it in his workshop. Every point of its detail was studied, every gradation of its varnish noted, and all indications of wear and tear carefully treasured up, and shortly after the return of the original instrument Vuillaume again appeared before Paganini, and showed him the fac-simile of his great violin. With a thoughtful look on his face, the astonished man muttered, "This is marvellous!" and immediately asked Vuillaume to sell it to him, to which the latter consented. The copy remained with Paganini till his death, when it transpired that he had bequeathed it to Camillo Sivori, who played upon it ever after. The date on the ticket of the original violin is 1743. On the last occasion, if we are not mistaken, Sivori alone played on it, but this time Signor Leandro Campanari, director of the Milanese Quartet, has also been granted this distinction. Of course they played on it some of Paganini's compositions, and it would not be surprising if these consisted in part of some selections from the six sonatas which the great Genoese composed for the little Genoese, when he first took him in hand. It seems probable that the violin will be exhibited at the coming Musical Exhibition at Bologna, and, if the dates will not clash, some of the influential Italian gentlemen resident in London might induce its custodians to lend it for the Italian Exhibition here. In no part of the world was that violin heard to greater profit on behalf of its owner than in the British Isles. It was here that its wonderful quality under the sway of his magical power earned for him the great bulk of his fortune, and there are thousands of people in this country who would be much gratified to see it, simply because it is reckoned to be one of the finest that Joseph Guarnerius ever made.

MR. COWEN'S "SONG OF THANKSGIVING."

We have just received the vocal score of Mr. F. H. Cowen's "Song of Thanksgiving" (published by Novello, Ewer, and Co.), which will be sung at the opening of the Melbourne Centennial Exhibition of this year. Written for a special occasion, and necessarily short, the three numbers it contains successfully reflect the spirit of religious thankfulness pervading the scriptural texts the composer has selected for his purpose. Of such character is the bright opening chorus in the key of G, "O give thanks unto the Lord," followed, after a short modulation, by a chorus for voices alone in B flat major, "Except the Lord build the house" — a melodious number, and sure to prove a favourite; and the return to the original key being signalised by a triumphant chorus "We Thy people," by which the work is brought to a spirited and appropriate close. This choral song is written throughout in a style worthy of the eminent musician who has crossed the seas for the purpose, among other things, of giving our Antipodes an idea of certain features to be found in the modern development of music in the mother country, and when performed with chorus and orchestra on a large scale, appropriate to the interesting occasion for which it has been composed, it cannot fail to prove highly effective. English amateurs will be glad to learn that "The Song of Thanksgiving" will be given at the forthcoming festival of the three choirs at Hereford.

The Organ World.

ORGAN RECITAL PLAYING.

XIII.

